l. וְלֹא מָרוּ V. 28. And they rebelled not] The Hebrew in all copies is acknowledged to reade וְלֹא מָרוּ and they provoked not, rebelled not, i. e. diſobeyed not his word. So the Chaldee, וְלָא סָרִיבוּ עַל פִּתְגָמֵיהּ and they rebelled rebelled not, reſiſted not his word. Which paſſage is to be underſtood of Moſes and Aaron, that how little hope ſoever they had of doing good on Pharaoh, yea after God had given him up to obduration, and they were to expect all rage and ill uſage from him, yet as God commanded them, or according to the דִּבְרֵי אֹתוֹתָיו the words of his ſigns, v. 27. (ſee note g.) they did couragiouſly proceed from one ſign to another (not fearing the wrath of the King or people) to ſhew all God's miracles upon the Ægyptians. The Latin reads, non exacerbavit, he did not provoke, in the ſingular, but to the ſame ſenſe, referring it I ſuppoſe to Moſes. But neither ſingular nor plural can probably refer to Pharaoh or the people of Ægypt, that he or they reſiſted not God's word: for though upon that plague of darkneſs Exod. 10. 24. Pharaoh called unto Moſes and ſaid, Goe ye, ſerve the Lord, yet that is attended with an onely let your flocks and your herds be ſtayed; and then it follows v. 27. he would not let them goe. The importance therefore of לֹא מָרוּ they reſiſted not, ſeems no more than what is affirmed in the ſtory v. 21, 22. The Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſtretch out thy hand — And Moſes ſtretched forth his hand — i. e. readily obeyed, and did what God directed, and that at a time when Pharaoh was likely to be incenſed, and vehemently offended with them. For which conſideration the ſtory there gives us this farther ground; For as v. 10. he had before expreſſed ſome anger and threats, Look to it, for evil is before you, and they were driven from his preſence v. 11. ſo now upon the hardening his heart, which follows this plague of darkneß, he ſaid to Moſes, Get thee from me, take heed to thy ſelf, ſee my face no more, for in that day thou ſeeſt my face thou ſhalt die the death, v. 28. This rage of Pharaoh Moſes in reaſon might well foreſee, but he dreaded it not, but boldly did as God directed, and that is the meaning of לֹא מָרוּ they reſiſted not God's words. The LXXII now reade it without the negation; ſome copies, καὶ παρεπίκραναν, and they exaſperated, others, ὅτι παρεπίκραναν becauſe they exaſperated his words. And the Syriack (and Arabick and Æthiopick) follow them, ܘܡܪܪܘ, وعصوا, ወአመፁ, and they murmured (ſo that word ſeems to be tranſlated into other languages) or reſiſted his word. And thus it might have truth in it, being applied to Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, who could not yet be brought to be content to let the Iſraelites go free, and carry their goods with them out of their Kingdom, Exod. 10. 24, 27. But 'tis more probable that the true original reading of the LXXII. was οὐκ neither, which as it is the exact rendring of וְלֹא and not, ſo it is very near to אִם which ſome copies now have. And from this light, but very ancient, corruption of their copy, the other tranſlations have it, which conſequently muſt be reformed by the Original.

V. 30. Brought forth] The word שָׁרַץ properly belongs to water breaking or ſpringing out of the earth, and is applied to any plentifull production, Exod. 1. 7. the children of Iſrael grew וַיִּשְׁרְצוּ and procreated abundantly, and, as it there follows, the land was filled with them. The noun שֶׁרֶץ from hence is uſed for all ſorts of creatures of the earth or water that goe not on legs, Locuſts, Ants, Worms, Hornets, Fiſhes, &c. becauſe they procreate ſo exceedingly. It cannot therefore more fitly be rendred, both according to the force of the verb and noun, than by ſwarming, and that in ſuch a degree over all the land, that the palace, which may be ſuppoſed to be moſt carefully kept, was not free from them. The Chaldee render it רִחְיֵשׁ, which ſignifies among them ſcaturivit, any copious production alſo. But the LXXII. ἐξήνεγκεν, from the notion of the word for creeping, What is here ſaid of אַרְצָם their land, that that produced theſe ſwarms of frogs, is Exod. 8. 3. ſaid of the river, and ſo 5. and 6. ſtretch forth thy hand over the ſtreams, the rivers, the ponds, and cauſe frogs to come: and as this makes more for the propriety of שָׁרַץ according to that of Gen. 1. ſpeaking of the waters, יִשְׁרְצוּ הַמַּיִם let them ſwarm or produce abundantly the ſwimming thing; ſo the earth and the waters being now but one globe the earth may be ſaid to bring forth that which the waters produce; or 2. אַרְצָם their land may ſignify their country of which their rivers were a part; or 3. though the rivers produced the frogs, yet the land ſwarmed with them, as appears by the conſequents, they went up into the King's chambers.

V. 42. Holy promiſe] That אֵת joyned to a verb intranſitive ſignifies with, is acknowledged by Lexicographers, and here ſuch a verb is underſtood, after דְּבַר קָדְשׁוֹ the word of his holineß (which he ſpake or had) אֵת אַבְרָהָם with Abraham: ſo the Chaldee underſtood it, and read דִּי עִם which with (i. e. which he had with) or to Abraham; and ſo the LXXII. ᾧ πρὸς —— which he had, or which was made to Abraham.

The Hundred and Sixth PSALM.

a. [2] Praiſe ye the Lord.

The hundred and ſixth Pſalm, the laſt of the fourth partition, intitled Hallelujah, is chiefly ſpent in confeſſing the ſins and provocations of the Children of Iſrael, but begun and concluded with the praiſing and magnifying of God's mercies, and by the beginning and two laſt verſes of it, ſet down 1 Chron. 16. 34, 35, 36. appears to be one of thoſe Pſalms which David delivered into the hand of Aſaph and his Brethren, v. 7. to record, and thank, and praiſe the Lord, in their continual or daily miniſtring before the Ark, v. 4.

Paraphraſe.

1. Let us all joyn in proclaiming the abundant goodneſs and continued mercies of God, which from time to time he hath vouchſafed, and will never fail to reach out unto us.

1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is || good, for his mercy endureth for ever.

|| or gracious טוֹב χρηστὸς LXXII.

2. Who

2. Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? who can shew forth all his praise?

2. His miraculous works of power and grace are far beyond our describing or expressing.

3. Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doth righteousness at all times.

3. O 'tis a blessed thing to be always engaged and exercised in the service of so gracious a master, and by the continual practice of all duties of justice and mercy, to be qualified for those mercies and protections, which he never fails to make good to those which are thus fitted to expect or receive them.

‖ of the favour to thy— בִּרְצוֹן עַמֶּךָ

4. Remember me, O Lord, ‖ with the favour which thou beareſt unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation.

4. O blessed Lord, of thy great abundant goodness to all thy faithfull servants, be thou pleased to look favourably upon me, though most unworthy: O do thou afford me that pardon and that grace which I stand in need of, and can hope for from none but thee.

5. That I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoyce in the gladness of thy nation, that I may † glory with thine inheritance.

5. That I may experimentally feel and taste the incomparable felicity of being in the number of thy favourites, that I may have my part of that joyous blissfull state, that all which sincerely serve thee enjoy even in this world, (as the present reward or result of their conscientious obedience) and so for ever make one in that quire which sings Hosannahs and Hallelujahs to thee.

6. We have sinned with our Fathers, we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly.

6. Meanwhile it is the present duty of every one of us, to cast our selves down in all humility before this thy throne of grace, to confess before thee the many great and crying sins, transgressions and provocations, that either every one of us, or together this whole nation, from our first rise and growth into a people, have been most sadly guilty of.

7. Our Fathers understood not thy wonders in Ægypt, they remembred not the multitude of thy mercies, but provoked him [b] at the sea, even at the red sea.

7. When thou hadst shewed so many signs and wonders in the sight of our forefathers in Ægypt, which were abundantly sufficient to convince them of thy power, and purpose to bring them safe out of those tyrannical masters hands, yet in the very beginning of their march, before they were out of the land, as soon as the least danger approacht, when they discerned the Ægyptians to follow and overtake them, they were presently amated, and faint-hearted, and sore afraid, Exod. 14. 10. and in that fit of fear and infidelity, reproached Moses (and in him God himself) for looking upon them in their oppressions, for offering to disquiet them in their slavery, deemed it much better to have served the Ægyptians, than now to adventure themselves under God's protection. (And how many provocations have we severally been guilty of, in not laying to heart the signal mercies bestowed on us by God, evidences of his goodness and his power, and in despight of all fallen off, on occasion of every worldly terrour, into murmurings at his providence, and satiety of his service, into infidelity and Practical Atheism?) b.

8. Nevertheless he saved them for his names sake, that he might make his mighty power to be known.

8. But though they thus provoked God, and so well deserved to be forsaken by him, though he had so little incouragement to shew miracles of mercy among those whom neither miracles could convince, nor mercies provoke to obedience; yet that he might glorify himself, and give more evidences of his omnipotence to them, and the heathen people about them, he was now also pleased to interpose his hand in a most eminent manner for these unthankfull murmurers, and by a new miracle of mercy to secure and deliver them.

* And rebuked וַיִּגְעַר

9. * He rebuked the red sea also, and it was dried up: so he led them through the depths, as through the wilderness.

10. And he saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy.

11. And the waters covered their enemies, there was not one of them left.

9, 10, 11. For being now at the shore of the red sea, and close pursued by the Ægyptians, when there was no visible means of their rescue from the rage of Pharaoh on one side, or the sea on the other, God then shewed forth his power, divided the sea, Exod. 14. 16. caused it to retire, and give passage to the Israelites, who marcht through the midst of the sea in part of the channel, as upon the driest firmest ground; and when the Ægyptians assayed to follow them, and were ingaged in the midst of the sea so far that they could not retire, even the whole host of Pharaoh, v. 23. first God encompassed his own people with a cloud, that the enemy came not near them all night, v. 20. secondly, he troubled the Ægyptians host, and took off their chariot wheels, v. 24, 25. so that they could neither pursue the Israelites, nor fly out of the sea, and thirdly he caused the sea to return to his strength, and overwhelmed their chariots, horsemen, and whole army, there remained not so much as one of them, v. 28. Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Ægyptians, v. 30.

12. Then believed they his words, they sang his praise.

12. And this so visible a prodigie of mercy so seasonably and undeservedly afforded them, did indeed at the time work upon them, convinced them of the power and mercy of God; they saw that great work, and feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his servant Moses, Exod. 14. 31. and joyned with Moses in the anthem, or song of victory that he composed on this occasion, Exod. 15. blessing God for the wonders of this deliverance.

‖ made haste, they forgat מִהֲרוּ שָׁכְחוּ

13. ς They ‖ soon forgat his works, they waited not for his counsel;

14. But lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert.

13, 14. But after this, when they came into the wilderness, they fell a murmuring again, first on occasion of the bitterness of the water at Marah, Exod. 15. 24. then in the wilderness of Sin, ch. 16. upon remembrance of their flesh-pots in Ægypt; and when they had these so many convictions of God's power and providence over them, which should in reason have charmed them into a full, chearfull resignation, and dependance on him, they on the contrary, without any consideration of any thing that God had wrought for them, without ever addressing themselves humbly to God, or his servant Moses, to learn his pleasure and purposes concerning them, were transported præcipitously by their own luxurious appetites, and because they had not that festival plenty which could not be expected in the wilderness, they again reproached Moses for having brought them out of Ægypt, to die, as they called it, in the wilderness, v. 3. and now forsooth God must shew more miracles, not for the supply of their wants, but to pamper and satisfy their lust, (Psal. 78. 18.) he must give them fine festival diet in the wilderness, (Psal. 79. 19.) or else they would no longer believe his power, or serve him. c.

15. And

d. 15. And at this time alſo God was pleaſed to magnify his power and providence among them: at Marah he directed Moſes to a tree, which ſweetned the waters, Exod. 15. 25. and ſoon after brought them to Elim, where there were twelve wells, &c. and he rained down bread (as it were ready baked) from heaven, a full proportion for all of them every day, Exod. 16. 4. and not onely ſo, but in anſwer to their importunity for fleſh, he ſent them whole ſholes of quails, which covered the camp, Exod. 16. 13. Num. 11. 31. as thick as duſt, Pſal. 78. 27. But then when they had gathered great plenty of theſe, at leaſt ten homers to a man, juſt as they were ready to eat them, the wrath of God came out againſt them, and puniſhed their murmuring with a terrible plague: And ſo this (as all other inordinate deſires) coſt them full dear, and brought them not any the leaſt benefit.

15. And he gave them their requeſt, but ſent [d] leanneſs into their ſoul.

16, 17, 18. After this they brake out in a mutiny againſt Moſes and Aaron, Num. 16. not allowing them to have any commiſſion of preeminence, or authority, more than any other of the people had, every one pretending to be holy, and, upon that account, free from ſubjection to any other. But for the repreſſing and refuting of this vain plea, and vindicating the authority of thoſe that God had ſet over them, both in the Church and State, two terrible eſſays of God's wrath were here ſhewed; the opening of the earth, and ſwallowing up all that belonged to Dathan and Abiram, v. 32. and a fire from heaven, coming down upon them that preſumed without miſſion from God to offer incenſe, to aſſume the Prieſt's office, v. 35. And when both theſe did but make the people murmur the more at Moſes and Aaron, v. 41. God avenged this yet more ſeverely with a plague, that ſwept away fourteen thouſand and ſeven hundred of them.

16. They envied Moſes alſo in the camp, and Aaron the ſaint of the Lord.
17. The earth opened, and ſwallowed up Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram:
18. And a fire was kindled in their company, the flame burnt up the wicked.

19, 20. After this, when God was delivering the Law to Moſes on Mount Sinai, and therein made a ſtrict prohibition of making them any graven image, or ſimilitude of any creature in the world, in order to worſhip, God exhibiting himſelf to them in a thick cloud, and they ſeeing no ſimilitude, but only hearing a voice, yet, while Moſes was abſent from them, they made them a molten calf, calling it their Gods, and that it might go before them in God's ſtead, and accordingly worſhipt it, and made a ſacrifical feaſt unto it, Exod. 32. 6. and committed great abominations (ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. c.)

19. They made a calf in Horeb, and worſhipped the molten image.
e. 20. Thus they changed their [e] glory into the ſimilitude of an oxe that eateth graſs.

21, 22. Such haſte they made to caſt off the ſervice of that God which had ſo lately delivered them out of their Ægyptian ſlavery, and in order to that ſhewed forth ſuch prodigies of his power, and vengeance on Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, both before he diſmiſt them, and when he purſued them in their march out of the land.

21. They forgat God their Saviour, which had done great things in Ægypt.
22. Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the red ſea.

23. Upon this provocation of theirs, God communed with Moſes, Exod. 32. 10. about deſtroying this whole people that thus rebelled, promiſing to make of him a great nation. But Moſes moſt earneſtly beſought him, v. 11. to turn from his fierce wrath, v. 12. and repent of this evil againſt his people; and God was attoned by his importunity, and repented of the evil, v. 14. and he deſtroyed them not.

f. 23. ‖ Therefore he ſaid that he would deſtroy them, had not Moſes his choſen ſtood before him in the [f] breach, to turn away his wrath leſt he ſhould deſtroy them.

‖ And he ſpake of deſtroying them וַיֹּאמֶר

24, 25. After this, when they came near their Canaan, that moſt fruitfull poſſeſſion promiſed them by God, and when Moſes had ſent out ſpies to deſcry the land, and they brought back word as of the great fertility of the land, ſo of the giantly ſtrength and ſtature of the men, their fortifications, and their eating up the inhabitants, Num. 13. 26, 27, &c. they fell into a great paſſion of fear, ch. 14. 9. and ſorrow, v. 1. and murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron, and God himſelf, v. 2, 3. and reſolved to give over the purſuit of Canaan, and make them a Captain, and return back to Ægypt, v. 4. and ſo utterly to forſake the ſervice of God.

24. Yea they deſpiſed the pleaſant land, they believed not his word;
25. But murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord.

g. 26, 27. This again moſt juſtly provoked God to that degree of wrath againſt them, that he ſaid, he would ſmite them with peſtilence, and diſinherit them, deſtroy the whole people, and make of Moſes a greater nation, v. 12. ſee Ezech. 20. 23. But Moſes again interceding for them, and urging that argument, formerly uſed by him with ſucceſs, that the Ægyptians and other nations would ſay, that God was not able to bring them into the land which he had ſworn to them, v. 16. he again prevail'd for their pardon, v. 20. but that with this reſerve, which he bound with an oath, v. 21, 28. that all they that having ſeen his miracles in Ægypt, had now tempted him ten times, ſhould die before they came to this good land, v. 23, 29. And accordingly after this the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites, and ſmote them and diſcomfited them, v. 45. and Arad King of Canaan fought againſt them and took ſome of them priſoners, ch. 21. 1. (to this Kimchi applies the ſcattering both here and in Ezekiel.)

26. Therefore he [g] lifted up his hand † againſt them to deſtroy them in the wilderneſs;
27. To overthrow their ſeed alſo among the nations, and to ſcatter them in the lands.

† about, or, becauſe of them.

h. 28. After this they mixed themſelves with the Moabitiſh women, Numb. 25. 3. and by them were ſeduced to their Idol-worſhip, partaking and communicating in their ſacrifices offered to the Moabitiſh Gods, which were but dead men.

28. They joyned themſelves alſo to [h] Baal-peor, and ate the ſacrifices of the dead.

29. On this foul provocation of Idolatry and uncleanneſs, God's judgments fell heavily upon them, a terrible plague, that ſwept away four and twenty thouſand of them.

29. Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions, and the plague brake in upon them.

i. 30. Onely in the very point of time, Phinees the ſon of Eleazer did an act of ſpecial zeal, took a javelin, and killed an Iſraelitiſh man and Midianitiſh woman in the very act of their uncleanneſs; And this zeal of his propitiated God, and ſo the plague ceaſed.

30. Then ſtood up Phinees and [i] * executed judgment, and ſo the plague was ſtayed.

* made an atonement

31. And [k] that was counted to him for righteouſneſs unto all generations for evermore.

31. And this act of his was ſo acceptable to God, that, beſide the dignity of being k.

an inſtrument of appeaſing God's wrath toward the people, God thought fit to reward it with the honour of the High-prieſt's office, to be annexed to his family for ever, if they walked not unworthy of it.

32. They angred him alſo at the waters of ſtrife, ſo that it went ill with Moſes for their ſakes.

32, 33. Before this, is ſet down (Num. 20.) another murmuring of our Fathers againſt God, occaſioned by ſome want of water at Meri-bah, a place ſo called from their chiding and contending with Moſes, where in their rage they wiſhed they had died in that former plague, Numb. 11. 13. And this their peeviſhneſs was a provocation to Moſes, who, though he were a meek man, brake out into a paſſionate ſpeech, v. 10. Hear ye now, ye rebels, ſhall we fetch you water out of this rock? Wherein as he ſpake with ſome diffidence, as if it were impoſſible to fetch water out of the rock, when God had aſſured him, v. 8. that at his ſpeaking to the rock, it ſhould bring forth water ſufficient for them all, and is accordingly challenged of unbelief, v. 12. ſo he ſeems to have aſſumed ſomewhat to themſelves, [ſhall we?] and ſo did not ſanctifie God in the eyes of the people of Iſrael, v. 12. did not endeavour, as he ought, to ſet forth God's power and glory, and attribute all to him. And this paſſionate ſpeech coſt Moſes very dear, and was puniſhed with his excluſion out of Canaan, v. 12. Deut. 1. 35. and 3. 26. and 4. 21. and 34. 4.

34. They did not deſtroy the nations concerning whom the Lord commanded them:

35. But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.

36. And they ſerved their idols, which were a ſnare to them.

37. Yea they ſacrificed their ſons and daughters unto devils;

38. And ſhed innocent blood, even the blood of their ſons and of their daughters, whom they ſacrificed to the idols of Canaan, and the land was polluted with blood.

39. Thus were they defiled with their own works, and went a whoring with their own inventions.

34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. After all this, when at length they were come into the promiſed land, and had received particular command, Deut. 7. 2. that they ſhould utterly deſtroy all the idolatrous inhabitants thereof, for fear they ſhould be inveigled by them, and drawn away to their idol-worſhip, and thoſe abominable pollutions they were infamouſly guilty of; yet contrary to this expreſs command of God's, they did not execute this ſeverity, they ſpared them, and drave them not out, but permitted them to live amongſt them, Jud. 1. 21. (and ſo 'tis oft mentioned through that book) and by this means they were corrupted, and brought into their heathen ſins, ſee Jud. 3. 6. 7. worſhipt their Idols and falſe Gods, and obſerved thoſe abominable rites which infernal ſpirits had exacted of their worſhippers, the ſlaying and ſacrificing of men, innocent perſons, yea their own deareſt children; and ſo to idolatry and worſhip of the Devil they added blood-guiltineſs, of the higheſt degree, the deepeſt dye, even the moſt barbarous and unnatural, and to all theſe yet farther adding fornication, and thoſe abominable ſins that thoſe nations were guilty of, and for which the land ſpued them out, Lev. 18. 28.

40. Therefore was the wrath of God kindled againſt his people, in ſo much that he abhorred his own inheritance.

40. This great ſin adding to all the former provocations, moſt juſtly inflamed the vehement anger and diſpleaſure of God againſt this people, of which he had before reſolved, and promiſed Abraham, that he would own them for ever as his peculiar; and ſo a long while he did, and bare with them very indulgently, but they growing ſtill worſe and worſe, 'twas but reaſonable, and according to the contents of his (not abſolute, but) conditionate covenant, at length to reject and caſt them off, or withdraw his protection from them.

41. And he gave them into the hands of the heathen, and they that hated them ruled over them.

42. Their enemies alſo oppreſſed them, and they were brought in ſubjection under their hand.

41, 42. And accordingly ſo he did, he ſuffered the heathen nations about them to invade and overcome them, the King of Meſopotamia, Jud. 3. 8. who had dominion over them eight years, the Midianites and Amalekites, Jud. 6. 3. the Philiſtims and Amorites, Jud. 10. 6. the Philiſtims, Jud. 13. 1.

43. Many times did he deliver them; but they provoked him with their counſel, and were brought low for their iniquity.

43. In each of theſe deſtitutions and oppreſſions, God ſtill reteined his wonted reſpect to them ſo far as from time to time to raiſe them up Captains to undertake their battels, and to reſcue them out of their oppreſſors hands; but then ſtill again they fell to their ſinfull idolatrous courſes, and again forfeited and deveſted themſelves of God's protection, and were again ſubdued by the ſame or ſome other of their heathen neighbours.

† And he beheld when diſtreſs was upon them וַיַּרְא בְּצֻרָם

44. † Nevertheleſs he regarded their affliction, when he heard their cry.

45. And he remembred for them his Covenant, and repented according to the multitude of his mercies.

46. He made them alſo to be pitied of all thoſe that carried them captives.

44, 45, 46. And yet then alſo he did not utterly deſtitute them, but in their times of diſtreſs, and flying to him for ſuccour, he looked upon them with pity again, remembred the covenant made with their Fathers, and in infinite mercy returned from his fierce wrath, and ſo inclined the hearts of thoſe that had conquered them, that inſtead of increaſing, they compaſſionated their miſeries;

47. Save us, O Lord our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks to thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praiſe.

47. O bleſſed Lord, be thou now pleaſed to return our captivity, to reduce us from the hands of our heathen enemies, that we may live to enjoy thoſe bleſſed opportunities of making our moſt ſolemn acknowledgments to thee, and bleſſing and magnifying thy holy name in this or the like form.

48. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael from everlaſting to everlaſting; and let all the people ſay, Amen. Praiſe ye the Lord.

48. To the almighty Lord of heaven and earth, that hath made good his covenant of mercy to all his faithfull ſervants, be all honour and glory from all and to all eternity; And let all the world join in this joyfull acclamation, adding every one his moſt affectionate Amen, and Hallelujah.

a. הַלְלוּ יָהּ

Tit. Praiſe the Lord] הַלְלוּ יָהּ is here no part, but onely the title of this Pſalm. This appears by two competent evidences: 1. By the joint ſuffrage of all the ancient Tranſlators, of which the Syriack renders it not at all, but in ſtead of it gives (as their uſe is) a large ſyllabus, or contents of the Pſalm; but the Chaldee retein it as a title, and the LXXII. and Latin retein the Hebrew words, putting them into one, in the direct form of a title, Ἀλληλούια, Alleluja, and the Arabick more expreſly, ſuch a Pſalm, noted with the title of Alleluja. 2. By expreſs teſtimony of Scripture, 1 Chron. 16. There we reade, v. 7. On that day David delivered firſt (not this Pſalm, as we reade, but) theſe, viz. three Pſalms to thank the Lord, into the hands of Aſaph and his brethren. The firſt of theſe Pſalms is the 105. recited there in the firſt thirteen verſes, the ſecond Pſal. 96. the laſt is that which we have before us. And as the firſt begins v. 8. the ſecond v. 23. ſo doth this third follow v. 34. Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever, (and then as in a breviate, v. 35, 36. the two laſt verſes of it) and ſo 'tis evident, the Alleluja in the front was not uſed, but left out, as being no part, but onely the title of the Pſalm: which by the way teacheth us, that in the offices of the Church, the titles of the Pſalms were not wont to be uſed in the Jewiſh Church, but deſigned for other purpoſes, either to ſignifie the Authour, or Occaſion, or Matter, or Kind of the Pſalm. This being thus cleared of this preſent Pſalm, will be in all reaſon applicable to all thoſe other Pſalms which have this form of Alleluja, Praiſe the Lord, in the front of them, as the Title in every of them, and not any part of the Pſalm.

b. עַל יָם

V. 7. At the Sea] For עַל יָם by the Sea, the LXXII. ſeem to have read עֹלִים, the participle preſent from עָלָה to aſcend, rendring it ἀναβαίνοντες, aſcending; but that not very fit to be accorded to the context, which ſpeaks of their murmuring at the red ſea, into which they could not with any propriety be ſaid to aſcend. And yet herein the Latin (and Arabick) follow them, though they do alſo truly render עַל יָם in mare, aſcendentes in mare, mare rubrum, aſcending into the ſea, the red ſea. But the Syriack departs from them, (as the Chaldee) and reads ܥܠ ܝܡ̈ near the waters.

c. מִהֲרוּ

V. 13. They ſoon forgat] מִהֲרוּ doth queſtionleſs ſignifie making haſte; and if here it did ſo, there is no neceſſity it ſhould be joyned with the following verb, and ſignifie adverbially, for all the ancient Interpreters reade it as a verb; ἐποίησαν, they made haſte, ſay the LXXII. citò fecerunt, they did ſuddenly, the Latin, סַרְהִבוּ the Chaldee, ܥܒܕܘ ܘܐܫܬܕܘ the Syriack, both uſed for making haſte, from the Syriack רְהַב being in commotion and perturbation. And ſo the ſenſe will beſt bear, they made haſte, i. e. took it ill, that they were not preſently brought into the plenty they were promiſed (ſo after this we ſee, Numb. 20. 5. that this was their form of expoſtulation with Moſes, Wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Ægypt to bring us to this evil place? it is no place of ſeed, or figgs, or vines, or pomegranates, the plenty promiſed them in Canaan:) and then thus to make haſte, was to be impatient to ſtay God's time of giving them this inheritance; but becauſe they had it not ſtreight, wiſhing themſelves back again in Ægypt. And this well agrees to the context, they made haſte, they forgat his works, they waited not for his counſel, making an oppoſition betwixt the firſt and the two laſt of theſe; they made haſte, i. e. weighed not, conſidered not what God's purpoſes or promiſes concerning them were, could not attend the performance of God's promiſe in his own time, went on paſſionately in purſuit of their plenty which they lookt for, and as ſoon as they deſcried any difficulty (want of water, a deſart place) concluded preſently, that they were betrayed, and ſhould be utterly undone, and loſt, neither remembring what God had formerly done for them, by interpoſition of his power, nor waiting with patience till God's time, or till concerning their preſent exigence he ſhould make known his purpoſes to them. This is very agreeable to the notion of this word in Kal for making haſte, and in Niphal, applied to the mind, for doing all things raſhly, inconſiderately, præcipitouſly, and ſo fooliſhly. So Job 5. 13. the counſel of the froward נִמְהָרָה is haſty, inconſiderate; we render it, is carried headlong. So Hab. 1. 6. the Chaldeans are called a bitter nation, וְהַנִּמְהָר and paſſionate, inconſiderate. And ſo for that other paſſion of fear, moſt oppoſite to faith, or truſt in God (in which ſenſe that is moſt true, Iſa. 28. 16. he that believeth will not make haſte) 'tis uſed Iſa. 35. 4. ſay unto the נִמְהֲרֵי לֵב haſty or præcipitous in heart, i. e. thoſe which becauſe they had not preſently what they hoped, feared they ſhould never have it, for ſo it follows, be ſtrong, have ſome conſtancy of mind, fear not. And this ſeems to be the full importance of the word here, their paſſionate fear and diſtruſt of God's promiſes, becauſe they were not inſtantly performed, made them haſty, præcipitous, inconſiderate: and in that fit of paſſion, they forgat his works —

d. רִזּוֹן

V. 15. Leanneſs] For רִזּוֹן maciem, leanneſs, the LXXII. are deemed by ſome to have read רָצוֹן pleaſure, or deſire, becauſe they render it πλησμονὴν, ſaturity, as if that were ſet to ſignifie as much as they could, or did deſire; and this not diſagreeable to the ſtory, which mentions it in this ſtyle, Exod. 16. 8. The Lord ſhall give you in the evening fleſh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full, and Pſal. 78. 25. he ſent them meat to the full, and v. 29. they ate and were well filled, for he gave them their own deſire, they were not eſtranged from their luſts. In this rendring of the LXXII. the Syriack and Latin, &c. agree: the Syriack reads ܣܒܥܐ, and ſo the Latin, ſaturitatem, ſaturity; And without changing the Hebrew word רִזּוֹן into any other, this probable account may be given of their rendring. 'Tis known in Phyſick, that upon the ingeſtion of meats in their quality unwholſome, or of two much of thoſe which are healthfull, Nature with much violence ſeeks to diſcharge it ſelf by the ſeveral evacuations, upon which follows a ſuddain and almoſt incredible dejection of ſtrength, and falling away in fleſh. To this the ſtory, Num. 11. 20. ſeems to refer, where 'tis ſaid, that the Quails ſhould come out at their noſtrils, for that is a ſymptome not unuſual in violent vomitings, ſuch as accompany great and dangerous ſurfeits; ſo that the the plague which then befell the Israelites, seems to be that affection which Physicians name cholera, and is then properly styled πλησμονὴ, saturity, or surfeit by the LXXII. and those translators that follow, or accord with them, and so not very unfitly set to express that emaciation which was an effect of this πλησμονὴ, or saturity. But the Chaldee render it more to the letter פְּרַנְעָנָא leanness. The passage visibly belongs to the immediate consequents in the story of Quails, set down Num. 11. 33. and Psal. 78. 30. (though not in Exodus) viz. that while the flesh was yet between their teeth, e're it was chewed, the Lord smote the people with a very great plague, (the judgment whereof was never the less discernible, that it was an effect of their diet, when even miracles admit the subserviency of usual means) whereupon the place was called Kibroth hataavah, because there they buried the people that lusted. By this means they were deprived of the fruit of this their festival table, even when he gave them what they lusted for. The word רָזָה to attenuate, emaciate, is used also for destroying, Zeph. 2. 11. when God threatens that he will emaciate, i. e. destroy all the Gods—— And then רָזוֹן may be rendred more generally destruction or plague, and so R. Tanchum on Zeph. 11. renders it destruction. The Hebrew Arabick Glossary interprets רָזוֹן by נקץ defect; The Jewish Arab version hath leanness into their body, as נפש is sometimes taken for the body. Accordingly for sending leanness here, the Psalmist, Psal. 78. 31. useth this plainer style, of slaying the fattest of them, and smiting the chosen men in Israel.

V. 20. Glory] For כְּבוֹדָם their glory, which we now reade, and so is followed by some copies of the LXXII. δόξαν αὐτῶν, their glory, (and though others have ἀυτὸν, his, yet from the former both the Syriack have ܝܩܪܗ̈ and the Latin gloriam suam, their glory) the original copies are by the Jews said to have read כְּבוֹרוֹ his glory. What heed is to be given to the Jews herein I shall not now define, but onely observe, that the notion of כָּבוֹד here being that of a thick cloud, wherein God was pleased to exhibit or presentiate himself, כְּבוֹדָם their glory may well enough have been the original word, meaning by it God's presentiating himself to them, that when God had spoken to them out of the midst of the fire with darkness, clouds and thick darkness, Deut. 4. 11. and they saw no similitude, onely they heard a voice, v. 12. they turned this majestatick presence afforded to them, i. e. their glory, into the similitude of a calf —— the image of one of their Ægyptian Gods. Thus the word may be interpreted as we now have it, כְּבוֹדָם their glory, for which the Chaldee reade יַת אֵיקָר רְבוֹנְהוֹן the glory of their Lord; it being yet clear, that this very thing is elsewhere in Scripture frequently styled כְּבוֹדוֹ his glory, Deut. 5. 24. the Lord hath shewed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire. So Exod. 24. 16. the glory of the Lord abode upon the mount, and v. 17. the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the sight of the children of Israel. So Exod. 33. 18. shew me thy glory, and ch. 40. 34. a cloud covered the tent, and the glory of the Lord (this bright cloud) filled the Tabernacle; and Numb. 14. 10. the glory of the Lord—— Thus Rom. 1. 23. in the like matter and style as here, they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image—— by כָּבוֹד glory here meaning the glorious presence and exhibitions of God, which he was wont to afford them, which being in radient fiery clouds, wherein Angels appeared, God himself remaining perfectly invisible, Deut. 4. 15. the making and setting up any figure or image of an axe or calf, (whether to signifie Apis an Ægyptian false God, or the image or similitude of the true God, whose voice they heard, but saw no kind of similitude) and the proclaiming before it, These be thy God's, O Israel, which brought thee out of Ægypt, Exod. 32. 4. and these to go before them and conduct them, in stead of Moses, v. 1. was a great abomination and provocation. That this is the meaning of God's glory, see 2 Pet. 1. 17. where the voice from heaven [This is my beloved son—] is said to have come from the magnificent glory, which the text tells us, Mar. 9. 7. came out of the cloud, that overshadowed them. So in those places of Exodus præmised, where the glory of the Lord is certainly the thick cloud, &c. on the mount, by which God exhibited himself, called in the Targum and among the Jewish writers so frequently the majestick presence or שְׁכִינָה inhabitation of God (of which see more Annot. on Matt. 3. k. and Rom. 1. f.) one text there is that useth the word glory of the visible throne of God the Father in heaven, Act. 7. 55. he looked into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God, by glory meaning that visible satellitium of Angels, which appearing to him in a radiant manner were an evidence of God's special presence there, according to which it is that among us the raies about the name יְהוָה are ordinarily styled a glory.

V. 23. The breach] What פֶּרֶץ the breach or rupture here signifies, must be resolved by the use of both verb and noun in other places, Eccl. 3. 3. לִפְרוֹץ to break, is applied to an house, and opposed to the building of it, and so evidently signifies the pulling down, or ruinating it; so the Chaldee renders it, לְפַנָּרָא to pull it down. So 2 Sam. 5. 20. פָּרַץ the Lord hath broken, i. e. destroyed, mine enemies before me, פֶּרֶץ מַיִם according to the breaking, i. e. destruction, of waters, which carry all away before them, a sweeping destruction; upon which that place was called בַּעַל פְּרָצִים the place of ruptures, i. e. ruines or destructions. So Exod. 19. 24. פֶּן יִפְרֹץ בָּם lest he break on them, i. e. destroy them, יִקְטֹל kill them, saith the Chaldee, ἀπολέσῃ, destroy, the LXXII. Thus is the verb frequently rendred καταφθορὰν, destroying, by the LXXII. and the noun πτῶσις, ruine, Job 16. 14. he breaketh me with breach upon breach, one ruine and destruction on the heels of another. So Jud. 21. 15. God's making פֶּרֶץ a breach in the tribes of Israel, is his having destroyed one of the tribes, that of Benjamin being lacking, v. 3. and cut off, v. 6. So Ezech. 22. 30. standing, as that oft signifies praying, interceding with God, in the פֶּרֶץ rupture, is explained by that which follows, that I should not destroy it, i. e. saving or rescuing it from destruction. So 2 Sam. 6. God's smiting of Uzzah that he died, v. 8. is called פֶּרֶץ בְּעֻזָּה God's breaking a breach upon Uzzah; and from thence the place is called Perez Uzzah, the breaking of Uzzah, i. e. his destruction. And thus is the word here to be understood, He said he would destroy them, or spake of destroying them, had not Moses stood before him, i. e. prayed, בְּפֶרֶץ in, or about the rupture or ruine, in that very point of time, lest he should destroy them. The Chaldee expres it paraphrastically, if Moses had not stood before him, וְאִתְקְרִי and prevailed in prayer, i. e. thereby averted the destruction. So here again, v. 29. וַתִּפְרָץ בָּם brake in upon them, i. e. destroyed a multitude of them. And v. 30. where the Hebrew reads the plague ceased, the LXXII. read διέστη, the same word which here they use to render פָּרַץ.

g. וישא ידו להם

V. 26. Lifted up his hand] What וישא ידו להם and lifted up his hand because of them, here signifies, is best understood by the Chaldee, who render it ואתים ידיה בשבועה and he lifted up his hand with an oath על דילהון because of them; so the Jewish Arab, And he sware by his power to them, that he would, &c. Thus we know the lifting up the hand is the sign of swearing, and thus the story to which this refers, exacts. For though it is at first said onely, (and not under oath) Numb. 14. 12. I will smite them with pestilence — and that again retracted by God, as to the whole people, v. 20. yet it follows, v. 21. (in form of oath, when it is used by God) As truly as I live, all these men that have seen my glory — v. 22. shall not see the land, v. 23. and again, v. 28. As truly as I live, your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness, ye shall not come into the land, v. 29. and your children shall wander in the wilderness fourty years, and bear your whoredoms untill your carcasses be destroyed in the wilderness, v. 33. which is the full interpretation of what is here said of destroying them in the wilderness, overthrowing their seed among the nations, and scattering them in the lands. This being the very same passage which is referred to, Psal. 95. Unto whom I sware in my wrath, that they should not enter into my rest, that land where God had provided a rest for his people.

h. בעל פעור

V. 28. Baal-Peor] That בעל פעור Baal-Peor both here and Numb. 25. 3. is the Moabites false Idol-God, there can be no question. Peor, which the LXXII. expressing ע by γ, translate Φογώρ, was a mountain of Moab, Numb. 23. 28. and Deut. 34. 6. and בעל signifying Lord, must be that Idol-God peculiarly which the Moabites worshipt. The Jewish Arab renders it Peor the Idol, making Peor, the name of that mountain, the name of their Idol also, as well it might be, the mountain taking its denomination from the God that was worshipt there. Of this saith the story in Numbers, the people bowed down to their Gods, v. 2. which is here called joyning to that God Peor, or of Peor or Moab; ἐτελέσθησαν, say the LXXII. were initiated to the rites of that Idol. And as it is there said, They called the people to the sacrifices of their Gods, so here, they ate the sacrifices of the dead, (where again the Jewish Arab reads of Idols) these their Baalim being some dead Heroes, whom they had deified, and continued to offer sacrifice to them.

i. ויפלל

V. 30. Executed judgment] The notion of ויפלל in this place is much questioned. That פלל the Radix signifies to judge, or separate, discern, or divide, or take audience of a cause, there is no doubt: 1 Sam. 2. 25. ויפללו and God shall judge him, Ezek. 28. 23. נפלל shall be judged in the midst of thee, Ezek. 16. 51. פללת thou hast judged thy sister. But all the ancient interpreters take it here in another sense, for praying, or interceding, atoning; ויצלי and prayed, saith the Targum, and the Syriack in the same word; the LXXII. have ἐξιλάσατο, propitiated, the Latin, placavit, appeased. And the use of the Hebrew word in Hithpael in this sense for appeasing or propitiating, is an argument that the theme originally had some such notion. Thus in that 1 Sam. 2. 25. it follows, If a man sin against God, מי יתפלל לו who shall intercede for him? the Targum reads מן קדמוי יבעי from whom shall he request that it may be remitted him? Hence תפלה is the ordinary word for prayer, and among the Rabbins for a proseucha or oratory. And if we look into the story, we shall find two things said of Phinees, one, v. 7. that he took the javeline, and thrust them through; for which, if he was one of the Judges of Israel, as 'tis not unlikely he was being the son of Eleazar the son of Aaron, then he had a clear commission from Moses for what he did, Numb. 25. 5. Moses said to the Judges of Israel, slay you every one his men, and then the Jus zelotarum among the Jews, which is thought to take its rise from Phinees, is a great deviation from the pattern. The like sharp proceeding, upon express warrant, wee see Exod. 32. 27. Slay every man his companion. Secondly, that God saith of him, v. 11. he hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, that I consumed them not. Both these are again set down, and joyned together, v. 13. he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel. And the latter of these, that of turning away God's wrath, making the atonement, doth better answer the acception of פלל, than the zeal for God, as that signifies running through Zimri and Cosbi with the javelin. And therefore the best and fullest rendring of the word seems to be, neither he executed judgment, nor he prayed, but (which is the work of prayer ordinarily, but here also of zeal to God in killing the malefactours) made an atonement, appeased, or propitiated God. The Jewish Arab reads ואנצף, and did what was just and right.

k. ותחשב לו לצדקה

V. 31. Counted to him] The phrase ותחשב לו לצדקה and it was accounted to him for righteousness, may here deserve to be briefly noted, that it signifies much more than justification, as in the forinseck sense that is opposite to condemning: for thus it should note no more than acquitting or pardoning him to whom it was here so accounted; whereas by the story it is evident, that as God was atoned to to the people by this act of his, and not to him, so God thought fit to reward him and his posterity for this, Behold, saith God, Numb. 25. 12. I give him my Covenant of peace: And he shall have it and his seed after him, even the Covenant of an everlasting Priesthood, because he was zealous for God — Here his zeal's being accounted to him for righteousness, is bringing this high reward upon him. The Chaldee therefore renders it זכו it was counted unto him either for righteousness, or for merit, i. e. for a very rewardable act. So זכה in Chaldee signifies both just, and worthy, and meritorious; not speaking of perfect righteousness, or sinless merit, but such as God in his goodness is pleased to reward: and the LXXII. reade ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην, it was reputed to him for righteousness, the phrase so frequently used in the New Testament for rewarding men richly and infinitely above their merit, yet this as the reward of somewhat performed by his faithfull servants, which he looks upon with special favour in the Second Covenant.

l. ויבטא בשפתיו

V. 33. Spake unadvisedly] How Moses's fault, which was so great as to be punished by God with exclusion from Canaan, is here expresst by these words, ויבטא בשפתיו he spake or pronounced with his lips, is not easily resolved. The word בטא is used, Lev. 5. 4. and there signifies to declare, to pronounce, to speak. Now if it were that he spake with his lips onely, but doubted in his heart, when he struck the rock, and said, Shall we fetch you water out of this rock? then this will note his Infidelity; and perhaps the LXXII. may refer to that, reading διστάσας ἐν τοῖς χείλεσιν, he doubted in his lips, i. e. did by his words signifie his diffidence. But there is no reason that when in the Hebrew here it is onely said, that he spake with his lips, we should thence conclude his hearts disagreeing with his tongue. 'Tis therefore most reasonable, that speaking with his lips being in it self indifferent and innocent, should onely be concluded ill from the influence influence that the words precedent seem to have on it, They provoked his spirit, and he spake with his lips, i. e. he spake passionately as one provoked. And then as S. James saith, the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, ch. 1. 20. so here we may conclude of Moses; God had appointed him to speak to the rock, and it should bring forth water. And he being exasperated in his spirit, put into a passion by the people, goes and strikes the rock twice, and saith, Hear ye rebels, shall we fetch you water out of this rock? This passion of his was it self a fault, and disturb'd him so, that it is not to be believed that he could discharge that duty now incumbent on him from God, in that manner as he ought to do, with that faith and affiance in God, with that care of setting out the power and mercy of God to these provokers; and these two are the crimes charged on him by God, Numb. 20. 12. his unbelief, and his not sanctifying God in the sight of the people. This therefore is Moses his crime here, briefly intimated, not largely set down in this verse, that they provoked his spirit, and he spake, i. e. he spake in a provocation, not as a meek and faithfull servant of the Lord, that desired to glorifie God before the people, ought to have done. And this being here but imperfectly toucht, was left to be explicated by the story where the fact was recorded, and from thence, more than by the words, we may conclude this to be the meaning of this verse. The Jewish Arab here, differently from all others, hath it, because they contradicted his prophecy [which] he spake to them in his saying.

The End of the Fourth Book.

The

THE FIFTH BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hundred and Seventh PSALM.

The hundred and seventh the first of the last Book of Psalms, is an invitation to all sorts of men to take notice of, and acknowledge God's special mercies in rescuing them from the several dangers that every part of their lives is subject to, peculiarly from hunger, prison, disease, and danger by Sea. It seems probably to have been written presently after the Captivity, when the Nation had been exercised by siege and famine, by deportation, and imprisonment, and the land had been made desolate, for want of cultivation, yet withall so contrived as to have respect to the deliverance out of Ægypt. 'Twas a Psalm of Answering or parts to be sung alternately, having a double burthen, or intercalary verse oft recurring.

Paraphrase.

1. The great and daily bounty of God is such, his mercies and preservations so constant and perpetual, in all the turns and varieties of our lives, that we are most strictly obliged to take notice of them, and pay the tribute of most gratefull hearts, and the obedience of our whole lives in acknowledgment thereof.

1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever.

2, 3. This is in a most eminent manner incumbent on those that have been taken, and carried captive by oppressing invaders, and by the good providence of God again.

2. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy.

3. And gathered them out of the lands, from the East, and from the West, from the North, and from the [a] South.

a. reduced and recollected from their dispersions, and brought home safe to their own countrey

4, 5, 6, 7. So is it on all them which when they have been permitted by God for some time to a state of seeming destitution, deprived of all the necessaries of life, harbour, and all kind of food, &c. have yet upon their devout addresses to heaven in prayer, found present relief, and deliverance from their pressures, God by his gracious providence directing them to some auspicious successfull means of supplying their wants, and either returning them to their old, or bringing them to some new more fruitfull possession.

4. They wandered in the wilderness, in a ‖ solitary [b] way, They found no city to dwell in,

5. Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them,

6. Then they cryed unto the Lord † in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.

7. And he led them forth by the right way, that they might goe to a city of habitation.

‖ solitude, they found not the way to an inhabited city, † when distress was upon them see Psal. 106. 44.

8, 9. This certainly is an act as of a special and undeserved bounty, so of an overruling omnipotent providence, to provide so liberally for those that are so thirsty, and hungry, v. 5. i. e. altogether destitute, and that both these should be thus exercised and employed for the onely benefit of us unworthy sinfull sons of Adam, is matter of infinite comfort to us, and acknowledgment and thanksgiving to God.

8. * O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men.

9. For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

* Let them acknowledge to the Lord, his mercy, יודו ליהוה חסדו

10. Such

10. Such as ſit in darkneſs and in the ſhadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron,
11. Becauſe they rebelled againſt the words of God, and contemned the counſel of the moſt high,
12. Therefore he brought down their heart with labour, they fell down, and there was none to help;
† See v. 6. 13. Then they cried unto the Lord † in their trouble, and he ſaved them out of their diſtreſs.
14. He brought them out of darkneſs and the ſhadow of death, and brake their bands in ſunder.

10, 11, 12, 13, 14. In like manner is he pleaſed to deal for thoſe that are in priſon, and expectation of preſent death, when in this valley of Achor they fly to him for reſcue: 'Tis moſt juſt and ſo moſt ordinary with God to deliver men up to be chaſtiſed for their ſins, when they are ſo proud and ſtout, as to reſiſt, or neglect the commands of God, 'tis but ſeaſonable diſcipline, to exerciſe them with afflictions, to bring diſtreſſes upon them, perſecution, impriſonment, &c. thereby to teach them that neceſſary leſſon of humility. And if then they ſhall ſpeedily return to him that ſtrikes, and with obedient penitent hearts, and fervent devotions indeavour to attone him, he will certainly be propitiated by them, and deliver them out of their diſtreſſes, be they never ſo ſharp, and in the eye of man irremediable.

* See v. 8. 15. * O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men,
16. For he hath broken the gates of braſs, and cut the bars of iron in ſunder.

15, 16. This certainly is another act of his ſpecial and undeſerved bounty, and withall an inſtance of his omnipotence, thus to rid them of thoſe gyves that none elſe can looſe, to preſerve thoſe that in humane judgment are moſt deſperately loſt, and abundantly deſerves to be acknowledged and commemorated by us.

‖ from or becauſe of the way of 17. Fools, ‖ [c] becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquity, are afflicted.
18. Their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat, and they draw near unto the gates of death.
† See v. 6. 19. Then they cry unto the Lord † in their trouble, he ſaveth them out of their diſtreſſes.
20. He ſent his word and healed them, and delivered them out of their deſtructions.

17, 18, 19, 20. So again when the follies and ſtupidities of men betray them to wilfull ſins, and God puniſheth thoſe with ſickneſs and weakneſs, brings them ſo low that nature is almoſt wholly exhauſted in them, and preſent death is expected, if from their languiſhing bed they ſhall apply themſelves to the great and ſovereign Phyſician, forſake the ſins that brought this infliction upon them, and thus timely make their ſolid peace with heaven, and then pray, themſelves and others (ſee Jam. 5. 14, 15, 16. Eccluſ 38. 9.) imploring his gracious hand for their recovery, there is nothing more frequently experimented, than that, when all other means fail, the immediate bleſſing of God interpoſeth for them, and reſtores them to life and health again. c.

* See v. 8. 21. * O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and for his wonderfull works to the children of men.
22. And let them ſacrifice the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, and declare his works with rejoycing.

21, 22. And this certainly is a third inſtance of God's infinite power and goodneſs, this of unhoped, unexpected cures of the feebleſt patients, which exacts the moſt ſolemn gratefull acknowledgments from thoſe that have received them from his hand.

23. They that go down to the ſea in ſhips, and doe buſineſs in great waters,
24. Theſe ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep.
25. For he commandeth and raiſeth the ſtormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof:
26. They mount up to the heaven, they goe down again to the depths, their ſoul is melted becauſe of trouble:
‖ are giddy, or turned round 27. [d] They ‖ reel to and fro, they ſtagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end.
† See v. 6. 28. Then they cry unto the Lord † in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their diſtreſs.
* ſtilled the ſtorms into a calm, 29. He [e] * maketh the ſtorms a calm, ſo that the waves thereof are ſtill.
30. Then are they glad, becauſe they be quiet, ſo he bringeth them unto their deſired haven.

23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. So again the great navigators, traffickers and merchants of the world, when in their voyages by ſea, they meet with terrible amazing tempeſts, waves that toſs their ſhips with that violence, as if they would mount them into the air, and at another turn, douſe them deep into the vaſt Ocean, as if they would preſently overwhelm them, and the paſſengers are hereby ſtricken into ſad trembling fits of conſternation and amazement, and expectation of preſent drowning; in this point of their greateſt danger they oft experiment the ſovereign mercy and power of God, and receive ſuch ſeaſonable returns to their devout prayers, that they find the ſtorm preſently turned into the perfecteſt calm, and by the friendlieſt gales are ſafely wafted to that port which they deſigned to ſail to. d. e.

‖ See v. 8. 31. ‖ O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and for his wonderfull works toward the children of men.

31. And this certainly is a fourth moſt eminent inſtance of God's infinite power and goodneſs, which exacts our moſt fervent offerings of praiſe and thankſgiving.

32. Let them exalt him alſo in the congregation of the [f] people, and praiſe him in the aſſembly of the Elders.

32. And not onely ſuch as are ſent up to God from our ſingle breaſts or cloſets, but it deſerves the moſt ſolemn publick commemorations in the Temple, in the united lauds of the whole congregation, Elders and people anſwering one the other. f.

33. He turneth rivers into a wilderneſs, and the water-ſprings into dry ground:

33. The ſame act of his power and providence it is to convert the greateſt abundance of waters into perfect drought:

† ſaltneſs מְלֵחָה 34. A fruitfull land into † barrenneſs, for the wickedneſs of them that dwell therein.

34. Thereby to puniſh thoſe with after ſterility and fruitleſneſs (after the manner of his judgments on Sodom) whoſe plenty had been infamouſly abuſed, and miſpent on their luſts.

35. He

35, 36, 37, 38. And the same act again it is of his bounty and power together to improve the barrenneſt deſart into the fruitfulleſt paſtures, moſt commodious for habitation and plantations, and thither to bring thoſe who had formerly lived in the greateſt penury, and by his auſpicious providence onely, without any other obſervable means, to advance them to the greateſt height of wealth, and proſperity of all kinds, making them a numerous and powerfull nation, remarkable for the bleſſings of God upon them.

35. He turneth the wilderneſs into a ſtanding water, and dry ground into water-ſprings:

36. And there he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation,

37. And ſow the fields and plant vineyards which may yield fruits of increaſe.

38. He bleſſeth them alſo ſo that they are multiplied greatly, and * ſuffereth not their cattel to decreaſe. * diminiſhed not לֹא יִמְעָט

39, 40, 41. And when they are thus ſignally favoured by him, 'tis yet in the power of their ſins to diſſipate all this their proſperity: Upon their forſaking God, and falling to any courſe of evil (ſee the Chaldee, and v. 11. 17.) 'tis moſt juſt, and ſo to be expected from God, that he ſhould give them up into the hands of wicked men (which are always ready for ſuch offices) to oppreſs and afflict them ſadly, to ſubdue their Governours, eject them out of their dominions, bring them to the ſtate of greateſt deſtitutions, without any viſible means or way of evading; and juſt when they are brought to the loweſt, ‖ upon their humiliation, contrition, and ſincere reformation, to reſcue them out of this deplored condition, and immediately advance them to the greateſt height of plenty, order, and peace.

39. Again they are miniſhed, and brought low through ‖ oppreſſion, affliction and ſorrow. ‖ evil oppreſſion רָעָה וְיָגוֹן

40. He poureth contempt upon Princes, and cauſeth them to wander in the † wilderneſs, where there is no way. † ſolitude תֹהוּ

41. Yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock.

וְכַר חַבְּרוּ ‖ לְאוֹרַיְתָא and when they return to the Law, Chald.

42, 43. By theſe ſo wiſe, ſo juſt, and ſo gracious diſpenſations of God, 'tis but reaſonable that all ſorts of men ſhould be effectually wrought on. All pious and good men have here matter of infinite joy, that they are under the protection of ſo gracious a father, who if they adhere to him, will never be wanting to them. All wicked men will here diſcern the cauſe of all the calamities that overtake them in this world, as prognoſticks of their far greater ſufferings to come in another world, if God's ſcourge here be not permitted to rouſe, and awake, and work reformations upon them, and in all their ſufferings will have nothing to object, or quarrel at, the ſole original of all being from themſelves. And ſo as the wicked will have incomparable advantages from this meditation, if they be but wiſe to their own greateſt intereſts and concernments; ſo all the true ſervants of God will here learn how gracious a maſter, how liberal a rewarder it is, to whom they perform their ſervices.

42. The righteous ſhall ſee it, and rejoyce, and all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth.

g. 43. * Whoſo is wiſe ‖ and will obſerve theſe things, even they ſhall underſtand the ‖ loving kindneſs of the Lord. * Who is wiſe? he will lay up theſe things, and they— ‖ bounties

a. מִיָּם V. 3. The ſouth] The Hebrew here readeth מִיָּם from the ſea, for which the Chaldee reads מִן יַמָּא דָּרוֹמָא from the ſouth ſea. The word is moſt frequently taken for the great or mediterranean ſea, which is weſt to Judæa, and generally when יָם the ſea is put for any of the Cardinal points, it then ſignifies the Weſt; and accordingly Gen. 12. 8. Bethel מִיָּם is Bethel on the weſt, מַעַרְבָּא on the weſt, ſaith the Targum, and Exod. 10. 19. רוּחַ יָם a wind of the ſea, we duly render it a weſt wind. But 'tis elſewhere taken for the Red ſea, Pſal. 114. 3. and 72. 8. which is on the ſouth of Judæa, and ſo in reſpect to that, the ſea here ſignifies the ſouth ſea, as both the enumeration of the other three, Eaſt, Weſt, and North, demonſtrates, and the conſideration of the matter in hand, the quarters whither they were diſperſed, or carried captive, Eaſt, Weſt, and North, and Ægypt, whither they ſhall goe in ſhips, Deut. 28. 68. by the way that they came, i. e. by the Red ſea.

b. דֶּרֶךְ עִיר V. 4. Solitary way] The Hebrew here may beſt be rendred, they wandred בַּמִּדְבָּר בִּישִׁימוֹן in the deſolate wilderneſs, or, as the Syriack, ܒܡܕܒܪܐ ܕܐܫܡܘܢ in the deſert Aſſimon, (for the word is uſed appellatively) the Jewiſh Arab accordingly, פִּי טְרִיק אלסמאוה in the way of Alſamawa, (tranſpoſing the words) as likewiſe Pſal. 68. 8. and 78. 40. and 107. 14. And ſo Saadias in his verſion of the Law, Num. 21. 21. and 23. 28. and Deut. 32. 10. uſeth the ſame word, as alſo Abu Walid in the root ילל, and the Jewiſh Tranſlators of the Hiſtorical books 1 Sam. 23. 24. Then follows, דֶּרֶךְ עִיר בּוֹשֶׁב לֹא מָצָאוּ they found not the way to an inhabited city. Thus the Chaldee may be rendred alſo, אֻרְחָא קָרְחָא the way to the city, and not בְּצָדֵי אֻרְחָא in a deſolate way, as their Latin render it. Thus 'tis evident the LXXII. reade, ὁδὸν πόλεως κατοικουμένης οὐχ εὗρον they found not the way of an habitable city, and ſo the Syriack, and Latin, and Arabick. And ſo the ſenſe very well bears, their paſſage through the wilderneſs being not a journeying, ſuch as when men paſs on in a road to ſome inhabited place, and though at the preſent they be in the wilderneſs, yet if they have proviſion for a while, they will ſoon and ſafely come to their journeys end; but a wandring up and down from all path and road, and ſo in an endleſs maze of deſolation. In oppoſition to which we have v. 7. He led them by the right way, that they might goe to a city of habitation, or habitable city; the going to which there correſponds with the way to it here.

c. אִוִּילִים V. 17. Fools] For אִוִּילִים fools, which the Chaldee retains, and renders שְׁטָיָן fools, the LXXII. ſeems to have read ſome other word, הַצִּילָם, or the like, for they render it ἐῤῥύσατο αὐτούς he helped them; and ſo the Syriack, ܫܙܒ he helped them, and the Latin, and Arabick, and Æthiopick. But there is no reaſon to miſdoubt our Hebrew reading, which the Chaldee hath adhered to. In the next place מִדַּרְכָּם, which we render becauſe, literally ſignifies, as the LXXII. render it, ἐξ ὁδοῦ from, or becauſe of the way of their wickedneſs, as elſewhere the way of wickedneſs ſignifies their ſinfull courſe, or actions. And the word דֶּרֶךְ way ſeems deſignedly to allude to the ſame word ſet twice before, v. 4. they wandred in a ſolitary way, or as the LXXII. and all other Interpreters have it, ὁδὸν πόλεως κατοικουμένης οὐχ εὗρον they found not the way to an inhabited city, (ſee (ſee note b.) and v. 7. He (God) led them by the right way. The like correſpondence is obſervable in other parts of the Pſalm, as between v. 4. they found no city, and v. 7. to goe to a city, and v. 36. a city for habitation; between ſit in darkneſs, v. 40. and he brought them out of darkneſs, 14. between bound in affliction and iron, v. 10. and he cut the barrs of iron, v. 16. between the longing ſoul, v. 9. and their ſoul abhorring, &c. v. 18. between gathering from the ſea, v. 3. (ſee note a.) and going down into the ſea, v. 23.

d. יָחוֹגּוּ

V. 27. They reel] יָחוֹגּוּ from חָגַג circumgyratus eſt, being whirled or turned round, may here fitly be applied to the toſſing of the ſhip in the tempeſt, and ſo of the paſſengers that are in it, to ſignifie their uncertain and dangerous ſtate, ſometimes whirled round, ſometimes tottering and ready to overturn, which is here called ſtaggering, &c. But it may alſo be underſtood of the men, and not of the ſhip, and ſo ſignifie (by the metonymy of the Cauſe for the Effect) they were giddy, which is the natural effect of ſuch turning. The Chaldee reade יִרְתָּחוּן trembled, and the Syryack ܙܥܘ to the ſame ſenſe, were moved, or trembled, and ſo the LXXII. ἐταράχθησαν were troubled; all joyning to denote the effect of this their danger on the men, their fear, perturbation, aſtoniſhment, giddineſs, (not knowing which way to turn in this condition) and not onely the danger it ſelf, which had been poetically expreſt, v. 26. The Jewiſh Arab reads ויגולין and they go up and down; ſo Abu Walid, they go and paſs up and down, hither and thither, as a drunken man: and he compares the word in this notion to the ſame root in the Arabick, where it ſignifies coming or going. And then the word will not be fitly appliable to the ſhip, or any inanimate thing, in his judgment.

e. יָקֵם

V. 29. Maketh the ſtorms calm] The Hebrew, יָקֵם, from קוּם ſtetit, ſtabilis eſt, cannot be better rendred here than by quieted, or ſtilled, becauſe of the לְדָמָּה that follows, which muſt literally be rendred into a ſilence, or calm. The LXXII. reade ἐπέταξε καὶ ἔστη εἰς αὔραν, he commanded the tempeſt, and it ſtood, or was ſtilled into a calm, taking in ſomewhat of the notion of קוּם to command or decree; but the Syriack ܐܫܪܐ he diſmiſt, or quieted it; the Jewiſh Arab ויוקף מכאן לעאצף גלוניה, he maketh to ſtand in the place of a tempeſt a calm, uſing גלוניה a word taken up from the Greek γαλήνη, by thoſe that live near the ſea, as he notes.

f. עָם

V. 32. People] עָם the people is here evidently oppoſed to וְקִנִּים Elders, and both ſignifie the whole aſſembly or congregation. For among the Jews, the Doctors, Rulers of the Synagogue and Elders, had a diſtinct apartment from the people, and the ſervice being much in Antiphona or reſponſe, part was ſpoken by them that officiated in the ſeat of the Elders, and the reſt by the multitude of common men, the ἰδιῶται that anſwered Amen at leaſt, at their giving of thanks.

g. מִי חָכָם

V. 43. Who is wiſe, and will] The Hebrew here is by way of interrogation מִי חָכָם who is wiſe? ſo the Chaldee, מַן חַכִּימָא who is wiſe? and the LXXII. τίς σοφός; And then וְיִשְׁמָר muſt be rendred not, and, but, he ſhall keep, lay up, obſerve; the ו in this ſcheme of ſpeaking being either an expletive redundant, or of ſuch ſignificancy as will be beſt expreſt by alſo, thus, who is wiſe? he that is ſo if he be but wiſe for the world, wiſe in this generation, will adde to his former notions of humane wiſedom this conſideration of theſe providences of God, in the foregoing Pſalm. The Syriack have beſt rendred this according to ſenſe, ܡܢ ܕܚܟܝܡ ܗܘ ܢܛܪ ܠܗܠܝܢ, he that is wiſe will obſerve theſe things. And then follows וְיִתְבּוֹנְנוּ and they ſhall underſtand, in the plural, ſome copies of the LXXII. reade συνήσει, he, in the ſingular; and from thence the Syriack hath ܢܬܒܘܢܢ, and the Vulgar intelliget; which if the right reading, muſt apply it to the wiſe man. But as the Hebrew and Chaldee reade this ſecond clauſe in the plural, ſo do the moſt emendate copies of the LXXII. συνήσουσι, they— And then it will not be amiſs to remember one part of the Scripture-ſtyle frequently exemplified (ſee note on Mat. 7. 6.) called ἀναστροφή, reverting or going back, when, two things being ſaid, the diſcourſe inlarged upon both ſpeaks firſt of the latter, and then laſt of the former of them. This is taken notice of by the Jews as an idiome of their language. Aben Ezra on Pſal. 43. ſaith, החזיר האזנים בראשונה He ſpeaks of the ear before he does of the eye, becauſe in the ſeventh verſe he ſpake laſt of the ear, and according to cuſtom therefore begins with it. Thus it may well be here: the concernments both of the righteous and the wicked in the matter of this Pſalm being mentioned v. 42. The righteous ſhall rejoyce, and iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth; the latter of theſe is probably returned to firſt, who is wiſe? wiſe in any the loweſt degree, he ſhall obſerve, or lay up, ponder, conſider theſe things; either learn by God's judgments on other men, or elſe being awaked by his own ſmart, and having nothing to object againſt the juſtice of his ſufferings, he will think fit, if he be not a moſt inſenſate fool, to reform, and ſo benefit by them, and prevent the yet future evils, which will certainly attend theſe, if he repent not. And then the diſcourſe reverts to the former part, the ſubject of which was the righteous, in the plural, יְשָׁרִים, v. 42. and concludes of them what is moſt obvious, and they ſhall underſtand חַסְדֵי the mercies or graciouſneſſes or bounties of the Lord; thoſe ſo oft mentioned in the former part of the Pſalm, Praiſe the Lord for חַסְדּוֹ his goodneſs, and here by way of recapitulation Emphatically referred to, the righteous ſhall obſerve theſe wonders, and experimentally know this his goodneſs. It is true, the wiſe in Scripture-ſtyle doth moſt frequently ſignifie the Godly; and 'tis no news to paſs from the ſingular to the plural number, without varying the ſubject, when the context ſhews this to be neceſſary; and where it is not neceſſary, 'tis yet poſſible. But it is as certain, that wiſedom is ſometimes to be taken in a greater width, for humane wiſedom, underſtanding, conſidering, to which wicked men are frequently called (O conſider this ye that forget God, and many the like:) Secondly, that iniquity (as that ſignifieth all wicked men) is ſpoken of v. 42. as well as the righteous: Thirdly, that not onely the Hebrew letter, but the Paraphraſe of the Chaldee (as the LXXII. alſo) varies the number; which if it do not without cauſe, then there is a place here for the ordinary figure of ἀναστροφή, and then the wiſe will be the wicked man, that is not utterly a fool to his worldly intereſts. But this only as a conjecture. The Jewiſh Arab reads, And he that is wiſe let him obſerve theſe ſayings, that he may underſtand the bounty of the Lord, the goodneſs, as that is taken for the ſame with bounty.

The Hundred and Eighth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. The hundred and eighth Pſalm is compiled and very little changed from two branches of two former Pſalms, Pſal. 57. v. 8, 9, 10, 11. and Pſal. 60. v. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. and is a ſolemn commemoration of God's mercies to David in the victories obtained by him over his enemies round about, particularly at the taking of Rabba, 2 Sam. 12. 29. together with a prayer for continuance of all God's mercies.

A Song or Pſalm of David.

1, 2. Bleſſed Lord, how am I ingaged to bleſs and praiſe thy holy name, to imploy my tongue and all the inſtruments of muſick, and every faculty of my ſoul, in commemorating thy goodneſs and ſignal mercies to me? This is the leaſt that can be deemed incumbent on me; and this I ſhall moſt readily, heartily and chearfully perform (ſee Pſal. 57. 7, 8.)

1. O God, my heart is ‖ fixed; I will ſing and give praiſe, even with my glory. ‖ prepared, נָכוֹן ſee Pſal. 57. 7.

2. Awake Pſaltery and Harp; † I my ſelf will awake early. † I will אָעִירָה

3. And 'tis not fit that ſo great dignations ſhould be acknowledged in the cloſet or privacy onely; 'tis moſt decent that our tribute of praiſe for them ſhould be in the midſt of the aſſembly, with the greateſt poſſible ſolemnity, calling all others to take part in ſo important an office (Pſal. 57. 9.)

3. I will praiſe thee, O Lord, among the people, and I will ſing praiſes to thee among the nations.

a. 4. For thy mercy and fidelity have been magnified toward me in a moſt eminent manner, and are each of them infinitely great (ſee Pſal. 57. 10.)

4. For thy mercy is great [a] ‖ above the heavens, and thy truth † reacheth unto the * clouds. ‖ from above † unto עַד * skyes: ſee note on Pſal. 57. c.

5. For which therefore bleſſed be for ever thy glorious majeſty in the higheſt degree that is poſſible for us finite and infirm creatures, (ſee Pſal. 57. 11.)

5. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, and thy glory ‖ above all the earth. ‖ or, upon

6. Who have received ſuch ſignal aſſiſtances from thee, evidences of thy ſpecial favour, and interpoſition of thine own right hand, in return and anſwer to the prayers which we have addreſt to thee. (See Pſal. 60. 5.)

6. That thy beloved may be delivered, ſave with thy right hand and anſwer me.

7, 8. God made me a moſt ſure promiſe, which he hath now moſt ſignally performed, and ſo given me matter of all triumph, and rejoycing and thankſgiving, that I am not onely fully and quietly poſſeſt of all the kingdom both of Iſrael and Judah, and delivered from the aſſaults which were made againſt me by my malicious neighbours (ſee Pſal. 60. 6, 7. note d.)

7. God hath ſpoken in his holineſs, I will rejoyce, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.

8. Gilead is mine, Manaſſeh is mine: Ephraim alſo is the ſtrength of my head, Judah is my lawgiver.

b. 9. But even that they that thus aſſaulted me are themſelves brought down in ſubjection to me; by name the Moabites, the Idumæans, and the Philiſtims, (ſee Pſal. 60. 8. and note d.)

9. Moab is my waſhpot, over Edom will I † caſt out my ſhooe, over Philiſtia [b] will I * triumph. † caſt my- * ſhout

10. And now let the Ammonites caſt us in the teeth, reproach us as if we ſhould doe nothing of all this, as if their cities were impregnable, or our armies utterly unſufficient to vanquiſh and ſubdue them;

10. Who will bring me into the ſtrong city? who will lead me into Edom?

c. 11. That God which for our ſins had formerly withdrawn his aſſiſtance (and ſo long we muſt needs be improſperous, having no means left to accompliſh any victories) hath now been graciouſly pleaſed to return to us, and aſſiſt us, and manage the whole buſineſs for us, to give us this laſt victory over the Regal City and King of the Ammonites, and ſo to teſtifie by this happy ſucceſs his ſignal preſence with us.

11. [c] Wilt not thou, O God, who ‖ haſt caſt us off? and wilt not thou, O God, go forth with our hoſts? ‖ Hadſt

12. To him therefore alone is our reſort in the greateſt diſtreſs, from him muſt come the relief, or we ſhall be loſt; all other aſſiſtances, beſide that of heaven, being utterly unſufficient, (ſee Pſal. 60. 11.)

12. Give us help from † trouble, for vain is the help of man. † diſtreſs מִצָּר

13. If he interpoſe his power on our ſide, no enemy ſhall be able to ſtand before us. It is he, and not any ſtrength of ours, that ſhall work all our victories for us (ſee Pſal. 60. 12.) And on this we will confidently depend, through his goodneſs and mercy to us.

13. Through God we ſhall doe valiantly, for it is he that ſhall tread down our enemies.

Annotations on Pſal. CVIII.

a. V. 4. Above the heavens] Among the few variations which are made in this Pſalm from the ſeveral parcels of Pſal. 57. and 60. of which it is compoſed, it may be obſerved, that inſtead of עַד שְׁחָקִים to the heavens, Pſal. 57. 10. 'tis here מֵעַל שְׁמַיִם from above the heavens; which being deſigned as an expreſſion to ſet out the greatneſs of the extent of God's mercies, Firſt, it doth that very מֵעַל שְׁמַיִם very perfectly, and ſignifies the infiniteneſs of it, not onely above the heavens, but from thence continuedly down to us, מֵעַל from above, to the loweſt and meaneſt of us, and to all betwixt: and Secondly, it confirms our rendring שְׁחָקִים both there and here, not clouds, but skyes, meaning the bodies of the heavens, thoſe pure æthereal orbs, where the Sun and Moon and Stars are (ſee note on Pſal. 57. c.) for taking שְׁמַיִם for the regions of the air, and שְׁחָקִים for the celeſtial bodies, theſe two phraſes will perfectly accord, מֵעַל from above the lower of them, the aiery regions, and עַד to, or the higher of them, the celeſtial orbs; onely with this difference, that the former phraſe notes the deſcent from thence hither (not עַל above, but מֵעַל from above) and the latter the aſcent from us עַד to, or as far as to that: the former notes the βάθος or depth, the latter the ὕψος or height of it.

V. 9. Will I triumph] Here is another variation betwixt this Pſalm and the copy whence 'tis tranſcribed, Pſal. 60. 8. Here 'tis עָלַי פְּלֶשֶׁת אִתְרוֹעָע over the Philiſtims I will ſhout, אֶתְגֹּבָב I will jubulate, ſaith the Chaldee, אֶסְהֵי I will cry or make a noiſe, give a ſhout, ſaith the Syriack, but the LXXII. by way of paraphraſe, ἐμοὶ ἀλλόφυλοι ὑποτάγησαν, the Philiſtims are ſubjected unto me, the full intimation of that ſhouting over them. But Pſal. 60. 8. 'tis עָלַי פְּלֶשֶׁת הִתְרוֹעֲעִי. Of that place we have already ſhewed (ſee Pſal. 60. note c.) that עָלַי is not to be rendred over me, but ſimply over, viz. (joyned with that which next follows) over the Philiſtims; and that הִתְרוֹעֲעִי ſhout thou, was to be applied either as ſpeaking to himſelf, ſhout thou, my ſoul, or to the congregation of Iſrael, ſhout thou, ye Iſraelites, over Philiſtia. And then, as that was there according to ſenſe rendred by the Syriack, over the Philiſtims אֶסְהֵי will I ſhout, ſo here the Hebrew hath it moſt expreſly, to ſecure us of the truth of that interpretation there, in both thoſe particulars; there being as little difference betwixt אִתְרוֹעָע I will ſhout, and הִתְרוֹעֲעִי ſhout thou, my ſoul, as betwixt עָלַי, which is acknowledged to ſignifie no more than over (a bare preposition) and עָלַי which hath the ſame letters, though it be otherwiſe pointed. The Jewiſh Arab, Pſal. 60. reads ומני ירתרע the Philiſtims ſhall be ſmitten down by me, and here ארדעהם I will ſmite down the Philiſtims, as if he took the Hebrew אִתְרוֹעָע in the notion of breaking, in theſe places. R. Solomon here takes it in the notion of ſhouting, but in the other Pſalm in a different, expounding it, joyn thy ſelf to my kingdom, by becoming ſubject to me.

ג חֲלָא

V. 11. Wilt not thou, O God,] This paſſage though in words (all but אַתָּה thou) the very ſame with Pſal. 60. 10. muſt yet be underſtood in ſomewhat a diſtant ſenſe. And 'tis no news in ſacred compoſitions, eſpecially thoſe that are poetical, to apply words ſpoken upon one ſubject to another, to which however they were not at firſt deſigned, yet they may be commodiouſly referred. The occaſion of this Pſalm ſeems to be the taking of Rabba, 2 Sam. 12. 30. as the ſubject of Pſal. 60. was the atchievements of Joab, mentioned in the title of it, which all were præludia and preparative to this great ſucceſs, the taking a fortified Metropolis, and therewith the King, and poſſeſſing the Crown of the conquered nation. So that now all that was ſaid Pſal. 60. but in vote, by way of addreſs to God in prayer for his relief and aſſiſtance, is here repeated by way of juſt and ſolemn triumph, and religious boaſting: God hath ſpoken, v. 7. yea and hath now ſignally performed; Who will bring me, v. 10. Let them now ask that queſtion, which formerly they did ask by way of ſcorn, but now have little reaſon for; Wilt not thou, O God, who hadſt caſt us off? It is now apparent by the event, that though for a time God withheld his proſpering hand, went not out with our armies, yet he is now graciouſly pleaſed to eſpouſe our cauſe, to give us this great and ſignal victory. And herein the word יְדִידֶיךָ thy beloved, v. 6. may poſſibly glance on the name of Solomon, who by the Prophets direction was at this time ſtyled Jedidiah, 2 Sam. 12. 25. the beloved of the Lord, becauſe of the Lord, or becauſe God was now graciouſly pleaſed to be propitiated to David, for his ſin with Bathſhebah, Solomon's mother, and to proſper his military attempts. The fifty ſeventh Pſalm, from which the former part of this Pſalm was taken, was compoſed by him in the time of his greateſt exigence, his flight from Saul; and therefore he being now in a ſtate quite contrary to that, in his higheſt exaltation, 'twill be moſt reaſonable to underſtand thoſe words here, ver. 5. that were then petition and prayer, Pſal. 57. 5. and 11. in the notion of lauds and gratefull retribution. Kimchi and Jarchi refer it to the days of the Meſſiah.

יְדִידֶיךָ

The Hundred and Ninth PSALM.

TO the chief Muſician, a Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The hundred and ninth Pſalm, (compoſed on occaſion whether of Abſalom's rebellion, and aſſuming the government, as the Syriack takes it, or of David's flight from Saul, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra reſolve) is a direfull prediction of God's judgments that ſhould fall upon his enemies, whether Abſalom and his Counſellor Achitophel, or Saul and Doeg: and by Act. 1. 20. where v. 8. of this Pſalm is ſaid to be fulfilled in Judas, it appears to have had a more eminent completion in thoſe that oppoſed and conſulted againſt, and crucified Chriſt, the Phariſees, and the Rulers of the Jews, who with Judas, that betrayed him into their hands, and was their counſellor and guide at the apprehenſion of him, Act. 1. 16. met with ſad and direfull ends. It was compoſed by David, and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

for my praiſe תְּהִלָּתִי

1. Hold not thy peace, [a] O God || of my praiſe.

1. Thou, O God, art the onely joy and comfort and refuge of my life, from thee all the good things flow that ever I received, to thee all the glory and praiſe is due: Be thou now pleaſed to interpoſe for my aid and relief. a.

2. For now I have ſpecial need of it, wicked men having moſt falſely and treacherouſly and cunningly infuſed into mens minds moſt ſlanderous reports of me.

2. For the mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitfull are opened againſt me, they have ſpoken againſt me with a lying tongue.

3. Their ſlanders and falſe ſuggeſtions have been their ſpecial peſtilent weapons againſt me; with them they have beſieged, as it were, and girt me cloſe, and then ſhot out theſe poiſonous darts againſt me, ſharpned the ſwords of their tongues, and with them moſt maliciouſly aſſaulted me.

3. They compaſſed me about alſo with words of hatred, and fought againſt me without a cauſe.

4, 5. I never did any act of hoſtility or unkindneſs to them, but contrariwiſe obliged them with all acts of love and greateſt charity; they had no other provocation but this from me; and for this they have moſt unhumanely returned all the effects of the bittereſt malice. Yet hath not this moved me to act any revenge; but on the contrary, I have heartily prayed to God * for them, beſought his pardon, and the averting his judgments from them, and his grace for their timely reformation. And all this hath produced no other effect from them but their moſt malignant hatred, and miſchievous practices, in return to my greateſt charity.

4. For my love they are my adverſaries: but I give my ſelf to prayer.

5. And they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my good will.

b. c. d. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. This will certainly bring down upon the chief actors, and all the partners in this wickedneſs (whether Achitophel and Abſalom and their followers, or Saul and Doeg, in the firſt literal ſenſe, or Judas and the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and all that nation that oppoſed and crucified Chriſt, in the prophetick ſenſe) moſt unavoidable ſad executions, judgments, and vengeances, as on ſo many accurſed Malefactors, whoſe lives and eſtates being forfeited to the law, their widow'd wives and orphan children ſhall become vagabonds over the face of the earth, covetous and griping and beggerly for ever.

6. Set thou a wicked man [b] over him, and let || ſatan ſtand at his right hand.

7. When he ſhall be judged, let him † be condemned; and let his prayer become [c] ſin.

8. Let his days be [d] few, and let another take his office.

9. Let his children be fatherleſs, and his wife a widom.

10. Let his children be continually vagabonds and beg; let them ſeek their bread alſo out of their deſolate places.

|| the adverſary † or, go out wicked.

e. 11, 12. And as they corrade and indeavour to get together the wealth of others, ſo ſhall others when they have any thing to be ſeis'd on, plunder and rifle and pillage them, in their ſufferings, be they never ſo cruel.

11. Let the * extortioner [e] catch all that he hath, and let the ſtranger ſpoil his labour.

12. Let there be none to extend mercy to him, neither let there be any to favour his fatherleſs children.

* uſurer ſeiſe on

f. 13, 14, 15. As for the principal inſtruments in theſe wicked rebellions and treaſons (againſt David and the ſon of David) they ſhall certainly come to untimely deaths (ſo did Achitophel, 2 Sam. 17. 23. and Abſalom, c. 18. 14. and Saul, 1 Sam. 31. 5. and Doeg, Pſal. 52. 5. and ſo Judas, Matth. 27.) and their poſterity ſhall not laſt beyond the next age. They ſhall be curſed by God, and all the puniſhments due to their fathers ſins ſhall be ſo viſited on this their wicked progeny, that they ſhall ſoon come to utter eradication and extirpation.

13. Let || his [f] poſterity be cut off, and in the generation following let their name be blotted out.

14. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembred with the Lord, and let not the ſin of his mother be blotted out.

15. Let them be before the Lord continually, that he may cut off the memory of them from the earth.

|| his end be to deſtruction, and in the next generation

16. And this a moſt juſt reward for their uncharitable and cruel dealing with him, whoſe diſtreſſes might juſtly have extorted their greateſt kindneſs and aſſiſtance, but found nothing but bloody purſuits from them. (This ſeems eſpecially to refer to David at Nob, and Ahimelech and the prieſts ſlain by Doeg.)

16. Becauſe that he remembred not to ſhew mercy, but perſecuted the poor and needy man, || that he might even ſlay the broken in heart.

|| and broken in heart to ſlay him וְנִכְאֵה לֵבָב לְמוֹתֵת

17, 18, 19. 'Tis to be expected from the all-juſt retributions of heaven, that as they were willing to mete to others it ſhould be meted back to them. They were for nothing but miſchief and cruelty, and they are to expect no leaſt mixture of compaſſion or mercy: They delighted in ſlandering and curſing, wiſhing and ſpeaking ill of them that leaſt deſerved it; and the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe, Numb. 5. 21. that maketh the thigh to rot and the belly to ſwell, ſhall enter, as water is wont into one that is overwhelmed with it, into his ſtomach, belly, bowels, and make them, as the bitter water did, to ſwell and burſt (ſo it happened literally to Judas, Act. 1. 28. and probably to Achitophel, ſee note on Matt. 27. a. and in effect to the others alſo, in their untimely exciſion.) And as oile, which is more piercing than water, penetrates the very fleſh, veins, nerves and bones; ſo ſhall this the moſt inward parts of them, ſeiſe upon their very ſpirits and ſouls, (ſo it did remarkably on thoſe two, Achitophel and Judas, and the ſame every ſuch wicked man is to expect) and never be gotten out again, but within afflict, and without incompaſs them, and cleave to them for ever.

17. As he loved curſing, ſo let it come unto him: as he delighted not in bleſſing, ſo let it be far from him.

18. As he clothed himſelf with curſing, like as with his garment, ſo let it come into his bowels like water, and like oile into his bones.

19. Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually.

20. Thus will God certainly puniſh them that either ſo rebelliouſly or ſo bloodily and cruelly ſet themſelves againſt me (and ſo thoſe hereafter that oppoſe and crucifie the Meſſias.)

20. † Let this be the reward of mine adverſaries from the Lord, and of them that ſpeak evil againſt my ſoul.

† This is, or ſhall be זֹאת

21. As for me, I have no other ſolicitude than to repoſe my ſelf in God's hands: he is a God of moſt abundant goodneſs and mercy, and his honour is ingaged in vindicating my cauſe, in maintaining me, whom he hath ſet on the throne, againſt all oppoſers. He is alſo an omnipotent Lord, whoſe power can ſoon overrule and calme all theſe tempeſts. To him therefore I humbly addreſs my ſelf for his ſeaſonable interpoſition and relief, referring the way and means to his all-wiſe diſpoſal.

21. But doe thou for me, O God the Lord, for thy names ſake: becauſe thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

Annotations on Psal. CIX.

V. 1. O God of my praise] That תְּהִלָּתִי my praise, is to be joyned with אֱלֹהִים God, is agreed on both by the Chaldee and Syriack. The onely question is, whether it be to be joyned by apposition, and rendred, O God my praise; or as a genitive case, following another substantive, O God of my praise. Of either of these the word is equally capable, and the sense is either way the same, being but a compellation of God, as of him whom he is bound continually to praise and magnifie, for espousing his cause and defending him. The LXXII. have joyned it to the verb, and so reade, ὁ θεὸς, μὴ παρασιωπήσῃς, and the Latin, Deus, laudem meam ne tacueris—— But again those words are capable of a double sense; for, my praise may either be God's praising of David, or it may be David's praising of God. In the first sense 'twill be, O God, be not thou silent of my praise; whilst others reproach me, v. 2. be thou my advocate, plead my cause, proclaim and justifie my innocence. In the latter 'tis, be not silent to my praising of thee, or silence not, refuse not, neglect not my praising of thee; and the Æthiopick have put prayer for praising, and then 'tis evidently, be not silent to, but answer my prayer. But the former is the most probable way of rendring, putting it by it self, hold not thy peace, in the notion wherein God's holding his peace, keeping silence, is opposed to his interposing for the aid and defense of any. So Psal. 28. 1. in the very same words אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ be not silent from me (lest if thou be, I become like them that go down into the pit) i.e. interpose thine aid and strength for me. So Psal. 35. 22. אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ be not silent, remove not thy self from me, O God: and Psal. 50. 3. The Lord shall come, וְאַל יֶחֱרַשׁ and shall not be silent: and 83. 1. in three phrases all to the same importance, אַל דֳּמִי לְךָ Let not stillness or silence be to thee, אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ be not silent, וְאַל תִּשְׁקֹט and do not thou be quiet. And so here, O God my glory, אֱלֹהִים שִׁבְחִי say the Chaldee; or ܐܠܗܐ ܬܫܒܚܬܝ say the Syriack, O God of my glory, my singing, my rejoycing, to the very same sense: Thou who art the onely authour of all the good or joyfull news that I ever receive, of all the mercies, in whom I glory, rejoyce and take comfort, to whom all my praises are due, do thou interpose for my rescue and relief. The Jewish Arab reads, Withhold not, or refrein not from my oppressor; Refrein not to oppose thy self against him that oppresseth and injureth me.

V. 6. Set thou a wicked man over him] The Latin translator of the Syriack suggests here another rendring, Præcipe adversus eos iniquo, give the wicked man charge against them; and so the עָלָיו would well enough bear, against, as well as over him. But the notion of הִפְקֵד in Hiphil will not accord, being in the Scripture used onely in these two notions, either of disposing unto as a trust, or setting over as a præfect: and accordingly the Chaldee reade אַסְעַר עֲלוֹי, set over him, and the LXXII. κατάστησον ἐπ' αὐτὸν, constitute over him a wicked man; and so the Syriack ܩܝܡ ܥܠܘܗܝ will as readily bear, set a wicked man over him. The onely difficulty will be, what 'tis to set the wicked over him: and that will best be fetcht from the forementioned notion of הִפְקֵד, explicated by the context: That signifies to set over as a Præfect, and the context determins that Præfect to be a Judge, being the description of a Judicature, in which the person here spoken of is to be condemned and cut off. And that will sure be done, if a wicked man man be ſet on the tribunal, before which he is accuſed and arraigned. In accordance with this follows, וְשָׂטָן and let the adverſary or ἀντίδικος, he that maintains the accuſation againſt him, διάβολος the accuſer, ſay the LXXII. ſtand at his right hand, according to the Jewiſh manner in judicature, where the accuſer, he that managed the plea, was ſet at the right hand of the accuſed. And then it follows, בְּהִשָּׁפְטוֹ, when he ſhall come to receive his ſentence, יֵצֵא רָשָׁע let him go out wicked; ἐξιὼν κατακριθήσεται, ſay the LXXII. (and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack alſo) let him go out condemned, in the notion of going out as that is oppoſed to ſtanding in judgment, Pſal. 1. and of wicked, as that is oppoſed to juſt in foro (juſtified or acquitted) for ſo that muſt ſignify condemned. Now it may next be demanded who this perſon is that is thus to be arraigned and condemned. And the ſtory and firſt literal ſenſe referring it to Achitophel or to Doeg principally, and in an inferiour degree to all others, the parties whether in Saul's oppreſſion, or in Abſolom's rebellion, and the prophetick ſenſe to Judas principally, and together with him to the Jews the crucifiers; 'tis yet manifeſt that none of theſe were arraigned before any humane tribunal. The reſolution therefore muſt be, that the ſtyle is here poetick as well as prophetical, and ſignifies their ruine as certain, and as formidable, as the arraignment, condemnation and execution of a malefactor upon earth. The tribunal alſo before which they are ſentenced, being firſt that of their own conſcience, remarkable both in Achitophel and Judas, which died the ſame death (probably that of ſuffocation of melancholy, ſee note on Matth. 27. a.) inflicted on them by their own accuſing conſcience; and ſecondly, that of God's juſt judicature, before which they are ſure to be caſt, and go out condemned. And from thence it was, that theſe ſignal judgments fell both upon Saul and Doeg, and on Abſolom and his followers, in the ſtory, and on the bloudy crucifiers in the New Teſtament.

V. 7. His prayer become ſin] The meaning of this phraſe may moſt probably be taken from the cuſtom of the Jews, who at their death did out of courſe make this prayer, תהי מיתתי כפרה על כל עבירותי let my death be an expiation for all my offences. This was likewiſe ſaid by thoſe that fell not by the hand of juſtice, but died natural deaths. Now he that dies in the midſt of an ill attempt, and much more he that makes away himſelf, as Judas in a fit of ſuffocation probably did, by throwing himſelf down a precipice, his death will be ſo far from an expiation, that it will be ſin, and a great accumulation of the other crimes. And this is an expreſſion of a moſt ſad deplorable condition, when (as it is Prov. 1. 28. then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer) their prayers for averting their judgment ſhall be of no more force than their ſins would be. The Jewiſh Arab hath here a ſenſe ſtrangely different from others, And let his prayer for him be deſtruction to him; underſtanding it of the prayer of the oppreſſed, which he putteth up to God for good to his oppreſſor, but God turneth it for deſtruction to him.

V. 8. Days be few] מְעַטִּים few, or ſhort, or little, doth here ſignifie the cutting him off before the natural period of his life comes. To this all the following words to the end of v. 10. belong. For when he is thus cut off, his office is void, and ſo ready for another; his children have loſt their father, and his wife an husband, v. 9. and his eſtate being forfeited to the Law as well as his life, his children and poſterity are ejected out of their inheritance, and ſo muſt provide for themſelves, either by wandering and begging from place to place (this is meant by נוֹעַ יָנוּעוּ by moving let them move, i. e. be in perpetual motion; σαλευόμενοι μεταναστάσται, ſay the LXXII. let them be ſhaken, toſt, and removed from place to place) or by ſeeking out ſome unhabited place where they may reſt and plant. The former of theſe is here expreſt by וְשָׁאֲלוּ let them ask or beg. And perhaps the latter may be the meaning of דָּרְשׁוּ מֵחָרְבוֹתֵיהֶם let them ſeek (i. e. get their ſubſiſtence, maintenance) out of places which being deſolate, in no other owners hands, are alone fit to entertain and receive them. But the Chaldee interprets it of their own dwellings, מֵחֲרָבוּת צְדוּתְהוֹן when their deſolation is come. The LXXII. reade ἐκβληθήσονται ἐκ τῆς οἰκουμένης αὐτῶν, let them be caſt out of their ruinous dwellings, and ſeem to have read not דָּרְשׁוּ let them ſeek, but גָּרְשׁוּ let them be caſt out, from גָּרַשׁ which ſignifies to eject. And ſo 'tis very applicable to the Jews, whoſe Temple, and Jeruſalem was demoliſhed, and they driven out from the very ruines, not permitted to rebuild or inhabit there. But the common Hebrew reading is to be preferred, being witneſt to by the Chaldee, וְיִתְבְּעוּן and ſhall ſeek; and very agreeable to the context alſo, which ſpeaks of their unſettled motions from place to place, their begging and not knowing where to dwell. For by this alſo is very lively deſcribed the condition of the Jewiſh poſterity, ever ſince their anceſtors fell under that ſignal vengeance for the crucifying of Chriſt. Firſt, their deſolations and vaſtations in their own Countrey; and being ejected thence, Secondly, their continual wandrings from place to place, ſcattered over the face of the earth; and Thirdly, their remarkable covetouſneſs, keeping them always poor and beggerly, be they never ſo rich, and continually labouring and moiling for gain, as the pooreſt are wont to doe; and this is continually the conſtant courſe attending this people, whereſoever they are ſcattered. The Jewiſh Arab reads, Make few his days, and turn over of his age to another. Abu Walid alſo renders the פְּקֻדָּתוֹ his office, ſtrangely, his treaſure, or wealth. Kimchi interprets it that which is under his command, as his wealth, Wife, &c.

V. 11. Catch] The Hebrew here reads יְנַקֵּשׁ from נָקַשׁ which in Piel ſignifies concuſſit, exegit, and applied here to the grating creditor and uſurer toward the debtors goods, is beſt rendred to exact, or ſeiſe on; ſo the Chaldee, יְנַבֵּב ſhall levy, exact, take away, gather, as the publican doth the taxes, or as the πράκτωρ Luk. 12.58. doth πράσσειν exact, Luk. 3.13. and 19.23. or as the βασανιστὴς tormentor, Matth. 18.34. (directly anſwerable to the Chaldee נַבָּב exactor) to whom the debtor there being delivered, is racked to the utmoſt, till he pay the laſt farthing. The LXXII. here reade ἐξερευνησάτω, the Latin, ſcrutetur, let him ſearch; either paraphraſtically to expreſs it, for ſo he that ſeiſes on anothers goods, ſearches, and takes all that he can find; or elſe becauſe of the affinity of יְנַקֵּשׁ exact with יְבַקֵּשׁ enquire or ſearch. The Interlinear, that reads illaqueet, let him inſnare or catch, ſeems to have lookt on יָקֹשׁ to inſnare, in which ſenſe the Chaldee took it Pſ. 38. 13. rendring וְיְנַקְּשׁוּ by וְעַבְדוּ פְּחִין and they made ſnares. And thus the Jewiſh Arab, Let the enemy inſnare all his wealth, as a creditor or uſurer, (Abu Walid, let the creditor conſume or deſtroy all his wealth) let ſtrangers ſpoil or make prey of his gain. And ſo 'tis ordinary for words of that affinity to have the ſame ſignification. To the ſenſe of levying, or ſeiſing on, the latter part of this verſe agrees well, וְיבזּוּ זָרִים well, וְיבזּוּ זָרִים let the ſtrangers ſpoil, ſnatch away, prey upon his labours (from בָּזַז to ſnatch or prey upon) the ſtranger being no other than נוֹשֶׁה the uſurer in the beginning of the verſe, who being none of his family, to whom by inheritance his goods may come, is fitly called a ſtranger, eſpecially when no Jew being permitted to lend on uſury to a Jew, the uſurer that lent a Jew muſt needs be a ſtranger, i. e. no Jew.

f. אַחֲרִיתוֹ V. 13. Poſterity] אַחֲרִית is here beſt rendred, his end, or noviſſimum, as the Interlinear hath it, the laſt of him. So the Chaldee reade סוֹפֵיהּ his end, and the Syriack, being the ſame with the Hebrew, put only in the plural, ܣܘܦܗܘܢ is rendred, finis eorum, their end. So the learned Caſtellio, exitus eorum, their end. The LXXII. reade τέκνα ſuos his children, from another ſuppoſed notion of אַחֲרִית for children, becauſe they come after a man. But the context inclines to the former notion, the next words affirming that בְּדוֹר אַחֵר in another, i. e. in the next generation, in the age of thoſe that live after him (the LXXII. again reads μιᾷ one generation, as from אַחַד one, not אַחֵר another) his name ſhall be blotted out, i. e. all thoſe that bear his name, his children: and ſo the verſe comprehends his own and his childrens deſtruction, which is much more reaſonable than his childrens deſtruction, and his childrens blotting out, which is no more than the former.

g. נְנֻעַרְתִּי V. 23. Toſſed up and down like the Locuſts] From נָעַר to move to and fro, to drive or agitate, is נְנֻעַרְתִּי here I am toſt or driven; אֲטַלְטְלִית ſaith the Chaldee, I am carried, removed; the Syriack ܐܬܢܥܥ I am ſhaken, or driven, or caſt out, in accordance with the LXXII. who reade ἐξετινάχθην, I am ſhaken out. The full notion of it here will be gueſt by the adjoyning reſemblance כְּאַרְבֶּה as the Locuſt. That creature hath its name from רָבָה multiplying, becauſe they fly in great multitudes (ſee Jud. 6. 5. Pſal. 105. 34. Prov. 30. 27.) and being weak and feeble creatures, they are driven by the wind, whole ſholes of them together. So Exod. 10. 13. the Eaſt wind brought the army of Locuſts into Ægypt, and ſo v. 19. a mighty ſtrong Weſt wind took away the Locuſts, and caſt them into the Red ſea. And to this the ſimilitude here ſeems to refer. David was in his flight from Abſalom, he and all that were with him; and this flight from this rebellion is poetically deſcribed by being driven as the Locuſts are driven by the wind or tempeſt. Another poſſible way there is of underſtanding the reſemblance. The Locuſt is but a large ſort of Graſhopper, which hath no ſet abiding place or neſt, but leaps to and fro, roves about the field: ſo we have the running to and fro of Locuſts, Iſa. 33. 4. And this uncertain unſettled condition of thoſe creatures may be proper alſo to expreſs David's condition in his flight, when he had not where to lay his head, but wandred from place to place uncertainly. But the former, that is founded in the bands of Locuſts, is fitter to expreſs David and the company with him, his weak fugitive army (the LXXII. reads ἀκρίδας in the plural, and the Hebrew word in the ſingular may import a plurality of them) than that which is founded in the manner of the ſingle Locuſt, or Graſhopper; and ſo that of being toſſed to and fro by a tempeſt, is the moſt probable importance of the verb נְנֻעַרְתִּי.

h. כָּחַשׁ V. 24. Faileth of fatneſs] From כָּחַשׁ to deny, to lye, there is alſo a metaphorical uſe of it for any kind of change or fruſtration or deſtitution. And being here applied to the fleſh, it ſignifies a change of that (ἠλλοιώθη ſay the LXXII. was changed) attenuation, emaciation, decay from the ſtate that before he was in, or wherein healthy men are wont to be. It is here expreſt by מִשְּׁמֶן from oile or from fatneſs. The word שֶׁמֶן ſignifies both fat and oile, and the LXXII. render it in the ſecond notion δι' ἔλαιον, changed for oile; either by the confuſed uſe of prepoſitions ordinarily obſerved among them, and then for oile may be inſtead of from oile, or elſe for oile, i. e. for the loſs of oile, viz. that radical moiſture which reſembleth oile. The plaineſt rendring will be, my fleſh is emaciated from fatneſs, that which was before full and corpulent, is now fallen away, grown lean, extremely attenuated. And this very conſonant to the beginning of the verſe, his knees being weak through faſting: the feeble knees being proverbially taken notice of in Scripture, as the parts which in any weakneſs are moſt ſenſible of the weight that lies upon them, and in any great laſſitude or other infirmity are the firſt that are wont to fail.

i נַפְשִׁי V. 31. That condemn his ſoul] Some difficulty there is here whether נַפְשִׁי his ſoul, be to be joyned with לְהוֹשִׁיעַ to ſave, and ſo rendred to ſave his ſoul, or life, or elſe with מְשֹׁפְטֵי as our Engliſh reads, from thoſe that condemn his ſoul. But this is ſoon ſalved by leaving it indifferent to either, or both of them; it being certain, that he that delivers from the condemners of ſoul or life, doth thereby deliver the ſoul or life, the deliverance being of neceſſity proportioned to the aſſault. The greater queſtion will be, what is the adequate notion of שֹׁפְטֵי in this place. The word שָׁפַט is ordinarily uſed for judging or condemning; but it ſignifies alſo to implead, accuſe, or bring to judgment, to lay any crime to ones charge; for thus מִשְׁפָּט oft ſignifies a controverſie or queſtion, a crime or fault, as well as puniſhment or judgment, or ſentence in judicature. The Chaldee here expreſſes it by מְסָרְנֵי from רִיב, which is indifferent to theſe two, judging, and contending in judgment; from whence the Greek κρίνεσθαι is ordinarily uſed among the Helleniſts for ſuing or impleading, 1 Cor. 6. 1. (ſee note on Rom. 3. b.) And to this notion of שָׁפַט in this place the ſenſe directs: For David ſpeaking of himſelf and thoſe that eſpouſed his cauſe, under the notion of the poor, and conſequently of his adverſaries under the notion of שֹׁפְטֵי, 'tis moſt agreeable that the word ſhould be here taken in that notion of oppoſing or purſuing. Thus they are formerly expreſt v. 20. by שִׂטְנִי, my i. e. David's adverſaries, plaintiffs, accuſers (ſo that word properly ſignifies, ἀντίδικον an adverſary in judgment, i. e. an accuſer) and by הַדֹּבְרִים רָע עַל נַפְשִׁי thoſe that ſpeak evil againſt his ſoul. And this verſe is thus far parallel with that, in deſcribing the perſons, viz. thoſe that deſign and wage evil (for ſo ſpeaking is oft taken for doing) againſt his life; and then that exactly agrees with this notion of שֹׁפְטֵי נַפְשִׁי oppoſers of his ſoul, thoſe that contend, fight againſt his ſoul. For though it was in war, and not in judicature, that they thus contended with him, yet one of theſe is poetically expreſt by the other, their hoſtile oppoſition by words which are only forenſick. Thus the Jewiſh Arab reads, and will help him from thoſe that implead him, or contend with him for his ſoul. And in this ſcheme this whole verſe runs. He ſhall ſtand at the right hand of the poor, i. e. to defend and plead for him: as the accuſer ſtood at the right hand (ſee v. 6. note b.) ſo ſhall he ſtand, as his advocate, to maintain him againſt his injurious charge, and that is to ſave him from thoſe that oppoſe or implead his ſoul, that aſſault him and call his life in queſtion. The LXXII. here moſt fully expreſs the ſenſe by ἐκ τῶν καταδιωκόντων τὴν ψυχήν μου from thoſe that purſue my ſoul.

The

The Hundred and Tenth PSALM.

A Pſalm of David.

The hundred and tenth Pſalm was certainly compoſed by David, (ſee Matt. 22. 43.) not concerning himſelf, and God's promiſing the Kingdom to him after Saul, as the Chaldee ſuppoſe, but by way of propheſie of the exaltation of the Meſſias (ſee Matt. 22. 44. Act. 2. 34. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Heb. 1. 13. ) to his Regal and (which never belonged to David ) Sacerdotal office; both which are by him exerciſed at the right hand of his Father, and ſettled on him as the reward of his humiliation and paſſion, (ſee Phil. 2. 8, 9. )

Paraphraſe.

1. THE Lord ſaid [a] unto my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand untill I make thine enemies thy footſtool.

a. 1. The Meſſias which is to come into the world is to be looked on by all men with adoration, as being, though born in the mean eſtate of humane fleſh, and of King David's ſeed, yet really much higher than David (which he could not be if he were not God himſelf, the King of Kings and Lord of lords.) And of him, Jehovah, the one ſupreme God, Creator of heaven and earth, hath decreed, that having been for ſome time oppoſed, and at length crucified, by thoſe whom he was ſent to call powerfully to repentance, he ſhould be exalted in that humane nature which here he aſſumed, to the higheſt pitch of glory and majeſty and authority in heaven, there to exerciſe all power over this inferior world, to reign 1 Cor. 15. 25. till he hath ſubdued all that oppoſeth this his kingdom; 1. his crucifiers, by converting ſome, and deſtroying others, 2. the Idolatrous heathen world, by ſubjecting them to the Goſpel, 3. the power of ſin, and 4. Satan in mens hearts, and at laſt 5. death it ſelf, 1 Cor. 15. 26. And when all this is done at the concluſion of this world, then ſhall he give up his power into his Father's hand from which he had it, and himſelf be ſubject to him that put all things under him, 1 Cor. 15. 27.

2. The Lord ſhall ſend the rod of thy ſtrength out of Sion: rule thou in the midſt of thine enemies.

2. This kingdom of his is to be a ſpiritual kingdom, exerciſed by the ſword or ſcepter of his ſweet but powerfull ſpirit, the Goſpel of Chriſt, the power of God unto ſalvation to all that believe and obey it. And this ſhall firſt be preached (after his reſurrection and aſcenſion) by his Apoſtles at Jeruſalem (ſee Pſal. 2. 6.) to thoſe that crucified him, and from thence it ſhall be propagated to all Judæa, and then to all parts of the habitable world, on purpoſe deſigned to bring home ſinners to repentance and change of life. And the ſucceſs thereof ſhall be admirable, a Church of humble obedient Chriſtians gathered from amongſt his greateſt enemies, ſome of the rebellious Jews, and great multitudes of heathen Idolaters.

b. Thy [b] people ſhall be ‖ willing in the day of thy † power, in the beauties of * holineſs, ‖ from the womb of the morning, thou haſt the dew of thy youth.

‖ a people of voluntary oblations † army or forces
* the ſanctuary.
‖ thy children ſhall be to thee the dew from the womb of the morning.

3. At the going out of the Apoſtles upon their great expedition, their ſacred warfare, to conquer the obdurate world, all that have any thing of humility or piety wrought in their hearts by the efficacy of his preventing grace, ſhall come in and receive the faith of Chriſt moſt willingly, forſake and leave all to follow him, and attend him in his Church, and the multitude of diſciples ſhall be as (the ſtars of heaven, the ſands on the ſea-ſhore, or) the dew that in the morning covers the face of the whole earth.

4. The Lord hath ſworn and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

4. And as he is to be a King, ſo is he to be a Prieſt alſo. At his exaltation and aſcending to heaven, God his Father hath firmly decreed that he ſhall be advanced to ſuch a ſort of Prieſthood as that of Melchizedek was (ſee Heb. v. 6. and 7. 17.) who had thoſe two great offices of King and Prieſt united in him; ſo ſhall Chriſt be inſtated * at the right hand of his Father, in the full power of entertaining and bleſſing his faithfull ſervants, ſuch as Abraham was, when he was entertained and treated by Melchizedek, and bleſſed by him. And the interpretation of this his benediction is, his giving them grace to turn away every man from his iniquities, Act. 3. 26. to aid them againſt all their ſpiritual enemies, and ſupport them in all their neceſſities. And this office, commencing at his aſcenſion, is never to have an end, never to be ſucceeded in by any, as the Aaronical prieſthood deſcended from father to ſon, but to continue in his hands, and to be moſt ſucceſsfully exerciſed, till it be at the end of this world delivered up to God the Father.

c. 5. [c] The Lord at thy right hand ſhall ſtrike through Kings in the day of his wrath.

5. But as he ſhall be a moſt mercifull High Prieſt to all that humbly receive, and obey, and addreſs themſelves to him; ſo to all obdurate ſinners, that ſtand out, and oppoſe his power in their hearts, that will not ſuffer this Prieſt to bleſs, this King to reign over them, he ſhall manifeſt himſelf a moſt terrible Judge, and deſtroy the mightieſt grandeur and proweſs upon earth, that doth not come in unto the faith.

6. He ſhall judge among the † heathen, he ſhall fill the places with the dead bodies, he ſhall * wound the heads over many countreys.

† nations, he ſhall fill them מָלֵא גּוֹיִם
* ſtrike through (ſee v. 5.) the head cover much land מָחַץ רֹאשׁ עַל אֶרֶץ רַבָּה

6. All the impenitent wicked world, both of Jews and Heathens, he ſhall moſt illuſtriouſly deſtroy, make them a kind of Akeldama; and the greateſt Antichriſtian Monarchy in the world, moſt eminently that of heathen Rome (which ſo bloodily perſecutes the Chriſtians) ſhall be demoliſhed (ſee Rev. 18. 2.) and Chriſtian profeſſion ſet up in the place of it.

d. 7. He ſhall drink of the [d] brook in the way, therefore ſhall he lift up the head.

7. Thus ſhall the Meſſias and his Kingdom be advanced. And all this but a proportionable reward deſigned by his Father to his great humiliation, and patience, and fidelity and conſtancy in the purſuit and diſcharge of the office prophetick aſſigned him here on earth, the calling home ſinners to repentance: In this he ſhall be ſo diligent and induſtrious, ſo vigilant and intent on all opportunities of advancing this end, of doing the will of his Father, the work for which he was ſent, that he ſhall wholly neglect himſelf, his own will, his own eaſe, his own ordinary food, take that which comes next, and is moſt mean and vile, like a General in his keeneſt purſuit of his enemies, that ſatisfies the neceſſities of nature with water out of the next brook, &c. (and with the ſame alacrity he ſhall at laſt undergo the moſt contumelious death) and for this eſpouſing of God's will, and deſpiſing and contemning himſelf, God ſhall highly exalt him, and poſſeſs him of that both Regal and Sacerdotal power, to continue to him, and by his hands, in that humane nature wherein he thus ſerved his Father, to be adminiſtred for ever.

a. V. 1. My Lord] That לאדני to my Lord here, denotes the Messiah, will appear not only by our Saviour and his Apostles, who insist on this Psalm above any Text in the Old Testament, (as the late Jews, and some others who are willing to be lookt on as very good Christians, are most industrious to evade it) but even by the testimonies of the ancient Jews themselves, the evidence of truth breaking forth in despite of the most partial and resolved interest. Moses Haddarsan on Gen. 37. 12. saith, הגואל אשר אקים &c. The Redeemer whom I will raise up from among you, shall not have a father, according to that of Zach. 6. 12. behold the man whose name is the branch, and Isa. 53. he shall come up, &c. So also David saith of him Psal. 110. 3. out of the womb, &c. lastly the Scripture saith of him, This day have I begotten thee, Psal. 2. So on Gen. 18. Hereafter God holy and blessed shall set the King Messias לימינו on his right hand, as 'tis written Psal. 110. The Lord said, &c. And to the same purpose again on Gen. 14. 18. So Midrash Tehillim, on occasion of these words, I will declare the Law, &c. Psal. 2. saith, מסופרים הם ענינו של המשיח, &c. the affairs of the Messiah are set forth in the scripture of the Law, of the Prophets, and of the Hagiographa: In the Law Exod. 4. 22. In the Prophets, Isa. 52. 13. and 42. 1. In the Hagiographa Psal. 110. The Lord said, and the dew of thy birth, &c. So again Midr. Tehil. on Psal. 18. 35. thy right hand shall uphold me, saith, ר יודן אמר &c. R. Joden said that in the age of the Messiah the blessed God will set the King Messiah at his right hand, as it is written, The Lord said to my Lord. R. Saad Gaon on Dan. 7. 13. he came with the clouds of heaven, saith, And this is צדקנו משיח Messiah our righteousness, as 'tis written, The Lord said, &c. So the Jerusalem Talmud tract. Berachoth c. 5. saith, this verse, the dew of thy birth, &c. is to be explained by Mich. 5. 7.

b. V. 3. Thy power] For the explicating this very obscure verse, the first thing to be taken notice of is the importance of חֵילֶךָ from חַיִל power or strength, as that signifies an army, or military forces, as we call them. The Messias in the former verses is set upon his throne for the exercise of his regal power, with a sword or scepter in his hand; and as such he is supposed to rule in the world, to go out to conquer and subdue all before him. The army which he makes use of to this end, is the college of Apostles, sent out to preach to all nations: and the time of their thus preaching is here called יוֹם חֵילֹה the day of his power, or forces, or army; בְּיוֹם אֲנָחוֹתָא קְרָבָא in the day that he shall wage war or joyn battel, saith the Chaldee. In which day, saith the Psalmist, the people that belong to God, עַמְּךָ thy people, those that are at all affected to piety, εὐθετοι εἰς βασιλειαν τοῦ θεοῦ, fit for the Kingdom of God, Luk. 9. 16. τετυγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, disposed, arrayed, ordered, on file for the kingdom of heaven, Act. 13. 48. all that are any way listed among God's souldiers, all these shall become נְדִבֹת i. e. (repeating עַם again) a people of voluntary oblations (so נְדָבָה signifies liberal, voluntary, spontaneous oblation, or contribution to the service of God) such as shall willingly offer up and consecrate themselves, and all that they have, to God's service, forsake all and follow Christ, bring their estates, and lay them at the Apostles feet, as we know the believers did. Act. 2. an essay of the great charity and liberality which the faith of Christ brought into the world. This they shall do בְּהַדְרֵי קֹדֶשׁ in the beauties of holiness, or of the Sanctuary, i. e. I suppose, mystically in the Christian Church, beautified with all those graces which the spirit of Christ works in the hearts of believers. קֹדֶשׁ 1 King. 7. 18. signifies the Ark of the Covenant or Sanctuary, and from thence the place in the Temple where the Ark was placed was called the קֹדֶשׁ קָדָשִׁים holy of holies; and so I suppose the LXXII. understood it here, when they rendred קֹדֶשׁ ἁγίων of thy holies, for so the plural ἅγια every where signifies the Sanctuary; and the beauties of the Sanctuary are literally the ornaments of the Priests and Levites, their Urim and Thummim, which they have on when they carry the Ark (see note on Psal. 29. b.) But mystically these are the graces of Christ, the inward beauty or glory which shines in the Christian Sanctuary or Church, which is as it were the arena or place where these forces of God are mustered: Or perhaps in the beauties of holiness, as that signifies no more than God's sacred Majesty, in whose service they are listed, and on whose expedition ingaged, according to Castellio's reading, quo die expeditionem sacrâ cum majestate facies, in the day when thou shalt with thy sacred majesty make thine expedition. Another sense the words may be capable of, which the comparing the mention of Sion v. 2. and beauty of holiness here suggesteth, by taking חיל power, or host, or army, in the sense that frequently belongs to צבא, which signifies an host in scripture, viz. the attendance on the Sanctuary, the Priests στρατεια warring his warfare, i. e. officiating. And then נְדָבֹת will simply import free-will offerings, and the sense run thus, Thy people will be a free-will offering in the day of thy Assemblies in the Sanctuary, shall offer (in stead of any thing else) themselves lively sacrifices, holy and acceptable. And this, if accepted, need not be deemed to exclude the other rendring, but the priestly and kingly offices of Christ being both here set down in this Psalm, the words (as is frequent in these compositions) may have been purposely contrived to fit both. Then follows מֶרֶחֶם מִשְׁחַר לְךָ טַל יַלְדֻתֶךָ, which may perhaps be thus most literally rendred, יַלְדֻתֶךָ thy children or progeny (so the Chaldee must understand it, when they joyn it with יִתְבְּנוֹן shall sit) לָךְ to thee, i. e. shall be to thee, טַל dew מֶרֶחֶם מִשְׁחַר from the womb of the morning: i. e. according to the proportion of the dew which the morning brings forth (as it were out of its womb) in such plenty as to cover the face of the whole earth, so shall thy children be, so numerous, the multitudes of those that receive the faith of Christ, this dew on the face of the earth, being like the sand of the sea and stars of heaven; by which two expressions is set out elsewhere the spiritual seed of Abraham, the multitude of believers. i. e. Over all the face of the earth, through all nations shall the Christian faith be propagated by this the Apostles στρατεια expedition or warfare, their preaching and promulgating of the Gospel. Another possible rendring the words are capable of, thus; מֶרֶחֶם, used ten times in scripture, in all the other places expresses an immediately preceding birth, and is equivalent to as soon as born. So Psal. 58. 3. the wicked are estranged מֶרֶחֶם from the womb, or birth; Psal. 22. 10. I have been cast on thee from the womb, i. e. ever since my birth. Then, מִשְׁחָר though מִשְׁחָר be by many construed, from the morning, as if מ were a Præfix; yet seeing the ש hath no dageſch, others conceive it a Noun, though not elſewhere found, yet guidable by the ſignification of its neighbouring words, and then it will note either morning or youth. Next יַלְדוּת is twice uſed, beſide this place, and ſignifies not children but childhood, or the firſt age of youth. So Eccl. 11. 9. & 10. הַיַּלְדוּת וְהַשַּׁחֲרוּת childhood and youth are vanity. Where שַׁחֲרוּת being joyned with it 'tis made more probable that here, where מִשְׁחָר is joyned with it, they ſhould both be taken in this ſenſe, wherein there confeſtly they are. If this be accepted, then the Hebrew will be thus literally rendred, מֵרֶחֶם מִשְׁחָר לְךָ From the womb youth is to thee, i. e. as ſoon as thou art born, thou enjoyeſt a firm and vigorous youth (increaſing ſuddenly in wiſedom and ſtature and favour with God and man) טַל יַלְדֻתֶךָ thy infancy the dew, i. e. is as the dew upon the face of the earth, in a moment ſpreads it ſelf over all, is ſeen fall'n rather than falling, is ſprightly and aerial, and makes all things elſe ſo too. And then in accordance with it will be rendred what follows, Thou art a Prieſt for ever, art never ſuperannuated for the ſervice of the tabernacle, like the Levitical Prieſts, nor ever removed from it by death. In the following words the ' in דִּבְרָתִי is by the Jewiſh writers, Kimchi and Aben Ezra, allowed to be paragogical, and ſo עַל מנהג דִּבְרָתִי to ſignifie עַל according to the manner or order; which is exactly the LXXII. their rendring, κατὰ τάξιν, that is inſiſted on by the Apoſtle in the New Teſtament, to which alſo the Syriack accords, ܥܠ ܕܡܠܟܝ̈ܕܩ according to the likeneſs. And then it is ſtrange the Interlinear ſhould make it a ſuffix, and render it ſecundum verbum meum, according to my word: and yet herein ſome other learned men have imitated them. The Jewiſh Arab interpreting this whole Pſalm of Abraham, as a relation of his victory over the Kings, and telling us that he was made a Prieſt in the place of Melchizedek, for his miſcarriage in his bleſſing, becauſe in it he made mention of Abraham's name before God's, renders the latter part of this third verſe thus, and from the deep of the black ſea, that thou mayeſt caſt for thee the portions of thy children, explaining it by a Note to this purpoſe, he teacheth him, that they (viz. his children or poſterity) ſhall divide the countreys from the black ſea to the utmoſt of regions, ſaying that he takes טל from יוטל Prov. 16. 33. and הטיל to caſt. Abu Walid expounds thoſe words מרחם משחר by from the belly or womb of the darkneſs, i. e. ſaith he, from the time that thou wert in the dark of the womb; that the meaning might be, Proſperity hath accompanied thee from the time that thou wert in the dark of the womb, i. e. from thy firſt forming or creation, that is it that he ſaith, לך טל ילדותך, from thy firſt ortus or original. And ſo he would have both thoſe paſſages joyned in their ſignification. In this verſe the LXXII. have made many changes. Firſt for עַמְּךָ thy people, they appear to have read עִמְּךָ with thee, and ſo render it μετὰ σοῦ. For נְדָבֹת voluntary oblations, they reade ἡ ἀρχὴ, government (not as the Latin renders them, principium, beginning) as from נָדִיב an Ἡγούμενος or Prince, Pſal. 113. 8. Then for מִשְׁחָר of the morning, they reade πρὸ ἑωσφόρου, before the morning-ſtar, omitting the word טַל dew, and for יַלְדֻתֶךָ thy progeny, they reade יεγέννηκά σε, I begat thee; and ſo the Syriack, ܡܢ ܩܕܡ from ancient time I begat thee my ſon. And to this as the Latin exactly accords, ex utero ante Luciferum genui te, and the Arabick in like manner, ſo doth the Syriack alſo (ſave that for πρὸ ἑωσφόρου, before the morning-ſtar, they reade ܡܢ ܩܕܡ from of old) and many of the ancient Fathers have followed them, eſpecially * Tertullian, l. v. contra Marcion. c. ix. who applies it to the nativity of Chriſt in the night, and that of a Virgin without the knowledge of any man, and refutes the Jews, who applied the Pſalm to Hezekiah. That the Jews after Chriſt's time did thus apply it to Hezekiah, as the Chaldee Paraphraſes underſtand it of David, appears evident from that Father. But before their hatred of Chriſt did thus ingage them, ſome of the ancient Jews (ſee note a.) applied it to the Meſſias; and they are followed by Iſaac Benarama on Gen. 47. and the paſſage next following of this King being a Prieſt, makes it impoſſible, according to their own principles, to be applied to any King of the Jews, the Prieſthood among them being peculiar to the Aaronical tribe. And therefore the Chaldee, which applies it to David, interprets this of his exaltation to greatneſs in the world to come, by way of reward to his having been an immaculate King here,

* Edit. Pamel. P. 586. G.

V. 5. The Lord at thy right hand] In this Pſalm it is evident v. 1. that יְהוָה is the title of God the Father, and ſo again v. 4. and אֲדֹנָי of the Meſſias God the Son, in reſpect of that dignity, and dominion, and regal power to which he was to be exalted at his aſcenſion, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow—— This is expreſſed v. 1. by his ſitting at God's right hand, for which the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 25. reads, ἂν δεῖ βασιλεύειν, It muſt be that he reign—— By this 'tis evident that in this verſe אֲדֹנִי עַל יְמִינְךָ The Lord at thy right hand, muſt be underſtood of the Meſſias inſtated in his regal power at the right hand of his Father, and not of the Father, as his ὑπερασπίσεως to back and help him, as Pſal. 16. 8. and elſewhere the phraſe is uſed. For of the Son thus exalted we know it is that we reade Joh. 5. 22. that the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son. Agreeable to which it is that this Adonai or Lord at Jehovah's right hand here, ſhall ſtrike through Kings in the day of his wrath, i. e. ſhall act revenges moſt ſeverely on the oppoſers of his Kingdom; which revenges in the New Teſtament are peculiarly attributed to Chriſt, and called the coming of the Son of man, coming in the clouds, coming with his Angels, and the approaching, or coming of his Kingdom.

c. יְהוָה אֲדֹנָי

V. 7. Brook of the way] נַחַל ſignifies any hollow place or vale, a receptacle of waters, and from thence a ſmall river or brook, which hath not its original from any ſpring, but is filled with rain-waters, and ſo is full in the winter, but in the ſummer dried up. So Gen. 26. 17. בְּנַחַל in the valley of Gerar; Joel 3. 18. a fountain ſhall come forth and water נַחַל the valley of Shittim: and 2 King 3. 16. make this valley full of ditches; and v. 17. ye ſhall not ſee rain, yet that valley ſhall be filled with water. And being here joyned with בַּדֶּרֶךְ in the way, it ſeems to ſignifie no more than thoſe plaſhes of water, which in the winter are frequent in highways, from the fall of much rain. Theſe firſt from the places where they are collected, (no pools on purpoſe provided for the receit of waters, but every little cavity in the way, which is thus filled by rain,) and ſecondly, by the ſtagnancy or ſtanding ſtill of theſe waters, and thirdly, by the frequency of paſſengers fouling them, are to be concluded very very unfit for the use of men, very inconvenient for drinking, and would never be used for that purpose, were it not by him that hath no other, or that so far intends the haste of his way, and so far despises or neglects himself, as to content himself with the worst and meanest sort of accommodation, that which will just satisfie the necessities of nature. This is most observable of souldiers in an hasty march, that are thirsty, but will not make stay at an Inn to refresh themselves with wine, or so much as go out of their way to make choice of or seek out for wholsome water, but insist on their pursuit, and satisfie their thirst at the next receptacle of waters, the next puddle or trench, or ditch, or brook they meet with. This is a sign of great alacrity in a souldier, and withall of great humility, and contempt of hardship and difficulties, of submitting to any the meanest and most servile condition: and may well here be used poetically to express the great humiliation and exinanition of the Messias, assuming the real form and all the mean offices of a servant, pursuing the work to which he was sent with all alacrity, counting it his meat (and drink) to doe the will of him that sent him, and finish his work, Joh. 4. 34. and in fine laying down his life, suffering as willingly a most bitter contumelious death; which being by him expresst by drinking of a cup, and that a special sort of cup, such as others would not probably be content with, (Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? Matt. 20. 22.) and that an insupportable bitter cup, Matt. 26. 39, 42. (Father if it be possible, let this cup pass from me) it may very fitly be extended to his death, as well as to all that was preparative and in the way to it. And to this the lifting up his head, reigning victoriously over all his enemies, being constituted Judge of quick and dead, is here justly apportioned, according to that of Phil. 2. 8, 9. He made himself of no reputation, but humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him— Another notion there is of נַחַל for a torrent or river, Prov. 18. 4. a flowing נַחַל torrent, or river, and so Am. 6. 14. unto the נַחַל we render it river of the wilderness. If it be here taken in that notion, then drinking of it may be a proverbial speech to express victory, as Isa. 37. 25. when Sennacherib is boasting of his conquests, he thus speaks, I will enter into the height of his border, and the forrest of his Carmel: I have digged and drunk water, and with the sole of my feet I have dried up all the rivers of the besieged places. Where the former part being an expression of victory and forcible seisure; and so the latter also of blocking up and close siege, the middlemost may probably be to the same sense; and the rather because of the custom of Eastern Princes, who in token of dedition exacted from subjugated Provinces Earth and Water, Judith 2. 7. In reference to which, the digging up Earth and drinking Water will signifie a forcible entry, a method of battery (where the milder summons have not prevailed) thereby to take livery and seisin of an hostile Countrey. And if that be the notion here, then the phrase signifies Christ's victory atchieved by his death over Satan, Sin and Hell. Which being wrought upon the Cross, is fitly precedaneous and preparative to the lifting up of his head.

The Hundred and Eleventh PSALM.

The Hundred and eleventh Psalm is one of those whose Title (see Note a. on Psal. 106.) is Hallelujah, and is accordingly spent in praising and magnifying the name of God for all his works of power and mercy. It is composed in twenty two short Metres, each beginning with the several Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet.

1. I Will praise the Lord with my whole heart, in the ‖ assembly of the [b] upright, and in the congregation. b.

‖ secret or counsel בְּסוֹד

Paraphrase.

1. From the bottom of my soul, and with the full quire of all the faculties thereof, I will acknowledge and bless the name of God. This I will doe more privately in counsel of all pious men, the true Israelites, when ever any transaction of concernment is to be advised on by those that make strict conscience of their duty; and this will I doe in the most publick and solemn assembly. No junco is too close, no congregation too wide, for such a most due performance.

2. The works of the Lord are great, † [c] sought out of all them that have pleasure therein. c.

† studied by or found by, or in all their purposes, or designs.

2. Marvellous are the works of God, and of all other sorts of study most worthy to be the exercise and imployment of all pious men, who can entertain themselves with more pleasure in such meditations, than in all other the most sensual divertisements, and receive great profit and advantage by it.

3. His work is * honourable and glorious, and his righteousness endureth for ever.

* honour and glory הוֹד וְהָדָר

3. All that he doth is infinitely magnificent and beautifull, the works of his creation most admirable and stupendious, and so the works of his preservation and providence full of omnipotent greatness and wisedom. But above all, his justice and purity, his detestation of all sin and exact fidelity in all his promises is infinitely to be magnified, as that which goes through all his other works.

4. He hath made ‖ his wonderfull works to be [d] remembred: The Lord † is gracious and full of compassion. d.

‖ his name or memorial by or of his wonderfull— † gracious

4. The great miraculous works of his providence among us have made such impressions on men as will never be forgotten, but recorded and reported for ever: and indeed God hath made special ordinances, the Passeover, &c. to that purpose: Yea they have given him a title whereby he is known by all, the same that he once proclaimed of himself to Moses, when he desired to know and discern his nature more perfectly, The Lord, gracious—— i. e. a most gracious and mercifull Lord, not forward to punish every sin that out of frailty is committed against him, but abundant in mercy and loving kindness to all that faithfully adhere to him.

5. He never fails to provide for them that serve and obey him, all things that they stand in need of; he hath promised never to leave nor forsake such: and whatsoever he hath thus by Covenant obliged himself to, he will be certain duly to perform. Thus did he promise Abraham concerning his posterity in Ægypt, Gen. 15. 13. and accordingly it was signally performed.

5. He hath given * meat unto them that fear him; he will ever be mindfull of his Covenant.

* or food, see note d.

6. His providence hath most effectually and eminently been discernible in his dealing with his people the Jews, before whom he hath cast out the Canaanites and other inhabitants of seven very fruitfull nations, who had exceedingly provoked him with their unnatural sins, and given to this his people the quiet possession of them, to which they had not the least right or title but from his immediate donation.

6. He hath shewed his people the || power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

e. 7. And herein, as in all things else, his actions have been most just and righteous, just vengeance to obdurate sinners, as perfect fidelity and performance of his promise to Abraham his servant. And so all his appointments both for the rooting out and planting in, his menaces and promises, are most assuredly performed, there is no frustrating of any of them.

7. The works of his hands are † verity and judgment, all his [e] commandments are sure.

8. Being once ratified and confirmed by him, they are sure to have that exact uprightness in them that they remain steady and immutable.

8. They stand fast for ever and ever, and are done in truth and righteousness.

9. And the like wonderfull act of power and mercy and fidelity was it in God, that he rescued and brought out the seed of Abraham, to whom his promises were made, from the slavery of Ægypt (an emblem of our greater redemprion from the bondage of Sin and Satan wrought by his own Son) and by a mighty hand made good his promises to them of bringing them into Canaan. Thus firm and inviolable are all God's pacts and agreements made with his people, to whom as his mercies are most admirably firm, and for ever to be acknowledged with thanksgiving, so his judgments are most dreadfull and formidable to all that provoke them to fall upon them.

9. He sent redemption to his people, he hath commanded his covenant for ever; holy and reverend is his name.

f. 10. There is therefore no such excellent prudential course as the preserving in our breasts a just and due reverence of God, an awe to his laws, and a dread to his judgments; and when all is considered, this will be found the prime wisedom. And the reason is clear; The Law of God is the declaration of those things which are most our concernments to know, his commandments bring all profitable knowledge and judgment to them that carefully set themselves to, and are daily exercised in the practising of them. They that constantly guide their lives according to those divine directions, will soon discern experimentally what others at a distance never dream of, that the practice of his precepts is of all other things most for their turns, most agreeable to all their interests both in this and another world. And so for that most eminent mercy of such his divine and most excellent precepts (as well as for other parts of his Covenant, his grace and mercies) all possible praise is for ever due to his most holy name.

10. The fear of the Lord is the [f] beginning of wisedom; a good understanding * have all they that doe his commandments: his praise endureth for ever.

* are they to all that do them לְכָל עֹשֵׂיהֶם

a. הַלְלוּ יָהּ V. 1. Praise ye the Lord] What was observed, and competently proved, note [a] on Psal. 106. that Hallelujah was no part, but onely the Title of the Psalm, is applicable to this also and more that follow, and is here most clearly demonstrable. For this Psalm (as also the next) is one of those that are composed with exact respect to the order of the letters of the Alphabet. And it is S. Hierom's true observation, that this Psalm is the first which is purely Alphabetical, the 25th. and others, which are well-nigh such, failing or abounding in some Letter, whereas this, leaving הַלְלוּ יָהּ for the Title, begins with אוֹדֶה, as the 112. doth with אַשְׁרֵי, and in very short metre goes on exactly according to the letters of the Alphabet, which it could not be imagined to do, if it began with הַלְלוּ יָהּ Hallelujah.

b. יְשָׁרִים V. 1. Vright] Of the word יְשָׁרִים upright, 'tis Kimchi's observation, וזהם ישראל it is an appellative of Israel, as Numb. 23. 10. Let me die מות ישר the death of the upright. And so they are called by a name of much affinity with this, Jesurun, in the notion, and by analogy as in the New Testament the Christians are called Saints.

c. דְּרוּשִׁים V. 2. Sought out] דָּרַשׁ to seek, investigate, search, is used for meditating, studying, and from thence בֵּית מִדְרָשָׁא a school, or place for study of the Law, and in Arabick مَدْرَسَة an Academy, or University; and accordingly 1 Cor. 1. 20. συζητητὴς, the inquirer, is the student, he that spends his time in searching and finding out difficulties (see Note [f]. on that place:) and then דְּרוּשִׁים here applied to the great works of God, may be rendred are studied, or meditated on, לְכָל חֶפְצֵיהֶם by all that have delight or pleasure in such study or meditation, sought of all that desire them, saith the Jewish Arab. But the word also signifies to be found, Isa. 65. 1. I am found by them that sought me not. And then this will bear an excellent sense, frequently met with in other places, that the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, his way is plain unto the righteous, (so Abu Walid, they are evident or plain to all that delight in them, or love them) though the wicked shall fall therein, and the like. The next words, לְכָל חֶפְצֵיהֶם, are capable also of another rendring, in the notion of חפץ Eccl. 3. 1. where we render it purpose, and Eccl. 5. 7. where we render it matter, and the LXXII. πρᾶγμα, thing, in both places. And by analogy with those the phrase may here signifie in all their parts, designs, or purposes, or in all their several concernments. חֶפְצֵיהֶם

V. 4. Made

d. וְכָר עָשָׂה

V. 4. Made his wonderfull works to be remembred] The moſt proper rendring of this verſe will be pitcht on by obſerving the notion of זֵכֶר for a memorial, any thing by which a man may be remembred, any name or title attributed to any for any notable action or excellency. So the LXXII. Exod. 17. 14. render זֵכֶר by ὄνομα, name, and Hoſ. 12. 5. The Lord God of hoſts, יְהוָה זִכְרוֹ the Lord is his memorial; that ſure is, the Lord is his name. And accordingly the Mazorites call God's name אַזְכָּרָא memorial. Accordingly עָשָׂה זֵכֶר he made a memorial, is no more than he hath made him a name; either by common way of ſpeaking, he hath left remembrances of himſelf which will continue (as Gen. 11. 4. Let us make us a name, and 2 Sam. 7. 9. I have made thee a great name, and v. 23. of God himſelf, that he went to make him a name, and to doe for you great things, very agreeable to the ſtyle here, he hath made a memorial or name לְנִפְלְאֹתָיו by his wondrous works, and ſo the Chaldee underſtand it here, דְּכַרָן טָב עֲבַד he hath made him a good memorial) Kimchi reads it, a memorial of his wonders in Ægypt, in giving us the Sabbath, Paſſeover, and other feaſts; accordingly Aben Ezra renders טֶרֶף v. 5. the ſpoil of the Ægyptians, according to the promiſe of God, Gen. 15. 13. But it may be alſo interpreted more minutely and critically, he hath made him a title, a name, by which he expects to be called, viz. this which here follows, as the breviate of that by which he was pleaſed to proclaim himſelf, Exod. 34. 6. חַנּוּן וְרַחוּם יְהוָה The Lord mercifull and gracious, not making this a diſtinct ſentence from the former, but affixing it as that name which he hath made himſelf by his works.

e. נֶאֱמָנִים

V. 7. Commandments are ſure] From אָמַן which ſignifies true and ſure and faithfull, is the Epithet of God's Commandments here נֶאֱמָנִים. How it is to be rendred, will be beſt gueſt by conſidering the context, and the peculiar importance of the Commandments here. The former verſe ſpeaks of the heathen nations, the Canaanites, &c. who were by God's appointment rooted out of their land, and the Iſraelites planted in their ſtead. In this, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, there was אֱמֶת וּמִשְׁפָּט fidelity and judgment: fidelity in performing the promiſe made to Abraham many years before, and juſt vengeance on thoſe nations for their ſins, the meaſure of which they had now filled up. And as the ground of both theſe, 'tis here added כָּל פִּקּוּדָיו all his commandments — The word which we render commandments, comes from פָּקַד to viſit either for good or evil, which ſignifies alſo to command, or give order. So of Cyrus, Ezr. 1. 2. פָּקַד עָלַי he hath charged me, and 2 Chron. 36. 23. פָּקַד עָלַי the Lord hath charged me, (the ſame Cyrus) to build him an houſe at Jeruſalem. In this ſenſe of the word it may here be fitly uſed for God's appointments and commands to the children of Iſrael to root out the Canaanites, and to take poſſeſſion of their land, (not underſtanding it of the Commandments or Law of God written in their hearts, againſt which theſe nations had ſo unnaturally offended.) So when Joſhua, Joſ. 8. 29. commanded to cut down the carcaſſe of the King of Ai, &c. the Chaldee render it by פְּקַד, and frequently in the like ſenſe. And then of theſe commands of God, theſe appointments of his, for the good of the one ſort, and the puniſhment of the other (the LXXII. fitly render it ἐντολαὶ αὐτοῦ, commands or expreſſes given by him) the Pſalmiſt ſaith, they are נֶאֱמָנִים ſure, firm, faithfull, i. e. are moſt certainly performed: whenſoever he gives order for the deſtroying of a nation, it ſhall certainly be performed, unleſs by their ſpeedy repentance they avert it, Jer. 18. 8. and ſo for his command of building and planting, v. 9. And this in both parts is the probableſt meaning of the place, as will be gueſt by the inſuing verſe, They ſtand faſt for ever and ever —

f. רֵאשִׁית

V. 10. Beginning of wiſedom] The word beginning is of uncertain ſenſe. It may ſignifie the firſt in time onely, and ſo the rudiments, firſt foundation or ground-work, and ſo though the moſt neceſſary, yet the moſt imperfect part of the work. And if it ſhould thus be underſtood here and in other places, the ſenſe would be no more but this, that there were no true wiſedom, which had not its foundation in piety and fear of God. But the word רֵאשִׁית (as רֹאשׁ head) ſignifies the firſt in dignity as well as in order or time, and is frequently uſed for the chief or principle of any kind. So Deut. 18. 4. רֵאשִׁית (the Chaldee reade רֵישׁ the head) the prime, the principal, i. e. the beſt, of thy corn and wine and oile, and of the fleece of thy ſheep. So Amos 6. 6. that anoint themſelves רֵאשִׁית with the chief of ointments, the beſt and moſt precious; and 1 Sam. 15. 21. רֵאשִׁית הַחֵרֶם the firſt of that which was devoted, is interpreted v. 9. by מֵיטַב and כָּל הַטּוֹב the goodneſs, and, all the good, as that is oppoſed to the baſe and vile in that verſe. So Numb. 24. Amalek was רֵאשִׁית firſt, i. e. chief, of the nations. And thus it is to be underſtood here, that the fear of the Lord (which ſignifies all piety) is the principal or chief of wiſedom, as ſapientia prima in Horace is the principal or moſt excellent wiſedom; according to that of Job chap. 28. 28. Unto man he ſaid, Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wiſedom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding, that by way of eminence, the moſt excellent wiſedom and underſtanding. The Jewiſh Arab reads, The firſt thing that wiſedom gives in command is the fear of the Lord, and a goodneſs of underſtanding is to all that doe that.

The Hundred and Twelfth PSALM.

‖ Praiſe ye the Lord. ‖ Hallelujah: ſee note a. on Pſal. 111.

The hundred and twelfth Pſalm is a deſcription of the preſent employments and felicities of the truly pious man, ſuch as do much tend to the honour and praiſe of God, who is ſo exceeding gracious unto all his ſervants, that there cannot be a greater freedom and bliſs than to be in the number of them. And therefore the Pſalm, which deſcribes this, is by the Hebrews intituled Hallelujah, though there be no other expreſs praiſing of God in it. It is compoſed like the former, the ſeveral ſhort metres beginning with the letters of the Hebrew Alphabet.

Paraphraſe.

1. There is no true felicity but that which conſiſts in a moſt carefull performance of all the commandments of God, ſtrictly abſtaining from all that may diſpleaſe him, and chearfully practiſing all that he requires of us. And indeed there is no ſuch ſecurity of all true durable delight and pleaſure as this, the preſent gratefulneſs, and the ſucceeding comforts of ſuch practices to any truly vertuous mind, are a continual feaſt, of all others the moſt exceeding, and all other pleaſures in reſpect of this are nothing worth.

1. BLeſſed is the man that feareth the Lord, † that delighteth greatly in his commandments. † he delighteth חָפֵץ

2. And as this is the moſt pleaſurable, ſo is it the moſt thriving skilfull method to bring all greatneſs and flouriſhing upon any family, to advance and inrich the poſterity. For as long as God hath the diſpoſing of the good things of this world, honour and wealth, &c. 'tis unreaſonable to imagine that any ſubtleties or policies, projects or ambitions of ours, which have impiety in them, and thereby forfeit all title to God's benedictions, ſhall be near ſo ſucceſsfull toward our preſent worldly intereſts, as a ſtrict piety and conſtant adherence to the ways of God.

2. His ſeed ſhall be mighty upon the earth; the generation of the upright ſhall be bleſſed.

3. The promiſe of the greateſt abundance and confluence of earthly felicities being by God intailed on the perſons and families of ſuch men, as well as the eternal rewards in another world. (See 1 Tim. 4. 8.)

3. Wealth and riches ſhall be in his houſe, and his righteouſneſs endureth for ever.

4, 5, 6. And if any affliction at any time befall ſuch (as the promiſes of felicities in this world are always to be taken with the exception of the croſs, ſome mixtures of afflictions for gracious and wiſe ends, the puniſhing our ſins here, that they be not puniſht hereafter, the curing our ſpiritual maladies, and exerciſing our graces) yet are there ſuch allays joyned with it, ſuch ſtrengths to ſupport, and ſuch ſeaſonable and oft unexpected iſſues and deliverances out of it, that this cannot be lookt on otherwiſe than as a ſpecial work of his merciſull providence toward them. And (which is oft to be obſerved) this ſupply from God of allays and comforts in affliction, together with timely deliverances out of it, ſhall certainly be performed unto good men, not onely becauſe 'tis promiſed them, and therefore ſhall not fail them, but alſo becauſe 'tis made over to them from God's ſpecial providence, as a reward moſt fitly apportioned to ſeveral graces in them: as 1. to their charity and bounty and compaſſion to others, giving and lending to all that are in diſtreſs, God hath promiſed ſuch, by way of proportionable reward, that they ſhall receive mercy as the wages of their merciſulneſs, and not onely in another world, but in this, they ſhall be bleſſed on earth, Pſal. 37. 25. S[illegible]. to diſcreet moderation and temper both of their words and actions. Good men, if they be throughly, ſincerely ſuch, are meek, and not apt to be impatient in words or deeds, and ſo they contribute much to the allaying of their afflictions, and ſoftening their perſecutors, both which ragefull and impatient behaviour is wont to exaſperate. And then 'tis over and above, a reward of their patience and meekneſs and diſcretion, which God hath allotted them to temper and ſweeten and timely to remove their ſufferings who bear them ſo well, at leaſt to afford them ſtrength, to make them very ſupportable. By theſe means, whatever miſadventures they may for a time meet with here, God will aſſuredly provide for them, yea and for their poſterity (if they go on conſtantly in their ſteps) he will give them ſtability in the proſperities of this life; and becauſe a good name after death is as great a bleſſing as wealth or honour in this life, that proportion ſhall be ſecured to them alſo, their memory ſhall be freſh and flouriſhing among all poſterities (when their bodies are rotten in their graves) and by their example they ſhall benefit many, when by their actions they can no longer oblige them.

4. Unto the upright there ariſeth light in the darkneſs; he is gracious, and full of compaſſion, and righteous.

5. A good man ſheweth favour and lendeth; he will guide his * affairs with ‖ diſcretion. * or words דְּבָרָיו ‖ judgment מִשְׁפָּט

6. Surely he ſhall not be moved for ever: the righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance.

7, 8. Another ſpecial privilege there is that belongs to every pious man. His adherence to God and dependence on him is an amulet againſt all worldly fears or apprehenſions; when the news of danger or miſery, the one imminent, the other already preſent, aſſaults him, it is not able to diſquiet or diſturb him. The reaſon is, he hath reſigned his whole being into God's wiſeſt diſpoſal, and is aſſuredly perſwaded that his divine choices are to be preferred, that what he ſends or permits to fall, is fitter for his turn than any thing elſe that he could chuſe for himſelf, and conſequently that if God ſees it not good for him, he will avert it before it come, or remove it ſpeedily: and by this one aſſurance he is compleatly fortified, not onely for a patient, but chearfull entertainment of all that is or ſhall come, remains unmoved, and well pleaſed with God's preſent diſpenſations, whatſoever they are, and ſo conſtantly continues, till the ſame hand that ſent them give him releaſe and deliverance out of them, which in God's good time ſhall be done alſo.

7. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixt, truſting in the Lord.

8. His heart is eſtabliſhed, he ſhall not be afraid, untill he [a] ‖ ſee his deſire upon his enemies. ‖ look upon his oppreſſors.

9. As for his charity and conſtant liberality to the poor, (which is a ſpecial piece of piety, and interpreted by God as if it were done to himſelf) it never goes unrewarded. One crown is reſerved for it,

9. He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor, his righteouſneſs endureth for ever; his horn ſhall be exalted with honour.

it, eternal felicity in another world; which though a gift of God's free bounty, ſhall then be diſperſed with reſpect to the performances of this kind (ſee Matt. 25. 34, &c.) And another is preſently beſtowed here; wealth, and honour, and a moſt flouriſhing condition in this world, is very frequently the viſible and diſcernible, and when not ſo, yet the ſecret unobſervable reward of this one ſort of piety, being promiſed to it more peculiarly than to any other good works. Deut. 26. 11. 13. Pſal. 41. 2. 37. 26. Prov. 11. 24, 25, 26, 27. 13. 22. 14. 21. 19. 17. 22. 9. 28. 27. Mat. 10. 30.

10. The wicked ſhall ſee it, and be grieved, he ſhall gnaſh with his teeth and [b] melt away; the deſire of the wicked ſhall periſh.

10. To conclude, the felicities of piety even in this life are ſuch, as are matter of b.

real envy and trouble and indignation to the wicked, who cannot chuſe but ſee it, and ſecretly confeſs it, and repine and malign and be diſquieted at it, whilſt themſelves, be they never ſo intent and induſtrious in the getting and keeping of worldly wealth, do yet ſenſibly decay and grow hinderly, all their deſigns and indirect methods of thriving are curſt and blaſted, and purſued with a continual improſperouſneſs; yield them no kind of fruit in this world, yet coſt them full dear in another.

Annotations on Pſal. CXII.

a. יִרְאֶה

V. 8. See his deſire] The phraſe יִרְאֶה ſhall ſee, in compoſition with בְּצָרָיו on his diſtreſſers or oppreſſors, hath been already explained, Note on Pſal. 44. c. in reference to David at that time. 'Tis uſed again Pſal. 59. 10. יַרְאֵנִי בְשׁוּרָרָי God ſhall let me ſee or look on mine enemies; and Pſal. 92. וַתַּבֵּט עֵינִי בְּשׁוּרָרָי Mine eye hath lookt on mine enemies, and mine ear hath heard of them that riſe up againſt me, i. e. ſeen and heard of their deſtruction v. 10. and ſo the Chaldee reads בְּאוּבְדָנָא on the ruine—— So Pſal. 118. 7. אֶרְאֶה בְשׂנְאָי I ſhall look upon my haters: the LXXII. reade, ἐπόψομαι τοὺς ἐχθρούς μου, I ſhall behold my enemies, i. e. having God for my auxiliary, I ſhall without fear look on them. Here it is applied more generally to all pious men, and muſt ſtill be rendred ſhall behold or look upon his oppreſſors or diſtreſſers; the meaning ſtill being proportionable, he ſhall behold them ſecurely, confidently look in their faces, as we ſay, as being now no longer under their power, being freed from their tyranny and preſſures. The Chaldee, which rendred it Pſal. 44. by ſeeing revenge, here change it into פוּרְקָנָא redemption, deliverance from his diſtreſs.

b. מָסַס

V. 10. Melt away] וְנָמָס here, from מָסַס to diſſolve or melt, being joyned with ſeeing, grieving and gnaſhing with the teeth, expreſſions of the wicked man's envy, may be thought to belong to the ſame matter, conſuming or melting away with grief. But the word ſignifying any kind of melting, conſumption, or diſſolution, outward of the eſtate, as well as inward of the mind, that particularly which is cauſed by putrefaction, that may as probably be the notion of it here; and ſo it beſt agrees with that which follows, the deſire of the wicked ſhall periſh. Whilſt pious men thrive and proſper, wicked men decay, conſume, melt away, and all their covetouſneſs, worldly-mindedneſs, earneſt purſuit of wealth (ſo תַּאֲוַת deſire imports) comes to nought and periſheth. The Syriack therefore for melting reade נֶאֱבַד ſhall be taken away or deſtroyed.

The Hundred and Thirteenth PSALM.

Hallelujah

‖ Praiſe ye the Lord.

The hundred and thirteenth is a thankfull commemoration of the glory and condeſcenſions of God, and the great and ſignal works of his providence to the moſt afflicted abject creatures (never more diſcernible than in the work of redemption) and from the matter of it was by the Hebrews ſtyled, as the two former, Hallelujah. (See note a. on Pſal. 106. and 111.

1. PRaiſe, O ye ſervants of the Lord, praiſe the name of the Lord.

Paraphraſe.

1. All faithfull ſervants of God are moſt nearly concerned and obliged chearfully to celebrate and commemorate the great and glorious and gracious works of God.

2. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord from this time forth for evermore.

2. To him therefore be all poſſible praiſe and glory aſcribed both now and to all eternity.

3. From the riſing of the Sun to the going down of the ſame the Lord's name is to be praiſed.

3. From one end of the heathen world unto the other (ſee Mal. 1. 11.) his mercies and goodneſs to mankind (eſpecially that great Evangelical mercy, the gift of Chriſt) ſhall be ſolemnly proclaimed and promulgated.

4. The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens.

4. The power and dominion of God is paramount, the greateſt Empires in the world are all ſubordinate to him; He is the one ſupreme Lord over all the world, and not onely of this one people which is called by his name: And though the higheſt heavens be the ſpecial place of his manſion, yet his glory is infinitely greater than to be incircled or comprehended by them.

* Who humbleth himſelf to behold in heaven and in earth.

7, 8, 9. And as this God of heaven hath been pleaſed thus to deſcend and humble himſelf to us, ſo is he graciouſly pleaſed to exalt thoſe that are humbled, and from the loweſt pitch of worldly vileneſs and deſolation to advance ſometimes to the higheſt dignities, even to that of the royal throne, 1 Sam. 2. 8. at other times to diſpenſe other ſeaſonable mercies, children to the barren Sarah and Hannah, and many the like (but eſpecially the gift of grace, and of more grace to the humble, the glad tidings of the Goſpel to the poor.) For which we are all obliged to pay him our Hallelujahs.

Annotations on Pſal. CXIII.

a. V. 5. Dwelleth on high] The Syntaxis in this place is very poetical, and a very diſcernible ὑπέρβατον in it. הַמַּגְבִּיהִי and הַמַּשְׁפִּילִי are acknowledged to be in exact oppoſition one to the other, the firſt from גָּבַהּ high, is exalting himſelf, the latter from שָׁפֵל lowly, humbling himſelf. And proportionably בַּשָּׁמַיִם and בָּאָרֶץ in heaven and earth muſt be oppoſed alſo, and the one joyned with his exaltation as the term of that, and the other with his humiliation as the term of that: and then the like decorum being obſerved betwixt dwelling, and ſeeing or beholding (the higher being proper for the habitation, but the lower being accommodated to the works of his providence, ſignified by ſeeing) the conſtruction will be regularly thus, who is like unto Jehovah our God, who exalteth himſelf בַּשָּׁמַיִם to heaven לָשָׁבֶת to inhabite or dwell there, and yet humbleth himſelf (at the ſame time) בָּאָרֶץ to the earth לִרְאוֹת to ſee, behold, or order all things therein by his providence and his grace? An obſervation which hath always had truth in it from the beginning of the world, but then moſt ſignally, when the Meſſias, the ſupreme God of heaven, came to viſit us here on earth in ſo great humility. Of this kind of compoſition there want not examples: ſee Cant. 1. 5. I am black, but comely, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon; i. e. black as the tents of Kedar, but fair as the curtains of Solomon. So Deut. 32. 42. I will make my arrows drunk with blood, and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh, with the blood of the ſlain and of the captives: where the ſenſe exacts this other placing, I will make my arrows drunk with blood, the blood of the ſlain, and my ſword ſhall devour the fleſh of the captives—So Rom. 1. 12. the righteouſneſs of God is revealed ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν from faith to faith, i. e. the righteouſneſs of God by faith is revealed to faith, or that men might believe: ſee Note b. on that Chapter. To this ſenſe I conceive all the ancient tranſlators had reſpect, the Chaldee rendring it הַמַּגְבִּיהַּ who exalted his habitation that he may dwell, and lets down his eyes that he may ſee in heaven and in earth; but the LXXII. more expreſly, ὁ ἐν ὑψηλοῖς κατοικῶν, καὶ τὰ ταπεινὰ ἐφορῶν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐν τῇ γῇ, who dwelleth in the heights, and beholdeth the things that are below in the heaven and in the earth; and ſo the Syriack, who ſitteth on high, and beholdeth or looketh on that which is deep or low (not as the Latin reads cœlum & terram, the heaven and earth; but) עמקא &c. on heaven and earth. In all which rendrings the letting down the eyes, the beholding the things that be low or deep, cannot be common to the heaven and earth, but is proper to the earth in oppoſition to heaven. For as for the notion of שְׁחָקִים for the regions of the air, it cannot probably have place here, any more than v. 4. where his glory is ſaid to be above the heavens, to expreſs the infiniteneſs of it, by its ſuperiority to the higheſt of all creatures, which conſequently muſt be reſolved to be the higheſt heavens, and not the air, which is much inferiour to them. If this ſhould ſeem to be too unuſual and violent an hyperbaton, then the meaning muſt be, that although God be high in his throne of glory, yet he condeſcends to the managery of the whole fabrick, ſtoops down to behold the things on earth, and by as great a condeſcenſion, looks on thoſe in heaven; his glory therein approving it ſelf to be above the heavens, becauſe his beholding the tranſactions there is a deſcending or looking down.

שָׁמַיִם

b. V. 9. Keep houſe] The word הַבַּיִת houſe, is ſometimes beſt rendred family: ſo Gen. 7. 1. Go thou and all בֵּיתְךָ thy family into the Ark. So Exod. 1. 21. God made for the midwives, בָּתִּים families, 2 Sam. 7. 11. God ſhall make בַּיִת a family, i.e. give thee children. And ſo here ſpeaking of God's mercy to the poor and lowly, and inſtancing in עֲקָרֶת the barren, childleſs woman, מוֹשִׁיבִי הַבַּיִת ſettling her an houſe, muſt be giving children, and ſo will moſt intelligibly be rendred, ſettleth the barren in a family, ; and then to it will beſt accord what follows, אֵם הַבָּנִים שְׂמֵחָה a joyfull mother of children, there being no ſuch matter of joy to a barren woman, as that of having children. The Jewiſh Arab quite leaving out הַבַּיִת in his tranſlation, renders it, and that maketh the barren woman a joyfull mother of children; as thinking it included in the ſenſe. A phraſe very nigh unto this we had Pſal. 68. 7. מוֹשִׁיב יְחִידִים בַּיְתָה, where the ſpeech being of ſolitary perſons, widows, &c. and בַּיְתָה ſignifying adverbially, at home, the rendring was ſomewhat to differ from this, as the ſenſe did.

The Hundred and Fourteenth PSALM.

The hundred and fourteenth is a brief recital of the miraculous works of God to his people the Jews, in their redemption out of Ægypt, and journey to Canaan; an emblem of his greater miracles of mercy in the redemption of mankind by the death of his Son.

‖ barbarous people † or for his holiness * power.

1. WHEN Israel went out of Ægypt, the house of Jacob from a ‖ people of [a] strange language,
2. Judah was [b] his † sanctuary, and Israel his * dominion.

Paraphrase.

1, 2. When God was pleased to deliver his people of Israel out of the servitude they indured in Ægypt, he did in a signal manner demonstrate both the sacred and inviolate nature of all his promises, and the overruling virtue of his power and dominion over all creatures, his fidelity at once, and his omnipotence. a. b.

‖ turned יָסֹב

3. The sea saw it and fled, Jordan was ‖ driven back.

3. At his least command the Red sea departed out of the chanel, and left a dry ground for them to pass in the midst of it; as at another time the river Jordan parted asunder, and the current stopt its course, and went backward, the waters were cut off, Jos. 4. 7. whilst Joshua and the people passed over it.

4. The [c] mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

4. And at the giving the Law to them in the wilderness, the whole mountain on which it was, Mount Sinai, all the greater and lesser branches of it, did greatly shake, and move out of the place most terribly, Exod. 19. 18. c.

5. What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest; thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?
6. Ye mountains that ye skipped like rams, and ye little hills like lambs?
7. Tremble thou earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob, † lake of 8. Which turned the rock [d] into a † standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters.

5, 6, 7, 8. If any man demanded what was the reason of the prodigious ebb of the Red sea, or of the standing still and parting of Jordan, of the terrible earthquake and commotion that was of the whole mountain and parts of Sinai, the account is evident, d.

God was there pleased by the ministery and guard of Angels to exhibit himself in a special manner to that people for their rescue out of Ægypt, and to bring them into Canaan, and to deliver his Law unto them; and that presence of his was the only cause of all these prodigious effects, as at another time it was of bringing such plenty of water out of a rock of flint, that it maintained a current (as if it had been a notable spring) some considerable time after.

Annotations on Psal. CXIV.

a. לַעַז

V. 1. Of strange language] The Hebrew לַעַז is by the Chaldee here rendred, בַּרְבָּרָא barbarous, and so by the Greek βαρβάρου. The word among the Greeks and Latins comes from the Hebrew בַּר extra, redoubled, and so signifies to a Jew any man of any other nation, and so fitly answers to לַעַז a stranger or alien.

b. לְקָדְשׁוֹ

V. 2. His sanctuary] The word לְקָדְשׁוֹ will literally be rendred to or for his holiness, and being joyned with הָיְתָה was will signifie, that Judah, the people of the Jews there spoken of, was made use of by God on, or among, them to demonstrate his holiness, in the notion wherein oft it is taken for the keeping his promise sacred or inviolate; as when Psal. 111. 9. speaking of the firmness and immutability of his Covenant, it is added, קָדוֹשׁ שְׁמוֹ holy (as in another respect, reverend) is his name. The meaning then is, that Judæa was a special instance of his holiness, or performing his promise made to Abraham long before. And then in proportion, that which follows must be understood, יִשְׂרָאֵל מַמְשְׁלוֹתָיו Israel was his power, i. e. Israel was an instance of his power, in his acting for Israel he declared his omnipotence most signally; the LXXII. literally render it ἁγιασμα αὐτου his power, but the Syriack ܬܫܒܚܬܗ his praise or glory, i. e. in dealing with whom he set forth his glory. In this, as in the former verse, the expression is poetical. In the first verse, as Israel and the house of Jacob are the same thing in several names, so is Ægypt and the barbarous people. And here, as Judah and Israel are all one (the separation being not made at that time, which is here respected) so לְקָדְשׁוֹ and מַמְשְׁלוֹתָיו his holiness, or to his holiness, and his power, are joyntly attributed to the same subject, Judah and Israel; not that the holiness of God was shewed in one, and the power in the other. Another interpretation the words are capable of, that as Judah marcht out of Ægypt, the cloud which went before the host abode upon them, and that presentiating Almighty God, and still consecrating and making holy the place of his abode, may found that speech, that Judah was his sanctuary, or place of his residence. And then, as Psal. 136. 9. the moon is said to be לְמֶמְשְׁלוֹת for a dominion in the night, i. e. in an active sense to rule, and govern; so the meaning of Israel's being his dominion here may be, their being impowered as a Prince by God, to go out with an high hand, executing justice on their enemies.

c. הֶהָרִים

V. 4. Mountains] Though the earthquake at the giving the Law were so remarkable, that there can be no doubt of the fitness of accommodating this skipping of the mountains to it; yet 'tis not amiss to mention the interpretation of Kimchi, who applies it to the striking the rocks in Rephidim and Cades, which also hath this probability, that Naturalists observe that earthquakes sometimes make eruptions of water.

d. אֲגַם

V. 8. Standing water] The אֲגַם מַיִם is best rendred a lake of water, to note the abundance of it; accordingly the Chaldee renders it לְאֵירְחָה into a river, and so the Psalmist expresly describes the gushing out of the waters from the rock, that they ran in dry places like a river, Psal. 105. 41.

The Hundred and Fifteenth Pſalm.

The hundred and fifteenth (by the LXXII. and Syriack and Latin and Arabick and Æthiopick † annexed to the former, but diſtinguiſht in the Hebrew and Chaldee) is a rendring of all glory to the true and onely God in oppoſition to all Idol-Deities, and a calling upon all ſorts of men to place their whole affiance and truſt in him.

† So alſo the Jewiſh Arab, who having begun the former Pſalm with [even as, O Lord thou diddeſt when Iſrael went out of Ægypt, &c. begins this with כן even ſo, O Lord, thou doſt not, or do thou not to us what we deſerve but to thy name, &c. So Kimchi notes it of ſome copies.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1. O Lord, we ſinfull and vile men are moſt unable in the leaſt degree to glorify thee, we are moſt unworthy of the leaſt of all thy goodneſs, abundantly reached out unto us; no ſtrength of ours hath contributed in the leaſt to our felicities, no merit or deſert of ours hath brought them down from thee by way of due or challenge: thine holy bleſſed and moſt glorious name, that hath wrought all in us and for us, muſt in all reaſon have the intire honour and praiſe of all; there being no other motive or impellent to excite or invite thy mercies but thine own meer grace and favour, and thy fidelity and immutable conſtancy to thy Covenant and promiſes freely made to us, which thou wilt never fail to perform.

1. NOT [a] unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truths ſake.

[a] 'Tis not with us, O Lord, not with us.

2. The heathen Idolaters round about us have not ſped ſo well in their machinations or attempts againſt us, as to have any temptation to reproach us of the God we worſhip, that he is either unable or unwilling to help us.

2. Wherefore ſhould the heathen ſay, Where is now their God?

3. Though the God we worſhip be not here in any viſible ſhape among us, as their Idols are, his court of reſidence, his palace and throne being in the higheſt heavens; yet hereby is he not ſo removed from us, but that he hath been always able to perform whatſoever he hath pleaſed, as readily and effectually as if he had been always bodily preſent among us.

3. But our God is in the heavens, he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed.

b. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Whereas the gods falſly ſo called, which the heathens worſhip, and from whom they expect relief and aſſiſtance, are nothing but ſo many liveleſs images of wood, ſtone, or metall, conceived by them to be inſpirited by the falſe deities to whoſe names they are conſecrated, but have really not the leaſt degree of ſenſe or life in them: The materials whereof they are made are perfectly inanimate, and the artificers carving on them mouths, and eyes, and ears, and noſes, and hands, and feet, and throats, is not at all available to give them the uſe or firſt faculty of language, or ſight, or any other ſenſe, or ſo much as of breath. And then they that can carve and work them to this end, ſpecially thoſe that can offer their prayers, repoſe their confidences in ſuch inanimate ſtatues, are certainly, as to any regular uſe of their faculties, as ſenſeleſs, as irrational as any of them, act as contrary to all reaſonable or animal rules, as meer images would doe, if they were ſuppoſable to doe any thing.

4. Their [b] Idols are ſilver and gold, the work of mens hands.
5. They have mouths, but they ſpeak not; eyes have they but they ſee not;
6. They have ears, but they hear not; noſes have they, but they ſmell not;
7. They have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not, neither [c] ‖ ſpeak they through their throats.
8. They that make them are like unto them, ſo is every one that truſteth in them.

‖ breath, or murmur,

d. 9. Whilſt thoſe, the beſt gods that other nations acknowledge, are thus perfectly impotent, the God of Iſrael is a God of goodneſs and of power, as able as willing to relieve them that truſt in him. O let all that are admitted to the honour of being own'd as his people, confidently rely and repoſe their truſt in him.

9. O Iſrael, [d] truſt thou in the Lord; he is their help and their ſhield.

10. And above all, thoſe eſpecially that draw nigh to him, wait on his altar, officiate in his divine ſervice, are in peculiar manner obliged to offer up their prayers, and repoſe their affiance in him, who hath promiſed to be preſent and aſſiſtent to them, as thoſe which are his proxies and commiſſioners upon earth, to intercede betwixt God and man in things belonging to God.

10. O houſe of Aaron, truſt in the Lord; he is their help and their ſhield.

11. And the ſame is the duty, or rather privilege, of all faithfull ſervants of God, to repoſe their whole truſt in him, as one that will be ſure never to fail them nor forſake them.

11. Ye that fear the Lord, truſt in the Lord; he is their help and their ſhield.

12. Of this we have had many experiences in the ſeveral acts of his power and mercy toward us, and each of thoſe is a pawn and ingagement to ſecure us of the continuance of the like both to our Church and State, Temple and People, whenſoever we have need of it.

12. The Lord hath been mindfull of us, he will bleſs us; he will bleſs the houſe of Iſrael, he will bleſs the houſe of Aaron.

13. And the ſame will he not fail to doe to all true ſervants of his, of what condition ſoever they are in this world; the greateſt Prince ſhall not have any privilege herein above the meaneſt peaſant.

13. He will bleſs them that fear the Lord, † both ſmall and great.

† the ſmall with the— הַקְּטַנִּים עִם adde * upon you, upon you, and יוֹסֵף עֲלֵיכֶם

14. And the ſame bleſſings which he beſtoweth on ſuch, he will continue and intail upon their poſterity.

14. The Lord ſhall increaſe * you more and more, you and your children.

15. Ye

15. Ye are the bleſſed of the Lord which made heaven and earth.

15. This is a prerogative indeed, wherein the pious man infinitely exceeds and ſurpaſſes all other men in the world, that he and his family, and all that come from him, are the peculiar province and care of the Creator of all the world; and what bleſſing is there that they may not confidently expect and depend on by that tenure?

16. ‖ The heavens, even the heavens are the Lords; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

16. The higheſt heavens hath God provided for his own palace and court of reſidence; but the other part of the Univerſe, the inferiour globe of earth and air and ſea, hath he given to man, to have the dominion and uſe of the creatures that are therein.

17. The dead praiſe not the Lord, neither any that go down into ſilence.

18. But we will bleſs the Lord from this time forth and for evermore. Praiſe the Lord.

17, 18. And to this vaſt bounty of his, what praiſes and acknowledgments of ours can ever bear any proportion? The moſt we can doe in diſcharge of this duty is, to bleſs and ſerve him conſtantly whilſt we live here; and when we are gone off from this ſcene where this ſervice is performed to him, and our bodies laid in their graves, where there is nothing but ſilence, no power or opportunities of ſerving or magnifying God any longer, to leave it as a legacy to our poſterity through all ſucceſſions unto the end of the world, that they may ſupply our defects, and ſing continual Hoſanna's and Halleluiah's to him for ever.

Annotations on Pſal. CXV.

a. לֹא לָנוּ

V. 1. Not unto us] לֹא לָנוּ is literally to be rendred not with us, in the notion wherein that is ſaid to be with us which we have, or is in our power: as מִי לִי בַּשָּׁמָיִם Pſal. 73. 25. who is with me? or, whom have I in heaven? and Gen. 33. 9. לִי רַב enough with me, or I have enough.

b. עֲצַבֵּיהֶם

V. 4. Idols] The Hebrew עֲצַבֵּיהֶם ſignifies literally grievances; and 'tis uſually obſerved that the Jews impoſed names of ill omen on the heathen Deities: ſo the feaſts dedicated to them in their idiome are proportionably אוֹר mourning, חָנֻה fear, and שֶׁבֶר contrition. But the word עָצַב which ſignifies to be ſad and anxious, ſignifies alſo by Metonymy, to form or frame any thing very diligently (applied to God's framing of us, Job 10. 8. and to enemies diſtorting and depraving others words, Pſal. 56. 5.) And in that notion of it alſo may be deduced עֲצַבֵּיהֶם here, the ſimulacra, idols or Images of the Gentiles, which being conſecrated by their Prieſts, and thereby thought to be animated by thoſe whoſe images they are, thenceforth are worſhipped as Gods. So when 2 Sam. 5. 21. we reade that the Philiſtims left there עֲצַבֵּיהֶם their images, 1 Chron. 14. 12. it is אֱלֹהֵיהֶם their Gods. So S. Auguſtine De Civit. Dei l. 8. c. 23. tells us of the Theology of the heathens, received from Triſmegiſtus, that the ſimulacra or ſtatues were the bodies of their Gods, which by ſome magical ceremonies or Theurgia were forced to joyn themſelves as ſouls, and ſo animate and inliven thoſe dead organs, to aſſume and inhabit them. So ſaith Minutius, Iſti impuri ſpiritus ſub ſtatuis & imaginibus conſecratis deliteſcunt, thoſe impure ſpirits lie hid under the conſecrated ſtatues or images; and again, rapiunt ad ſe dæmonia & omnem ſpiritum immundum per conſecrationis obligamentum, they catch and force to them the devils, and every unclean ſpirit, by the band of conſecration (the ſpirits are ſuppoſed to be annext and bound to them by their magical rites and ceremonies.) So Arnobius cont. Gent. l. 6. Eos ipſos in his (ſignis) colitis, quos dedicatio infert ſacra, & fabrilibus efficit inhabitare ſimulacris, the heathens in the images worſhip thoſe which the dedication or conſecration brings into them, and cauſes to dwell in their graven images. And ſo Proclus de Sacrif. & Mag. mentions it as their common opinion, that the Gods were by their favour and help preſent in their images. And therefore the Tyrians fearing that Apollo would forſake them, bound his image with golden chains, ſuppoſing then the God could not depart from them. The like did the Athenians imagine, when they clipt the wings of the image of Victory; and the Sicilians in Cicero de Divin. who complain that they had no Gods in their Iſland, becauſe Verres had taken away all their ſtatues: and ſo we know Laban, when he had loſt his Teraphim, tells Jacob Gen. 31. 30. that he had ſtollen אֶת אֱלֹהַי his Gods. And ſo of the Golden calf, after the feaſts of conſecration, proclamation is made before it, Theſe be thy Gods, O Iſrael. But this of the animation and inſpiriting of images by their rites of conſecration being but a deception and fiction of their Prieſts, the Pſalmiſt here diſcovers it, and aſſures all men, that they are as inanimate and ſenſeleſs after the conſecration as before, bare ſilver and gold, with images of mouths and ears, &c. but without any power to uſe any of them; and conſequently moſt unable to hear, or help their votaries.

c. יֶהֱגּוּ

V. 7. Speak they] What יֶהֱגּוּ here ſignifies, will be concluded by the context, which immediately before had mentioned their having mouths and not ſpeaking. Here therefore (as there the proper action of the mouth was ſpeech) the proper action of the throat or larynx ſeems to be intended, and that is to breath. So when Pſal. 90. 9. he ſaith, we conſume our days, כְּמוֹ הֶגֶה, the Targum reads, הֵיךְ הֶבֶל פּוּמָא as a vapour, i. e. breath of the mouth in winter. If it be not this, then ſure 'tis an inarticulate ſound, contradiſtinct from ſpeaking. So Kimchi and Aben Ezra ſtate it, and quote Iſa. 38. 14. where the word is applied to the murmuring of the dove.

d. בָּטַח

V. 9. Truſt thou] For בָּטַח in the imperative, truſt thou, the LXXII. appear to have read בָּטַח in the præter tenſe, and ſo render it ἤλπισεν hath hoped, and ſo in v. 9, and 10. And ſo the Syriack اطمأن they of the houſe of Iſrael truſt. And if that were the true reading, the ſenſe would well accord, in oppoſition to what went before. The idol-worſhippers, that hope in their gods, are moſt ſenſeleſs perſons, loſe all their prayers that are poured out to them, receive no aid or relief from them; but the houſe of Iſrael truſt in the Lord of heaven, make their addreſſes to him, and they receive the benefit of their truſts and prayers, עֶזְרָם וּמָגִנָּם הוּא he is their help and their ſhield, he actually defends and aſſiſts them, when they thus depend on him. But the Hebrew reading is to be adhered to, and the ſenſe is the ſame either way. The Jewiſh Arab altering the ſignification from the imperative, paraphraſeth, and as the houſe of Iſrael hath truſted in the Lord, becauſe he, &c. v. 12. ſo the Lord will be mindfull of us, and will bleſs us, &c.

The Hundred and Sixteenth PSALM.

The hundred and ſixteenth is a gratefull acknowledgment of God's ſeaſonable deliverances, and gracious returns to the prayers of his afflicted diſtreſſed ſervant, which are to be anſwered with vows of new obedience, and intire affiance in God. It is thought to have been compoſed by David upon his delivery from the rebellion of Abſolom, after which he immediately had the liberty to return to the ſanctuary and publick aſſembly at Jeruſalem, v. 14. and 18, and 19, but may poſſibly, and not unfitly, belong to the return from the captivity ( ſee note a.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1. ‖ [a] I Love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice and my ſupplications. ‖ I deſired that the Lord would hear my voice, my

2. † Becauſe he hath inclined his ear unto me, * therefore will I call upon him as long as I live. † That he would incline * and in my days I will call upon him.

1, 2. I made my prayer to the Lord the God of heaven, that he would in his good time give audience to my cryes which I daily poured out before him, that he would at length be graciouſly pleaſed to conſider my diſtreſs. When calamities approach or ſeize upon me, I have nothing to apply my ſelf to, but my prayers to heaven, and thoſe I ſhall not fail to pour out before God:

3. The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, and the pains of hell ‖ gate hold upon me: I found trouble and ſorrow. ‖ found me צָרָה וְיָגוֹן

4. Then called I upon the name of the Lord; O Lord, I beſeech thee deliver my ſoul.

3, 4. At this time my dangers were very great, I was purſued cloſe, and incompaſſed with my enemies, who were purpoſely ſent as the meſſengers of death unto me; and having no way of reſcue from any humane means, I then addreſt my ſelf to the overruling help and providence of God, and to him I humbly and importunately came, beſeeching this ſeaſonable deliverance from him.

5. Gracious is the Lord and righteous, yea our God is mercifull.

5. And thus I concluded with my ſelf, that whatever my preſſures were, yet God was both mercifull and faithfull, and would certainly make good his promiſed mercy to me;

6. The Lord preſerveth the † ſimple: I was brought low, and he helped me. † or little ones פְּתָאיִם

6. That 'twas his proper attribute to be the ſupporter of the weak, the reliever of them that are in diſtreſs: and accordingly ſo hath he dealt with me in my greateſt deſtitution.

7. Return unto thy reſt, O my ſoul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee.

8. For thou haſt delivered my ſoul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.

9. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living.

7, 8, 9. And now being thus reſcued by him, and delivered out of the ſad condition that incompaſſed me, I have nothing to doe, but to ſerve God in all ſincerity and integrity of converſation, chearfully and conſtantly, all my days which God ſhall afford me in this world; at the preſent devoutly return to the Ark, the place where God is pleaſed to preſentiate himſelf, and there in great tranquility to celebrate that mercy which hath afforded me this ſignal deliverance.

10. I believed, therefore have I ſpoken: I was greatly afflicted.

11. I ſaid in my * haſte, All men are liars. * flight (ſee note on Pſal. 31. 5.)

10, 11. I had a full truſt and repoſe and affiance in God, and therefore I did and ſpake thus: When my afflictions were at the greateſt (ſee 2 Cor. 4. 13.) when I was in my flight, I was ſufficiently convinced that the arm of fleſh was unable to yield me any relief (Pſal. 108. 12.) men might promiſe, and either prove falſe (as thoſe now did that David had moſt reaſon to depend on, his own ſon, Achitophel, &c.) or impotent: there was, I know, but one ſure hold, to which it is tolerably prudent to reſort, the never-failing omnipotent hand of God, and to that I betook my ſelf intirely, and from that I received my deliverance.

12. What ſhall I render to the Lord for all his benefits toward me?

b. 13. I will take the [b] cup of ſalvation, and call upon the name of the Lord.

14. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the preſence of all his people.

c. 15. [c] Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his ſaints.

12, 13, 14, 15. For this and all other the abundant mercies which I have received from God, I am now by all obligations concerned to make my moſt thankfull acknowledgments, and to doe it in the ſolemneſt manner, in the preſence of the whole aſſembly, by way of publick feſtival, bleſſing and magnifying his holy name, that he hath not permitted my enemies to have their will of me, that he hath preſerved my life, and not delivered it up into their hands, that he hath kept it as a jewel of his own cabinet, as being by me humbly depoſited with and intruſted to him. And thus he always deals with thoſe that rely and depend on him (ſee note b. on Pſal. 86.)

16. O Lord, ‖ truly I am thy ſervant, I am thy ſervant, and the ſon of thy handmaid; thou haſt looſed my bands. ‖ I pray thee אָנָּה

17. I will offer to thee the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord.

18. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the preſence of all his people, 19. In the courts of the Lord's houſe, in the mids of thee O Jeruſalem. Praiſe ye the Lord.

16, 17, 18, 19. O bleſſed Lord, how am I obliged to thee by all the bonds that any ingagement can lay upon me? No ſervant bought with a price or born in a man's houſe can be more cloſely bound to him, than I who have been reſcued from the utmoſt danger by thee. What remains but that I ſhould return to thee the humbleſt offerings of praiſe and prayer, ſpend my whole life as a vow'd oblation to thy ſervice, render thee all poſſible praiſe in the publick aſſembly, in thy ſanctuary, in the ſolemneſt manner that is poſſible? Bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

Annotations on Psal. CXVI.

a. אָהַב

V. 1. I love the Lord] For the right understanding of the two first verses, we must observe one special use of אָהַב (when it stands by it self absolutely without any noun after it, as here it doth) for wishing or desiring. So Amos 4. 5. for so אֲהַבְתֶּם ye have desired. So Jer. 5. 31. my people אֹהֲבִים כֵּן wished, desired it so. Thus ἀγαπᾶν, by which the LXXII. render it in all these places, signifies in Greek to desire; ἀγαπῶ, πόθῶ, saith Phavorinus. Hence ἀγαπητὸν τὸ εὐκτικὸν ῥῆμα, 'tis a verb of wishing. And then אָהַבְתִּי כִּי יִשְׁמַע יְהוָה will be best rendred, I wisht that the Lord would hear; and so I suppose the LXXII. meant by ἠράσθην ὅτι εἰσακούσεταί μου, I desired that (not because) he will or would hear. Accordingly the Syriack renders it ܨܒܝܬ, and the Chaldee רְחֵמִית from רחם, which is of the same importance with אוהב, I wisht that the Lord would hear. So the Jewish Arab, I desire not but that the Lord would hear my voice, and my supplication, and that he would hearken unto me when I call, in or by reason of what I find (or meet with) in my days. And then v. 2. follows currently, כִּי הִטָּה that he would incline his ear to me; the Syriack reads, ܘܡܛܐ, and that he would incline his ear to me, in conjunction with the former verse. Then follows וּבְיָמַי אֶקְרָא and in my days will I call, by days, I suppose, signifying calamities, as Psal. 37. 12. his day is coming, i. e. his distress, יוֹמָא דְתַבְרָה the day of his calamity, saith the Targum. So Obad. 12. the day of thy brother is the time of their being carried captive, v. 11. So the day of Jerusalem, Psal. 137. 7. So Isa. 13. 22. יָמֶיהָ his days shall not be removed far, his time is come, is the time of his contrition, saith the Targum. The Syriack indeed leave out the ' there, as redundant, and reade ܒܝܘܡܐ ܕܩܪܝܬ in the (not my) day wherein I call him. In which also they depart from the Hebrew punctation of בְּיָמַי. Without either of those changes the rendring will be most facile, I wished or desired that the Lord would hear אֶת קוֹלִי my voice; or perhaps the voice (so אֶת קוֹלִי may be rendred, the ' being oft redundant, and so both the Syriack and the LXXII. understands it, ܩܠ and τῆς φωνῆς, the voice) תַּחֲנוּנָי of my supplications, in the genitive case; or by apposition, my voice, my supplications, that he would incline his ear unto me, In my days will I invoke or call upon him. The rendring these verses in the præter sense, he hath heard, he hath inclined, is quite contrary to the following verses, which mention the distresses as approaching, and growing still more and more upon him, v. 3, 4. To what times this refers, and what were those his days must be uncertain, and onely matter of conjecture. 'Tis ordinarily thought to be a Psalm of David, and then it most probably belongs to the time of his flight from Absalom, to which his haste, or speed, or flight, ver. 11. probably determins it; and then ver. 14, 18, 19. must refer to his return to the sanctuary at Jerusalem, after the quelling of that rebellion: and to this, as being the most received sense, I have set the paraphrase. Yet some indications there are which make it probable to have been written after the Captivity (and then the days here must be like the day of thy brother, and of Jerusalem forementioned, denoting the Captivity, and so their flight also v. 9. their being carried captive, and v. 14, 18, 19. the celebrating of their return to the service of God in the Temple) viz. the Chaldee idiome observable v. 7. in the words לְמָנוֹחֵכִי, and עֲלַיְכִי, and v. 12. in תְּגְמוֹלוֹהִי, where the Chaldee or Syriack suffix וֹהִי is visible.

b. כּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת

V. 13. Cup of salvation] כּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת the cup of deliverances, for which the Chaldee reade כָּסָּא דְּפוּרְקָנַיָּא the cup of redemptions. This was either more solemn in the Temple, by the Priest, or more private in the family. The former the drink-offering, or strong wine poured out in the holy place, Numb. 28. 7. Of this R. Sol. Jarchi interprets it, אביא, &c. I will bring the drink-offering of praise which I vowed. And to this of the Temple the Praise may most reasonably be applied, because, as the Jewish Doctors tell us, אין אומרים הלוים, שיר הקרבן אלא על הנסכים the Levites repeat not the song of the oblation, but onely over the drink-offering. Yet there was also the more private in their families, the cup of thanksgiving or commemoration of any deliverance received. This the master of the family was wont to begin, and was followed by all his guests. S. Paul calls it ποτήριον εὐλογίας, the cup of blessing, that which was drank as a symbol of thanksgiving and blessing, and had forms of commemoration and praise joyned with it; and so by the Fathers, Justin Martyr, &c. (used of the Sacrament) is called ὄινος εὐχαριστηθείς, the wine that hath thanksgiving said over it. The use of it was either daily after each meal, or more solemn at a festival. In the daily use of it, they had this form, בָּרוּךְ אֱלֹהִים הָעוֹלָם_ εὐλογητὸς ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν Κύριος ὁ Κόσμου, ὁ κτίσας τὸ γέννημα τῆς ἀμπέλου, Blessed be our God the Lord of the world, who hath created the fruit of the vine. But on festival days there was joyned with it an hymn proper for the day (as upon the Passeover, for the deliverance out of Ægypt) as we see, Matt. 26. 30. where the Paschal commemoration or postcœnium, advanced by Christ into the Sacrament of his bloud, was concluded after the Jewish custom, with an hymn. And so here with the cup of salvation is joyned בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה אֶקְרָא, a calling upon the name of the Lord. And both the more private and the solemn performance of this, with all the magnificent rites of solemnity belonging to it, is called the paying of vows to the Lord, that thanksgiving and acknowledgment which men in distress may be supposed to promise, upon condition of deliverance, or if they promise not, are however bound to perform, as a due return or payment for their deliverance.

c. יָקָר

V. 15. Precious] The notion of יָקָר in this place for rare or precious, must be so taken, as not to signifie that which is spoken of to be desirable to, or in the presence of the Lord, for it is the life, not the death of his servants, that is precious in that sense to God the preserver of their lives. But for their death to be precious is in effect no more, than that it is so considered, rated at so high a price by God, as that he will not easily grant it to any one that most desires it of him. Absalom here hostilely pursued David, and desired his death, he would have been highly gratified with it, taken it for the greatest boon that could have befallen him: but God would not thus gratifie him; nor will he grant grant this deſire eaſily to the enemies of godly men, eſpecially of thoſe that commit themſelves to his keeping, as David here did, and therefore is called God's חָסִיד (ſee note b. on Pſal. 86.) for to ſuch his moſt ſignal preſervations do belong peculiarly. The Jewiſh Arab here reads, Precious with the Lord אסאתה the putting to death his ſaints, or giving up to death.

The Hundred and Seventeenth PSALM.

The hundred and ſeventeenth is a ſolemn acknowledgment of God's mercy and fidelity, and an exhortation to all the world to praiſe him for it.

a. Paraphraſe. 1. O Praiſe the Lord, all ye [a] nations; praiſe him, all ye people.
2. For his mercifull kindneſs is great toward us; and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever. Praiſe ye the Lord.

a, 2. All the heathen nations of the world, and all the people diſperſed over the face of the earth, have a ſingular obligation, as well as the children of Iſrael (Abraham's ſeed according to the fleſh) to praiſe and magnifie the name of God (ſee Rom. 15. 11.) and that eſpecially for his great and tranſcendent mercy toward them in the work of their redemption, and the promulgation of his Goſpel to them, wherein his promiſe of mercy to Abraham and his ſeed for ever, i. e. to his true ſpiritual poſterity, to the ſons and heirs of his Faith, unto the end of the world, ſhall be moſt exactly performed, and therein his fidelity, as well as mercy, manifeſted.

Annotations on Pſal. CXVII.

a. כָּל גּוֹיִם

V. 1. Nations] That כָּל גּוֹיִם all the nations here, and in the next word, כָּל הָאֻמִּים all people, ſignifie in the greateſt latitude all the nations and people of the Gentile world, even πᾶσαν κτίσιν, the whole creation, and κόσμον ἅπαντα, the whole world, Mar. 16. 15. appears both by Matt. 28. 19. where parallel to thoſe phraſes in S. Mark is no more than πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, all the nations here; but eſpecially by Rom. 15. where for a proof of God's purpoſe that the Gentiles ſhould be received into the Church, and joyn with the believing Jews in one conſort of Chriſtian love and faith, and praiſe God together in the ſame congregation, the proof is brought as from ſeveral other texts, ſo from theſe words in this Pſalm. And this not onely by expreſs citing v. 11. And again, Praiſe the Lord all ye nations, and laud him all ye people, but alſo in the front of the teſtimonies by the phraſes ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας θεοῦ, for the truth of God, v. 8. ὑπὲρ ἐλέους, for the mercy or pity (of God) v. 9. both which are here mentioned v. 2. For thus the diſcourſe there lies, Chriſt was a miniſter of the circumciſion, i. e. was by God appointed an inſtrument of the Jews greateſt good, preaching the Goſpel firſt to them, calling them to repentance, &c. and this for the truth of God, i. e. to make good God's fidelity or performance of covenant to them, εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι, to confirm the promiſes made to the fathers, i. e. to Abraham, &c. τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι τὸν θεὸν, and that the Gentiles for his mercy might glorifie God: where though this preaching the Goſpel to the Gentiles was a work of mercy, not ſo much as promiſed to or lookt for by them, and ſo there is nothing but ἔλεος, pity compaſſion toward them; yet is this an effect of that miniſtery of Chriſt, which was ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας θεοῦ, for the truth of God, i. e. a completion of that promiſe made to Abraham, that he ſhould be the father of many nations, which had never its perfect completion till the Gentiles came, and ſat down with Abraham, became ſons of this faith of Abraham, in this kingdom of heaven, the Church of Chriſt. And exactly to this ſenſe the ſecond verſe of this Pſalm is to be underſtood, as the reaſon why all the Gentile world is to praiſe and magnifie the name of God, כִּי גָבַר חַסְדּוֹ &c. becauſe the mercy of God is ſtrong upon us, ἐβεβαιώθη, was confirmed ſay the LXXII. and Latin, and the Syriack ܬܬܩܝܡ, from עָשַׂן grew ſtrong, was in full force upon us, i. e. all that mercy which is promiſed to Abraham for his ſpiritual as well as carnal ſeed, is fully made good עָלֵינוּ upon us (in which reſpect thoſe words Rom. 15. 8. εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι — to confirm the promiſes of the fathers, may reaſonably be thought to refer to theſe words in this Pſalm, the making good of God's mercy to us, being, as in words, ſo in ſenſe, parallel to confirming the promiſes to the Fathers) and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever, i. e. God's fidelity, which conſiſts in an exact performance of his promiſe, endureth to the end of the world; becauſe though the Jews for their unbelief were cut off, yet the Gentiles, the ſeed of Abraham's faith, were grafted in, and ſo God's promiſe of making him a father of many nations fully performed in the vocation of the Gentiles, at the time of the Jews obduration and apoſtaſie. Thus much is manifeſt; yet perhaps it may be farther obſervable, that the גָּבַר ſtrong here attributed to the mercy of God, is the known title of the Meſſias, Iſa. 9. 6. For though the late Jews have endeavoured to interpret that place of Hezekiah, whom they there ſtyle בעל שמונה שמות the Lord of eight names, Talmud, tract. Sanhedr. c. Chelek; yet the Targum and others have reſolved it to belong to the Meſſiah, and ſo אל, and גבור to be two of his names. And ſo indeed the myſtery of our Redemption is to be looked on as an eminent exertion of the power of God, Act. 2. 33. the Incarnation is ſhewing ſtrength with God's arm, Luk. 1. 51. and the Angel that brings the news of it, and (as the Jews tell us) hath his name correſpondent to the imployment he manages, is Gabriel, from this word גבר ſtrong. And ſo above all, the power was remarkable in his Reſurrection, which was wrought by God's right hand, Act. 2. 33. and v. 31. to this add that אֱמֶת, which follows, is taken notice of to be another of the names of the Meſſiah; and the Midraſch Tehillim obſerves, that that word comprehends all the letters in the Alphabet, א the firſt, מ the middlemoſt, and ת the laſt, as Rev. 1. 8. he is called Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, the beginning and the end.

The Hundred and Eighteenth PSALM.

The hundred and eighteenth Pſalm ſeems to be a gratulatory hymn to David upon his full and moſt undiſturbed poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, after the Ark was brought to Jeruſalem, as may be conjectured from ver. 19,20,26,27. and was probably appointed to be ſung at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, v. 15. (ſome parts of it in the perſon of the people, and others, by way of alternation, in the perſon of the King himſelf) the moſt joyfull ſolemnity in the whole year, as about which time the armies returned home from the field, and Hoſanna, v. 25. the acclamation then uſed of courſe, though no extraordinary accident had happened. It is applied both by our Saviour, Matt. 21. 42. and by S. Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 4. to Chriſt the Son of David, as by his aſcenſion he was inſtalled to be the King, and ſo the head corner ſtone of the Church; and it is therefore made up of lauds and praiſes to God for all his mercies.

1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, becauſe his mercy endureth for ever.
2. Let Iſrael now confeſs that his mercy endureth for ever.
3. Let the houſe of Aaron now ſay that his mercy endureth for ever.
4. Let them now that fear the Lord ſay that his mercy endureth for ever.

Paraphraſe. 1, 2, 3, 4. It is now a fit ſeaſon for all, people and Prieſts, eſpecially for all truly pious men, (the moſt concerned and intereſſed perſons) to laud and magnifie the great goodneſs and conſtant mercies of God toward us, let all therefore joyn uniformly in the performance of it.

5. I called unto the Lord in diſtreſs: the Lord anſwered me, || and ſet me in a large place.

9. It is better to truſt in the Lord than to put any confidence in Princes.

8, 9. He that repoſeth his whole truſt in God, hath thereby a far better ſecurity than all the Princes or men in the world can yield him.

10. All nations compaſſed me about; || but in the name of the Lord will I deſtroy them.
11. They compaſſed me about, yea they compaſſed me about; † but in the name of the Lord I will deſtroy them.

10, 11. Let all the men and nations in the world begirt me never ſo cloſe, and leave me no way in humane ſight for mine eſcape and relief, yet I have my confidence in God; and being thus fortified with ammunition and auxiliaries from heaven, I ſhall make no doubt to repell and deſtroy them all. || in the name of the Lord will I truſt, therefore I will— ſee note 2. † ſee v. 10.

Let them ſwarm about me as thick as bees, ſeiſe on me with the ſame violence that the fire doth upon || chaff or thorns which it preſently ſets a flaming and conſumes; yet being thus armed as I am with a full truſt and reliance on the omnipotent power of God, I ſhall eſcape their fury, and cut them off, in ſtead of being deſtroyed by them. || or flamed † In the name—— ſee v. 10.

b. 13. Thou haſt thruſt ſore at me, [b] * that I might fall: but the Lord helped me.

14. The Lord is my ſtrength and my ſong, and is become my ſalvation.

14. On him have I always depended as my onely ſupport, him have I always acknowledged and praiſed, and expreſt my confidence in him; and accordingly now in time of my want he hath reſcued me, and ſet me in perfect ſafety.

15. The voice of rejoycing and ſalvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous: the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly, c. 16. The right hand of the Lord [c] is exalted, the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly.

And thus it is with all that adhere ſtedfaſtly to their obedience to, and truſt in God; their whole lives are made up of receiving and celebrating mercies and deliverances from God, ſuch as his omnipotent hand worketh for them, either without the aſſiſtance of humane aids, or ſo as the ſucceſs is eminently imputable to God and not to man.

17. I ſhall not dye, but live, and declare the works of the Lord.

17. And having received this inſtance of his mercy at this time, being now ſecured from my greateſt dangers, what remains for me, but to ſpend my whole age in proclaiming the power, and mercy, and fidelity of my deliverer, and call all men off from their vain and weak truſts, the arm of fleſh, to this more skilfull and politick dependence on God?

19, 20. The ſanctuary of God, the holy place whither all good men reſort, to petition mercies, and to acknowledge them when they are received, is that to which, as I am moſt bound, I will now make my moſt ſolemn addreſs, and there commemorate God's mercies to me. Or, I will make uſe of all † occaſions as may make way for the praiſing God,

21. Proclaiming to all the gracious returns I have received to my prayers, the abundant and ſeaſonable deliverances which God hath afforded me.

21. I will praiſe thee, for thou haſt heard me, and art become my ſalvation.

d. 22, 23. And now may all the aſſembly of Iſrael rejoyce, and joyn in their congratulations, that being now fallen out in King David's exaltation to the throne (and much more eminently in the reſurrection and aſcenſion of the Meſſiah) which is ordinarily ſaid, (whether by way of Hiſtory or Parable) that the ſtone which, in the laying the foundation of ſome eminent building, was oft tried by the builders, and as oft rejected by them, as unfit for their uſe to any part of the fabrick, and thereupon caſt among and covered over with rubbiſh, was at length, when they wanted a ſtone for the moſt eminent uſe, the coupling and joynting the whole fabrick together, found moſt exactly fitted for the turn, and ſo put in the moſt honourable place, the chief corner of the building. A thing ſo unexpected and ſtrange, that it was with reaſon judged as ſpecial an act of God's providence, as if it had been ſent them down immediately from heaven. As ſtrange was it, and as imputable to God's ſpecial hand, that David, of no eminent family, the ſon of Jeſſe, and withall the youngeſt and moſt deſpiſed of his brethren, ſhould be in Saul's ſtead exalted by God to the regal throne, and being for this driven by Saul from his court, and purſued as a partridge on the mountains, ſhould yet continually eſcape his hand, and be peaceably placed in his throne. And ſo yet farther in the myſtery, that the Meſſiah, the ſon of a Carpenter's wife, with him brought up in the trade, that whilſt he made known the will of God had no dwelling-place, that was rejected by the chief of the Jews, as a drunkard and glutton, and one that acted by the Devil, as a blaſphemous and ſeditious perſon, and as ſuch put to the vileſt death, the death of the Croſs, and was held ſome ſpace under the power of the grave, ſhould be raiſed the third day from death, taken up to heaven, and there ſit in his throne to rule and exerciſe regal power over his Church for ever. This certainly was a work purely divine, and ſo ought to be acknowledged and admired by us.

22. [d] The ſtone which the builders refuſed, is become the head-ſtone of the corner.

23. This † is the Lord's doing, it is marvellous in our eyes.

† was from the Lord מֵאֵת יְהוָה הָיְתָה זֹּאת

24, 25. This day is the celebrating of a mercy wrought eminently, ſignally and peculiarly by the Lord ('twas he that exalted David to the throne, and he that will advance the Meſſias to his regality in heaven) and thereby peculiarly conſecrated by God to his ſervice, and ſo for ever deſerves to be ſolemnized by us, being matter of the greateſt joy imaginable to all ſubjects, either of David's or of Chriſt's Kingdom (and ſo this Pſalm fit for a Paſchal Pſalm in the Church of Chriſt for ever.) Now it ſeaſonable to uſe Hoſannahs (ſee note on Pſal. 20. d. and Matt. 21. a.) acclamations and wiſhes of all manner of proſperity to this King exalted by God, David, the type of the Meſſiah. Let us all joyn in doing it moſt ſolemnly, crying, people and prieſt together.

24. This is the day the Lord hath made: we will rejoyce and be glad in it.

25. Save now, I beſeech thee, O Lord; O Lord, I beſeech thee, ſend now proſperity.

26. The Lord be praiſed for the great mercy of this King, ſent us ſo peculiarly by God, but eſpecially for the Meſſias, whoſe coming hath been ſo long promiſed and expected (ſee Matt. 21. 9.) All we that belong to the houſe of God, the Prieſts that wait on his ſanctuary, do heartily bleſs God for this day, and beſeech his bleſſing on him that is now crowned: and ſo ſhall all the Church of the Meſſias for ever celebrate him, bleſs God for his exaltation, and pray to God to proſper this regal office unto him, bringing in the whole world unto his ſervice.

26. Bleſſed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord: we have bleſſed you ‖ out of the houſe of the Lord.

e. 27. Thus hath God ſhewed forth himſelf as in mercy, ſo in power for us; he hath magnified himſelf, exerciſed this double act of his dominion over the world, 1. in raiſing David from ſo mean an eſtate to the regal throne, 2. in raiſing Chriſt from death to life, and then aſſuming him to an intire dominion over the world, to endure to the day of judgment. And in both theſe he hath revived us with the moſt chearfull beams of his divine goodneſs. O let us in commemoration thereof keep an anniverſary ſacrifical feaſt (ſee v. 24.) to praiſe and magnifie his name for theſe and all his mercies, every man giving thanks and ſaying,

27. God is the Lord † which hath ſhewed us light: bind the [e] ſacrifice with cords, even to the horns of the altar.

† and hath ſhined upon us וַיָּאֶר לָנוּ

28. I will laud and praiſe thy mercies, ſo eminently vouchſafed unto me, and in ſo peculiar a manner inhanſed to the benefit of my ſoul, and proclaim thy goodneſs and ſuperlative divine excellencies to all the world:

28. Thou art my God, and I will praiſe thee: thou art my God, I will exalt thee.

29. Calling unto all to confeſs and extoll thy acts of providence and divine diſpenſation, wherein thou haſt moſt graciouſly exhibited thy ſelf to us, and from time to time continued to oblige us, and ſo wilt continue for ever.

29. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever.

Annotations on Pſal. CXVIII.

a. V. 12. Quenched] דְּעֲכוּ, which from דָּעַךְ to be extinguiſht, or go out, is regularly interpreted quenched, is yet by the ancient interpreters far otherwiſe rendred. The Chaldee reade דְּלִקוּ burning, and the LXXII. ἐξεκαύθησαν were on fire, the Arabick inflamed, and the Latin exarſerunt, they burnt or flamed; which makes it probable, that asmany other words in the Hebrew language are uſedin contrary ſenſes (ſee Mr. Pocock in his Miſcellany notes cap. 2.) ſo דָּעַךְ, which ſignifies in other places paſſively to be conſumed

or extinguiſht, may ſignifie here, as an ἐναντίωσιν, to flame, or in an active ſenſe, as in Arabick 'tis uſed, violently to break in or ſet upon, as in war or contention, when men violently ruſh one on another. So R. Solomon on the place, notes the ſignification of דָּעַךְ to be ſudden leaping, uſed therefore of fire and water, for their ſudden leaping out of their place, and then applied to fire, it will be flaming. And thus it beſt agrees with that which follows, as fire among the thorns, for 'tis certain that flames violently: and thus it beſt connects with the antecedents, the other example of their coming about him like bees, with which 'tis joyned without any note of disjunction. This I ſay, becauſe all the ancient interpreters, except the Syriack, agree in this rendring; and the Syriack reteining the Hebrew word סְבָבוּנִי, muſt be interpreted to the ſame ſenſe that ſhall appear to belong to the Hebrew, and by the addition of the copulative and, doth rather incline to this ſenſe, They came about me like bees, and they— If this be not it, then the meaning of thoſe interpreters muſt be ſuppoſed to be, that as the fire among thorns is ſoon extinguiſht by the conſumption of the thorns, ſo for the time that it burns, it flames extremely; and ſo the ſimilitude of his enemies is ſuppoſed to hold in the burning, as well as the extinction, (and ſo 'tis obſerved of the bees that they dye, or loſe all vigor, when they ſting, animaſque in vulnere ponunt) and then ſtill this divolves to the ſame effect or purpoſe. But for the notation of the word it ſelf, that 'tis here uſed in the ſenſe of flaming, and not being extinguiſhed, one farther argument may be drawn from the whole contexture, ſpecially from the phraſe בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה in the name of the Lord, and the כִּי אַמִּילָם which follows, both thrice repeated in the ſame manner v. 10, 11, 12. thus, All nations compaſſed me about; בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה in the name of the Lord, כִּי אַמִּילָם therefore (ſo ſaith the Chaldee, and ſo כִּי oft ſignifies) I will deſtroy them. That the words are to be rendred by ſupply of an ellipſis from v. 9. I will truſt in the name of the Lord, rather than by reading כִּי in conſtruction before in the name of the Lord, and ſo rendring it for in the former, and but in this verſe, we are taught by the Chaldee, who thus render that verſe, All people compaſſed me about; I truſted in the name of the word of the Lord, אֲרוֹם therefore I ſhall cut them off. And ſo again v. 11. They compaſſed me about, they compaſſed me about; In the name of the word of the Lord רַחֲצִית I truſted, therefore I ſhall cut them off. And then in all reaſon ſo it muſt be here, v. 12. In the name of the Lord I truſted, therefore I ſhall deſtroy them. And if ſo it be, then the former part of the verſe, if it go on in the ſame ſcheme with the former two verſes, muſt moſt probably ſet down the enemies beſieging, and aſſaults onely, leaving their deſtruction to the laſt words of the verſe, as in the two former it was; and then דָּעֲכוּ muſt ſignifie they were inflamed, or burnt, as the fire among the thorns, or elſe it will not belong to that ſenſe. The other rendring is preſt with diverſe, but eſpecially with this inconvenience, that after he hath ſaid they are quenched or extinct, he is ſuppoſed to add, that he will deſtroy them, which cannot in propriety belong to thoſe that are extinct, i. e. deſtroyed already. And whereas our Engliſh endeavours to help that, by rendring כִּי for in this verſe, whereas it was rendred but v. 10. and 11. firſt there is no appearance of reaſon for that change, but to anſwer this objection, to facilitate this rendring, (of which the principal doubt is;) and ſecondly, it doth not perform what it pretends to, for it cannot be any reaſon (ſo for notes) of their being extinct already, that he will, or hath confidence that he ſhall deſtroy them. If therefore the notion of quenching be ſtill reteined, it muſt be by taking the præter tenſe in ſignification of the future, thus, they compaſſed me like bees, they ſhall be extinct — So the Jewiſh Arab takes it, If or though they compaſs, &c. certainly they ſhall be extinguiſhed— making כִּי a particle of aſſeveration, as Abu Walid notes.

כִּי אַמִּילָם

V. 13. That I might fall] The full importance of לִנְפֹּל is beſt expreſt gerundially, ad cadendum, to falling, not onely to expreſs their deſire who thus preſt and thruſt at him, that he might fall, for that is ſuppoſed in the violence of their impulſion, expreſt by repetition of the verb דְּחִיתַנִי thou haſt by thruſting thruſt me, but to ſignifie the event or ſucceſs of it, that I was falling, or ready to fall, τῦ πεσεῖν ſay the LXXII. in the infinitive mood gerundially, and ſo the Chaldee and the Syriack; and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, It is a long while that thou haſt driven or thruſt me to falling. And this expreſſes the greatneſs and ſeaſonableneſs of the deliverance, that when he was falling, God helped him. b. לִנְפֹּל

V. 16. Is exalted] For the paſſive notion of רוֹמְמָה, which the Chaldee follows, reading מְרַמְמָא exalted, the LXXII. reade ὕψωσέ με, hath exalted me, and ſo the Syriack and Latin and Arabick; either from the active notion of רָמַם exaltavit, elevavit, wherein we have it v. 28. אֲרוֹמְמֶךָּ I will exalt thee, from which רוֹמְמָה is the participle, and ſo literally ſignifies exalting; or elſe expreſſing the ſenſe by a ſhort paraphraſe, God's right hand being therefore ſaid to be exalted, as alſo to doe valiantly, becauſe it had exalted him, and given him victory over his enemy. c. רוֹמְמָה

V. 22. The ſtone] The author of Hiſtoria Scholaſtica mentions it as a Tradition, that at the building of the ſecond Temple, there was a particular ſtone of which that was literally true which is here parabolically rehearſed, viz. that it had the hap to be often taken up by the builders, and as oft rejected, and at laſt was found to be perfectly fit for the moſt honourable place, that of the chief corner-ſtone, which coupled the ſides of the walls together, the extraordinarineſs whereof occaſioned the ſpeech here following, This is of the Lord, and it is marvellous in our eyes. If there were indeed any ſuch tradition of the Jews, as he reporteth, and truth in the tradition, it were neceſſary to reſolve that this Pſalm was made at the ἐγκαινια or dedication and conſecration of the ſecond Temple, or on ſome like occaſion after that. But although theſe two verſes thus hiſtorically interpreted might incline to that date of it, (and then the gates of righteouſneſs v. 19. would well refer to the gate of the ſecond Atrium, the publick ſolemn way into the Temple, by which the Jews and Proſelytes of righteouſneſs entred, the Proſelytes of the gates entring onely the firſt court) yet the reſt of the Pſalm is not ſo agreeable thereto, being much more applicable to David in reſpect of the difficulties which he had overcome in his way to the Kingdom. And accordingly the Chaldee interpret all the verſes to the end expreſly of him, טָלְיָא, &c. The builders deſpiſed the youth which was among the ſons of Jeſſai, and he deſerved to be conſtituted לְמַלְכָּא וְשׁוֹלְטָן the King and Ruler. This hath been from the Lord, ſaid the builders; this is wonderfull in our eyes, ſaid the ſons of Jeſſai. The Lord made this day, ſaid the builders; let us rejoyce and be glad in it, ſaid the ſons of Jeſſai. We pray thee, O Lord, beſtow ſalvation now, ſaid the builders; d. אֶבֶן

we pray thee, O Lord, proſper us now, ſaid the ſons of Jeſſai. Bleſſed is he which cometh in the name of the word of the Lord, ſaid the builders; let them bleſs you from the houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, ſaid David. The Lord our God hath ſhined on us, ſaid the tribes of the houſe of Judah; Bind the young lamb (טָלֶיָא, the Latin abſurdly renders it puerum) for a ſacrifice of ſolemnity with chains till you have ſacrificed him, and poured out his blood upon the horns of the altar, ſaid Samuel the Prophet. Thou art my God, I will confeſs before thee; thou art my God, I will praiſe thee, ſaid David. Samuel anſwered and ſaid, Praiſe ye, all ye congregation of Iſrael, confeſs before the Lord that he his good, that his mercy endureth for ever. This makes it not unreaſonable to reſolve, that the whole Pſalm belongs to David, and that it was compoſed either by him, or by ſome other in commemoration of his exaltation to, and full poſſeſſion of the Kingdom; which being from a very low condition, and other the like circumſtances of improbability, it was very fitly reſembled by this of the ſtone which the builders refuſed, &c. whether that were a ſtory of any real paſſage, or whether onely an emblem and parabolical expreſſion of what was here done; and both that emblem and this real exaltation of David a moſt lively type of the humiliation and exaltation of the Meſſiah, and his aſcenſion, and taking poſſeſſion of heaven, and ſo is made uſe of Matt. 21. 42. Mar. 12. 10. Luk. 21. 17. Act. 4. 11. Eph. 2. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 4. and by way of Prophecy, Iſa. 28. 16. And to him it belongs more eminently and more compleatly, than to David's perſon it could, the tribes of Iſrael and Judah being not divided before, and ſo not united by David; whereas Chriſt of Jew and Gentile made one Church, and ſo was moſt literally the chief corner-ſtone, that coupled the walls and knit the building together, which cannot ſo literally be affirmed of David. Of this we have the confeſſion of the Jews themſelves. Sol. Jarchi on Mich. v. 2. ſaith, Out of Bethlehem ſhall come מָשִׁיחַ בֶּן דָּוִד Meſſiah the ſon of David, בֶּן חוּא אוֹמֵר ſo he (the Pſalmiſt) ſaith, the ſtone which the builders refuſed, &c. (And ſo v. 15. the voice of joy, &c. Kimchi and Jarchi refer to the days of the Meſſiah, as from the ſtones of Iſrael, Gen. 29. 24. they fetch their dream of their ſuffering Meſſias Ben Joſeph, or Ben Ephraim.)

e. חַג

V. 27. Sacrifice] The Hebrew word here is חַג, which is ordinarily uſed for a feſtival, but ſometimes by metonymie ſignifies the ſacrifice uſed at ſuch times. So Exod. 23. 18. the fat חֲגִי, not of my feaſt, but נִכְסַת חֲגִא of my feſtival ſacrifice, ſaith the Chaldee. So Iſa. 29. 1. חַגִּים יִנָּקֵפוּ behead or kill the ſacrifices. So Amos v. 21. where we reade, I hate, I deſpiſe חַגֵּיכֶם, it is moſt probably to be rendred your ſacrifices: for as what follows, I will not ſmell in your ſolemn aſſemblies, muſt be underſtood of the ſmoak of their ſacrifice, or their incenſe, קוּרְבָּן oblation ſaith the Chaldee, and the LXXII. θυσίας ſacrifices, and not of the days or aſſemblies themſelves; ſo the inſuing verſe is expreſs, Though you offer me burnt-offerings and meat-offerings, I will not accept them. So Mal. 2. 3. the dung חַגֵּיכֶם (in all probability) of their ſacrifices. And thus have the Chaldee rendred it in this place, טָלְיָא לִנְכַסַת חֲגָא the young lamb for a feſtival ſacrifice. Of this 'tis here ſaid, אַסְרוּ בַּעֲבֹתִים bind it with cords, as the ſacrifice is wont to be when 'tis killed, עַד קַרְנוֹת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ even to the horns of the altar; i. e. after 'tis bound, kill it, and doe all other things preparatory to the offering it up, till at laſt you lay it upon the altar, and ſprinkle the blood on the horns of it. So Kimchi and Jarchi literally expound this of bringing the ſacrifice bound, till he came to the altar, עַד שֶׁהִיא קְרוֹב אֶל קַרְנוֹת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ. But the Jewiſh Arab will have it ſignifie the continuance or being inſtant in ſacrificing or bringing ſacrifices. The horns of the altar were on every corner of it, Exod. 27. 1. and ſo by ſprinkling the blood on the horns of the altar, was perhaps meant the ſprinkling it round about (ſo we know the appointment was, Exod. 29. 15, 16. Thou ſhalt take the ram--- and thou ſhalt take his blood and ſprinkle it round about upon the altar; ſo Lev. 1. 5. they ſhall ſprinkle the blood round about upon the altar.) Or elſe ſprinkling it on the horns was the ſhorter way (ſee Lev. 4. 7, 18. and c. 8. 15. and c. 9. 9. and 16. 18.) and was by interpretation the ſprinkling it round about, every horn repreſenting the ſide next that corner. But for binding the ſacrifice to the horns of the altar, whilſt it was killed, we find no ſuch cuſtom in the Law; and therefore ſure the words are to be interpreted by ſuppoſing an ellipſis in them, which is to be ſupplied as the Chaldee hath done, bind it with bands till ye have ſacrificed it, and poured the blood thereof upon the horns of the altar. But from the ambiguity of חַג uſed frequently for a feaſt, the LXXII. have far departed from this ſenſe, and reade συσσωσὸν ἑορτὴν ἐν ταῖς πυκάζουσι, appoint the feaſt in condenſis, (the vulgar render it) in the thick boughs; and ſo Heſychius, πυκασμὸς ἀκανθῶν γωνιαῖος. But alſo πυκάζειν ſignifies to hide or cover; πυκάζων, καλύπτων, κρύπτων, σκέπων, περιβάλλων, σκιάζων, ſaith he. And ſo the LXXII. here may have uſed it for the booths or tabernacles, of which the Jews had a חַג or feaſt yearly. However though I ſuppoſe them to have receded from the true meaning of the words already ſhewed, yet they ſeem to have had a meaning very commodious to the Hoſanna foregoing, v. 25. For as there was uſe of thoſe acclamations at the feaſt of tabernacles (in the notion of πυκάζων) ſo to them were adjoyned branches of trees, &c. as we ſee in the Goſpel, where they cut down branches from the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way, and cried Hoſannah. And ſo Neh. 8. 15. Go forth and fetch Olive branches, and Pine branches, and Palm branches, and branches of thick trees; the Hebrew reads עֲנַף עֲבֹת, the very word which is here uſed for a band or cord, and is there rendred by the LXXII. ξύλα δασέα thick wood (as here πυκάζων) perhaps it were better rendred wood of bands, i. e. bundles of wood, for ſo Elias Levita tells us in his Thisbi, that to bind up Hoſannahs was to bind up bundles of willow boughs, which were moſt uſed in the feaſt of tabernacles. And ſo by συσσωσὸν ἑορτὴν ἐν πυκάζουσι, they probably meant the feaſt of tabernacles, celebrated with willow boughs, with which they ſtrawed and adorned the court of the Temple, ἕως τῶν κεράτων τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, even to the horns of the altar. The Syriack here reade, Bind with chains ܒܚܒܠܐ their Latin renders it ſolennitates, ſolemnities; but this ſure (proportionable to the notion of חַג) for the ſacrifices uſed at thoſe ſolemnities, as when eating the feaſt (חַמּוֹעֵד 2 Chron. 30. 22. a word of the ſame origination) muſt needs ſignifie the ſacrifices of the feaſt.

The Hundred and Nineteenth PSALM.

The hundred and nineteenth is wholly spent in consideration of the divine Law, the excellency, the necessity, the advantages of it, descanting on the several appellations of it, with frequent reflexions on our selves, by way of exhortation to a pious life, and constant adherence to God in times of distress. It is in the Hebrew Alphabetical, the eight first verses beginning with the first letter, and therefore intitled Aleph, the next eight with the second, and so called Beth, and so throughout every of the two and twenty Hebrew letters, and styled by the Masora the great Alphabet.

ALEPH.

4, 5. I know it is the will and command of God that I ſhould with all diligence and watchfulneſs and earneſt endeavour obſerve and give heed unto his Law. Bleſſed Lord, give me that grace to guide and ſet right the whole courſe of my life, that I may never fail in that vigilance.

6. Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments.

6. Then ſhall I have confidence both toward God and man, and mine own ſoul, when I can pronounce of my ſelf that my obedience is impartial, and uniform, and univerſal, no ſecret ſin reſerved for my favour, no leaſt commandment knowingly or willingly neglected by me.

7. I will praiſe thee with uprightneſs of heart, when I ſhall have learnt thy righteous judgments.

7. As long as I live in any ſin indulgently, I cannot think my ſelf qualified for any pious performance either of prayer or praiſe: But when I have diligently ſtudied and practiſed thoſe precepts of thine, in obedience to which all righteouſneſs conſiſts, then may I with full peace of mind, with a clear confidence preſent my ſacrifice before thee, and not be guilty of any hypocriſie in doing it.

If I ſin wilfully, I cannot then promiſe my ſelf the grace to return again; but if I make uſe of the grace already afforded me, and by ſtrength thereof ſtand firm from any ſuch wilfull fall, as I pray, ſo I hope and truſt and am confident that God will never firſt forſake me in any ſuch degree as ſhall be deſtructive or hurtfull to me.

The inlightening and removing all degrees of darkneſs remaining on my heart, quickening and enlivening my faculties, giving me a vital taſte and reliſh of the delights of that obedience which is performed to thy precepts: which when I have, I ſhall then truly diſcern thoſe admirable Divine excellencies of thy Law, thoſe pleaſures reſulting from the practice of it, which are not to be found any where elſe, and conſequently learn to love, and adore the Author of it, be raviſh't and tranſported with the thought of thee, that haſt dealt thus wonderfully with thy ſervants, given them a rule of life, and promiſed them eternal felicities as their reward for their being content to be ruled by it; when if we might have been our own chooſers, we could not have pitcht on any thing ſo advantageous and pleaſurable to our ſelves at the preſent, as this obedience to thy laws will be certainly found to be by any that will experiment it.

For mine own part, I may truly ſay, though I am poſſeſt of a great ſovereignty, am by thy providence placed in a moſt proſperous condition upon earth, yet in all this ſecular greatneſs and plenty I enjoy no more than a meer ſtranger or lodger, that hath ſupply for his preſent neceſſities, but nothing more: The one true comfort of which I am capable is that of obedience to thy precepts: O let me never be deprived of this advantage and comfort, without which a Kingdom is not able to make me tolerably happy.

31. I have ſtuck unto thy teſtimonies; O Lord, put me not to ſhame.

31. And having done ſo, if I adhere and conſtantly cleave unto them, perſevere as I have reſolved, I am ſure I ſhall never be diſappointed of my expectations, I ſhall never miſs of the comforts of this life, or the joys of a better.

O grant me that grace that I may never permit theſe to depart out of my mind, but makeuſe of them conſtantly to this end to which thou haſt deſigned them, perſevere firmly in thy obedience.

39. O what a ſhame and reproach would it be to me, who acknowledge thy yoke to be ſo eaſie and pleaſurable, the obedience to thy commands ſo ſweet and deſirable, ever to fall off from it into any unprofitable work of darkneſs? Yea I will proclaim and boaſt of the excellency of thy Law, and the advantages of ordering our lives by it, and recommend it with confidence to the greateſt Princes in the world, as that which will inhaunſe their crowns, and make them much more glorious and comfortable to them, if they will reſolve to guide their lives after this model.

46. I will ſpeak of thy teſtimonies alſo before Kings, and will not be aſhamed.

47. And for my ſelf, as in my love and value of thy precepts I prefer them before all other jewels in the world, ſo will I entertain and recreate and gratifie my ſelf by this exerciſe, the meditation and practice of theſe, rather than by any other way of divertiſement which the world doth moſt eſteem of.

49, 50. O Lord, thou haſt made me many moſt gracious promiſes, and thereby given me grounds of the moſt unmoved hope and comfort: And theſe are able to ſupport and inliven me in the midſt of the greateſt preſſures.

49. Remember the word unto thy ſervant, on which thou haſt cauſed me to hope.

50. This is my comfort in my affliction; for thy word hath quickned me.

51, 52. Atheiſtical wicked men, when they ſee me in diſtreſs, make a mock at my relyance and truſt in God, and think it ridiculous to talk of relief from heaven, when earthly ſtrength faileth. But all their ſcoffs and bittereſt ſarcaſms ſhall not diſcourage me, or tempt me to forſake my hold. I have many notable illuſtrious examples of thy power and goodneſs, of the ſeaſonable interpoſitions of thy reliefs to thy ſervants in their greateſt diſtreſſes; and theſe being laid to heart have infinitely more force to confirm my faith, than all their Atheiſtical ſcoffs to ſhake it.

96. There ſhall I have full ſpace to entertain my ſelf, a plentifull ſtore of ingredients to make applications to every malady, to quiet every doubt that can riſe in my ſoul: which way ſoever elſe I betake my ſelf, I ſhall ſuddenly come to a ſtand or nonplus, all other ways of ſupporting my ſelf will ſoon fail; but the width and amplitude of thy commandments is infinite, the contemplations, and aſſiſtances, and ſecurities that they yield, the promiſes that are annext to them, are ſure to continue my never-failing comforts. MEM.

97. O how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day.

97. It is an infinite, inexpreſſible delight and joy, that I take in the conſideration of the depths and various excellencies of the Law of God. There is no object on which I can ſo pleaſantly and contentedly ſpend all my thoughts and my time.

† that is עִמָּדִי

98. Thou through thy commandments haſt made me wiſer than mine enemies; for † they are ever with me.

98. And by this means, by fixing my meditation, deſigning my ſtudy thus profitably, the wiſedom which I have acquired, the skill of bearing, waiting, attending God's leiſure, of thinking that every affliction comes from God, and tends to my greateſt good, and that when releaſe is more for my turn, I ſhall be ſure to have it, the aſſurance that my adherence and conſtancy of obedience to God is the ſureſt way to my preſent eaſe and future releaſe, the ſeveral branches of that divine wiſedom, (ſee Paraph. on Jam. 1. 5.) is a far more profitable and ſecure fortification to me than all their worldly wiſedom and ſecular policy is to my enemies, which think thereby to over-reach and ruine me.

99. I have more underſtanding than all my teachers; for thy teſtimonies are my meditation.

100. I underſtand more than the ancients, becauſe I * keep thy precepts.

* obſerve (ſee note a.)

99, 100. This kind of ſpiritual wiſedom or prudence, for the managing all the actions of my life moſt advantageouſly, in whatſoever ſtate, which the Law of God inſtructs me in, is infinitely to be preferred before all other knowledge of the Scribes and Elders, the deepeſt ſages in the world.

101. I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I may keep thy word.

102. I have not departed from thy judgments; for thou haſt taught me.

101, 102. In this I am inſtructed by God himſelf, who is ſure the moſt excellent teacher: and the excellency of this knowledge is, that it is not a bare ſpeculative, but an effective practical knowledge, that teaches me to adhere to God's precepts impartially, uniformly, univerſally, and to keep a ſtrict cloſe hand over my affections, that they lead me not into any ſinfull courſe.

103. How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte? yea ſweeter than honey to my mouth.

103. And what pleaſure or delight is there in the world, what moſt tranſporting delicacy, that moſt affects mens ſenſes at the preſent (and if it be liberally taken upon that invitation, brings ſatiety and bitterneſs and pangs after it in the ſtomach, for ſo honey doth, Prov. 25. 16, 27.) is any way comparable to this, which as in the conſequents it is moſt ſalubrious and profitable, ſo at the very inſtant of the making uſe of it is moſt extremely delectable to any man that hath a palate qualified for ſuch delicates.

104. And the advantages it brings are not inferiour to the pleaſure: He that is not thus ſtudied and inſtructed, is apt to be ſeduced and inſnared in many deceitfull and miſchievous luſts; but this inſtruction will keep men from that danger, give them a timely knowledge, and beget in them an hatred and abhorrence of all ſuch fallacious flattering pleaſures, which mean us no kindneſs, but treachery and the utmoſt malice.

104. Through thy precepts I get underſtanding: therefore I hate every falſe way.

NUN.

105. Thy law is the onely guide and directour of all my actions.

105. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my paths.

106. And being inſtructed in that, both what my duty is, and what the means that may be ſafely relyed on for the performance of it, thy grace to be obteined by conſtant prayer and vigilance, diligence and indeavour to receive and make uſe of that grace, and withall being by my admiſſion into the number of thy people entred into a ſolemn ſacramental covenant to perform obedience to thoſe commands wherein God hath commanded us to walk, (and an obedience to which he hath in that covenant promiſed to juſtifie and accept us, and without which either conſtantly performed, or returned unto by a ſincere repentance, and perſevering reformation, he will neither juſtifie nor accept us) I am now moſt indiſpenſably ingaged, and moſt nearly concerned to perform this obedience uprightly.

106. I have ſworn and I will perform it, that I will keep || thy righteous judgments.

107. I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O Lord, according to thy word.

108. Lord, I have nothing to preſent to thee but my prayers and praiſes; thoſe are my richeſt oblations, which I moſt chearfully addreſs to thee, acknowledgments of thy former, and petitions for thy continued deliverances, Lord, be thou graciouſly pleaſed to accept theſe, and to add this conſtant mercy to all other, thy grace to inſtruct, and excite, and aſſiſt me in a ſincere obedience to thy commandments.

108. Accept I beſeech thee, the freewill offerings of my mouth, O Lord, and teach me thy judgments.

y. 109, 110. My malicious enemies have very treacherous deſigns againſt my life, I am in continual danger of being ſeiſed on and deſtroyed by them; yet ſhall not this fear amate, or divert me from a moſt vigilant attendance on thee, and conſtant performance of obedience to thee. My dangers, be they never ſo great, ſhall not diſcourage or ſlacken my diligence in attending to and relying on thee, from whom I am ſure (or from none) my deliverance muſt come.

109. My ſoul is continually in my ʏ hand; yet do I not forget thy Law.

110. The wicked have laid a ſnare for me; yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111,112. Whatever afflictions or diſtreſſes thou ſendeſt, or permitteſt to fall on me, I have all reaſon to take them in good part, having alſo ſo rich a portion as I have, that of thy law and covenant and promiſed mercies: Theſe are an inheritance that will never fail me, the moſt joyous and bliſsfull that can be; to which therefore by all obligations of juſtice and gratitude I am bound to perform my conſtant obedience. And this I ſhall carefully doe, and all little enough by way of return to ſo ſuperlative a mercy.

111. Thy teſtimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoycing of my heart.

115. I have no need of the aids that wicked men can ſuggeſt unto me, and as little am I concerned in their ſcoffs, whereby they indeavour to weaken my confidence: I will admit of no other policies but thoſe of ſtudying and practiſing his commandments, who I am ſure will continue ſtedfaſt to me, if I do not forſake him.

118. Wicked men have no other wiſedom or policy but that of their falſhood and deceitfulneſs; their lying and treacherous impoſing on the ſimplicity and uprightneſs of honeſt men, is the onely advantage they have above others: and this being ſo contrary to all laws of God and man, to juſtice and charity and common ingenuity, but eſpecially an affront to God, a ſetting ones ſelf in oppoſition to his rules and methods, God is ingaged ſooner or later to pluck off this viſard, to bring diſappointments and ruine on thoſe that make uſe of ſuch impieties.

119. The wicked men of the world, compared to the righteous, are but as ſo much droſs to good metal: And the judgments of God, which are as ſearching and diſcerning as fire, will certainly make this ſeparation, firſt purge out the droſs, divide it from the purer metal, and then preſerve one, and deſtroy the other. And this conſideration, if there were no other, is certainly ſufficient to ingage every wiſe man to the approbation and liking of the Law of God, as that in compliance with which our temporal as well as eternal ſafety doth conſiſt.

155, 156. In this eſtate I am ſure to have no relief from wicked men, but on the contrary, all accumulations and increaſe of miſery; they delight in that more than in any works of juſtice or mercy. But the leſs I have to expect from men, the more I am confident to receive from God, whoſe mercies are beyond the proportion of their cruelties. O be thou now pleaſed to beſtow this thy promiſed ſeaſonable reliefe upon me.

For of this I am ſure, that thy promiſes are moſt conſtantly performed: They are faithfull, and of eternal truth, and never fail any that are qualified to receive them.

SCHIN.

161. Princes have perſecuted me without a cauſe: but my heart ſtandeth in awe of thy word.

161. 'Tis not the power or malice of the world, though exerciſed never ſo virulently and cauſeleſsly againſt me, which ſhall any way provoke me to forſake my obedience to thee.

162. I rejoyce at thy word as one that findeth great ſpoil.

162. But on the contrary, my adherence to thee, and the comforts which thy Law and the promiſes annext to it afford me, are matter of as great rejoycing and triumph and exultation to me, as the richeſt and moſt gainfull victory could be to any worldly man.

163. I hate and abhor lying; but thy Law do I love.

163. The falſe, deceitfull practices of ungodly men, whereby they advance their intereſts, are moſt degenerous and unworthy of any ingenuous man; I cannot but deteſt and have an averſion to them: whereas the ways which are preſcribed by God of adherence to him, in the practice of all works of juſtice and charity, are moſt amiable and eligible.

164. Seven times a day do I praiſe thee; becauſe of thy righteous judgments.

164. I can never admire and magnifie ſufficiently the divine excellency of God's moſt righteous Law. If I had nothing but that to make matter of my lauds, I would think my ſelf obliged every day ſeven ſet times to make my ſolemn addreſſes to God, to praiſe his bleſſed name (and offer up thy prayers to him.)

165. Great peace have they which love thy Law, ii and * nothing ſhall offend them.

* there is no ſcandal to them.

165. There is no ſuch proſperity and felicity in this world, as that of thoſe who take delight in the commands of God, and the practice of all duty: They ſhall be in no danger of any of thoſe ſnares and temptations which the world is full of, and which frequently bring other men to ſin and ruine. The pleaſure they take in duty will with them infinitely out-weigh all the pitifull tranſient delights or advantages that can offer themſelves as the bait to any unlawfull commiſſion. ii.

166. Lord, I have hoped for thy ſalvation, and done thy commandments.
167. My ſoul hath kept thy teſtimonies, and loved them exceedingly.
168. I have kept thy precepts and thy teſtimonies; for all my ways are kk before thee.

166, 167, 168. Accordingly thus have I endeavoured to ſecure my ſelf from all ſuch dangers; whatſoever my preſſures have been, I have repoſed my truſt in thee, relyed on thee for deliverances, kept cloſe to thy commandments, and ſo qualified my ſelf to receive them, and withall laboured to approve the ſincerity of my obedience to thee, not onely by doing what thou commandeſt, but even by loving and liking that better than any thing elſe, by applying all my endeavours to walk piouſly and acceptably in thy ſight, laying all my actions open and naked before thee (for thee to judge whether there be any the leaſt malignity in them.) And by ſo doing, by keeping my ſelf for ever as in thy all-ſeeing preſence, I have performed an uniform faithfull obedience to thee. kk.

169. Let my cry come near before thee, O Lord: give me underſtanding according to thy word.
170. Let my ſupplications come before thee: deliver me according to thy word.

169, 170. 175. Let my ſoul live, and it ſhall praiſe thee: and let thy judgments help me.

175. Lord, grant me this thy mercy of ſeaſonable preſervation at this time, ſuccour me according to thy promiſed and wonted mercies; ſo ſhall my life, twice received from thee, in my birth and in this my preſervation, be, as in all juſtice it ought, for ever dedicated to thy ſervice.

176. I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep; ſeek thy ſervant, for I do not forget thy commandments.

176. I have been driven from place to place, in perpetual hazards and diſtreſſes, flying and deſolate, as a partridge on the mountains; thou haſt juſtly permitted me to be perſecuted by my enemies, to wander up and down, as a ſilly ſheep driven by the wolf, and ſcattered from the fold: Lord, I repent me of all my former ſins, and ſhall unfeignedly ſet my ſelf to the performance of new obedience all my days: Be thou pleaſed to conſider my afflictions, and in thy good time to relieve and reſtore me.

V. 1. Way] 'Tis uſually obſerved that the compoſure of this Pſalm doth affect the frequent reflections on the Law of God in the ſeveral parts and appellations of it, and thoſe are obſervable to be no leſs than eleven, תורה, מצות, עדות, פקודים, חוק, אורח, משפטים, אמרות, דבר, דרך, נפלאות, Kimchi adventures to give the critical ſeveral importance of each of theſe words. תורה, ſaith he, is the תכונת המצות ſetting down of duties, how they are to be done, as 'tis ſaid Lev. 6. 17. this is the Law of the ſin-offering, &c. (R. Gaon ſaith 'tis the ſpeculative part of the Law;) דרך is תיקון, the rule upon which the precepts are grounded, as, Be holy becauſe God is holy, mercifull as he is mercifull, (referring probably to Moſes's requeſt to ſee God's way;) חוקים ſignifies thoſe precepts whoſe reaſon is not known, as the purification of the (legally) unclean, not wearing linſey-wolſey, and משפטים, the judgments that paſs betwixt a man and his neighbour; עדות the precepts that are for a teſtimony, or federal commemoration, as Sabbath Feaſts, Phylacteries, &c. פקודים thoſe precepts which reaſon teacheth, that are as it were (according to the notion of פקד) depoſited in our nature. And ſo on in the reſt. But theſe without queſtion are indiſtinctly and promiſcuouſly uſed through this Pſalm. Proportionably the practice of theſe commandments is expreſt in as great variety, by walking, ſeeking, keeping, &c. Of the laſt of theſe it is not amiſs to add a little in this firſt place, once for all. The Hebrew נצרי v. 2. (as alſo v. 34, 69, 115, 129.) is by the LXXII. rendred ἐξερευνῶντες, by the Latin ſcrutantur, ſearching or ſeeking out. So again Pſal. 25. 10. they render it ἐκζητοῦσι ſeek out, as here v. 22. ἐξεζήτηκα I have ſought, and v. 33. ἐκζητήσω I will ſeek, and v. 100. And this the Hebrew well bears from נָצַר cuſtodivit, curavit, watching or taking care of, looking diligently after, as thoſe that ſearch and ſeek do. And ſo the Arab notion of the ſame word (which changing צ into ט they make נטר) well accords, being to behold, contemplate, conſider, obſerve; and ſo likewiſe the Chaldee and Syriack uſe נְטַר exactly to the ſame ſenſe: and ſo it here beſt accords with that which follows, ſeeking him with the whole heart. And this is better and with more clearneſs rendred obſerve (for that fitly ſignifies watching, or looking to) than keep, which ordinarily denotes no more than performing them. This is the ἐκζητεῖν αὐτὸν diligently ſeeking of God, Heb. 11. 6. and contains more than a reſolution and purpoſe to obey God, a ſtudying his precepts, ſeeking out means to facilitate the performance of them, and an exact care and diligence in the uſe of them. The word is here in the participle, and ſo agrees with the foregoing תְּמִימֵי the perfect (or undefiled, ἄμωμοι, ſay the LXXII.) and הַהֹלְכִים the walkers, or they that walk. And although what follows be in the future and preter tenſe, יִדְרְשׁוּהוּ and פָּעֲלוּ and הָלָכוּ, ſhall ſeek, done, walked; yet are they all to be rendred in Syntaxis with the former, they that ſeek, that doe, that walk, all making up the ſubject to which the bleſſedneſs belongs. And ſo doth the Jewiſh Arab take them, and therefore v. 3. repeats again, and bleſſed he that doth not iniquity alſo, and hath gone in his ways or paths.

V. 8. Utterly] The Hebrew עַד מְאֹד here and v. 43. is literally, unto very much. So the LXXII. render it ἕως σφόδρα, i. e. to any high degree, the Chaldee עַד לְחֵדָא unto all at once, but the Syriack ܠܥܠܡ for ever, both referring it to the time, whereas the Hebrew ſeems rather to the degree, from the noun that ſignifies multitude, plenty, abundance. And then God's not forſaking in any eminent degree, as it contains his not forſaking altogether or for ever, ſo it is ſomewhat more than that, and a greater privilege of a pious man, this, not to be forſaken in any eminent degree, than not to be forſaken eternally, whatſoever the degree be at preſent. v. 4. 'tis ſaid that God hath commanded his precept to be kept מְאֹד very much, not to be heard, and talked of, but obeyed; and here v. 8. having ſaid, he hath decreed thus to keep them, he begs, keep me in proportion, at leaſt forſake me not עַד מְאֹד to any great degree.

b. עַד מְאֹד

V. 9. By taking heed] Two difficulties there are in this place: firſt, how לִשְׁמֹר muſt be rendred; then how כִּדְבָרֶךָ. For the firſt, it is in all reaſon, from the force of the preposition ל, and by analogy with the uſe of it v. 4, and 5. to be rendred, to obſerve, or guard, or keep, i. e. as the end of his cleanſing his ways precedent, that he may doe it. So the Chaldee and Syriack underſtood it; the former retaining the Hebrew preposition ל, לְמִטַּר to obſerve; the latter expreſſing it by יִנְטַר that he may obſerve. And ſo the Jewiſh Arab, Behold I ſeek by what a man may cleanſe his ways that he may keep them in or by thy precepts, בְּאַמְרֶךָ. And though the LXXII. have ἐν τοῦ φυλάξασθαι, from whence the Latin and others have their in cuſtodiendo, in or by keeping; yet 'tis frequently obſervable, that their

c. לִשְׁמֹר

their ב is used for ה, and so is to be rendred not in, or by, but to. And so 'tis certain that every young man will have special need of some purgatives, the preventing grace of God, to purge and cleanse his ways, to work out his natural corruptions, and actual contracted pollutions (which will otherwise extremely incumber him in the course) that he may be, in any competent measure, qualified for the observing of God's commandments. For the second, 'tis very ordinary for prepositions to be redundant, and then בִּדְבָרֶךָ will be best rendred as if it were דְּבָרְךָ thy word: so the LXXII. reade τοῖς λόγοις σου thy words, and the Syriack בפתגמיך thy commandments; and the Latin accords with them. And so the whole verse will be best rendred as one intire question, Wherewithall shall a young man cleanse his ways, that he may observe thy word? To which question seeing there follows no distinct answer in the next words, it is to be understood as a poetick form of prayer poured out to God for that grace whereby young men may cleanse, and without which they have nothing in themselves to doe it.

d. V. 10. Let me not wander] The Hebrew הִשְׁגֵּנִי is here in the conjugation Hiphil, from שָׁגָה to be ignorant, or erre. Now of that conjugation the Hebrews observe, that as it signifies sometimes no more than to permit, so it sometimes notes to cause, sometimes to occasion that which the verb imports. Consequently the word here taken in that form is capable of these three interpretations, to cause to erre, to deceive, to seduce. So Deut. 27. 18. מַשְׁגֶּה he that maketh the blind to wander. And in this sense the Psalmists prayer could not probably be conceived, that God would not cause him to erre, seduce him, deceive him; for whatsoever his condition were, this would not be looked on as possible for God (to deceive any, in this sense of causing to erre,) nor consequently be so solicitously averted. For though of the false Prophet Ezek. 14. it be said, if he be deceived, when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived him; yet the deceiving there is not the causing him to believe or foretell that false thing, but the disappointing him, doing the contrary to what he hath prophesied. He was first deceived or seduced; so the text hath it, A prophet כִּי יְפֻתֶּה when he is seduced, וְדִבֶּר דָּבָר and speaketh a word; i.e. prophesieth what he hath no commission from God to prophesie, I the Lord, saith God, פִּתִּיתִי have deceived, (or as the Chaldee אַטְעֵיתִי I will make him erre, and the Syriack ܐܛܥܝ I will, in the future, so the preter in prophesies is oft taken for the future) I will deceive that Prophet, i.e. I will falsify or frustrate him and his prediction, when he predicts peace, I will send destruction; for so it follows, I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the face of the earth: which certainly God would not doe, if he had been the cause of his error, or sin of prophesying as he did. It remains then, that the Psalmists prayer is to be understood here either in the first or in the third sense. The first, that of the non-permission, is not so probable, for it is the common state of good men here to be still left peaceable, so as not to be totally restrained and hindred, (and so not permitted) to fall into sin (if it be in this sense, it must be of not being permitted to be tempted above their strength.) 'Tis more probable to be understood in the third sense, of God's doing nothing that may occasion their wandering from his commandments. This God may be said to doe, when he withdraws sufficient grace, leaves a man or delivers him up to himself. But that God by the tenure of Evangelical mercy will not doe, unless we first leave him. And therefore the Psalmist that can say, as here he doth, with my whole heart have I sought thee, may pray in faith, found his request on God's promise, that he will not thus leave him, deliver him up to wander from his commandments. The LXXII. reade here μὴ ἀπώσῃ με, the Latin, ne repellas, repell me not from thy commandments: but they sure are to be understood in this notion of the form Hiphil, abdicate me not (so ἀπώσῃ were more fitly rendred) not, drive me not away, in that vulgar notion of repelling, but repudiate me not, forsake me not, deny me not that grace which is necessary to my adhering to thy commandments.

הִשְׁגֵּנִי

V. 13. All the judgments] In this place it is observable that the Jewish Arab for כָּל all reads many, in relation probably to that opinion of theirs, that therefore God gave many Commandments to them, that though they did not all, by doing others they might be saved.

e. כָּל

V. 17. Deal bountifully] גְּמֹל which signifies either to doe good, or to render and return good, is here by the ancient interpreters rendred in the latter notion, the Chaldee שְׁלֵם טַב retribute good, the LXXII. Ἀνταπόδος retribute, the Latin and Æthiopick follow them, retribue servo tuo, the Syriack (and with them the Arabick) حازه hearken to thy servant, in the notion of answering, which is all one with that of returning. This makes it reasonable to resolve, that what follows in the verse is in sense to precede, as that to which the return is begged as a reward, though not of debt, yet of pact and mercy. And then it must not be rendred, that I may live —— but simply, I will live, and keep thy word: and so indeed the Hebrew exacts, אֶחְיֶה I shall or will live —— so the Chaldee also without any addition or paraphrase, אֶחְיֵי I will live, and the LXXII. ζήσομαι I will live. Yet the Syriack have ܘܐܚܐ that I may live, and so the Æthiopick; the Arabick, that he, i.e. thy servant, may live, agreeable enough to their former rendring of גְּמֹל hearken. But the Latin depart from all, and reade, vivifica me & custodiam —— inliven me and I shall keep thy words, a paraphrase no doubt of the Syriacks rendring, hear that I may live, for that is all one with inlivening: And the Jewish Arab, And in bounty give life to thy servant, that I may keep thy commandments. But the rendring of the Chaldee and LXXII. I have chosen to adhere to, as being most literal, and most commodious to connect with the insuing words; and the rather, because in the next verse, where the phrase is of that scheme wherein the Syriack here taketh it, Open —— that I may —— the Hebrew scheme differs from what here it is, וְאַבִּיטָה, not Open —— I shall, but, Open, and I shall —— the form, we know, that every where imports as we render it, that I may.

f. גְּמֹל

אֶחְיֶה

V. 20. Breaketh] The Hebrew גָּרַס, which is but once more used in the Bible, Lam. 3. 16. and there signifies to break, hath in the Chaldee a metaphorical signification, for being taken up, being imployed, studying, vehement desire. So when Prov. v. 19. the Hebrew hath רָשָׁה, which we render being ravisht with her love, the Targum reads תְּגֵרִים being wholly taken up with it. From thence is גָּרִים a student, or scholar. And in this metaphorical (not that other literal) sense the word seems here to be used, גָּרְסָה נַפְשִׁי my soul is wholly taken up, or imployed, לְתַאֲבָה with the desire or longing it hath —

g. גָּרַס hath — The Chaldee reads רְעֵנַת לְרַעֲוָתָא my ſoul hath deſired the deſire, i. e. vehemently deſired, the LXXII. ἐπιθυμεῖ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, and ſo the Latin, concupivit deſiderare, my ſoul hath longed to deſire, i. e. hath had a longing deſire; the Syriack more clearly ܢܦܫܝ ܫܬܩܬ ܘܬܝܒ my ſoul hath longed and deſired. All very fit and proper paraphraſes to expreſs the importance of the phraſe.

h. אֲרוּרִים V. 21. That are curſed] The Hebrew אֲרוּרִים is ſo placed, that it is uncertain whether it be joyned by appoſition to the proud foregoing, or begin the next ſenſe, thus, Curſed are they that erre — The former may hold, and bear this ſenſe, that the proud, rebellious, diſobedient, impenitent ſinners that erre from his commandments, and go on unreformed in their wandrings, are moſt unhappy and execrable in being ſuch, their pride and obſtinacy is the greateſt curſe to it ſelf, and yet they are rebuked, certain to be ſeverely puniſhed by God. But all the ancient interpreters ſeem to have followed the other ſenſe; דְאִשְׁתְּלִיוּ לְיָטִין ſay the Chaldee, in the ſame ſcheme as the Hebrew, and may moſt probably be rendred, as their Latin doth, maledicti qui oberrant, curſed are they that erre; but the LXXII. expreſly, ἐπετίμησας ὑπερηφάνοις, ἐπικατάρατοι οἱ ἐκκλίνοντες — Thou haſt rebuked the proud, curſed are they that erre — and the Syriack, Thou haſt rebuked the nations or Gentiles, ܥܡܡܐ ܕܥܠܡܐ the Gentiles, ܕܡܛܥܝܢ ܒܟ ܐܢܘܢ and they are curſt which erre; and ſo the Latin, maledicti qui declinant, curſed are they that decline from thy commandments. And then the latter part of the verſe is an exegeſis of the former, the curſe here the explication of God's rebuke. And though both ſenſes are very commodious, and ſo are retained in the paraphraſe, yet the authority of the interpreters will incline to the latter of them.

i וְלָפָה V. 28. Melteth] From דָּלַף to deſtill or drop, Eccl. 10. 18. or to weep and pour out tears, Job 10. 16, 20. the Hebrew וְלָפָה here is beſt rendred weepeth. The Chaldee render it by the cauſe of tears (ſorrow) אַגְמַת my ſoul was ſorrowfull, (אַגְמָא uſed by them in the notion of עָגָם) the Syriack to the ſame ſenſe ܥܠܬ ܢܦܫܝ is troubled; but the copies of the LXXII. which now we have read ἐστάξεν, and from thence the Vulgar Latins (with the Arabick) dormitavit, was drowſie. But Saint Ambroſe's reading, ſtillavit to which Hilarie alſo accords) aſſures us the true reading was ἔσταξεν diſtilled, which was eaſily corrupted by the Scribes into ἐνύσταξεν, to which they might be tempted by the ἀκηδίας wearineſs, which follows, by which they rendred טַחֲוָה for grief, it being of the nature of ſadneſs to make one weary of every poſture. Abu Walid obſerves the proper notion of דלף to be dropping, as when an houſe drops, thence, ſaith he, to be transferr'd to denote weeping, and then farther in this place to denote diſſolving, flowing, or elſe the ſame with that phraſe, Jer. 13. 17. my ſoul ſhall weep in ſecret places. The Jewiſh Arab reads נאסת, which will ſignifie being afraid, or perhaps being weak.

k. רְחַב V. 32. When thou ſhalt] The notion of רָחַב when 'tis applied to the heart, is here critically to be obſerved. The word primarily ſignifies to dilate, and the dilatation of the heart is the conſtant effect of joy, as the contraction is of ſorrow, Iſa. 60. 5. וְרָחַב and thy heart ſhall be dilated, i. e. rejoyce, as being delivered from diſtreſs or fear foregoing. Accordingly God's inlarging the heart here is rejoycing it, making it glad. This he doth by the comforts of a good conſcience, that joy in the Holy Ghoſt, the great pleaſure that reſults from the practice of pious duties, the tranſporting delights and joys of his χρηστὸς ζυγὸς gracious yoke, when by his grace we come to the experience of it. This the Chaldee and LXXII. have literally expreſt by תַּפֵּחִי and ἐπλάτυνας, thou haſt dilated my heart; but the Syriack more clearly by ܐܦܝܬ from חֶדְוָה to rejoyce, thou haſt exhilerated, or made me glad. Which rendring being in all probability the moſt commodious to the place, it will be fit to follow them alſo in the rendring of כִּי, not when (as we reade from the LXXII. ὅταν) but becauſe, or ſeeing that, for ſo they reade ܡܛܠ becauſe: This being not onely the ſeaſon, but the motive of all others moſt powerfull and ingaging to expedite running the way of God's commandments, the alacrious performance of all duty, becauſe the performance of it is matter of ſuch experimental delight and joy to them that are exerciſed therein.

l. עֵקֶב V. 33. Unto the end] The Hebrew עֵקֶב as it ſignifies an end, ſo it ſignifies a reward. So Pſal. 19. 11. in the keeping of them there is עֵקֶב רָב great reward; the LXXII. reade ἀνταπόδοσις retribution. And ſo in this Pſalm v. 112. they render it διὰ ἀνταπόδοσιν by way of return to the rejoycing of his heart, which his teſtimonies yielded v. 111. And ſo Aben Ezra underſtands it here, and ſo the Interlinear, reading mercede, by way of reward or return; and ſo being oft turned into a prepoſition, rendred propter, for, it ſtill retains this notion, by way of return, or reward, ſee Iſa. v. 23. Gen. 22. 18. And ſo the ſenſe will beſt bear, Teach me — and I will obſerve it by way of return, or reward, or gratitude to thee, God's mercy in teaching, being in all reaſon to be rewarded, or anſwered by our obſerving and taking exact care of what he teaches. Or elſe, by analogy with Pſ. 19. 11. where the keeping his commandments brings great reward with it, it may here be rendred עֵקֶב (underſtanding the prepoſition לְ) for the reward, meaning the preſent joy of it, v. 32. not excluding the future Crown. The Chaldee here reade עַד גְּסִירָא unto the end (as ver. 112. עַד סוֹפָא even to the end;) and ſo Abu Walid; and the LXXII. διαπαντὸς altogether. The Syriack wholly omit it here, but v. 112. reade ܫܦܝ firmly, or certainly, or in truth, i. e. ſincerely: which as it is more agreeable to that place than the Chaldees to the end, which cannot probably follow לְעוֹלָם for ever, as there עֵקֶב doth; ſo it would as fitly agree with this place, I ſhall obſerve it ſincerely or firmly. But of this there is no example, nor ground in the origination of the word, which is evidently uſed for reward Pſal. 19. but not ſo evidently for either an end (unleſs as it is uſed for the heel, the laſt part of the body, in relation to which the Jewiſh Arab renders it עלי אתר juxta veſtigium, or è veſtigio, inſtantly, without delay, as if his keeping it ſhould follow on the heels, as it were, of his being taught it) or elſe for truth and firmneſs. And therefore ſtill that of reward or return to God is the moſt allowable rendring of it here, and v. 112.

m. הַדְרִיכֵנִי V. 35. Make me to go] The Hebrew הַדְרִיכֵנִי in Hiphil from דָּרַךְ to go, or tread, or walk, is to lead, or direct, or conduct in any journey. So Pſal. 25. 9. we render יַדְרֵךְ ſhall guide, and יַיְדְרִיכֵם he led them. And ſo the LXXII. rightly here, ὁδήγησόν με, Lead me, direct me, conduct me, and the Latin deduce, lead.

n. V. 38. Who is devoted to thy fear] It is uncertain how אֲשֶׁר לְיִרְאָתֶךָ how אֲשֶׁר לְיִרְאָתֶךָ is to be rendred, becauſe uncertain to what אֲשֶׁר relates, whether to thy word, or to thy ſervant. The Syriack joyns it with the latter, thy ſervant עַבְדָּא דִּדְחִיל מִנָּךְ which worſhips, or fears thee. But the Chaldee joyns it with thy word, דִּי לְרַחֲלְתָךְ which is to the fearing, or which concerns the fearing thee. So the LXXII. leaving out the אֲשֶׁר which as redundant, reade εἰς τὸν φόβον σου, to the fear of thee. And to this the Hebrew poſition of the words inclines, ſtabliſh to thy ſervant אִמְרָתְךָ thy word, אֲשֶׁר which is to the fearing thee: and remembring that אִמְרָה word is one of the appellations of God's Commandments, thoſe, we know, immediately tend to the fear of God. The Jewiſh Arab reads it, Make good to thy ſervant thy ſaying which is to the people of thy fear, or thoſe that fear thee. But Aben Ezra, Every decree of thine, which may bring me to thy fear.

o. וְאֶשָּׂה כַפַּי V. 48. My hands alſo will I lift up] וְאֶשָּׂה כַפַּי lifting up the palms, or hands, is a phraſe of various uſe: 1. for praying, Pſal. 28. 2. When I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle; Lam. 2. 19. Lift up thy hands toward heaven; Hab. 3. 10. the deep uttered his voice, and lift up his hands; from whence the Apoſtle hath the phraſe of lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. and ſo —ad ſidera palmas, in the poets: 2. for bleſſing others, Lev. 9. 22. Aaron lift up his hands toward the people, and bleſſed them; or for praiſing and bleſſing God, Pſal. 134. 2. lift up your hands— and praiſe the Lord, and Pſal. 22. 4. I will bleſs thee, I will lift up my hands— 3. for ſwearing, Gen. 14. 22. I have lift up my hand to the Lord— i.e. ſworn; Exod. 6. 8. I lifted up my hand נָשָׂאתִי אֶת יָדִי, we render it, I ſware to give it to Abraham— Ezek. 36. 7. I have lifted up my hand, i.e. ſworn, ſurely, &c. ſo Rev. 10. 5. the Angel lifted up his hand to heaven and ſware; ſo Deut. 32. 40. of God, I lift up my hand to heaven, and ſay, I live for ever, a form of God's ſwearing; Pſal. 106. 26. He lifted up his hand againſt them to overthrow them in the wilderneſs, i. e. he ſware they ſhould not enter into his reſt (ſee note g on that Pſalm:) 4. for ſetting about any action, eſpecially of weight, Gen. 41. 44. without thee ſhall no man lift up his hand — i.e. attempt or doe any thing; ſo Pſal. 10. 12. Ariſe, O Lord, lift up thy hand, forget not the poor, i.e. ſet to thy active hand to their aſſiſtance; ſo Heb. 12. 12. lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees, i.e. ſet actively and vigorouſly about the Chriſtian task. And every of theſe might poſſibly be accommodated to this place, of lifting up his hands to God's commandments. For it may be 1. praying for God's grace to perform them: 2. bleſſing them as we do our daily food, or rather praiſing and bleſſing God for them, in reſpect of the great advantages we may reap by them; and to this the Syriack ſeems to have inclined, adding at the end of the verſe וְאֶתְפָּאַר בִּרְעוּתָךְ and I will glory in thy faith or fidelity: 3. it may be vowing and promiſing under oath a conſtant obedience to them: or 4. it may be the ſetting vigorouſly about them. And that is the moſt probable meaning of it, I will lift up my hands to the practice of them.

p. חֲבָלִים V. 61. The bands] The Hebrew חֶבֶל a cord doth alſo ſignifie a troop or company, whether of ſouldiers or of any other: ſo 1 Sam. 10. 5. חֶבֶל נְבִיאִים a troop of prophets, for ſo the Chaldee there render it, סַיְעוּ סַפְרַיָּא a company of ſcribes; and ſo here סַיְעַת a company or troop of wicked men; in oppoſition whereto is אֲנִי חָבֵר ver. 63. I am a companion engaged in another ſociety. This farther appears by the עֹדְדֵנִי that follows, men may be ſaid to rob or plunder, but cords or bands cannot.

q. טַעַם V. 66. Good judgment] From טָעַם guſtavit, to taſte, the noun is uſed for ſapor, ſavour or taſte of any thing; Exod. 16. 31. טַעְמוֹ the taſte of the manna was as the taſte of a wafer — And the verb being transferred from the body to the mind (Pſal. 34. 8. טַעֲמוּ taſte— how gracious the Lord is) the noun is ſo in like manner, and ſignifies in proportion either the outward faſhion and behaviour, &c. by which the mind is diſcerned, as meats by the taſte, as in the title of Pſal. 34. when David changed טַעְמוֹ his behaviour, the LXXII. reade τὸ πρόσωπον his countenance; or elſe the inner diſpoſition and habit of mind, rendred by them ὁ τρόπος diſpoſition, 1 Sam. 25. 33. Other uſes of the word there are for a decree, Jon. 3. 7. and Dan. 3. 10. but that which beſt agrees to it here, where it is joyned with knowledge, is either 1. as our Engliſh render it, judgment, in the notion of opinion, counſel; ſo the Jewiſh Arab and Abu-Walid render it by a word deduced from רָאָה vidit to ſee, and ſpoken of the mind, ſenſit, judicavit, ſtatuit, to think, judge, or reſolve; or elſe 2. the habit of mind, genius, indoles, and then טוּב טַעַם will be goodneſs of diſpoſition, inclination, to which when knowledge is added, it is a ſpecial gift of God, fit to be here the matter of a prayer. The Chaldee 1 Sam. 21. 13. and in the title of Pſal. 34. render it מַדְעָךְ and מַדְעֵיהּ thy knowledge, and his knowledge or ſenſe; and accordingly here the Interlinear reads bonum ſenſum, a good ſenſe, and the tranſlatour of the Chaldee (which here reteins the Hebrew טַעַם) rationem, reaſon. But as that notion cannot be applicable to the word in the title of that Pſalm (for ſure David was not really mad, and ſo 'twas not his ſenſe, or knowledge, or reaſon, that was ſaid to be changed there;) ſo it is not certain that it hath that ſenſe in any other place of ſcripture. The moſt probable is that of Prov. 11. 22. where the fair woman וְסָרַת טָעַם is compared to a jewel of gold in a ſwines ſnout. Here the Interlinear reads declinans diſcretionem, as from סוּר receſſit, departing from diſcretion, and the Vulgar Latin fatua, fooliſh; but the LXXII. κακόφρων, which cannot be better rendred than of ill inclinations, diſpoſition: and to that I ſuppoſe the Chaldee accords, and the Syriack, both reteining the original טָעַם in their dialects, and the former reading it with סְרִי as from סְרָא and סְרִי to be corrupted or ſtink, the latter reteining the Hebrew סָרַר, as that ſignifies perverſe, contumacious, and ſo may beſt be rendred (not as the Latin of the one, fœtida ſenſu, and of the other fœtida ſapore, but) of a corrupt or perverſe diſpoſition, or manners, as φθείρουσιν ἤθη, 1 Cor. 15. 33. to corrupt manners is applied to the debauching their whole habit of mind. And proportionably here טוּב טַעַם will be the χρηστὰ ἤθη the good manners, there mentioned, or rather χρηστότης ἠθῶν goodneſs of manners. The LXXII. have divided it into χρηστότητα καὶ παιδείαν goodneſs and diſcipline, and the Latin follow them; and the Syriack have changed the order טַעַם וְטוּב ſavour and goodneſs.

r. טִפַּשׁ כַּחֵלֶב V. 70. Fat as greaſe] The Hebrew טִפַּשׁ כַּחֵלֶב is very differently rendred by interpreters. The LXXII. reade ἐτυρώθη ὡς γάλα, is made cheeſe like milk; and the Syriack, Latin, and Arabick accord with them. And this undoubtedly by reading חֵלֶב milk for חֵלֶב fat; for טִפַּשׁ, confeſtly ſignifying increaſſation, being applied to milk, it muſt needs ſignifie being coagulated, or made into cheeſe. But the Chaldee, dee, it is certain, reade חֶלֶב, and ſo render it תֶּרֶב fat. The word טָפַשׁ being onely here found, the Jews do but by gueſs give the meaning of it. Aben Ezra notes onely that it is without a fellow. R. Solomon meddles not with it. Kimchi renders it to be fat. Abu Walid gives three expoſitions of it; 1. rendring it by the Arabick طفس, and expounding it is troubled, (or corrupted, or unclean, foul, ſordid and ſtinking (or ſending up ſmells or fumes like that of fat ſtinking fleſh) with unclean evil thoughts ſends up, ſaith he, ſtinking fumes of evil thoughts, like burnt fat: 2. according to the Chaldee uſe of it, to be fat and groſs: 3. טנבת, or, as more probably it ſhould be written, בונבת, or כנבת, which ſignifies to be thick and groſs, or hard; and then the two laſt fall in as one almoſt. Now for the conſtruction, it may moſt probably be by underſtanding a prepoſition, not their heart is incraſſate or groſs like fat (for fatneſs can no more be ſaid to be groſs, than to be fat, being that by which other things are incraſſate:) but, either their heart is groſs as fat, i. e. as if it were a mere lump of fat; or, their heart is become groſs as with fat, as Pſal. 73. 7. their eyes ſtand out מֵחֶלֶב with fat; and 'tis ordinary in poeſie for the prepoſitions to be omitted. Thus the tranſlatour of the Chaldee ſupplies the prepoſition by rendring it in the ablative caſe, incraſſatus eſt quaſi adipe, is incraſſate as with fat, and ſo the learned Caſtellio, quaſi obeſitate obtuſum eſt, is ſtufft up as with fat. And to that the Jewiſh Arab agrees, their hearts are ſtuffed up ב with fat. As for the application of this to the heart, the groſs or incraſſate heart is all one with the dull or ſtupid, as pinguis Minerva among the Latines ſignifies, and this from nature, the membranous lean parts being onely ſenſitive. And thus will it ſtand in direct oppoſition to the טוב טַעַם good genius or diſpoſition, v. 66. and denote the νῦς ἀδύνατος, the ſtupid incapable mind, and ſo in effect (although fat is the ſofteſt of any fleſh) an obdurate heart, in the ſenſe that Philoponus uſeth παχυνόμενον an incraſſate ſpirit, and many the like expreſſions are uſed.

f. קָטַר

V. 83. Smoak] From קָטַר to ſend up ſmoak, or incenſe, or burn, Exod. 29. 18. is קִיטֹר ſmoak, Gen. 19. 28. and ſo here a bottle בְּקִיטֹר in the ſmoak, a bottle of skin (ſuch as the Jews uſed) hung up in the ſmoak, and by that means parcht and dry, and ſo fit to expreſs one worne out and dried up with long ſuſpence of expectation. The LXXII. reade ἐν παχνῇ in the froſt, the Latin in pruina, and the Syriack ܒܟܦܐ in the froſt, from ſome other notion of קִיטֹר, of affinity with that wherein 'tis uſed Pſal. 148. 8. in company with hail and ſnow, probably from the manner of the generation of a froſt, or congealed miſt, being but a ſmoak out of the earth. The Jewiſh Arab renders it ſtrangely, as he that wandreth, noddeth, reeleth in the ſmoak being amazed.

t. כַּמָּה יָמָי

V. 84. How many are the days] כַּמָּה יָמָי how many days, is here moſt probably to be interpreted by the context, which, from the beginning of this Octonary, ſpeaks of God's deferring his deliverance, and permitting him to wait and pray, and yet lie under his affliction. And accordingly there being an ellipſis in the words, it is in reaſon ſo to be ſupplied as beſt agrees with that ſenſe, How many days of, or to thy ſervant (the word עַבְדֶּךָ, without a prepoſition, is indifferent to either) i. e. how many days are appointed or aſſigned me for the continuance not of life (as How many are the days ſound,) but of the preſſures or afflictions that are upon me? and ſo it accords with when wilt thou comfort me? v. 82. and when wilt thou execute judgment (avenge or puniſh, or at leaſt reſtrein and check my perſecutours?) in the remainder of this verſe. Thus 'tis frequent in the Hebrew, and among the Helleniſts, for day to ſignifie judgment, his day is coming, Pſal. 37. 13. (ſee note on Rom. 13. [d] Heb. 10. [a].)

v. זֵדִים

V. 85. Proud have digged pits] The notion of זֵדִים proud in this Pſalm, for wicked, injurious men, both here, and v. 21, 51, 69, 78, 121. is here obſerved by the LXXII. which render it ἄνομοι wicked (and ſo the Syriack and Latin ܚܛܐ and iniqui, wicked men) as Iſa. 13. 11. ἄνομοι lawleſs, and זָדוֹן ἀσέβεια impiety, Deut. 18. 22. and frequently ὕβρις contumely, Pride being indeed the original as of all wickedneſs, ſo eſpecially of contumely and injury. For כָּרוּ לִי שִׂיחוֹת they have digged ditches or pits for me, which the Chaldee and Syriack follows, the LXXII. reade διηγήσαντό μοι ἀδολεσχίας, the Latin narrarunt mihi fabulationes, they have told me vain and idle diſcourſes; ſo ἀδολεσχίας ſignifies φλυαρίας, and the Arabick fully expreſſes it by words of dotage or folly, long impertinent diſcourſes of other mens matters. The ground of their reading is viſible: שִׂיחוֹת with שׂ from שׂוּחַ to ſpeak or talk, is elſewhere duly rendred by them ἀδολεσχία talk, 1 King. 28. 27. but being here with שׂ from שׂוּחַ to decline, bend down, &c. it ſignifies a ditch, or pit, or declining ground, and ſo is uſed Pſal. 57. 6. As for כָּרוּ from כָּרָה to dig, and Pſal. 7. 15. joyned with כּוֹר a ditch or pit (parallel to שִׂיחָה here) though it have no ſignification proportionable to that of διηγήσαντο telling, yet the other word being ſo rendred, idle talks or diſcourſes, for pits, this was by analogy to follow; the telling being accommodated to thoſe talks, as digging to pits. Meanwhile this rendring of the LXXII. is not very unagreeable to the ſenſe, their telling him long and idle tales, or talking thus impertinently with him, being eaſily ſuppoſeable (as was the Herodians and Phariſees with Chriſt) to have been deſigned on purpoſe to inſnare him. What here follows אֲשֶׁר לֹא כְתוֹרָתֶךָ which are not according to thy Law, (for which the Chaldee reads דְּלָא פַּקֵּדְתָּנוּן which thou haſt not commanded in thy Law, and the LXXII. οὐχ ὡς ὁ νόμος σου κύριε, not as thy Law, O Lord) is to be taken in the Hebrew dialect (imitated by moſt other languages) by the figure μείωσις, when that is ſaid to be not good, or not well done, which is extremely ill, when unprofitable ſignifies very wicked, and many the like (ſee note on Matt. 12. e.) for ſo here, not according to Law ſignifies extremely contrary to it, and ſo παρανόμοι, by which the LXXII. rendred the proud here, is literally no more than they that act beſide the Law (which is the ſtyle of the Syriack in this latter part of the verſe) but it ſignifies thoſe that doe moſt contrary to it.

w. לְעוֹלָם יְהוָה

V. 89. For ever, O Lord] The Syriack ſeem moſt fitly to have expounded theſe words לְעוֹלָם יְהוָה For ever, O Lord, by addition or ſupply of ܐܢܬ ܗܘ art thou, thus, Thou art for ever, O Lord, and thy word indures. This may ſuggeſt a rendring of theſe two verſes by way of correſpondence, that one may bear proportion and be directly anſwerable to the other; which will be, if we ſhall compare together the beginnings and the ends of the verſes ſeverally. The beginnings lye thus, Thou art for ever, O Lord, v. 89. Thy faithfulneſs is לְדֹר וָדֹר to generation and generation, i. e. to all generations, which are exactly parallel. Then the latter parts of the verſes lye thus, Thy word נִצָּב ſtands or is ſettled ſettled in the heavens, v. 89. i. e. whatſoever thou commandeſt in heaven, doth certainly come to paſs, and Thou haſt eſtabliſhed the earth, וַתַּעֲמֹד and it ſhall ſtand or abide, i. e. the earth and all things in it are by thee moſt firmly eſtabliſht. And then as the parallel will be exact, ſo the ſenſe will flow moſt currently. The parallel will be exact, for as v. 89. his word is ſaid to ſtand or be ſettled in heaven, ſo v. 90. his faithfulneſs ſhall be ſaid to abide or ſtand in the earth, as ſtedfaſt as the earth it ſelf, or ever ſince the creation and eſtabliſhment of the earth. And then the ſenſe will be, that as God is eternal, ſo his word and faithfulneſs remains conſtant, and never fails in heaven above, or here below on earth, where from the afflictions of good men there is more ſhew of objection againſt God's making good his promiſe to them. Now as his word and faithfulneſs, though ſevered in place, are to be united in ſenſe, and ſignifie his faithfull performance of his word; ſo the heaven and earth are in ſenſe to be joyned alſo, and ſignifie by a frequent Hebraiſm (ſee note on 2 Pet. 3. e.) the whole world, in his conſtant governing of which this his fidelity is as illuſtriouſly viſible, as in the creation of them. Accordingly v. 91. they are joyned together, They continue this day, or, They have continued to this day עָמְדוּ הַיּוֹם, they in the plural, and הַיּוֹם either adverbially, as the Chaldee reade יוֹמָנָא this day, or underſtanding the prepoſition עַד untill this day; not as the LXXII. διαμένει ἡ ἡμέρα the day continues, but they, i. e. the heaven and the earth foregoing, and conſequently all things therein comprehended, for ſo it follows, כִּי הַכֹּל for all things ſerve thee.

x. קֵץ V. 96. End of all perfection] The word קֵץ, which we render end, ſignifies limit, or boundary, or extreme part, and is moſt ordinarily applied to places or regions; ſo the LXXII. who render it πέρας bound. And if in this ſenſe it be here uſed, then 'tis not amiſs to take notice of the Syriacks rendring of תִּכְלָה perfection, by ܣܘܦܐ, which their Latin tranſlatour Sionita renders, regioni region, I have ſeen that there is a bound to every region; for ſo סוף which ſignifies a bound or end (and is here by the Chaldee uſed to render קֵץ) is there rendred a region, and مسافة in Arabick is ſpace or place, χωρὰ or τόπος, the common ſtyle of a region. So ſaith Sionita in a note on this his verſion in the margin of his edition in quarto, Propriè terminum ſignificat, ſæpe tamen pro regione ſeu parte mundi ſumitur, It properly ſignifies bound, limit, yet 'tis oft taken for a region or part of the world. To this the latter part of the verſe well accords, of רְחָבָה מְאֹד the exceeding width or amplitude of God's commandments, not having ſuch bounds as each region hath. And to this perhaps the Chaldee lookt, which paraphraſtically expreſſeth it לְכֹל מָה דְּאִשְׁתְּדַל וְאִשְׁתְּכַח of all that I have been ſolicitous of, or beheld. This carries that probability with it, that it deſerved to be mentioned. And if it be not accepted, then ſtill תִּכְלָה, in the ordinary ſignification of perfection or univerſality, as a comprehenſive word, muſt denote the greateſt latitude or amplitude, whether qualitative or quantitative, of vertue, or of ſpace, and ſo ſtill קֵץ be the bound or utmoſt extent of it. The Jewiſh Arab renders it, To every kind an end; Abu Walid, I have ſeen the uttermoſt of every end [or uttermoſt extent] but the extent of thy judgment, [commandment, law, or wiſedom] for that is wider and deeper, than that the uttermoſt of its extremity [or end] may be attained to.

y. נַפְשִׁי בְכַפִּי V. 109. My ſoul is — in my hand] The meaning of this phraſe is obvious, I am in danger of my life. See Jud. 12. 3. I put my life in my hands, and paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon, i. e. I fearleſly adventured my life. So 1 Sam. 19. 5. he put his life in his hand, and ſlew the Philiſtims, i. e. by adventuring his own life he killed the other: and ch. 28. 21. I have put my life in my hand, and hearkened to thy words, i. e. run the hazard of my life to obey thee: and Job 13. 14. Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, and put my life in my hand? The onely difficulty is, what is the original of this proverbial ſtyle. This Pat. Cockburne hath propoſed as an inſtance of the interpreting ſcripture from vulgar ſpeech, making this to be the meaning of it, that he hath no aid now left him but from his own hand, as being left deſtitute of all other help or auxiliaries. And thus indeed the place in Judges ſeemed to ſuggeſt, When I ſaw that ye delivered me not, I put my life in my hands, and paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon; you gave me no aid, and ſo I was fain to go over my ſelf without you: and ſo likewiſe of David, who without any help ſmote Goliah, to which there Jonathan refers, 1 Samuel 19. 5. But the other places, of the witch of Endor and Job, will not bear this ſenſe; and therefore this is not to be pitcht on, but rather this. That as what is in a man's hand is eaſily parted with, eaſily loſt, and as eaſily taken from him, ſo a man's life is ſaid to be in his hand, when there is but little diſtance betwixt him and death: and ſo the Chaldee interprets it by way of paraphraſe, my ſoul מְסַתְּכְנָא is in danger (from סָכַן, which in Hebrew is to profit, but in the Chaldee language to periclitate) עַל גַּב יְדִי in the back of my hand, which conſequently he hath no hold of, it may depart at pleaſure. So the Jewiſh Arab thus paraphraſeth it, Although my ſoul be as it were in my hand continually through danger. And this is the moſt allowable original of the phraſe. The LXXII. have here varied the phraſe, and reade ἐν ταῖς χερσί σου, my ſoul is in thy hands, and ſo the Syriack ܒܐܝܕܟ in thy hands; not ſo probably miſreading the Hebrew בְּכַפִּי into בְּכַנְפֵּךְ, as expreſſing it by way of pious paraphraſe, our lives being then certainly in God's hands, to ſave if he pleaſe, when they are in humane ſight in greateſt danger, and ſo by every pious man to be depoſited in God's hands.

z. סֵעֲפִים V. 113. Vain thoughts] סֵעֲפִים is here to be taken not for the thoughts or opinions themſelves, as elſewhere, Job 20. 2. and 1 King. 18. 21. but for the perſons that think, and that not for thoughts ſimply, but for wicked thoughts, all the ancient interpreters agree: the LXXII. reade παρανόμους, the Syriack ܥܘܠ, the Latin iniquos, tranſgreſſors, wicked men; breakers of the Law, ſaith the Arabick. The Jewiſh Arab reads אלמרא ין hypocrites, and the Chaldee by way of paraphraſe, דְּחַשְׁבִין מַחְשְׁבָן סְרִיקָן thoſe that think vain or falſe thoughts. Abu Walid expounds it thoſe that have hypocriſie, and evil counſels, and deceitfull cogitations. And ſo Kimchi ſaith that others interpreted it as an Adjective, though he as a Subſtantive, for the thoughts themſelves. Sol. Jarchi interprets it of inſtability, hanging diſtracted between two opinions, betwixt God and Baal, the διαζωνίαν, or ἀνὴρ δίψυχος, Jam. 1. the double-minded man unſtable in all his ways.

&. הִשְׁבַּתָּ V. 119. Droſs] The Hebrew reading of this verſe is much departed from by the ancient interpreters. The words are plain in the original, הִשְׁבַּתָּ thou haſt deſtroyed or done away, made to ceaſe, סְיָגִים (so הִשְׁבַּתִּי is uſed Ezek. 12. 23. in Hiphil, from שָׁבַת to reſt or ceaſe) סְיָגִים the droſs, ſo סִיג ſignifies all the droſs or refuſe that goes away (from סוּג to recede) and departs from the metal in the melting, and ſo in other things; Midr. Tehil. ſaith that grapes being preſt make סְיָגִים, which men throw upon the ground, (and ſo God's judgments are deciphered in ſcripture by treading a winepreſs.) The word ſeems to allude to שׁוֹגִים foregoing v. 118. Then follows by appoſition כָּל רִשְׁעֵי אֶרֶץ all the wicked of the earth. But the LXXII. render the two firſt words παραβαίνοντας ἐλογισάμην, I have accounted prevaricators, for סְיָגִים probably reading שׁוֹגִים thoſe that err, and for חִשַּׁבְתִּי, הִשְׁבַּתָּ I have reputed. The Chaldee reade far otherwiſe, פְּסַלְתָּא פְּסַקְתָּא thou haſt deſtroyed the Idols, thou haſt conſumed all the wicked of the earth. And the Syriack have quite omitted this verſe, and in a manner repeated v. 117. inſtead of it.

aa. סָמַר V. 120. Trembleth] For סָמַר, which notes being in horror, ſuch as cauſeth the hair to ſtand an end (ſee Job 4. 15.) the LXXII. here reade καθήλωσον (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be καθήλωσον) evidently from another old notion of the word סָמַר to faſten with a nail, from whence the Chaldee uſe סְמָרָא for a nail, as we ſee in their Targum, Iſa. 41. 7. Herein the Latin follows them, and reads confige; but the Syriack hath حفظ the verb, whence is the Arabick noun for an hedg-hog, whoſe prickles ſtanding up are the emblem of horror; and ſo that ſure is the meaning of the phraſe, and that fitly following the deſtroying the droſs v. 119. for that may well be the motive to this horror.

bb. עֵרֶב V. 122. Surety] Of the ſeveral uſages of עֵרֶב interpreters have been uncertain which to take. From the notion of pleaſing or being acceptable, the Chaldee reade בְּסִים delight or make merry. And ſo the Syriack alſo. But the LXXII. that reade ἐκδίκει and the Latin ſuſcipe, ſeem to refer to the other notion (that in which arrhabo comes from it) of a ſurety, or undertaker, for that we know is the importance of ſuſcipere. And this doth beſt agree with the antecedents and conſequents. Leave me not to my oppreſſors, let not the proud oppreſs me; for with both thoſe well accords, undertake, interpoſe, be ſurety for me for good, i. e. ſo as to deliver me out of their hands. Abu Walid takes it in the notion of doing well to.

cc. צִדְקָה V. 123. Word of thy righteouſneſs] The notion of צִדְקָה thy righteouſneſs, for thy kindneſs, charity and mercy, is very obvious (ſee note on Matth. 1. g.) and that agrees well with this place, where God's deliverance, in the beginning of the verſe, is the thing that is waited for, and dealing with him according to his mercy, v. 124. and then אִמְרַת word added to it, is no more than God's ſpeaking mercy to him, as elſewhere ſpeaking peace, i. e. hearing his prayers, giving him an anſwer of mercy. But the word righteouſneſs may denote the rule of righteouſneſs, the Law of God, his preſcript manner of dealing with men; and then the word of thy righteouſneſs will be the tenure of thy Law, that promiſes deliverance to the pious.

dd. עֵת לַעֲשׂוֹת V. 126. Time for thee, O Lord, to work] The Hebrew here reads עֵת לַעֲשׂוֹת לַיהוָה, which is literally time to doe, or perform (ſo עָשָׂה is facere and perficere) to the Lord. And as this is more agreeable to the ſenſe of the ancient interpreters, than the reading it time for the Lord to work, the Chaldee being expreſs, time to work רְעוּתָא דַיְיָ the will of God, and the Syriack لعمل الرب time to worſhip God, to which ſenſe alſo the LXXII. are to be underſtood, καιρὸς τοῦ ποιῆσαι τῷ κυρίῳ, time to work or perform to the Lord; ſo it will alſo beſt accord to the context, other mens evacuating, fruſtrating God's Law, by their neglecting and contemning it, being a fit motive to his ſervants moſt diligently to perform it.

ee. V. 128. Eſteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right] The Hebrew יָשַׁר as it ſignifies to be right, ſo 'tis alſo to pleaſe, or to be approved, as when a thing is ſaid to be right in the eyes of God, i. e. to pleaſe him; and then by analogy with this ſenſe, it ſignifies in other conjugations (as to correct and direct, ſo) to approve. And ſo the Syriack rightly underſtands יִשַּׁרְתִּי here, and renders it by ܐܬܪܥܝܬ I have loved all thy precepts: and to the ſame purpoſe is the Chaldee תְּרַעֲתָנוּן from רָצָה to like, to approve. Onely the LXXII. and others from them adhere to the other notion of יָשַׁר, and reade κατευθύνομαι, I was directed to all thy ways. The reduplication of the univerſal particle כָּל is emphatical, all, even all, and ſo the plain rendring is moſt current, All thy commandments, even all, have I approved — The Jewiſh Arab reads, And therefore for all thy commandments, all of them have I ſought.

ff. פֶּתַח V. 130. Entrance of thy word] פֶּתַח here, from פָּתַח to open, doth regularly ſignifie opening. The onely queſtion is, whether thy word be the agent, or the patient, that which opens, or which is opened. If we take it in the latter ſenſe, then the opening of God's words is the explaining them; ſo the Jewiſh Arab renders, Becauſe the opening of thy word inlighteneth, O thou that makeſt the ſimple to underſtand. And ſo the LXXII. their δήλωσις is underſtood both by the Latin and the Syriack; ܦܬܰܚ ܡܶܠܰܐ open thy word, and illuminate, ſaith the one, and declaratio verborum tuorum illuminat, the declaring of thy words doth illuminate, ſaith the other. But if it be in the ſenſe of thy word being the agent, then 'tis the opening our eyes wrought by thy word; and that ſeems to be the more genuine meaning of it, that God's word by opening our minds gives light to them, teacheth them thoſe things which naturally they did not, could not know, till they were thus illuminated. And the Chaldee favours, who renders it גְּלִיף the ſculpture or impreſſion of thy word illuminates; which evidently refers to the Urim, whoſe name is derived from light, and therefore will with full propriety be ſaid to enlighten; which ſurely the LXXII. likewiſe reflected on, when they call it δήλωσις, the word by them uſed conſtantly to tranſlate Urim.

gg. צִמְּתַתְנִי V. 139. Conſumed me] The Hebrew צָמַת from which is צִמְּתַתְנִי here, as it ſignifies to conſume, and ſo is here rendred by the LXXII. ἐξέτηξέ με, hath melted me, or by melting conſumed me, and by the Syriack ܐܬܥܡܠܢܝ cruciated me, ſo it ſignifies alſo to bind, preſs, conſtrain, in the notion wherein 'tis ſaid of Paul Act. 18. 5. that συνείχετο τῷ λόγῳ, he was conſtrained or preſt in ſpirit. Thus the Chaldee renders it סַגְּרַת hath conſtrained me. And this is the moſt probable acception of it, zeal having that faculty of preſſing, and forcing expreſſions from one, either of grief, or indignation, or the like, as the occaſion requires.

hh. אַשְׁמֻרוֹת V. 148. Night-watches] The Hebrew אַשְׁמֻרוֹת from שָׁמַר to keep, guard, watch, ſignifies indifferently any of the three watches into which the night was divided, the evening watch, or beginning of the watches, or firſt watch, Lam. 2. 19. the middle, or or night watch, Jud. 7. 19. and the laſt, or morning watch, Exod. 14. 24. And to the laſt of theſe the context here inclines it, ſo as it may agree with the dawning of the morning v. 147. and be fitly joyned with preventing, which ſure in both verſes ſignifies riſing betimes, ſo it is proper to the morning, not evening watch. The Chaldee indeed gives it a greater latitude, and reads the watches רְצַפֵּי וְרַמַּשׁ of the morning and evening both, but the LXXII. reade expreſly πρὸς ὄρθρον early in the morning.

ii. אֵין לָמוֹ מִכְשׁוֹל

V. 165. Offend them] The Hebrew here reade אֵין לָמוֹ מִכְשׁוֹל, i. e. as the LXXII. literally reade, οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῖς σκάνδαλον there is no ſcandal to them, by ſcandal meaning any thing that may wound, or hurt, or cauſe them to fall in their journey, in the threefold notion of the word σκάνδαλον (which the LXXII. here uſe, and is perfectly parallel to to מִכְשׁוֹל) for a ſtumbling-block, and a ſnare, and a gall-trap. The meaning of it will be beſt underſtood, by comparing it with the like phraſe 1 Joh. 2. 10. He that loveth his brother abideth in light, καὶ σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν and there is no ſcandal in him, or to him; the light, wherein he abides, will ſo aſſiſt him in every part of his march, that he ſhall be free from thoſe dangers which are parallel to the ſnares, and ſtumbling-blocks, and gall-traps, which they that travail in the dark are ſubject to. There the ſcandals are means of betraying the ſoul into ſin, temptations; and no ſcandal to them ſignifies their ſecurity from thoſe temptations, that others ſo frequently are overcome by. And ſo here, as the great peace, in the beginning of the verſe (according to the Hebrew notion of שָׁלוֹם) notes all manner of proſperity and felicity, that eſpecially wherein the ſoul is concerned, ſo the no ſcandal to them, is the immunity from temptations and ſnares, i. e. from ſins to which temptations are deſigned to bring men: and this is the ſecurity which the love of God's commandments will give men, when nothing elſe will. The Chaldee here reade, there is no ſcandal to them לְעָלְמָא דְאָתֵי in the world to come, meaning no miſchief, puniſhment of ſin, but the Syriack, there is to them no ܚܘܠܫܐ infirmity, ſickneſs, diſeaſe, (the word, from כָּרָה, ſignifies ſickneſs either of body or minde) and ſo is moſt applicable to ſin, the diſeaſe of the ſoul.

kk. נֶגְדָּה

V. 168. Before thee] What is the meaning of a man's ways being before God, will beſt be judged by other parallel phraſes, ſuch are walking before God, or in his ſight, and that ſignifies to live piouſly, and ſo as is accepted by him. And then here, though it is certain all men's actions are ſeen by God, and done in his ſight, yet his ways being before him, will beſt be interpreted walking, or living piouſly.

The Hundred and Twentieth PSALM.

‖ aſcents. A Song [a] of ‖ Degrees. a.

The hundred and twentieth is a Prayer againſt calumniators and malicious perſons, and a complaint of the infelicity of ſuch companions. It ſeems to have been firſt formed by David, in relation to Doeg, 1 Sam. 22. and to have been after made uſe of in relation to the † Captivity, and is called a Pſalm of Aſcents, becauſe it was appointed to be ſung by the Levites on ſome place of advantage, with elevation of voice.

† ſo the Syriack (ſee note a.) and R. Kimchi (ſee note c.)

1. IN my diſtreſs I cried unto the Lord, and he heard me.

Paraphraſe.

1. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord God, for all his mercies vouchſafed unto me: I was in great diſtreſs, and accordingly addreſt my ſelf to God for his relief, and he was pleaſed to give ear unto me.

2. Deliver my ſoul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitfull tongue.

2. And this was the ſumm of my prayer; O bleſſed Lord, I am fallen into the midſt of calumniators and malicious falſe perſons, who by treachery and deceit are reſolved to deſtroy me, if thou Lord be not graciouſly pleaſed to deliver me out of their hands.

* a falſe tongue, give thee, or what ſhall it add to thee?

3. [b] What ſhall * be given unto thee, or what ſhall be done unto thee, thou falſe tongue? b.

3. All the good that is to be had by ſuch company, is to be wounded incurably, and miſchieved by them.

4. Sharp arrows of the mighty with coals of juniper.

4. Their tongues are as piercing as darts red hot in a ſtout ſouldiers hands, no armour of innocence is fence againſt them.

‖ long, I

5. Woe is me that I ſojourn ‖ in [c] Meſech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar. c.

6. My ſoul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.

5, 6. O what an infelicity and ſad condition it is to be forced to ſpend ſo much time, as a ſtranger and ſojourner among ſuch barbarous unhumane people, which are always projecting miſchief againſt me?

7. I am for peace, but when I ſpeak, they are for war.

7. Let my actions and my words be never ſo friendly and pacificatory; their malice is rather accended than ſlackened thereby. The deceitfulneſs of their own hearts infuſeth jealouſies into them, makes them ſuſpect the meekneſs and friendlineſs of my behaviour to be but a ſtratagem of fraud and guile in me.

Annotations on Psal. CXX.

שִׁיר הַמַּעֲלוֹת a. Tit. Degrees] The meaning of this title שִׁיר a Psalm of Aſcents, from עָלָה to aſcend, הַמַּעֲלוֹת will I ſuppoſe beſt be learnt from Nehem. 9. 4, &c. There we find מַעֲלֵה הַלְוִיִּם the aſcent or ſcaffold or pulpit of the Levites, ſome place of advantage, whereon they ſtood when they chaunted out the forms of Praiſe. Thus we find in the inſtitution that the Levites were to ſtand, by David's laſt words, to thank and praiſe the Lord morning and evening, 1 Chron. 23. 50. and this at the eaſt or front of the altar, κατέναντι τῆς θυσιαστηρίου over againſt it, ſay the LXXII. 2 Chron. v. 12. (as before the Ark 1 Chron. 16. 4.) i. e. probably at the Eaſt gate of the Temple, before the courts of the people; for ſo ſaith Maimonides Cele Hammikdoſh, c. 3. that at both the gates of the mens and womens court, there was a ſcaffold or pulpit for the Levites, where they ſtood, twelve at leaſt, to make one ſound, to be heard in praiſing and thanking the Lord, 2 Chron. 5. 13. So we ſee it practiſed in that place of Nehemiah, Jeſhuah and Bani, &c. ſtanding up on that aſcent cried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God, v. 4. and again Jeſhuah and Kadmiel, &c. ſaid, ſtand up and bleſs the Lord your God for ever and ever, and bleſſed be thy glorious name—— Here is a double aſcent, 1. an advantage of ground, whether as on a ſcaffold, or desk, or pulpit, ſuch as is wont to be ſet up for ſuch purpoſes of publick reading, proclaiming, or other ſervices; 2. an elevation of voice. From either or both of which, rather than from the 15 ſteps or ſtairs of the Temple, which the Talmudiſts have fanſied, in compliance with the number of the 15 Pſalms here ſo ſtyled, the Pſalm which is there delivered is fitly ſtyled a Pſalm of aſcents. Accordingly the Jewiſh Arab rendreth it a Pſalm of praiſe, with lifting up the voice, which Kimchi takes notice of, as the opinion of R. Saadiah. It may be here farther obſerved, that that paſſage in Nehemiah refers to the deliverance of that people out of the captivity of Babylon; and 'tis not improbable, this title may have ſome reſpect to that alſo, the returning of the captives to their own countrey being not unfitly ſtiled an aſcent or coming up. Of this as Theodoret and Euthymius interpret, ſo 'tis certain the Syriack underſtand it, making the contents of this Pſalm to be a prayer of the people detained in Babel, and intitling the next a Pſalm מַעֲלוֹת of eduction, or aſcent out of Babel, and ſo forward in the reſt of the fifteen: and to that the Chaldee may be interpreted alſo, when it paraphraſes it, the Pſalm which was ſaid עַל מַסִּיקֵי רְתֵיכְמָא upon the aſcent from the abyſs, thereby reſembling the depth of their bottomleſs miſery in the captivity, (though 'tis not improbable, they might refer to the wild Talmudical ſtory of the riſing up of the abyſs at the building of the Temple, which with much adoe was at laſt conjured down.) What is here ſaid of this, is to be applied to the reſt of the 15 Pſalms, which carry the ſame title. Not that this and all the reſt were firſt compoſed on occaſion either of the delivery out of the captivity, or of the captivity it ſelf; but that being formerly made by David or others, on ſome other occaſion, they were then uſed, ſome in their thraldom, ſome upon their delivery, as they were proper, and thought applicable to ſome part of this occaſion. Aben Ezra reſolves it poſſible that it was no more than a Muſical tone.

מַה יִּתֵּן b. V. 3. Given to thee] The Hebrew reads מַה יִּתֵּן לְךָ what ſhall give to thee, the nominative caſe being reſerved to the end of the verſe לָשׁוֹן רְמִיָּה deceitfull tongue, thus, What ſhall a deceitfull or falſe tongue give thee? i. e. profit thee? and ſo again more explicitly, וּמַה יֹּסִיף and what ſhall the deceitfull tongue add to thee? i. e. what advantage ſhall it bring thee? Thee, i. e. the perſon who converſeth with ſuch, i. e. the Pſalmiſt here. Thus the Chaldee underſtood it, מָה יְהֵיב לָךְ מַלְשִׁינָא &c. What ſhall the detractor give thee, or what ſhall the delator add to thee by a falſe tongue? The Syriack more plainly, מָה נִתֶּן לָךְ, What ſhall deceitfull tongues give thee, or add to thee? ſo the Jewiſh Arab, He ſhall ſay to him that hath it, what is that with thee, or that thou haſt, and what ſhall a deceitfull tongue add to thee? i.e. what ſhall a man gain by ſuch a converſation, by living among deceitfull malicious men? Even חִצֵּי גִבּוֹר arrows of the ſtrong man, the military man or gyant, ſuch as men uſe in war, on purpoſe to miſchief, and ſo are שְׁנוּנִים very ſharp, and not onely ſo, but to make them enter the more certainly, and pierce the deeper, and burn together as they wound, they are heat red hot, and that in the ſcorchingeſt fire, ſuch as is that which is made of the coals of Juniper, ſaith S. Hierome, of which ‖ others have affirmed, that being once on fire they will keep the fire a year together without going out. And ſo ſaith Kimchi חמים מאד ולא יכבו they are very hot and will not be quenched, who adds that theſe coals keep fire in them when they appear dead: and ſo indeed in nature, the coal that laſts long alive, muſt caſt thick aſhes about it (and then it will ſeem dead, the life not diſcovering it ſelf through the aſhes) otherwiſe the ſulphurous parts, wherein fire conſiſts, will preſently get out. Thus is this inſtrument of the deceitfull perſons puniſhment adapted to his ſin, and is an emblem of him, the concealing hatred being as deſtructive as the long burning of it, the aſhes, as the coals of Juniper. And ſo this queſtion and anſwer being a poetical deſcription of the miſchief of ſuch company, that which follows, v. 4. Woe is me that I ſojourn, or dwell among ſuch, doth exactly accord with it.

נָרְתִּי מֶשֶׁךְ c. V. 5. Meſech] The Hebrew phraſe נָרְתִּי מֶשֶׁךְ which we render as if Meſech were the name of a place, ſeems beſt to be expounded v. 6. by רַבַּת שָׁכְנָה I have a long while dwelt, for ſo מֶשֶׁךְ, from מָשַׁךְ to draw or protract, ſeems to ſignifie adverbially long. So the LXXII. ἡ παροικία μου ἐμακρύνθη, my ſojourning is lengthened, to which as the Latin and Arabick, ſo the Syriack accords, וּלְמַלְחָמָא אֲרִיכַת, my perigrination is protracted, ſo Aquila παροικήσασα ἐν μακρυσμῷ, I was a ſtranger a long time, and Symmachus παροικῶν παρείλκυσα, I have protracted ſojourning. Thus to protract and prolong are the ſame in all languages, and ſo is מֶשֶׁךְ frequently uſed in that ſenſe of protracting, Prov. 13. 12. Pſal. 36. 11. and 85. 6. and 109. 12. and oft elſewhere, from whence is מֶשֶׁךְ a ſpace, and ſo here adverbially, or for בְּמֶשֶׁךְ for a ſpace, i. e. a long time. The Chaldee indeed take it here for a people, rendring עִם אוּסְאֵי with the Aſiaticks, and from them the latter Jews underſtand it of Tuſcany, and ſo of Italy and the Roman Empire, as Kedar following they interpret of the Saracens, or Turks. But as all the other ancient Interpreters depart from the Chaldee, ſo

‖ Schindler in the word רחם

Kimchi hath receded from this invention of his fellow Jews, and renders the place, woe is me שנמשכה that my captivity is very much lengthened, drawn out, or protracted. Should it be otherwiſe interpreted, the conjecture of the learned Bochart would be worth remembring, that מסך in Chaldee and Syriack ſignifies a ſkin, and ſo Μοσχος in Heſychius out of Nicander, κωδιον, Νικανδρος, a fleece or ſkin; from whence ſaith he, Meſech might be the name of a city, ſo called not from Meſech the ſon of Japhet, but from the ſkins with which the Arabes Scenitæ covered their tents, mentioned in the end of the verſe. But it is no leſs probable, that in the notion of ſkins, it ſhould be here joined with אֹהֳלֵי tents, which were thus covered with ſkins; and if we deduce it from מָשַׁךְ to draw, it may ſignifie a draw-wagon, or traha, and the barbarous nations that were not by agriculture fixt to one place, dwelt as well in their wagons as tents: either way it well agrees with Kedar, i. e. the progeny of Kedar, the ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. 25. 13. thoſe barbarous people of Arabia, that were called Scenitæ, becauſe they continued in tents, without houſes, and ſo the Chaldee reads it מַשְׁכְּנֵי דַרְבָּא the Tabernacles of the Arabians. To whom, as being a barbarous unhumane people, the Pſalmiſt here compares thoſe malicious deceitfull men among whom he dwels. If (becauſe the time of conſigning the Canon of Scripture, ſoon after the Captivity, will not permit it to be ſpoken literally) we ſhall interpret the Pſalm prophetically to look upon Antiochus, the analogy would well hold, for he is in Scripture expreſt as by Gog, ſo by Meſech, and deſcribed by Daniel as a flatterer, a ſpeaker of lies, a worker of deceit, and forecaſter of evil devices, &c. and then the שֹׂנְאֵי שָׁלוֹם enemies of peace, would be thoſe ſworn enemies of Jeruſalem, both the inhabitants of Aſia minor, aud the confederate Arabians. The Jewiſh Arab reads, a people that is after the way or ſect or manner of Meſech. David Kimchi, though in his Comment, as was ſaid, he expound it of the protraction of his ſojourning, yet in his Roots ſaith, it is the name of a nation mentioned in the Law, viz. Gen. 10. 2.

שׂנְאֵי שָׁלוֹם

The Hundred and Twenty Firſt PSALM.

‖ Aſcents. ſee note on Pſal. 120. a.

A Song of ‖ Degrees.

The hundred twenty firſt is a repoſe in God, and a confident expectation of ſuccour and ſafety under his protection.

1. I Will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help.

2. My help cometh [a] † from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.

† from before, or from the preſence of the Lord.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. Whatſoever, or how great ſoever my diſtreſs or preſſure be, whether bodily or ſpiritual, I have no other ſanctuary or refuge to which to apply my ſelf, but that one ſupreme of heaven, (the image of which is the Ark on Zion, that holy hill or mount where God is pleaſed to preſentiate himſelf) even to the all-ſufficient omnipotent Creator, Ruler and Governor of the world. To him I can confidently addreſs my prayers, and chearfully expect a ſeaſonable aid, which he by his holy Angels ſhall graciouſly afford me, (by the interceſſion of his own Son, who hath aſſumed my nature.) a.

3. He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved; and he that keepeth thee will not ſlumber.

4. Behold he that keepeth Iſrael ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep.

3, 4. All other guards may fail; either through the ſtrength of a more powerfull aſſailant, or being at ſome time overtaken with ſleep or wearineſs: But the watch that God affordeth us is impregnable; neither he nor his Angels, to whom he aſſigns this office of guarding, under him, all his faithfull ſervants, can ever be ſurpriſed by any ſuch advantage.

5. The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy ſhade upon thy right hand.

6. The ſun ſhall not ſmite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

5, 6. The omnipotent Lord of heaven and earth ſhall be † preſent to thee, and over-rule all his creatures, and keep thee from being miſchieved by them; his protection, as the cloud to the Iſraelites, or as a faithfull ſecond in a duel, ſhall defend thee from all approach of danger: Neither the open aſſaults in the day-time from enemy or devil, nor the ſecret ambuſhes in the night from any treacherous underminer either of the temporal or ſpiritual eſtate, (the former fitly compared to the ſcorching of the Sun, the latter to the malignant influences of the Moon) ſhall be able to doe thee any hurt.

7. The Lord ſhall preſerve thee from all evil; he ſhall preſerve thy ſoul.

7. This Lord ſhall aſſuredly defend thee from any real miſchief, of what kind ſoever, that can approach thee.

8. The Lord ſhall preſerve thy [b] going out and thy coming in, from this time forth and even for evermore.

8. He ſhall keep thee under the ſhadow of his own wings, and in the beginning, progreſs, and end of thy undertakings and deſigns, when thou goeſt out to work, or comeſt home to reſt, in thy buſineſs, or in thy retirement, his guard ſhall continually attend thee, and (if thou continue to adhere to him) never forſake or deſtitute thee. b.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXI.

a. מֵעִם יְהוָה

V. 2. From the Lord] The Hebrew is מֵעִם יְהוָה from with or before, the Lord; which the Jewiſh Arab reade מִן עִנְד from at, or with the Lord. The LXXII. reade onely παρὰ κυρίου before the Lord; but the Chaldee and the Syriack agree in מִן קֳדָם from before, or from the ſight or preſence of the Lord, referring hereby more generally to the good Angels (ſtiled the Angels of his preſence, thoſe that ſtand before the Lord, and always behold the face of God, and where they appear, there God is ſaid to be in a peculiar manner) by whoſe miniſtery mercies and deliverances are ſolemnly conveyed to godly men; or rather to Chriſt incarnate, with whoſe Humanity the Deity being inſeparably united, God is always preſent with him, and through him with us, for whom ſitting at God's right hand, he conſtantly maketh interceſſion: But more immediately referring to the Ark of God, where he is pleaſed to exhibit his preſence, and audience to the prayers of his ſervants, who there addreſs them to him; which being placed on mount Zion, that ſure is the meaning of אֶל הֶהָרִים to the hills, v. 1. to which as they then came when they could to offer up their prayers, ſo when they were hindred and detained from that perſonal addreſs, they yet turned their faces, and lift up their eyes that way, as here it is ſaid. See Dan. 6. 10. This for the full and ultimate importance of the words. But for the immediate ſenſe of them, the ſcheme ſeems to be military. The beſieged perſon daily looks to the hills, to ſee if any relief be coming from any quarter, any ſignal by fire or the like, giving intelligence of ſuccour approaching; ſo ſaith Aben Ezra as men doe in a ſiege, and ſo Kimchi alſo. And then by this ſcheme the Pſalmiſt expreſſes his own repoſe to be in God, that dwelleth above in heaven, and preſentiates himſelf to his ſervants in Zion; Our help cometh from a place higher than any earthly hill, from a more ſure deliverer.

b. צֵאתְךָ וּבוֹאֶךָ

V. 8. Going out and coming in] צֵאתְךָ וּבוֹאֶךָ going and coming, or going out and coming in, being, as here, uſed by it ſelf, without any addition, hath a different importance from what it hath when it is uſed with לִפְנֵי הָעָם before the people, 1 Sam. 18. 13. and the like. For then it imports governing or ruling onely. So v. 16. all Iſrael and Judah loved David, becauſe he went out and came in before them. So Act. 1. 21. all the time that Jeſus went in and out among us, i. e. taught us, ruled us his diſciples here on earth. But in this place, without that addition, it ſignifies more generally, doing any thing of what ſort ſoever, all actions being comprehended under one of theſe two ſorts, going out to more publick, and coming in to more private affairs; or again, going out to begin, coming in at the end of the work. The Chaldee here paraphraſe it, by going out לְפַרְנְסוּתָא (a corruption of the Greek πραγματεία) to affairs, to negotiation, and coming in לְסַטְסָק בְּאוֹרַיְתָא to the ſtudy of the Law.

The Hundred and Twenty Second PSALM.

‖ aſcents. ſee note on Pſal. 120. a.

A Song of ‖ degrees of David.

The hundred twenty ſecond is an expreſſion of great joy for a return to the benefits of God's publick ſervice, together with a prayer for continuance of thoſe peaceable opportunities. It was firſt compoſed by David, probably after his return from his flight from Abſolom, and ſolemnly ſung by the Levites upon the return from the Captivity, (ſee note on Pſal. 120. a.)

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. Bleſſed be God for the joyfull news which he hath now afforded us, the liberty to go to Jeruſalem, and to the Ark of God's preſence which is placed there, the moſt bliſsfull prerogative of peaceable publick aſſemblies, from which we have been debarred ſo long.

1. I Was glad when they ſaid unto me, Let us go into the houſe of the Lord.

2. Our feet † ſhall ſtand in thy gates, O Jeruſalem.

† have ſtood עֹמְדוֹת הָיוּ

a. 3. Jeruſalem is a lovely place, the very buildings, being ſo uniform, are very beautifull (and an emblem of that union of minds, both in charity and united interceſſions, which is the moſt amiable graceſull thing in the Church of God.)

3. Jeruſalem is builded as a city that [a] is * compact together.

* joyned to it ſelf together

b. 4. And nothing more lovely in it, than that it is the place to which all the inhabitants of the land are thrice every year obliged to go up to commemorate the mercies of God afforded to his people.

4. Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, [b] ‖ unto the teſtimony of Iſrael, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord.

‖ by, or according to the commandment, or teſtimony to Iſrael.

c. 5. Yet beſide this of the houſe and ſervice of God, there alſo the Sanhedrim, or ſupreme judicature of the nation ſitteth, that great court where the higheſt matters are decided; And there alſo is the palace where David, and the Kings of Judah deſcending lineally from David, do and ſhall conſtantly reſide.

5. For there † are [c] ſet thrones of judgment, the thrones of the houſe of David.

† ſit

6. From all theſe both civil and eccleſiaſtical conſiderations, it is the duty of all good men to pray for this place, and to love it moſt affectionately, to beſeech God to beſtow a quiet injoyment of all theſe advantages, and therein all manner of proſperity upon it. And they that thus love, and pray, and contribute their utmoſt to it, ſhall certainly gain to themſelves proſperity and temporal felicity by this means.

6. Pray for the peace of Jeruſalem; they ſhall proſper that love thee.

7. Let this therefore be our united prayer that God will pour down all his bleſſings upon this place.

7. Peace be within thy walls, and proſperity within thy palaces.

d. 8, 9. And as our prayers, ſo let our moſt earneſt indeavours be bent this way, to advance the proſperity and tranquility of it, and ſo both of Church and ſtate, which are equally concerned in it. And to this all obligations, both humane and divine, charity to our brethren, and piety to that God who is adored and glorified there, moſt ſtrictly engage us.

8. For my brethren and companions ſakes I will now * ſay, Peace be [d] within thee.

* ſpeak peace of, or on,

9. Becauſe of the houſe of the Lord our God, I will ſeek thy good.

a. שְׁחֻבָּרָה — V. 3. Compact] This phraſe of שְׁחֻבָּרָה לָהּ יַחְדָּו aſſociated (from חבר to joyn or aſſociate) or joyned to it ſelf together, refers critically to that which the ſacred ſtory gives us of that city. The ſite of it was upon a very unequal ground; the low town was mean and diſmantled; the caſtle on the hill was fortified, and held as a place of ſtrength; which being taken by Joab, David built up the whole, and ſo made it one city, aſſociated and joyned together, 1 Chron. 11. 7, 8. David dwelt in the caſtle, and built the city round about, and Joab repaired the reſt of the city.

b. עֵדוּת לְיִשְׂרָאֵל — V. 4. Unto the teſtimony of Iſrael] doth literally ſignifie, the teſtimonies (as that imports commands given) to Iſrael. So עוד the verb, as it ſignifies to teſtifie, is alſo to admoniſh; and ſo teſtimonies and ſtatutes and judgments, Deut. 4. 45. are all uſed in the ſame ſenſe, for the commands delivered by Moſes from God; and ſo ch. 6. 20. What mean the teſtimonies — and frequently in this book of Pſalms, God's teſtimonies, being that which he hath revealed, and thereby teſtified of his will. So when we reade of the Ark of the teſtimony, 'tis in relation to the Decalogue which was kept in the Ark, Exod. 25. 16. thou ſhalt put into the Ark the teſtimony which I ſhall give thee. And ſo here the teſtimony to Iſrael is the command given to that people of going up from all parts of the land to Jeruſalem three times a year, to the Feaſts. That is meant in the beginning of the verſe, Thither the tribes go up, not to, but by, or according to the teſtimony to Iſrael, the law given to that purpoſe. The preposition indeed is wanting, and ſo muſt of neceſſity be ſupplied (rather than to make the teſtimony the notation of the place, viz. the Ark) the ſenſe being thus moſt current, Whither, i. e. to Jeruſalem, the tribes go up, i. e. all the Jews whereſoever inhabiting, according to the teſtimony, or law given to Iſrael (ſo ל imports) to give thanks unto the name of the Lord, which was the end of their going up, and of the command which required it at the feſtivals, the ſolemn times of thankſgiving. The Chaldee have another notion of it, and render it God's teſtifying to Iſrael שְׁכִנְתֵּיהּ &c. that his majeſtatick preſence ſhall abide among them when they come to confeſs unto the name of the Lord. But the former rendring is more proper and agreeable. And accordingly the learned Caſtellio reads it, ex edito Iſraelitis oraculo, from, or by the oracle delivered to the Iſraelites. The Jewiſh Arab reads וכאנת מחצרא and it is the place of convention to, or for Iſrael, taking it in the notion that the words derived from יעד have.

c. כִּסְאוֹת לְמִשְׁפָּט יָשְׁבוּ — V. 5. Thrones of judgment] That the כִּסְאוֹת לְמִשְׁפָּט ſeats for judgment here ſignifie the Sanhedrim, or higheſt Court of Judicature, there can be no queſtion. Theſe are ſaid to ſit (ſo יָשְׁבוּ literally imports) at Jeruſalem, as being the Metropolis of Judea, and ſo the ſeat of that greateſt Council, as leſſer cities are of the conſiſtories or leſſer conſeſſus, called κρίσεις judgments Matt. 5. 22. The onely difficulty is, whether כִּסְאוֹת לְבֵית דָּוִד the thrones for the houſe of David, be but another phraſe to expreſs the ſame thing. If it be, then the expreſſion is poetical, to ſet down the grandeur of that ſupreme Sanhedrim, that it is a royal judicature, and ſo as it were the ſeat of the King himſelf; as among us the King's Bench is the title of our great court of judicature, where in the King's name judgment is given to the people. But 'tis more probable, that it is added as a third argument of the glory of Jeruſalem, that there is the regal throne, where now David, as after him his ſucceſſours ſhould reſide. The Chaldee reade it to this ſenſe, for interpreting the latter part of the houſe of the ſanctuary, they ſay, that there are ſeats prepared לְמַלְכֵי &c. for the Kings of the houſe of David.

d. בְּךָ — V. 8. Within thee] The ſuffix ב is beſt rendred with, or of, or concerning. The Chaldee retein בְּךָ, but the Syriack reade ܒܟ of thee, or on thee, the LXXII. περὶ σοῦ of, or concerning thee; all of them joyning it with אֲדַבְּרָה נָּא I will ſpeak peace on thee, or of thee, i. e. bleſs thee, and pray for all God's bleſſings and felicities upon thee. The Jewiſh Arab, I will ſpeak of thy peace or ſafety.

The Hundred and Twenty Third PSALM.

A Song of ‖ Degrees. ‖ aſcents.

The hundred twenty third is a prayer for deliverance from proud inſulting enemies, and an act of full affiance and dependence on God for it.

1. UNto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the heavens.

Paraphraſe.

1. O thou ſupreme God of heaven, to thee I addreſs my prayers, on thee I wholly depend for a gracious anſwer to them in this time of diſtreſs and calamity.

2. Behold, as the eyes of ſervants [a] look unto the hand of their Maſters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her Miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, untill that he have mercy upon us.

2. Whatſoever miſery is now upon us, comes certainly from thy juſt chaſtening hand; to that we look, and wait, and begg, and beſeech. As ſervants or handmaids, when they are chaſtened by their Lords or Miſtreſſes, bear it with all meekneſs, without murmuring or repining, onely look to the hand that ſmiteth them, and beſeech and importune for releaſe, and patiently expect that good time, when the offended Lord ſhall ſay, that it is enough, and ſo withdraw his ſcourge, and return to mercy: ſo have we under all the inflictions that our ſins have juſtly brought upon us from thee, thee, behaved our ſelves under the diſcipline of thy rod, acknowledging the moſt juſt original, and authour of all our miſeries, our ſelves the original, and thy juſtice, provoked by our ſins, the authour of them; not looking ſo much to the inſtruments or executioners of thy wrath, as to that ſupreme divine hand that ſmiteth, and accordingly applying our ſelves onely to thee in our prayers and petitions for releaſe, when thou ſhalt ſee it moſt expedient for us.

3, 4. Be thou therefore now pleaſed, if it may be thy will, at length to withdraw thy chaſtening hand from us, to conſider the weight of the calamity and tyranny that lies upon us from contumelious and inſolent oppreſſours, and now ſeaſonably to ſend us relief, and deliver us out of their hands.

3. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us; for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4. Our ſoul is exceedingly filled with the ſcorning of † thoſe that are [b] at eaſe, and with the contempt of the [c] * proud.

b. c.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXIII.

V. 2. Look unto the hand] What ſort of looking it is which is here meant, muſt be judged by the אֶל יַד to the hand. For indeed the original ſtyle is elliptical, and the word look is not there to be found, but is ſupplied by the ſenſe, the eyes of ſervants to the hand of their lords, or maſters. Now of ſuch lords it is certain, as alſo of the miſtreſs of a family over the שִׁפְחָה inferiour maid-ſervant, that they had power not onely of commanding, but of chaſtiſing; and the latter of theſe is more frequently expreſſed by the hand, the former more ſignificantly by the eye, or tongue; the one directing, the other commanding. And ſo the eyes of the ſervant or handmaid to the hand of the lord or miſtreſs may very fitly note the ſervant under chaſtiſement turning the eyes and looking to the hand that ſtriketh, and beſeeching, importuning mercy. And this as an argument of a meek, patient, and reforming diſpoſition. So Iſa. 9. 13. it is objected unto the people, that they turned not to him that ſmiteth them, neither do they ſeek the Lord of hoſts. And to this ſenſe the context doth wholly incline it, for in the application ſo it lies, even ſo our eyes אֶל יְהוָה to the Lord our God, i. e. look, or wait, or are turned to the Lord our God, untill he have mercy upon us: and then follows the importunate prayer, Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us, ; where the mercy that is waited for, and the mone and importunity for mercy, is juſt the deſcription of one that is under chaſtiſement, and ſo determins the ſenſe to that.

a. אֶל יַד

V. 4. Thoſe that are at eaſe] From שָׁאַן and שָׁאֲנַן to be quiet, at eaſe, is the noun שַׁאֲנַן uſed not onely for quiet, ſecure, in the original notion, but, by metonymie of the Cauſe for the Effect, for inſolent, ſcornfull, becauſe eaſe and ſecurity makes men ſuch: τὸ γὰρ ὑβριστὰς ποιεῖ, ſaith Ariſtotle in his Rhetoricks, riches and worldly felicity makes men inſolent and contumelious deſpiſers of others. The Syriack renders it ܡܣܟܪܢ contemners, ſcorners, deriders, from בּוּז to ſcorn, to mock.

b. שַׁאֲנַנִּים

Ibid. Proud] The Hebrew גְּאֵיוֹנִים here, ſeems to be no ſimple, but compound word, made up of גַּאִים or גַּאי proud, and יוֹנִים from יָנָה to afflict, and ſo to ſignifie proud oppreſſours. The Chaldee ſeem to take notice of this, rendring it by two words, סָבְרָנַיָּא ſcorners, from בָּסַר to contemn, וְגַיְוְתָנַיָּא and proud. The Jewiſh Arab reads, of mocking with, or from the armies, and contempt from the ſtout, or from the armies. Beſides this active notion of the ſcorning and contempt, the paſſive may alſo be conſidered, for the word נאן is the Epithet of excellent perſons. So R. Shererah Gaon, R. Saadias Gaon, &c. and the Talmudiſts that lived ſtreight after the cloſe of the Gemara, were called גאונים as a mark of honour; and if that were the word here, the deſpight of them muſt be deſpight which they ſuffered, and the reproach of the quiet ſo alſo, taking שַׁאֲנַן, as frequently 'tis, in a good ſenſe; but taking גְּאֵיוֹנִים as a compound, the high or great oppreſſours, it muſt be active deſpight, that which they doe to others.

c. גְּאֵיוֹנִים

The Hundred Twenty Fourth P S A L M.

A Song of ‖ Degrees of David.

The hundred twenty fourth is an acknowledgment of God's aſſiſtance, and a thankfull commemoration of the deliverances wrought ſignally by him. It ſeems firſt to have been compoſed by David upon his deliverances from the hands of Saul, and after of Abſalom, and being very applicable, was appointed to be ſung by the Levites after the return from the Captivity, and is very agreeable to any other eminent deliverance wrought by God for his ſervants.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5. It is now full time to look back with humility and thankfulneſs on the dangers and miſeries we have paſt, and devoutly to acknowledge to whom our whole deliverance is to be imputed. 'Tis now moſt evident to us, that the miſchief deſigned us was no leſs than utter ruine and deſtruction, that the power of the deſigners was equal to their malice, and that no humane means were any way able to have reſiſted or diverted them; they were ſo mightily inraged and violently bent againſt us. One onely means there was which could avail us in this condition, the ſupreme, omnipotent, irreſiſtible ſtrength of heaven; and that hath ſignally appeared for us, and reſcued us out of this ruine.

1. IF it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide, now may Iſrael ſay,
2. If it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us,
3. They had ſwallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled againſt us.
4. Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the † ſtream had gone over our ſoul.
5. Then * the [a] proud waters had gone over our ſoul.

† torrent נַחְלָה

* it had paſt over our ſoul, even ſwelling or proud waters.

6. Bleſſed

6. Bleſſed be the Lord, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

6. His holy and glorious name be now and ever magnified, that he hath not permitted them to have their will, but timely delivered us from their rage.

7. Our ſoul is eſcaped, as a bird out of the ſnare of the foulers: the ſnare is broken, and we are eſcaped.

8. Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.

7, 8. And now being ſafely returned from our captivity, we have leiſure to review our former ſtate, the very ſame that the ſilly bird is in, when it is caught in a gin or ſpringe; we were faſt in their hands, they had long purſued their game, and at length were poſſeſt of it, we were taken in their nets. And in this ſeaſonable point of time God came and diſappointed their malice, and reſcued us out of their hands, (David by the death of Abſalom, the Jews by the Perſians breaking the Chaldean Monarchy, to which the deliverance of the Jews was conſequent.) And ſo our deliverance is to be acknowledged as an immediate work of God's interpoſition, and as ſignal an evidence of his overruling power as the creation of the whole world was, when it was wrought by a word of his.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXIV.

a. V. 5. The proud waters] This verſe is from the Hebrew thus literally to be rendred, אָזַי עָבַר עַל נַפְשֵׁנוּ Then had it paſt over our ſoul (עָבַר in the ſingular belonging to the נַחֲלָה torrent in the former verſe:) then follows by oppoſition הַמַּיִם הַזֵּידוֹנִים ſwelling, lifted up, or proud waters. The word is from זוּר to ſwell or boil as water in a pot over the fire, and from thence 'tis applied metaphorically to other things. And by comparing the Arabick, it is probable that the ſignification of the Root is more general, for any encreaſe, or ſuperabundance. The LXXII. here render it τὸ ὕδωρ τὸ ἀνυπόστολον, by that phraſe I ſuppoſe meaning very deep waters, either unfordable, where there is no ſtanding, or elſe rapid, againſt which there is no holding out, no reſiſting. The Syriack reade ‖ מַיִם רַבִּים copious, plentifull waters. Thus the meaning is clear, the torrent (v. 4.) had paſt over our ſoul, and that torrent farther expreſt by ſwelling or proud, i. e. great plenty of waters breaking in, for ſuch is a torrent. The Jewiſh Arab tranſlates it, Then they had drowned us as water, and had been as a torrent over our ſouls. The LXXII. here, as in the former verſe, reade διῆλθεν ἡ ψυχὴ ἡμῶν τὸ ὕδωρ, as there χειμαῤῥουν διῆλθεν ἡ ψυχὴ, our ſoul paſt through the water, and our ſoul paſt through the torrent; but this, I ſuppoſe, as a paraphraſe, not ſo much to expreſs the condition in, or under, as the eſcape and deliverance out of the danger: but the Hebrew עַל נַפְשֵׁנוּ over our ſoul, will not bear that. And the Chaldee and Syriack exactly follow the Hebrew.

Paraphraſe.

1. THey that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Sion, which cannot be removed, but ſtandeth faſt for ever.

1, 2. There is no ſuch perfect ſecurity as that of the faithfull ſervant of God, which repoſeth his intire truſt and dependence on him. He that doth ſo, ſtands as faſt as the holy mountain whereon God himſelf is pleaſed to reſide, which certainly no power of man can be able to remove out of its place. The guard of God's Angels and bleſſed protection ſurrounding him, cannot better be expreſt than by the ſituation of Jeruſalem with hills incompaſſing it; for as thoſe hills are ſure to keep that city ſafe from all incounters of winds or tempeſts, ſo doth the bleſſed protection of God ſurround all faithfull ſervants of his.

(See note on Pſal. 16. f.)

4. Doe good, O Lord, unto thoſe that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXV.

a. הָרִים סָבִיב לָהּ

V. 2. As the mountains] The Hebrew here is elliptical, and beſt ſupplied by adding the verb hath, thus, יְהוָשָׁלַם הָרִים סָבִיב לָהּ Jeruſalem hath hills round about her; and this a fit expreſſion of the ſafety and ſecurity of the ſituation, being thus guarded from winds and tempeſts; and this a ſeaſonable reſemblance, to expreſs the benefit and ſafety which ariſeth from God's protection, which incompaſſeth the pious man. The LXXII. have here, by varying the punctation, made this other ſenſe of the two firſt verſes, Οἱ πεποιθότες ἐπὶ Κύριον ὡς ὄρος Σιὼν, They that truſt in the Lord are as the hill Sion; and then in another ſentence, ὁ οικῶν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, He that inhabits Jeruſalem ſhall not be ſhaken for ever, Ὄρη κυκλῳ αὐτῆς—— The mountains are round about it, and the Lord is round about his people. In which rendring they have made no other change (beſide that of the pointing) ישֵׁב ſave that for יֹשֵׁב ſhall ſtand, they ſeem to have read יוֹשֵׁב the participle, ſtanding, or dwelling, which is anſwerable to κατοικῶν. But the Chaldee and Syriack accord to our ordinary reading and punctation.

b. הַמְּטִים

V. 5. Turn aſide unto] The Hebrew הַמְּטִים (from נָטָה to bend, diſtort, pervert) regularly ſignifies perverting, diſtorting; and being joyned here with עֲקַלְקַלּוֹתָם, which we rightly render crooked ways, it ſignifies a perverting thoſe ways which are already crooked, i. e. going on ſtill, and improving their courſe of impiety, in ſtead of reforming or ſtrengthening, growing worſe and worſe. And to ſuch obdurate ſinners, which daily accumulate ſin on ſin, the vengeance belongs which is here ſpoken of, viz. to be caſt out, rejected from God (ſo יוֹלִיכֵם ſignifies, making to go, or walk; either bidding them go, Go ye curſed into everlaſting fire, or as ἐκβάλλειν and ἀπωσασθαι, to caſt out, and ſend out, is all one, ἀπάξει ſay the LXXII. here, he ſhall drive them out) and that אֶת פֹּעֲלֵי הָאָוֶן the workers of iniquity, as when Chriſt ſaith, they ſhall have their portion with hypocrites, or unbelievers. The Chaldee here adds בְּגֵיהִנֵּם into hell, the place where ſuch muſt expect their payment.

The Hundred and Twenty Sixth P S A L M.

The hundred twenty ſixth celebrates the return from captivity, and the great joyfulneſs thereof, after their former ſorrow, and ſeems to have been firſt compiled by Eſdras, or ſome of that Age.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1,2. After a long and a miſerable captive ſtate, it hath at length pleaſed God to bring us back again to the injoyments of his publick ſervice in his holy place. This is a moſt joyfull bleſſing to us, to be celebrated with mirth, and feſtivals, and ſinging of Pſalms, being as it were the reſtoring of a joyfull comfortable ſtate of health to a numerous people that were long under a dolorous epidemical diſeaſe. The mercy ſo great and unexpected, and wrought ſo wonderfully for us, that the very heathens themſelves could not but acknowledge it a work of God's great power, and ſpecial favour to us.

1. WHen the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that [a] † dream.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXVI.

a. חֲלֹמִים

V. 1. Dream] The Hebrew חֲלֹמִים ſeems to be beſt rendred by the Chaldee הֵוִוּ מְרַעְיָא דְּאִתְחַיָּן as thoſe that are recovered from ſickneſs, for 'tis but a figurative ſignification of חֲלוֹם, wherein 'tis uſed for dreaming, Jer. 23. 25. and elſewhere. The word ſignifies originally fat or groſs, and thence healthy

healthy and ſtrong, and recovered to a firm Athletick habit of body. So Iſa. 38. 16. וְתְחַיֵּנִי thou wilt recover me, as appears by what follows, and make me to live. To this ſenſe, and not to that of dreaming, all the ancient interpreters ſeem to have underſtood it: the LXXII. reade ὅτι ἐβοηθήθημεν, the Latin conſolati, and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick, as men comforted, i. e. reſtored to ſtrength again (as in the place of Iſaiah παρακληθεὶς ἔζησεν, having recovered made to live;) not miſreading it חֹסָלִים from חָמַל to ſpare (as ſome fanſie) but by this of comfort, expreſſing health of mind, which is oppoſite to ſorrow, and expreſt by laughter and ſinging, v. 2. In this ſenſe the Syriack alſo reade ܐܝܟ ܕܚܕܝ ܠܒܝ as they that rejoyce. And this is moſt probably the meaning of it.

b. נֶגֶב

V. 4. South] The Hebrew נֶגֶב ſignifies a dry and deſart place, Jud. 1. 15. Thou haſt given me the land חַנֶּגֶב of drineſs, a dry and a barren land, give me ſprings of waters. So Iſa. 21. 1. As whirlwinds in the dry ground. The LXXII. both there and here render it νότον the ſouth: and ſo by a metonymie the word ſignifies, becauſe the ſouthern parts, by reaſon of the heat of the ſun, are dry. But in this place the adjunct rivers doth ſufficiently evidence how 'tis to be underſtood queſtionleſs for a dry ground, which wants אֲפִיקִים torrents, floods to inrich it: for to thoſe floods on a dry ground is this return to captives fitly compared. And thus the Chaldee at large paraphraſes it, Lord, return our captivity as the earth is turned כַּד נַבְּעִין when the ſprings or goings out of water break out in time of drineſs. Yet if by the ſouth we underſtand a ſouthern countrey, as Ægypt and the like, which being very dry, makes uſe of overflowings to inrich the grounds, and in its greateſt exigence, in the heat of ſummer, when parcht and dried up, to all humane expectation utterly hopeleſs; the melted ſnow of Æthiopia ſends down plenty of water to it, and thence the whole countrey is fully irrigated, the ſenſe will be ſtill the ſame; for then the ſouth, and dry ground, will be the ſame thing. To which purpoſe 'tis obſervable that Æthiopia in Scripture is called the ſouth, βασίλισσα νότου, Matt. 12. 42. the Queen of the South, i. e. of Sheba, or Meroe. And therefore Abu Walid rendring it the South, gives the reaſon of mentioning that eſpecially, becauſe, ſaith he, of the drineſs of the region, and probability of dearth therein, did not God, when they even deſpair, cauſe waters to flow on their ground. So R. Tanchum makes either meaning to be indifferent. The Jewiſh Arab renders the place, Lord, turn our captivity, as pools which return to the deſart.

c. מָשְׁךְ

V. 6. Precious] The Hebrew here reads מָשֶׁךְ הַזָּרַע. Now מָשֶׁךְ from מָשַׁךְ to draw, ſignifies a ſmall meaſure, ſuch as may readily be drawn without any aſſiſtance of wheels, &c. So the Chaldee render it, נַגָּרָא ‖ traham, a ſledge, or a dray uſed for ſlighter purpoſes, and ſo a cart to carry ſeed to the fields. This is of a ſmall ſiſe, containing little; and accordingly Job 38. 18. מָשְׁךְ חָכְמָה moſt probably ſignifies a little of wiſedom. The copies of the LXXII. there reade ἔλαχιστον σοφίας; it ſhould be ſure ἐλαχιστον σοφίας, a ſmall carriage of wiſedom, which is there preferred before the richeſt jewels. In like manner the מָשֶׁךְ or ſmall carriage of ſeed is oppoſed to the ſheaves in the plural, the (perhaps) many wagon-loads of thoſe which are brought home in the harveſt. And thus no queſtion it is to be underſtood, not of precious ſeed, which is not ſo fitly oppoſed to the ſheaves, but of the ſmall contemptible quantity of ſeed that is ſown, and comes back multiplied in the harveſt. The LXXII. and the Syriack and Arabick and Latin and Æthiopick do not at all interpret the word, but onely reade βάλλοντες τὰ σπέρματα αὐτῶν, caſting or carrying out their ſeed; and the reſt to the ſame ſenſe. But the Jewiſh Arab reads expreſly, וירסל &c. and carrieth a baſket of ſeed, or ſeed-lip: and ſo Abu Walid interprets מַשָּׁךְ for ſuch a veſſel in which the ſower carrieth his ſeed.

The Hundred and Twenty Seventh PSALM.

A Song of Degrees † for Solomon.

† of לַמַּעֲלוֹת

The hundred twenty ſeventh is thought to have been firſt compoſed by Solomon, (whoſe name being Jedidiah may be referred to v. 2.) and then is his compendium of Eccleſiaſtes, to ſet down the vanity of worldly ſolicitude without God's bleſſing, as in all things, ſo in that of children, the greateſt bleſſing of life. It was one of thoſe that were by the Levites ſung aloud in commemoration of God's mercy in the return from the captivity.

1. EXcept the Lord [a] build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2. * It is vain for you to riſe up early, to ſit up late, to eat the bread of ſorrows; ‖ for ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep.

1, 2, 3. There is no way in the world to attain any ſecular wealth or ſafety, ſave onely from the bleſſing of God, the authour and diſpenſer of all good things. Without his ſpecial protection, 'tis not all the guards of men which can ſecure or preſerve a city. And as little is it in the power of humane ſolicitude, or of a multitude of wives and concubines (ſuch as Solomon had in greateſt abundance) to have children to inherit it, when 'tis gathered. For as to the former of theſe, wicked men that inceſſantly moil, and cark, and drudge for the acquiring it, and never injoy any part of the comforts of this life, through the vehement purſuit of riches, are generally fruſtrated and diſappointed in their aims: whereas on the contrary, thoſe that have God's bleſſing, thrive inſenſibly, become very proſperous, and yet never looſe any ſleep in the purſuit of it. And for the latter, that of children, it is a particular bleſſing of God's, from whom all increaſe comes, and he diſpenſeth it as he ſees good, as a preſent reward to the piety and other vertues of men.

As the military man guards himſelf with weapons, arrows and darts, &c. ſo the maſter of a family is fortified both from hoſtile invaſions, and all other inſolencies and moleſtations, by the multitude and ſtrength of his children, who are ready ſtill to back him and defend him at all turns, from the injuries, of any kind, which the open violence or more ſecret fraud of men can deſign againſt him, in the field, or in any court of judicature.

a. V. 1. Build] The right underſtanding of this Pſalm, the connexion ſpecially of the three firſt verſes of it, depends on obſerving the notion of יִבְנֶה בַּיִת building an houſe, as that is the work not of the Architect, but the Father. For ſo to build (from whence is the name בֵּן a ſon) is to procreate and bring up children, by which houſes, i. e. families, are built up, begun, ſupported, and continued. So Gen. 16. 2. 'tis Sarah's ſaying to Abraham, Go in unto my maid, it may be that אִבָּנֶה I ſhall be built by her, i. e. I ſhall have children to build up a ſolitary childleſs family. To this appertains that of the midwives, Exod. 1. 21. that becauſe they feared God, he built them houſes, gave them children to ſupport their families. So Ruth. 4. 11. of Rachel and Leah 'tis ſaid, that they two בָּנוּ built the houſe of Iſrael, i. e. brought all that number of children to Jacob, by which that nation (more than family) was repleniſhed. So Deut. 25. 9. of him that would not take his brother's wife, and raiſe up ſeed to him, the phraſe is, he would not build up the houſe, (יִבְנֶה אֶת בֵּית) of his brother. So 1 Chron. 17. 10. when Nathan tells David, that the Lord will build him an houſe, it is explained v. 11. I will raiſe up thy ſeed after thee, which ſhall be of thy ſons, and I will eſtabliſh his kingdom. So again v. 23, and 24, and 25. And thus I ſuppoſe it is to be taken in this place, building an houſe, for raiſing a family, begetting children, and providing riches, inheritance for them. For of theſe two things the erecting a family conſiſts; 1. gathering of wealth and riches, then 2. begetting ſome body to inherit it: and of both theſe the Pſalmiſt here ſpeaks diſtinctly in the two following verſes; firſt of gathering the wealth, v. 2. riſing early, ſitting up late, eating the bread of ſorrows, all which is certainly deſigned to that end; then of children, that they are an heritage and reward of the Lord, v. 3. and ſo cannot be acquired by man's ſolicitude, but are wholly imputable to God's bleſſing. As for the other branch of the firſt verſe, that of guarding the city, it ſeems to be inſerted as an inſtance to the ſame purpoſe, vulgarly underſtood among men: 'Tis God muſt guard, or elſe watchmen will do little good; and ſo unleſs God build, all the induſtry of men will not be ſucceſsfull to it. The LXXII. in the copies we now have for riſing early, and ſitting up late, reade τὸ ὀρθρίζειν, ἐγείρεσθε μ῀ τὸ καθῆσθαι, but this probably in the former part is a corruption of the copy, to be mended thus, τὸ ὀρθρίζειν ἐγείρεσθαι: for thus מַשְׁכִּימֵי קוּם מַשְׁכִּימֵי קוּם haſtening in the morning to riſe, will be exactly rendred ὀρθρίζειν ἐγείρεσθαι. As for מְאַחֲרֵי שָׁבֶת, which in ſenſe we duly render, ſitting up late, or literally, being late to reſt, foreſlowing of going to bed, they reade μ῀ τὸ καθῆσθαι, as if it were אַחֲרֵי the adverb, with an affix. In both theſe miſtakes the Latin follow the Greek copies, and reade, vanum eſt vobis ante lucem ſurgere, ſurgite poſtquam ſederitis, It is vain for you to riſe before light, riſe after you have ſate. But the Syriack leave them, and reade moſt clearly, vain are they לְמַקְדְּמִים לְמַסְפְּסִים that are early to riſe, and late to ſit down or reſt, eating bread with ſorrows—— which is the fitteſt rendring of the participles in regimine. It follows בֵּן יִתֵּן, we render, בֵּן יִתֵּן ſo he gives his beloved ſleep; but the LXXII. more ſignificantly, ὅταν δῶ, when, or whereas, or ſince he, i. e. God, gives his beloved ſleep, freely beſtows and affords them reſt and comfort of life, and withall provides as much wealth for them and their families, and indeed much more, than they that moil inceſſantly, and deny themſelves the enjoyment of all worldly comforts moſt, by ſo doing to inrich their poſterity. And that thus בֵּן ſignifies, not onely ſo (as the Jewiſh Arab reads כדל ſo) but when, may appear by the frequent uſe of עַד בֵּן for hucuſque or, hactenus, for in that phraſe בֵּן muſt needs have the notation of time.

V. 4. Youth] בְּנֵי הַנְּעוּרִים are queſtionleſs children of the youth, as thoſe are oppoſed to children of the old age, Gen. 37. 3. Of theſe it is frequently obſerved, that they are the ſtrongeſt, being, as Jacob ſaith of Reuben, his might, the beginning of his ſtrength. And of ſuch it is here ſaid, that they are like arrows in the hand of a mighty man, defend him from hoſtile invaſions as well as weapons can. The Chaldee reads דְּעוֹלֵימָא of the young man; Symmachus (with the Syriack) τῶν νεόντων, of the youth; the Jewiſh Arab either children of youth, or children of young men, the word both ſignifying youth, and being likewiſe the plural of שָׁאב a young man; but the LXXII. and the Latin, ἐκτιναγμάτων excuſſorum, from the original uſe of נָעַר excuſſit, from whence indeed comes both נַעַר an infant, and נְעוּרִים the age from childhood to twenty five years old. So for אַשְׁפָּתוֹ his quiver, v. 5. they reade ἐπιθυμίαν αὐτῶν, his deſire; but that probably by way of paraphraſe, filling his quiver with children being but a poetical expreſſion for having as many as he deſires.

b. בְּנֵי נְעוּרִים

V. 5. The gate] שַׁעַר the gate of the city is the place of Judicature, their courts being there kept, Deut. 25. 7. (and the places of execution a little without the gates, Heb. 13. 12.) So Deut. 21. 19. Zach. 8. 16. And ſo the Chaldee interprets here בְּתָרַע בֵּית דִּינָא in the gate of the houſe of judgment. There contentions and ſuits are heard and determined, and by way of preparation to that are pleaded; and that is here meant by כִּי יְדַבְּרוּ אֶת אוֹיְבִים when they ſpeak with their enemies, their accuſers or plaintiffs, there. The Chaldee reads אֲרוּם יִנָּצוּן when they contend, or manage any ſuit. For to thoſe uſes mens children, as friends and aſſiſtants, are uſefull to their parents, as well as to repel open force or violence. The Jewiſh Arab reads in places of convention.

The

The Hundred and Twenty Eighth Pſalm.

A Song of Degrees.

The hundred and twenty eighth is a ſhort enumeration of the preſent felicities which from God's ſpecial bleſſing are aſcertain'd to every pious man. It was on that account thought fit to be ſolemnly pronounced by the Levites, and ſung after the return from the captivity, as a ſpecial eminent bleſſing of God to his people.

1. BLeſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways.

Paraphraſe.

1. There is no ſuch aſſurance of the comforts and felicities of this life, as that which is made over by God to all pious obedient ſervants of his.

2. For thou ſhalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy ſhalt thou be, and it ſhall be well with thee.

2. Such men ſhall not fail of a bleſſing on all their honeſt labours, but have plenty here, and, which is much more, take comfort in injoying that plenty, which covetous worldly men never doe; and after an age of felicity and proſperity here continued (ſave onely when God ſees fit to give his mixture of the croſs) ſhall be tranſplanted to † eternal immarceſcible joys.

טֹב לְךָ † לְעַלְמָא דְּאָתֵי
Good ſhall be to thee in the world to come. Chal.

a. 3. Thy wife ſhall be as the * fruitfull vine by the ſides of thine houſe; thy children like Olive plants round about thy table.
4. Behold thus ſhall the man be bleſſed that feareth the Lord.

3, 4. One prime and ſpecial bleſſing of heaven it is, that he ſhall have a fruitfull wife, and a plentifull and proſperous family of children. Of the former of which the cluſters of ſuch a vine as may for its fertility be ſtiled the great bearer, (hanging ſo thick, that they even cover the walls of the houſe where they were wont to be planted) is the fitteſt reſemblance; and of the latter, the verdure of the Olive is a proper emblem, with which as the tables without doors were wont to be ſurrounded, ſo ſhall his table be adorned and incompaſſed with a multitude of flouriſhing children. All true temporal felicity is compriſed in this, and this ſhall be the pious man's portion.

5. The Lord ſhall bleſs thee out of Zion, and thou ſhalt ſee the good of Jeruſalem all the days of thy life.
6. Yea thou ſhalt ſee thy childrens children, and peace upon Iſrael.

5, 6. And whatever elſe he can ſtand in need of, it ſhall be performed to him by God, in anſwer to his prayers which he offers up in his holy place: and as an accompliſhment of felicity to him, his interceſſions ſhall be heard for others, even for the publick of the nation; he ſhall be an inſtrument and a witneſs of good to the whole land; God ſhall be atoned by ſuch as he, and turn the captivity of his people by way of return to his prayers and faith and patience. God ſhall inlarge his days, and crown them with that double bleſſing of old age, firſt, the ſight of a numerous poſterity, and ſecondly, the reſtoring of peace and proſperity to the Kingdom.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXVIII.

a. נֶפֶן פֹּרִיָּה

V. 3. Fruitfull vine] In all countreys the ſeveral ſorts of vines have ſeveral names and appellations, among the Jews שׂרֵקָה and בָּסֹר &c. and one ſort ſeems here to be known by the title of נֶפֶן פֹּרִיָּה the fruit-bearing vine, as among us tis ordinarily to ſtyle ſuch a kind of fruit the great bearer. Vines, it ſeems, were then planted on the ſides of houſes, as now they are among us, and not onely in vineyards, to ſtand by themſelves; and to that alſo the Pſalmiſt here refers. So likewiſe of Olive-plants 'tis obſervable, not onely that tables were dreſt up with the boughs of them, ramis felicis Olivæ, but that in the Eaſtern countries they were uſually planted (as in arbours) to ſhade the table, entertainments being made without doors, in gardens, under that umbrage, which gave all the liberty of the cool winds and refreſhing blaſts. An image whereof we have Gen. 18. 4. waſh your feet, and reſt your ſelves under the tree; and a full expreſſion, Heſt. 1. 5. the King made a feaſt in the court of the garden of the King's palace.

The Hundred and Twenty Ninth P S A L M.

A Song of Degrees.

The hundred twenty ninth is the recounting of the many dangers of God's people, and the many wonderfull deliverances which God hath afforded them, and foretelleth the utter deſtruction of all the enemies thereof. It ſeemeth to have been compoſed by Ezra, or ſome of that time, at the return from the captivity.

1. ‖ MAny a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Iſrael now ſay:

Paraphraſe.

3. The [a] plowers plowed upon my back, they made long their furrows.
4. The Lord is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

5, 6, 7, 8. And now their turns shall come of affliction and discomfiture. All our enemies, oppressors of the Church of God, shall be disappointed of their prey, and pursued with the curse of God, a blasting from heaven; their pride and flourishing condition shall without any arms of ours be speedily brought to nought. In stead of a prosperous harvest of all their oppressions and injustices, they shall reap nothing but emptiness and beggery. And all that see them shall discern God's curse upon them, and think that they have but their deserts, and abstain from paying them those civilities which are afforded to other men, Ruth 2. 4. 2 Jo. 10. not wish them any better success than what they have. Thus hath God at length magnified his deliverances to us, and his judgments on our enemies.

Annotations on Psal. CXXIX.

[a] חָרְשׁוּ חֹרְשִׁים

V. 3. Plowers plowed] The meaning of the phrase חָרְשׁוּ חֹרְשִׁים will be discerned by two circumstances in the context, גַּב the back, and עֲבוֹת cords, in the next verse. For as חָרַשׁ signifies to dig or cut the ground, and so to plough; so 'tis simply to cut, or carve, or grave. So Jer. 17. 1. חֲרוּשָׁה it is graven in the table of the heart. So Exod. 35. 33. 'tis cutting of stones. And being here applied to the back of captives, and cords being the instruments of it, in all reason it is to be understood of scourging, which cuts, and as it were digs, and ploughs, and makes furrows in the flesh, and the longer the cords of the scourges are, the longer are the wounds and furrows. As for the doubling of the word, that signifies the great sharpness and severity, they scourging scourged on my back, i. e. scourged me most cruelly; in proportion to רַבַּת v. 1. which belongs to the sharpness of the affliction, the soreness of the stripes, and not to the frequency of them, which is otherwise sufficiently expresst by from my youth. Thus certainly the Chaldee understood it, who express it by דָּרוּ (not as their Latin interpreter renders it, araverunt, ploughed, but as דְּרָה in Chaldee and Syriack signifie.) they laid on scourging or chastisement on my body. So when 1 King. 12. 14. the Hebrew reads, my father יִסַּר chastised you with whips, as after with scorpions, the Chaldee reads in both places as here וְדָא scourged. The Syriack also accord, reading ܩܛܠ they smote with rods, or inflicted stripes on my back, from the Syriack usage of נָגַר to scourge; and proportionably for עֲבוֹת cords v. 4. they have ܫܒܒܐ the twigs (from שׁוֹג a twig or bough) which is another notion of עֲבוֹת for boughs as well as cords. The LXXII. for ploughing they ploughed, or scourging they scourged, reade ἐπίκλαυγον οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ, the wicked framed or wrought; and for lengthening their furrows, ἐμάκρυναν τὴν ἀνομίαν αὐτῶν, they lengthened their iniquity; and for cords, αὐχένας necks; partly by way of paraphrase, and partly with reference to the Hebrew words: by ἐπίκλαυγον to חָרַשׁ, which signifies also to frame, as an artificer doth, and so to work or machinate; and by ἀνομίαν to לְמַעֲנוֹתָם, the Hebrew מַעֲנֶה from עָנָה signifying a furrow, and עֲנִי from the same root signifying affliction, or oppression also, which is oft the importance of ἀνομία iniquity (see Matth. 24. 12.) As for עֲבוֹת they are thought by some to have read גַּבּוֹת necks or backs, from גַּב back in the former verse. But 'tis more probable that having taken liberty to paraphrase in the former part, they should continue to doe so here also.

[b] שָׁלַף

V. 6. Groweth up] The Hebrew שָׁלַף signifies not to grow up, but to pull up, or take out of the place. The LXXII. rightly render it ἐκτιλθῆναι, the Latin evellatur, plucked up. It is used of drawing a sword, Jud. 8. 20. and 20. 15. of pulling off the shooe, Ruth 4. 7. and here of pulling up the grass, which was the fashion before sickles and sithes were used: and to that refers קֹצֵר the meter or gatherer, but especially מְעַמֵּר v. 7. not he that bindeth the sheaves, but he that gathers the handfulls (so as the leasers did after the reapers, Ruth 2. 3.) from עֳמֶר a handfull of grass or corn, which he that gathers puts into his arms and carries in his bosome, as here חִצְנוֹ signifies, and Isa. 49. 22. they shall bring thy sons in their arms. The meaning of the phrase then is, that the enemies of Zion shall wither and fade away of their own accord, not need the sword of enemies to destroy them, but perish without any foreign violence, as grass on the top of an house, where it hath no mould to take good root in, it withers before it be plucked up; whereas other grass is first mowed or plucked up, and then is laid a withering. Again, the grass on the house top grows very thin, he that plucks it up will not have an armfull a great while, which in the field is soon had, and accordingly is not thought capable of those εὐφημίαι, acclamations or salutations particularly accustomed to be given to reapers, The Lord be with you, Ruth 2. 4. The Jewish Arab renders שלף by אלציף summer, by the East wind of, or in, the summer, is withered. Abu Walid also makes mention of some who render it before the heat, from an use of the word in the Rabbins; and he likes the sense, but saith the Vowels of the word here admit it not to be taken otherwise than for a verb of the preterperfect tense, and himself interprets it, before it perfectly appear, or be come forth.

The

The Hundred and Thirtieth PSALM.

A Pſalm of Degrees.

The hundred and thirtieth is an affectionate devout prayer to God for mercy, pardon and propitiation, together with a confident affiance and dependence on him for it, and ſeems to have been compoſed in time of the captivity, for deliverance out of it.

1. OUT of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord.
2. Lord, hear my voice; let thine ear be attentive to the voice of my ſupplication.

Paraphraſe.
1, 2. Lord, we are deeply implunged in an ocean of miſeries: to thee do we addreſs our prayers for our releaſe; be thou graciouſly pleaſed to hear and anſwer us.

3. If thou, Lord, ſhouldeſt mark iniquities, O Lord, who ſhall ſtand?

3. There is not a man to be found who hath not ſome fault or failing, which if thou ſhouldeſt proceed with us in thy juſt ſeveriry, would render us uncapable of thy abſolution.

4. But there is forgiveneſs with thee, that thou mayeſt [a] be feared.

4. But thou art a God of grace and mercy, which allowes place of repentance to thoſe that have offended, and wilt allow pardon to the penitent. Were it not for this, we were all in an hopeleſs deſperate condition, and that utter deſperation of mercy would ingage us for ever in our courſe of ſin, without any thought of returning or repenting. But being by thy mercy reſpited, and by thy gracious call invited, and by the attraction of thy ſpirit (if we do not reſiſt) effectually drawn to repentance, and aſſured of thy acceptance if we come, here is a full concurrence of all arguments, and motives, and aids, to bring us, and oblige and ingage us to it. a.

5. I wait for the Lord: my ſoul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

5. In thee therefore my hope and full truſt is repoſed; thy mercies and gracious promiſes are the onely anchor and ſupport of my ſoul.

6. My ſoul || waiteth for the Lord [b] more than they that watch for the morning; I ſay more than they which watch for the morning.

6. To thee I daily betake my ſelf early in the morning; at the time that the Prieſts offer their morning-ſacrifice in the temple, I conſtantly addreſs my prayers and my very ſoul before thee. b.

|| hafteneth to the Lord from the guards in the morning, the guards in the morning.

7. Let Iſrael † hope in the Lord, for with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.
8. And he ſhall redeem Iſrael from all his iniquities.

7, 8. And the ſame is the duty of all true Iſraelites: let all ſuch apply themſelves diligently and conſtantly to God, as to a God of mercy and pardon and propitiation, that will be reconciled to all truly penitent faithfull ſervants of his, not imputing to them their frailty and ſins of infirmity, if they be guilty of no other, nay nor their groſſer ſins knowingly and deliberately committed, if they be retracted and forſaken by confeſſion, contrition, and renovation of mind, and their pardon humbly ſued out by conſtant prayer. For as a remedy for all ſuch the blood of the Meſſias was moſt ſufficient, and that decreed and deſigned by God to all the world, for the obtaining of actual redemption, and pardon and reſtitution to his favour (as of captive Iſraelites to their countrey and temple) upon their ſincere change and reformation.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXX.

a. לְמַעַן תִּוָּרֵא

V. 4. Feared] For לְמַעַן תִּוָּרֵא that thou mayeſt be feared, our copies of the LXXII. have ἕνεκεν τοῦ ὀνόματός σου, for thy names ſake, and that joyned with ὑπέμεινά σε I have waited for thee, O Lord, following. But the Hebrew no way inclining to that reading of ὀνόματος name, and the Latin which moſt commonly follows the LXXII. reading propter legem tuam ſuſtinui te, Domine, for thy law I have waited for thee, and the Hebrew תִּוָּרֵא (read without points) being eaſily miſtaken for תּוֹרָה law, in all probability the original reading of the LXXII. was ἕνεκεν τοῦ νόμου (not ὀνόματός) σου, for thy laws (not for thy names) ſake. But this, as it is evident, by a double miſtake; one in the reading of תּוֹרָה for תִּוָּרֵא, the other (whether in the Latin only, or in the LXXII. alſo, 'tis uncertain) by taking that word from the end of the former, and joyning it to the latter period. But without either of theſe, the Hebrew reading is very current, But (כִּי is oft to be rendred) there is הַסְלִיחָה pardon, ἱλασμὸς, ſay the LXXII. propitiation, with thee, לְמַעַן תִּוָּרֵא that thou mayeſt be feared, by the fear of God ſignifying obedience to his laws, to which his pardoning of the frailties and ſlips of our lives invites and draws us, when a deſperation of all mercy for ſuch would certainly avert us from it.

b. נַפְשִׁי לַאדֹנָי מִשֹּׁמְרִים לַבֹּקֶר

V. 6. More than they that watch for the morning] This verſe is very perſpicuous in the Original, נַפְשִׁי לַאדֹנָי literally my ſoul to the Lord, where is an Ellipſis neceſſarily to be ſupplied by riſeth, or cometh, or haſteneth, or the like, מִשֹּׁמְרִים לַבֹּקֶר from the watchers or warders, or guard in the morning, i. e. as early, from that time that they come or haſten to their watches: then follows again repeated שֹׁמְרִים לַבֹּקֶר the guard or watchers in the morning; which repetition in Hebrew Dialect ſignifies the daily ſeveral watchers of every morning, as אִישׁ אִישׁ man man, i. e. every man one after another, the Hebrews wanting forms of diſtribution (ſee note on Mar. 6. e.) And ſo this is the full importance of the verſe, The guards every morning that haſten to their watches, are not yet earlier than I in my daily addreſſes to God. What theſe watchers or guards of the morning are, the Chaldee hath beſt expreſt; they that obſerve the morning watches, ſay they, לְקָרְבָא קָרְבָּן צַפְרָא that they may offer the morning oblation; i. e. the Prieſts which in their turns officiated: or rather ſome officers of theirs, which which were peculiarly appointed from a tower to expect the firſt appearance of break of day, the manner of which is at large deſcribed in the Talmud, Cod. Joma. The Chaldee for שֹׁמְרִים from the watchers, reade מִן נָטְרֵי, juſt to the ſame ſenſe, which yet their Latin render plusquam obſervantes, more than they that obſerve. But the words do not ſo import, nor could it truly be ſaid, that he waited, or obſerved his offices more than the Prieſts, or guards in the Temple did, who never miſt the performing of their daily offices there. The LXXII. reade ἀπὸ φυλακῆς πρωΐας μέχρι νυκτὸς from the morning watch till night, by the addition of till night, thinking to ſupply what was wanting, and to the term from which he began his watch, adding the term to which he continued it, hereby evidencing their underſtanding of מִן in the notion of from. And ſo the Syriack do alſo, who reade מִן מַטְרָתָא דְצַפְרָא from the watches of the morning, עַד מַטְרָתָא &c. and untill the morning watch, i. e. from one morning watch unto another. Whereby they rightly render the former part, but obſerve not the elegancy in the repetition, but ſuppoſe the prepoſition ל to to be there wanting, which they thus ſupply. But the interpretation we have given is moſt agreeable both to the ſenſe, which is to expreſs his daily conſtant earlineſs in the ſervice of God, equal to that of the Prieſts in the Temple, every morning of every day, and to the Hebrew idiome alſo. Of theſe watches ſomewhat hath been ſaid note on Pſal. 119. hh. Yet in this place it will not be amiſs to add a little more, what this morning watch was, or of how many hours it conſiſted, becauſe in this matter, the computation of the Old and New Teſtament doth appear to differ. In the Old Teſtament we find but three watches in the night, and then each muſt conſiſt of four hours. The firſt is called רֹאשׁ אַשְׁמֹרוֹת the beginning of the watches, Lam. 2. 19. the ſecond, הָאַשְׁמֹרֶת הַתִּיכוֹנָה the middle watch (an evidence that there were but three) Judg. 7. 19. the third is אַשְׁמֹרֶת הַבֹּקֶר the morning watch, Exod. 14. 24. and accordingly here we have שֹׁמְרִים לַבֹּקֶר the watchers in the morning. And ſo in the Talmud tr. Berachoth, Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, שָׁלֹשׁ מִשְׁמָרוֹת הִיא הַלַּיְלָה there are three watches in the night; and ſo afterward R. Iſaac alſo. And that thus the night was divided among the Grecians alſo, appears by Homer in the 11th of the Iliads,

Τῶν δύο μοιράων, τετάτη δ' ἔτι μοῖρα λέλοιπεν, the larger part of the night, that of two portions of it, was paſt, and now the third portion or diviſion remained. On which ſaith Euſtathius, Τετράλακτον γὰρ τὴν νύκτα παλαιοῖς δόξαν εἶναι τὸ τὸν νύκτα, καθὰ καὶ τὸ ἡμέρας, he makes the night according to the ancients to be divided into three watches, in like manner as the day alſo, ſaying, ὄρθρος, ἡ δύσις, ἡ μέση ἡμέρα, morning, or evening, or midday. Yet in the New Teſtament it is evident there were four watches in the night among the Jews, (introduced as ſeveral other cuſtoms, from the Romans) mentioned Mar. 13. 35. under the ſtyles of evening, midnight, cockcrowing, and morning: and ſo Matth. 14. 25. Jeſus came to them in the fourth watch of the night. The verſe is by the Jewiſh Arab rendred, So my ſoul is to him of, or from, the keepers or guard by day, and the keepers or guard by night; and in a note he ſaith that this is not a literal verſion, yet a rendring (as he ſuppoſed) of the ſenſe, to expreſs his continual doing it through the whole courſe of night and day. Kimchi reads, My ſoul is to the Lord of the watchers for the morning, i. e. waiteth in the night for the Lord, that it may be of thoſe that watch for the morning, i. e. that riſe in the morning-watch to pray; and the repeating the words ſheweth their continual courſe and cuſtom ſo to doe.

The Hundred and Thirty Firſt PSALM.

A Song of Degrees of David.

The hundred thirty firſt is a profeſſion of humility, as that which beſt qualifies for God's mercy, and is the onely ſure foundation of hope in him. It ſeems to have been firſt formed by David in the time of his diſtreſſes, to vindicate himſelf before God of the accuſation which Saul's ſycophants ſo ſtudiouſly threw upon him, that he deſigned miſchief to Saul, and thereby the kingdom to himſelf. And after it was appointed to be uſed at the return from captivity, no temper better becoming thoſe that have received the greateſt mercies, than that of humility and affiance.

Paraphraſe.

1. O Lord, I have always indeavoured to keep all pride and ambition out of my heart,

1. LOrd, mine heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty; neither do I exerciſe my ſelf in great matters, or in things too high for me.

not to meddle with things of weight and difficulty, and ſuch as are above my ſtrength to manage.

2. But on the contrary to learn and practiſe humility, ſelf-denial, reſignation and ſubmiſſion to the will of God,

2. ‖ [a] Surely I have † behaved and quieted my ſelf, as a child that is weaned * of his mother: my ſoul is ‖ as a weaned child.

‖ But † or level'd and quieted my ſoul, * with or toward· עָלַי ‖ with me as עָלַי to look on my ſelf as a moſt feeble impotent child, able to doe nothing of my ſelf, but wholly to be directed, ſupported, and inabled by him in all my undertakings, and ſo to wean my ſelf from my natural affections and deſires, as an infant is when he is eſtranged from his mothers breaſt.

3. And the ſame temper I ſhall recommend to all pious men,

3. O Iſrael, hope in the Lord from henceforth and for ever.

as that which will for ever ſtand them in moſt ſtead, with an utter abrenunciation of all ſelf-truſts, or ſecular confidences, to roll and repoſe themſelves wholly upon God, who will undoubtedly anſwer and ſupply, and never be wanting to them that thus depend on him.

Annota-

Annotations on Pſal. CXXXI.

V. 2. Surely I have behaved] אִם לֹא is according to ſenſe to be rendred quin, but. The LXXII. attending to the letter, render it, εἰ μὴ, if not. For שִׁוִּיתִי that follows from שָׁוָה to ſet, or diſpoſe, the Chaldee reade עַיְּירִית אִידָא לְפוּמִי I put my hand upon my mouth (and the LXXII. to the ſame ſenſe, ἐταπείνωσα τὴν ψυχήν μου I was humbly diſpoſed) and ſo moſt rationally it is to be rendred, if not by force of שָׁוָה, yet by virtue of וְדוֹמַמְתִּי that follows, which notes impoſing ſilence upon himſelf; and then the putting preparative to that, muſt be the putting the hand upon the mouth: and ſo the Chaldees rendring may ſeem rather a ſupply of an Ellipſis, than by way of paraphraſe. But there is another notion of שָׁוָה to level, Iſa. 28. 25. אִם שִׁוָּה when he hath made plain the face of the ground, a ſcheme which the Baptiſt uſes, for working ſuch a temper in the heart, as is qualified for the reception of piety, Luk. 3. 5. To which that of the LXXII. comes nearer, humility and lowlineſs of mind being the plain meaning of that other more poetical phraſe. For וְרוֹמַמְתִּי the LXXII. ſeem to have read וְרוֹמַמְתִּי and ſo render it ὑψώθην δὲ, but have elevated: but hereby they have varied the ſenſe little, their if I have not humbled, but exalted my ſoul, being all one in effect with I have not exalted, but humbled. The ſimilitude that follows, כְּגָמֻל עַל אִמּוֹ as a weanling with, or toward the mother, (ſo עַל ſignifies with or toward) is a denotation of the greateſt obedience and dependence and ſelf-denial and reſignation that can be; for ſo the weanling, though he begin to goe, and ſpeak, and live without the teat, yet wholly depends on the mothers aid, and teaching, and proviſion for each of theſe. And ſo in the application, my ſoul is כְּגָמֻל עָלַי as a weanling with me; where yet the LXXII. render כְּגָמֻל ὡς ἀνταποδόσεις as retributions, from another notion of גָּמַל to retribute, which cannot belong to that place. The Jewiſh Arab reads, But I have equalled my ſoul, and made it like to a weanling, מיסל עלי אמה that deſireth after his mother, as if דוֹמַמְתִּי were of the ſame notion with דָּמָה to be like, and שִׁוִּיתִי and that were much alike in ſignification. The ſenſe he gives in a note, I caſt my affairs on the Lord, as a child doth on his mother; and his repeating it, my ſoul is with me as a weaned child, is as much as to ſay, I have weaned it from tranſgreſſions.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Bleſſed Lord remember, I beſeech thee, and reward upon his family, the great piety and humility of David my father, the eminent expreſſions of his zeal toward thee. He was ſo highly concerned for the ſervice of God, that having built himſelf houſes, 1 Chr. 15. he immediately prepared a place for the Ark of God, v. 1. and brought it up thither in pomp, ch. 15. and 16. having, it ſeems, ſolemnly vow'd to doe ſo, before ever he would dedicate and bleſs (or dwell in) his own houſe, chap. 16. 43. and not content with that, his zeal farther brake out to Nathan the Prophet, chap. 17. 1. being troubled to think of the magnificence of his own houſe, whilſt the Ark was but in a tent, and reſolved if God would have permitted him, to have erected a magnificent ſtructure, wherein the Ark of God ſhould be placed, and God's ſolemn worſhip performed.

6. Lo, [b] we heard of it at Ephrata, we found it in the fields of the wood.
7. We will go into his tabernacles, we will worſhip at his footſtool.
8. Ariſe, O Lord, into thy reſt, thou and the Ark of thy ſtrength.

b. 6, 7, 8. At the bringing it up to Jeruſalem there were great ſolemnities, a ſacred devout proceſſion, and all the parts there about reſounded with joy and acclamations upon the bringing it to and ſeating it in Zion; every one with great alacrity reſolving to go up and pay their devotions there, as in the place of God's ſpecial reſidence, where his Law is laid up, and from whence he is graciouſly pleaſed to anſwer the prayers, and to reveal himſelf to his ſervants. This therefore David was reſolved to bring to a place where it might remain, that ſo God might in a manner inhabit among us, and direct us, and aſſiſt in all our undertakings.

9. Let thy Prieſts be cloathed with righteouſneſs, and let thy Saints ſhout for joy.

9. The Prieſts in their ſacerdotal garments, the emblems of the ſanctity of their office and perſons, being by him appointed, 1 Chron. 15. 11. to attend on it, and the Levites carrying it on their ſhoulders, v. 15. and the ſingers celebrating it with great rejoycing, v. 19, 20, &c.

10. Now therefore, O Lord, I beſeech thee, remember the piety and humility, and all the acceptable graces of this thy faithfull beloved, zealous ſervant, and for his ſake reject not me his ſon, whom thou haſt eſtabliſht in his kingdom; but continue with me, and accept of me, whilſt I actually perform what he had deſigned, whilſt I build a temple for thy preſence and ſervice.

10. For thy ſervant David's ſake, turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11. To him thou haſt made thy moſt faithfull promiſe, that the kingdom, which was not eſtabliſht in Saul's family, ſhould be confirmed on his poſterity.

11. The Lord hath ſworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet upon thy throne.

12. And not ſo onely, but that to all ages it ſhould continue in the ſame line, if they ſhall but be carefull to perform conſtant and uniform obedience to all the commands of God.

12. If thy children ſhall keep my covenant and my teſtimony that I ſhall teach them, their children alſo ſhall ſit upon thy throne for evermore.

13, 14. The place which I deſign for this ſtructure is that of Zion, a place with which God is ſo well pleaſed, that he never intends to remove thence, nor conſequently to tranſplant the royal throne from that family which placed it there, if they will but be carefull to qualifie themſelves for the continuance of ſo great a mercy.

13. For the Lord hath choſen Zion, he hath deſired it for his habitation.

14. This ſhall be my reſt for ever, here will I dwell, for I have deſired it.

15, 16. Shall they but doe ſo, he will alſo add all other ſorts of bleſſings, a great plenty and proſperity to the whole nation, and a ſucceſſion of mercies, which ſhall require the thankſgivings and ſolemn acknowledgments of the Prieſts and Levites and ſingers, whoſe daily office it is, by God himſelf appointed them, thus conſtantly to celebrate his mercies, to offer up prayers and praiſes to him continually.

c. 15. I will abundantly bleſs her [c] proviſions, I will ſatisfie her poor with bread.

d. 16. I will alſo cloath her Prieſts with [d] ſalvation, and her Saints ſhall ſhout aloud for joy.

17. And by this means ſhall God be ingaged to continue his favour to the poſterity of David, to make it a moſt flouriſhing royal family, and continue it ſhining and burning in a continual ſucceſſion till the coming of the Meſſiah, who is promiſed of the ſeed of David.

e. 17. There will I make the horn of David to bud; I have ordained a [e] lamp for mine anointed.

18. And all that oppoſe and invade them ſhall certainly be diſappointed and put to flight, God's ſpecial protection continuing to the poſterity of ſo good a King, to perpetuate the Kingdom to them.

18. His enemies will I cloath with ſhame; but upon himſelf ſhall his crown flouriſh.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXXII.

a. עניותו

V. 1. Afflictions] The ſignification of עניותו in this place is worth the conſidering. The LXXII. render it πραότητος meekneſs, the Syriack ܡܟܝܟܘܬܗ humility, meekneſs, lenity, but the Chaldee סגופיה affliction. The original עָנָה ſignifies eſpecially two things, to ſpeak or anſwer, and to be afflicted, humbled, or depreſt. The context referring to David's oath or vow to God, of preparing a place for the Ark, which it ſeems was under vow, though it be not mentioned in the ſtory, may ſeem to incline it to the former ſignification, of ſpeaking or making promiſe to God, Remember David and all his ſpeeches, how he ſware unto the Lord— But the ancient interpreters authority may be preferred for the latter rendering; yet not for that of afflictions (for what reference could thoſe have to his vow of preparing a place for the Ark, or of building the Temple?) but of humility, meekneſs, or pious affection to God, which excited him ſo to ſwear. And this the rather, becauſe when he had built himſelf a palace, 1 Chron. 15. 1. it appears by the context, that he did not bleſs it, ch. 16. 43. nor conſequently live in it (for that he might not doe till it were bleſt) untill he had firſt prepared a place, and brought up the Ark to it. So again when he deſigned to build a temple for it, the firſt propoſition which he made to Nathan to this purpoſe, was introduced with a conſideration and ſpeech of great humility, 2 Sam. 7. 2. See now I dwell in a houſe of Cedar, but the Ark of God dwelleth within curtains. He was ſo humble, that he could not dwell in his houſe till the Ark of God was brought to Sion, nor then could he think meet to be himſelf in ſo ſtately a palace, whilſt the Ark of God was but in a plain tent or tabernacle. But eſpecially this humility of David's is diſcernible in the paſſage recited, 1 Chron. 17. 16, &c. where upon God's promiſe to him, that he would build up his houſe, eſtabliſh his family in the Kingdom, he came and ſate before the Lord, and ſaid, Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? and ſo on in a ſpeech of greateſt humility and meekneſs, and fit here to be commemorated in the beginning of this Pſalm, which belongs not onely to the preparing a place for the Ark on David's part, but alſo to God's promiſe of eſtabliſhing the Kingdom on his ſeed, v. 11, &c.

b. שמענוה

V. 6. Heard of it] The chief difficulty in this Pſalm is, what is here meant by hearing of in Ephrata. And firſt, it is certain that Ephrata is Bethleem, Mich. 5. 2. ſecondly, שְׁמַעְנוּהָ ſignifies we have heard it, rather than we have heard of it. And then it may be interpreted, that in the proceſſion of the Ark through the tribe of Judah, being returned from the Philiſtims, we heard the joyfull acclamations which accompanied it in Bethleem; this not onely when 'twas placed in Kiriath-Jarim, but when 'twas ſettled at Jeruſalem; Bethleem, as Aben Ezra ſaith, being but three miles from Jeruſalem. And in accordance with this ſenſe, Kimchi, Jarchi and Aben Ezra agree to interpret the fields of the wood שְׂדֵי יָעַר to be Jeruſalem, as in the Prophets frequently the Temple is called יַעַר the wood. And to this inclines the correſpondence between מְצָאנוּהָ we found it, v. 6. and עַד אֶמְצָא till I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation, &c. v. 5. This ſeems the moſt probable meaning of this paſſage, the difficulty of which the learned Caſtellio hath remarked with this note, Hujus loci ſententiam non intelligo, I underſtand not the meaning of this place. Some probability there is, that the fields of the wood ſhould be the houſe of Amidadab in the hill of Kiriath-Jarim, ſo called becauſe it was a city in a woody place, 1 Sam. 7. 1. from whence David and all Iſrael reſolved ſolemnly to fetch it, and brought it to the houſe of Obed-Edom, v. 13. And then hearing of it at Ephrata muſt ſignifie hearing it much talkt of when he dwelt at home, home, in his fathers house at Bethleem. But the former is the more obvious interpretation. The Jewish Arab is obscure, and probably corrupted, yet the words seem thus to sound, And we, behold, heard it in the grass or pastures of multitudes, abundance or plenty, and we found it between the desart and the wood.

c. צֵידָה V. 15. Provisions] The Hebrew צֵידָה, from צוּד to hunt, signifies any victuals that is taken with hunting, and absolutely flesh, food, provisions for a journey: so Jos. 9. 11. take in your hands צֵידָה provision for your journey. The LXXII. renders it literally θήραν, not in the notion of hunting, but to signifie that which is hunted, and so taken; as among us venison, the English of venatio, is the flesh which is thus caught. But this word θήραν was it seems mistaken, and by transcribers disguised into χήραν widow, and so by the Latin rendred viduam, and so transfused into many other interpretations.

d. יֶשַׁע פּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת V. 16. Salvation] What יֶשַׁע salvation here imports, will be best judged by Psal. 116. There the taking the כּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת cup of salvations v. 13. is expounded v. 14. by paying his vows unto the Lord, those oblations which he had vow'd, as his εὐχαριστήρια expressions of thankfulness for God's deliverances (as Psal. 50. 14. offering of thanksgiving and paying of vows are put together) and in plain terms v. 17. the sacrifice of thanksgiving. Accordingly, as the LXXII. rendred אָשָׁם the trespass-offering or peace-offering, Lev. 7. by θυσία σωτηρίας sacrifice of salvation, v. 1. so they vary the style, and reade θυσίαν αἰνέσεως sacrifice of praise v. 2. and θυσίαν σωτηρίου αἰνέσεως sacrifice of saving praise, v. 3. (see note on Heb. 13. e.) The Chaldee Psal. 116. reade כָּסָא דְפוּרְקָנָא the cup of redemptions, i. e. such a cup, as they that have received any redemption or deliverance, are wont to take, to express their thankfulness (the ποτήριον εὐλογίας cup of blessing in the Christian style) and so here לְבוּשֵׁי פוּרְקָן the garments of redemption, were such literally as the Priests use in time of sacrifice, when they are solemnly to acknowledge any deliverance or mercy received from heaven, or more probably a Poetical, or Rhetorical scheme, such as Isa. 59. 17. righteousness as a breastplate, and the helmet of salvation, and Eph. 6. 14. 17. and 1 Thess. 5. 8. And accordingly to the Priests being cloathed with salvation is here annext, her saints shall sing aloud with joy.

e. נֵר V. 17. Lamp] The notion of נֵר lamp here will be discerned by considering the double property of a lamp or candle; 1. that it shineth, 2. that from that, when it is near spent, another may be lighted, and burn afresh, and so the light be, from one to another, perpetually kept in. For by this double resemblance a succession of Kings in a family is lively expresst. Of David himself it is said 2 Sam. 21. 17. thou shalt go no more with us to battel, that thou quench not the light of Israel: and of the succession 1 King. 11. 36. Unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light or lamp alway before me in Jerusalem; and again ch. 15. 4. for David's sake did the Lord give him a lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him. And so here נֵר לְמְשִׁיחִי a lamp to mine anointed, is a royal seed or posterity to rise up in stead of David, and sit upon his throne. The same was before meant by the budding of the קֶרֶן horn of David. The horn is proverbially the regal dignity, and the budding thereof, the bringing forth successors to the Kingdom. The same is again repeated v. 18. upon him, i. e. his posterity, shall his crown flourish; where for נִזְרוֹ his crown, the LXXII. reade נִזְרִי, not his but my, and taking נֵזֶר in the notion of separation or sanctification, reade ἁγιασμά μου my holiness. That this doth mystically refer to Christ, the Jews confess. So saith R. Saadiah, The lamp is the King which illuminates the nations; and Kimchi, that the horn of David is the Messias. To whom it is farther agreeable, that he is said צְמוֹחַ to flourish or bud forth, which is another of his titles, and to that נוֹר may possibly be added also.

The Hundred and Thirty Third P S A L M.

A Song of Degrees of David.

The hundred thirty third is the magnifying the felicities of holy peaceable fraternal communion, and was fitly accommodated to the return from the captivity, and their uniform conjunction in the service of God.

1. BEhold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell || together in unity.

(|| even as one נַם יָחַד)

Paraphrase.

1. There is nothing that is more acceptable to God, and matter of greater joy and present delight to the persons themselves, than a peaceable friendly conversation of pious men, with a perfect union of minds, and communion in devotions, and joint endeavours of doing, and helping one another to doe, those things that are most excellent.

2. It is like the precious oyntment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments.

2. It cannot be more fitly compared to any thing than to the unction of Aaron the high-priest of God, the oyntment of a most precious sort, very fragrant and odoriferous. It was by order to be poured upon his head, and in that plenty, that being so poured, it diffused it self not onely on his face and beard, but ran down also upon the upper part or collar of his garments, (see note a.) and this whole ceremony instituted by God himself, thereby to consecrate Aaron and his successors after him to the high-priests office, to offer sacrifice to God, and bless the people. And in all these particulars the proportion holds. This of fraternal charity, union and communion is 1. very precious, highly valued; 2. very gratefull and welcome, a pleasant and refreshing spectacle to all beholders, to God, Angels and men; 3. it is so rich and plentifull a grace, that it communicates it self to all the meanest persons in the society, not onely to superiour and more eminent parts, but to every inferiour member of the community, making supplies to all sorts of all their wants; and 4. no grace or vertue more signally commanded and recomended by God; or 5. more required to make our prayers acceptable to God, or our offices usefull to others or our selves.

3. As the dew of Hermon, || and as the dew [a] that descended on the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

3. And accordingly God hath promised abundant blessings to those that thus live, all happiness here, and all glory in another world. And in that respect it is most fitly compared to the innumerable drops of dew that fall in a morning upon many several and distant hills, Hermon on one side of Canaan, and Zion on the other; or to that cloud of dew which is seen hanging as such on the highest hills, but dissolves in showers of rain upon the lower, which cherish and refresh wheresoever they fall; For so do God's blessings severally descend in great abundance upon every member of such a peaceable united community, be they in their condition as distant as Hermon and Zion in place, yet the goodness of God finds them out, and rewards them severally, bestows all benedictions upon them.

a. עַיִן

V. 3. Zion] It is here thought very difficult to reſolve what is the meaning of the phraſe שִׁיר עַל חֶרְמֹנֵי צִיּוֹן which deſcended on the hill of Zion. For if it be ſpoken of the dew of Hermon foregoing, then 'tis not imaginable how that ſhould deſcend on the hills of Zion, Zion being very diſtant from Hermon, Zion at Jeruſalem, and Hermon on the other ſide of Jordan, on the utmoſt part of Canaan toward the Eaſt, and ſo oppoſed to Tabor, Pſal. 89. 12. as Eaſt to Weſt. This hath put ſome learned men on a conjecture, that צִיּוֹן Zion here ſhould be changed into שִׂיאֹן Schion, which is another name of Hermon. But this is not found in any ancient or later copy, nor yet favoured by any of the ancient Interpreters, who uniformly reade it Zion, and not Schion; nor hath any the leaſt ground, but that of the nearneſs of the words, and the conceited difficulty of the matter, that the dew of Hermon ſhould deſcend on Zion at that diſtance. But for theſe, 1. It is moſt unſafe to uſe that liberty of conjecture, thereby to change words at pleaſure into any that have affinity with them. 2. By this conjecture the difficulty is but changed, not taken away; for it would then be ſtill difficult, and but little more reaſonable, to ſuppoſe that the dew of Hermon ſhould be ſaid to deſcend from Hermon upon Schion, i. e. upon it ſelf, than that it ſhould from Hermon deſcend upon the moſt remote mountain. 'Tis therefore moſt ſeaſonable to take notice of that which hath here occaſioned the difficulty, or ſeeming improbability of interpreting the words of Zion at Jeruſalem. The ſimilitude in the former verſe of the oyntment falling directly and by deſcent from the head to the beard, hath led men to conceit a falling of that in like manner from a higher to a lower place; which indeed cannot in any ſenſe be applied to mount Hermon and the hills of Zion, whereas in the truth this of the dew, were the hills never ſo near and ſubordinate one to the other, would ſtill be a ſimilitude unfit for that turn: for dew is not like rain, which ſtreams down from hills to valleys, or from an higher to a lower hill, but remains in the place where it falls, be it high or low. The dew therefore in this place may poſſibly be ſet to expreſs onely the plenty of that which is ſpoken of (as elſewhere the dew of the morning is proportionable to the ſand of the ſea in reſpect of the numerouſneſs, (ſee note on Pſal. 110. a.) and the bleſſing and refreſhing quality thereof, and ſo to uſher in God's commanding a bleſſing and life for evermore, in the end of the verſe. If that may be allowed, then the clear way of underſtanding this paſſage is, either to ſever and reade by it ſelf כְּטַל חֶרְמוֹן as the dew of Hermon, i. e. as the dew that lies thick and numerous on the hill called Hermon, and then again to repeat, as the dew which fell on the hills of Zion; or elſe, joyning them together, to reade by apoſition, שִׁיר that deſcends or falls, i. e. as the dew that falls upon the hills of Zion. Thus 'tis certain, that as the dew falls on Hermon, ſo it falls on the hills of Zion, yea and at the ſame time; and though not the ſame individual drops, yet the ſame ſpecifical dew, with the ſame bleſſing, refreſhing quality, and in the like plenty on the one and on the other. And therefore though the literal rendring of the Hebrew be, As the dew of Hermon which fell on the hills of Zion; yet our Engliſh, to avoid the miſtake to which thoſe words are ſubject, have not done amiſs to make that ſupply as of an Ellipſis, adding and as the dew, above what is in the Original: without which addition yet the words may very intelligibly be rendred, As the dew of Hermon, which (dew) falls on the hills of Zion, ſo they be taken in this ſenſe which we have here expreſt, the dew which lies in great abundance on Hermon, and yet falls in the like plenty on hills very diſtant, thoſe of Zion alſo. Or if we deſire to make the reſemblance and correſpondence between the oyntment and the dew more compleat, it may be obſerved that Hermon, called שניר, and שור חלגא, from its high top ſtill covered with ſnow, was one of the greateſt land-marks of Paleſtine. Now of ſuch hills we know that the miſt or dew of them is rain in lower places, there being no more ordinary indication of future rain, in all countreys, than when the high hills are capt with a cloud of dew. And ſo to ſay this dew of Hermon, or that firſt formature of rain, which was on the top of that but as a dew, ſhould after fall in ſhowers of rain on the adjacent countrey will be very intelligible. And then for the choice of Zion for the other term on which the rain is here ſuppoſed to fall, there is this reaſon of analogy, that the פִּי which we render skirts of Aaron's garment, is by Kimchi and Jarchi affirmed to be the upper part, the collar of his garment, it being neither uſefull, nor convenient, nor conſequently probable, that the anointing ſhould be ſo liberal as to run over all his cloaths: and then Zion, by being thus lower than Hermon, will bear a fit analogy with that.

The Hundred and Thirty Fourth PSALM.

A Song of Degrees.

The hundred thirty fourth is the incouraging the Prieſts in their conſtant offices, in the publick worſhip and praiſing of God in the Sanctuary, and is the laſt of thoſe which were accommodated to the return from the Captivity.

Paraphraſe. 1. BEhold, bleſs ye the Lord, all ye ſervants of the Lord, which by night
a. a ſtand in the houſe of the Lord.

1. Now is God in an eminent manner to be bleſſed and praiſed for all his mercies, that eſpecially of giving liberty for the continual offices of the Temple, of which we were ſo long deprived, and to which being now reſtored, all that attend that ſervice by day and night, the Prieſts in their courſes, are obliged moſt diligently to perform it, and affectionately and devoutly to magnifie his holy name.

2. Lift

‖ or, in holiness

2. Lift up your hands ‖ in the [b] Sanctuary, and praise the Lord.

2. Remembring always, that the ceremony of washing, which is constantly observed herein, is an Emblem of the great sanctity of lives that is required of those that thus wait on the Altar, that offer up any sacrifice to God, especially that of prise and thanksgiving; and that therefore they are most nearly concerned to be thus qualified, whensoever they come to officiate. b.

3. The Lord that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.

3. And the great omnipotent Creatour and Governour of the whole world, that hath his peculiar blessing residence in mount Zion, thence to hear and grant the petitions that are made unto him there, bless and prosper, receive, and graciously answer all the requests which his people shall there at any time address unto him.

Annotations on Psal. CXXXIV.

a. הָעֹמְדִים V. 1. Stand] הָעֹמְדִים ye that stand seems here to have a critical notation, for Aben Ezra observes that the high priest onely sat in the Temple, the rest ever stood; which seems to have been imitated in the primitive Christian Church, that the Bishop should sit, and the inferiour Clergy stand.

b. קֹדֶשׁ V. 2. In the Sanctuary] The Hebrew קֹדֶשׁ signifying holiness as well as the holy place, the Temple or Sanctuary, may here be taken in the former sense, the latter having been sufficiently expresst, v. 1. by the house of the Lord (to which also the LXXII. adds there, above the Hebrew, ἐν αὐλαῖς οἴκου θεοῦ ἡμῶν, in the courts of the house of the Lord.) For the Priests (which are here spoken to) before their officiating, which is here expresst by lifting up their hands, were obliged to wash their hands, and that washing is styled קִדּוּשׁ sanctification: (see note on Joh. 13. b. and on Psal. 26. d.) And to this refers the lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. the bringing this purity to our offices of devotion. Of the Priest we reade in Joma c. 3. § 3. that the High Priest on the day of Expiation washes five טְבִילוֹת and ten קִדּוּשִׁין sanctifications, i. e. five washings of his whole body, and ten washings of his hands and feet. And so here lifting up the hands קֹדֶשׁ in or with holiness, or sanctification, will be the lifting up these holy hands, qualifying themselves thus for the discharge of their office, which was signified by their washing before their officiating. The LXXII. indeed reade εἰς τὰ ἅγια to the sanctuary, but the Syriack ܠܡܩܕܫܐ, either to holiness (as their Latin reade ad sanctitatem) or to the sanctuary, and so the Jewish Arab; but the Chaldee, to secure this sense, reads קוּדְשָׁא עַל יְקָר קוּדְשָׁא, in, or with, holiness to the holy place.

The Hundred and Thirty Fifth P S A L M.

‖ Praise ye the Lord. ‖ Hallelujah.

The hundred thirty fifth is a Psalm of thanksgiving to God, for all his mercies and deliverances afforded to his people; and was intituled Hallelujah, (see note a. on Psal. 106.)

1. PRaise ye the name of the Lord, praise him O ye servants of the Lord;
2. Ye that stand in the house of the Lord, in the courts of the house of our God.
3. Praise ye the Lord, for the Lord is good: sing praises unto his name, for it is pleasant.

Paraphrase.

1, 2, 3. It is now a season of singing most solemn praises, and making the most humble acknowledgments unto God, for all his goodness, and mercy, and grace afforded us. O let all his faithfull servants, those especially whose office it is to wait at his altar, joyn ardently and uniformly in the performance of so joyous and pleasant a duty.

4. For the Lord hath chosen Jacob to himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure.

4. And two things especially are to be the ingredients in our lauds: First, that God hath vouchsafed to us the dignity and prerogative beyond all other nations in the world, that of being his own special care and charge, whom he hath peculiarly chosen and espoused, to pour out his liberalities among us.

5. For I know that the Lord is great, and that our Lord is above all Gods.

5. Secondly, that the power and greatness of this our God doth infinitely exceed all that is so much as pretended to by all the false Idol-deities, which are worshipped by other nations.

6. Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven and in earth, in the seas and in all deep places.

6. The latter of these is evident in the works of his creation and preservation; all that is or ever was in the several parts of the universe, the heavens, and earth, and ocean, being at first produced, and ever since continued, by this power of his.

7. He causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth, he maketh lightnings for the rain, he bringeth the wind out of his treasuries.

7. All the vapours that ascend from any part of this lower world, are drawn up by means which he in his wisedom hath appointed for that work, and out of them he frameth in the air meteors of diverse kinds, clouds that dissolve in rain, and flashes of lightning which often accompany that rain, and yet neither dry up that, nor are quencht by it, (a work of his wonderfull managery) and then the most boisterous winds, which no man can imagin whence they come or whither they go, but onely that they are laid up by God in some unknown receptacle, and from thence brought forth when or for what uses he pleaseth.

8. Who

8, 9. And this omnipotent power of his was he pleaſed to interpoſe for us in bringing our anceſtours out of Ægypt, after he had ſhewed forth many prodigies of judgments upon the King and all the people of Ægypt, at length cauſing a ſad lamentation through the whole land, by killing every firſt-born both of Pharaoh the King, and of all other the greateſt and meaneſt inhabitants, and extending the ſtroke even to the firſt-born of cattel, (by which act of ſeverity upon them they were perſwaded to diſmiſs the people out of their land.)

8. Who ſmote the firſt born of Ægypt ‖ both of man and beaſt.
9. Who ſent tokens and wonders into the midſt of thee, O Ægypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his ſervants.

‖ from man to בְּהֵמָה

10, 11, 12. So again did he magnifie his tranſcendent controlling power, in ſubduing thoſe gyantly Kings and people, Sihon and the Amorites, Numb. 21. 24. and Og the King of Baſan and his army, v. 34, 35. whom by no power of their own, but by God's delivering them into their hands, v. 2. they utterly deſtroyed. And having thus evidenced his power (which was the latter thing mentioned, v. 5.) he alſo magnified his mercy to us (which was the former thing, v. 4. to which the Pſalmiſt goes back, after the Scripture ſtyle, ſee note on Matt. 7. b.) in giving us this whole land of Canaan, a fruitfull and pleaſant land, for us and our poſterity to injoy by his divine gift, as if it had deſcended to us from our fathers.

10. Who ſmote great Nations, and ſlew mighty Kings, 11. Sihon King of the Amorites, and Og King of Baſan, and all the Kingdoms of Canaan;
12. And gave their land for an heritage, an heritage unto Iſrael his people.

13, 14. Thus are the power and bounty of our God magnified toward us, and we obliged never to forget either of them, but commemorate them to all ages. For though God for our ſins doth ſometimes juſtly permit us to be oppreſt and diſturbed by our enemies; yet ſuch is his goodneſs and mercy to us ſtill, that upon our returning and repenting, he is pleaſed to return and repent alſo, to pardon our ſins, to take our parts, and avenge us on our enemies. See Deut. 32. 36.

13. Thy name, O God, endureth for ever, and thy memorial, O Lord, throughout all generations.
14. For the Lord [a] will † judge his people, and he will repent himſelf concerning his ſervants.

a. † plead for 15, 16, 17, 18. On the other ſide, the gods of the heathen world, v. 5. are all but lifeleſs inanimate images, (ſee Pſal. 115, 4, 5, &c.) not able to afford the leaſt aid to any of their votaries. A ſad reproach that to all thoſe that firſt make, and then pray to, and expect aſſiſtance from them, and an argument that they are but a ſort of ſtocks and ſtones and images themſelves, that can believe in, or hope for good from, ſuch ſenſeleſs pictures of men, whom they worſhip for Gods.

15. The Idols of the heathen are ſilver and gold, the work of mens hands.
16. They have mouths, but they ſpeak not; eyes have they, but they ſee not:
17. They have ears, but they hear not; [b] * neither is there any breath in their mouths.
18. They that make them are like unto them, and ſo is every man that truſteth in them.

b. * a noſe, but there is no breath in their noſtrils.

19,20,21. And the ſadder the condition is of ſuch worſhippers, of all the gentile world which is thus infatuated, the more are we of Iſrael obliged to bleſs and magnifie the Lord of heaven, if it be but for that bleſſing beſtowed ſo graciouſly and happily upon us, of reſcuing us out of the blindneſs, and ſottiſhneſs, and utter darkneſs, which poſſeſſeth the hearts of the far greater part of the world. And on this account, as alſo for all other his mercies, it is the ſpecial duty of this whole nation, thus aſſumed by him to be his people, but eſpecially the Prieſts and Levites, and all his faithfull ſervants, whom he hath yet more obliged, ſeparated them from the reſt of this people, and aſſumed them yet nearer to himſelf, to bleſs and praiſe and magnifie his holy and glorious name, to aſſemble together at the place of his ſolemn worſhip, the place where he is pleaſed in a moſt ſpecial manner to reſide, and preſentiate, and exhibit himſelf unto them that addreſs themſelves to him there, and there to ſing continual Hoſannahs and Hallelujahs to him.

19. Bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Iſrael; bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Aaron.
20. Bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Levi: ye that fear the Lord, bleſs the Lord.
21. Bleſſed be the Lord out of Zion, which dwelleth in Jeruſalem. Praiſe ye the Lord.

Annotations on Pſal. CXXXV.

a. יָדִין

V. 14. Judge] The Hebrew יָדִין, from דִּין, ſignifies frequently not onely to judge, or give ſentence of puniſhment, but to contend in judicature; and that again, not onely as an accuſer or Plaintiff, in the notion of κρίνεσθαι (anſwerable to it) for ſuing, 1 Cor. 6. 1. but alſo as Defendant or Advocate; and ſo 'tis to plead, or take ones part, and patronize his cauſe, and ſo to bring ſentence of mulct or puniſhment againſt the adverſary. In this notion of defending or pleading for, שָׁפַט is oft uſed: ſee Pſal. 7. 8. 10. 18. 26. 1. 35. 24. 43. 1. 72. 4. And ſo is דִּין alſo: ſo Gen. 30. 6. דָּנַנִי God hath judged me, ſaith Rachel, and heard my voice, i. e. taken my part, given me a ſon, whoſe name therefore ſhe called Dan, a word from this theme. So Deut. 32. 36. whence this whole verſe is verbatim taken. In like manner the nouns, both דִּין and מִשְׁפָּט, being joyned with עָשָׂה doing, are not ſo fitly rendred doing judgment, as pleading a cauſe. So Pſal. 140. 12. I know that the Lord יַעֲשֶׂה דִּין עָנִי will plead the cauſe of the afflicted, and again, מִשְׁפַּט the right of the poor. And ſo Pſal. 9. 4. עָשִׂיתָ מִשְׁפָּטִי וְדִינִי thou haſt pleaded my right and my cauſe: to which is there added, thou ſatteſt in the throne judging right; not as the ſame again, but differing from it, as the part of a Judge doth from that of an Advocate, the Pſalmiſt there ſignifying that God had taken both parts, firſt contended for him, then judged the controverſie on his ſide, defended him, and ſo pleaded his cauſe, and overthrown his enemies, which was the paſſing of right judgment for him; for that ſeems to be the full importance of that Verſe. And ſo we know our Saviour is both our Advocate and our Judge; and herein our happineſs conſiſts, that he which is our Judge, is our Advocate alſo. Then for יִתְנֶחָם, that may be either from נָחַם to grieve, and then 'tis duly rendred, will repent himſelf; or elſe from another, if not contrary, notion of the ſame word, for taking comfort, and ſo by the LXXII. 'tis rendred παρακληθήσεται ſhall be comforted, and ſo by the Syriack, takes comfort; but by the Latin, deprecabitur. This rendring of the Latin, as it may may ſeem to be an imitation of the Greek παρακαλέω, but not in the notion of being comforted, but intreated, and ſo to be in a paſſive (though unuſual) ſenſe, deprecabitur, ſhall be deprecated; yet doth it well ſort with the former notion, that of repenting: for ſo God is ſaid to doe, when he is intreated for his people, and removes their puniſhments from them. So the Jewiſh Arab underſtood it, who renders it, will ſpare or pardon his ſervants. And to this notion of repenting the context both here, and Deut. 32. 36. (where we have the ſame words) inclines it, viz. God's repenting himſelf of his anger, of which we often reade, i. e. returning to mercy and favour toward thoſe with whom he was formerly diſpleaſed; and ſo the whole verſe ſhall ſignifie God's returning from puniſhing, to aſſiſting and taking the part of his people: and that the Chaldee hath of all others beſt expreſt by יְרַחֵם בְּרַחֲמוֹי he ſhall return in mercies or compaſſions toward his juſt ſervants. And then pleading for, and ſuch returning, do perfectly accord.

יַעֲשֶׂה דִּין

V. 17. Neither is there any breath] That אַף ſignifies a noſe is unqueſtionable; and that it ſo ſignifies here, is firſt the affirmation of the Chaldee, who render it נְחִירֵי noſtrils, and ſo of the Arabick alſo, which thus interprets it, and tranſcribes the following verſe alſo from Pſal. 115. and herein recedes from the LXXII. contrary to their uſe. And ſecondly, when 'tis conſidered that here it comes in conjunction with mouths, and eyes, and ears, there will be leſs doubt of this rendring. And thirdly, when 'tis evident, the foregoing verſes do clearly anſwer the fourth and fifth and part of the ſixth verſe of Pſal. 115. and there follows אַף לָהֶם וְלֹא יְרִיחוּן a noſe to them, or, they have a noſe, and they ſmell not, there will remain no queſtion but ſo it is to be rendred here alſo, אַף אֵין יֵשׁ רוּחַ בְּפִיהֶם a noſe, i. e. a noſe they have, they have no breath in their noſtrils (פֶּה having no peculiarity to ſignifie the mouth in diſtinction from the noſe) their no breath being fairly equivalent to no ſmelling, no רוּחַ, by which they ſhould הָרִיחַ ſmell. b. אַף

The Hundred and Thirty Sixth PSALM.

The hundred thirty ſixth is the magnifying of God's continual mercies in the exerciſe of his power, in the creation of the world, redemption and preſervation and advancement of his people; and is one of them which is intitled Hallelujah, (which probably it had in the front, though now it be placed in the cloſe of the former Pſalm, both in the Hebrew and Chaldee) and is by the Jews called the † great Thankſgiving. † הַלֵּל גָּדוֹל

1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

Paraphraſe.

1. Let the whole world in a moſt ſolemn, humble, devout manner, acknowledge the great bounty and liberality of God, and the continual exerciſes of his mercy, which is not, nor ever ſhall be at an end, but is conſtantly made good unto his ſervants in all the motions of their lives.

2. O give thanks unto the God of Gods; for his mercy endureth for ever.
3. O give thanks unto the Lord of Lords; for his mercy endureth for ever.

2, 3. Let them adore, and worſhip, and praiſe him with all poſſible expreſſions of veneration and admiration, as the onely and ſupreme Governour of the whole world, infinitely above all the heathen moſt adored deities, and above the greateſt potentates on earth, and withall as a moſt gracious Father of infinite never-failing mercies toward thoſe that adhere to him.

4. To him who alone doeth great wonders; for his mercy endureth for ever.

4. There is nothing ſo difficult which he is not able to bring to paſs, all nature is ſubject to his power, as it is not to any other whoſe eſſence and power both are finite and limited, and overruled by him, and this power of his moſt ſignally exerciſed for the ſupporting and aſſiſting of his ſervants.

5. To him that by wiſedom made the heavens; for his mercy endureth for ever.

5. A work of that power it was by which he at firſt created the upper part of the world, the body of the heavens and air; and in the fabrick thereof was infinite wiſedom expreſt as well as power, yea and infinite mercy alſo to us men, for whoſe uſes and benefit that ſtately fabrick was principally deſigned.

6. To him that ſtretched out the earth above the waters; for his mercy endureth for ever.

6. A like act of infinite power and wiſedom it was, when the waters covered the face of the earth, and ſo rendred it unhabitable to us, to prepare vaſt receptacles for the waters, and thither to convey and remove them from the ſurface of the earth, and ſo to ſecure the earth by bounds ſet to the Ocean, that it ſhall not be overflowed by it, but remain a peaceable fruitfull ſafe habitation for us, which is an act of the ſame infinite conſtant mercy.

7. To him that made great lights; for his mercy endureth for ever:
8. The ſun to rule by day; for his mercy endureth for ever:
9. The moon and ſtars to rule by night; for his mercy endureth for ever.

7, 8, 9. A like act of his power and wiſedom it was, and ſo alſo of his infinite mercy and bounty toward us, that he created the ſun, moon and ſtars, for ſuch excellent benefits of mankind, not onely illuminating this lower world of ours, but refreſhing and warming, and ſending forth various influences into every the meaneſt creature, by theſe great inſtruments managing, and guiding, and preſerving, and by propagation continuing all creatures, directing them in all their undertakings, preparing both for work and reſt, and providing all things neceſſary for them.

10. To him that ſmote Ægypt in their firſt-born; for his mercy endureth for ever:
11. And brought out Iſrael from among them; for his mercy endureth for ever:

10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. But yet more peculiarly hath his power and mercy to us been magnified in reſcuing our whole nation out of the ſlavery and oppreſſions of Ægypt, and this in a moſt prodigious manner, multiplying judgments upon the Ægyptians from one degree to another, till at length he deſtroyed the firſt-born in every family, upon which they were inforced to let us go; but then farther interpoſing for us, by making the red ſea recede till our people paſt through the chanel of it, and then bringing it back again in a full violence upon the armies of the Ægyptians, which purſued us at our departure, and overwhelming and drowning all of them: which was ſuch an heap of prodigies of mercies to us his unworthy people, that no ſtory hath ever exemplified in any other time.

12. With a ſtrong hand and with a ſtretched out arm; for his mercy endureth for ever:
13. To him which divided the red ſea into parts; for his mercy endureth for ever:
14. And made Iſrael to paſs through the midſt of it; for his mercy endureth for ever:
15. But overthrew Pharaoh and his hoſt in the red ſea; for his mercy endureth for ever.

16. And after this leading us through the deſart for many years together, he miraculouſly provided neceſſaries for us, ſending us bread from heaven, abundance of delicate food, and water out of a rock of flint, and ſo gave us continual teſtimonies of his infinite unexhauſted bounty.

16. To him which led his people through the wilderneſs; for his mercy endureth for ever.

17,18,19,20,21,22. And then to perfect his mercy, he led us to that land of Canaan which he had promiſed to give to the poſterity of Abraham, and by his ſole power and conduct inabled us to conquer and deſtroy great and eminent Princes with their whole armies, ſuch were Sihon and Og (ſee Pſal. 135. 11, 12. and Numb. 21. 24, &c.) which came out againſt us, and by theſe ſlaughters rooted them out, planting us in their ſtead, giving us a moſt fertile Kingdom to poſſeſs as our own, for our ſelves and our poſterities. An unparallel'd number and weight of mercies, which ought for ever to be commemorated by us. (And yet for all this, but a weak imperfect ſhadow and reſemblance of the redemption of mankind out of a far more unſupportable ſlavery under ſin and Satan, which by the gift of his own Son he hath wrought for us.)

17. To him which ſmote great Kings; for his mercy endureth for ever:
18. And ſlew famous Kings; for his mercy endureth for ever:
19. Sihon King of the Amorites; for his mercy endureth for ever:
20. And Og the King of Baſhan; for his mercy endureth for ever:
21. And gave their land for an heritage; for his mercy endureth for ever:
22. Even an heritage unto Iſrael his ſervant; for his mercy endureth for ever.

23,24. And though ſince our coming unto all this plenty, he hath permitted us, upon our provoking ſins, to be brought low and oppreſſed by our enemies; yet hath he not utterly forſaken us, but again returned in mercy to us, and reſcued us out of their hands, and reſtored us wonderfully to our former peace and ſafety.

23. Who remembred us in our low eſtate; for his mercy endureth for ever:
24. And hath redeemed us from our enemies; for his mercy endureth for ever.

25. Yet neither are his mercies confined and incloſed within ſo narrow a pale as this of the people of Iſrael, but it is inlarged to all mankind (even to all living creatures in the world) which as they have from him their original being, ſo have they their continual ſupport, and a conſtant ſupply to all their wants, of what ſort ſoever they are, all that is neceſſary to their bodies as well as their ſouls.

25. Who giveth food to all fleſh; for his mercy endureth for ever.

26. All which, and all the goodneſs that any man partakes of in this life, is but an efflux from that unexhauſted fountain of infinite bounty, deſcends from the Father of lights, the one Creatour and preſerver and governour of the world, and ſo is to be own'd and acknowledged by all, and he to have the thanks and honour and glory of it. O let all men in the world pay him this tribute, and never miſs to commemorate his endleſs mercies.

26. O give thanks to the God of heaven; for his mercy endureth for ever.

The Hundred and Thirty Seventh P S A L M.

The hundred thirty ſeventh is a deſcription of the ſadneſs of the Babyloniſh captivity, and the peoples vehement deſire and hopes to return to Canaan; and ſeems to have been compoſed preſently after the return from the Captivity, or when they ſaw the taking and waſting of Babylon to approach.

Paraphraſe.

1. In the time of our deportation and captivity, being carried ſo far, and deteined ſo long from the comforts of our own countrey, we had no divertiſement but that of repoſing our ſelves on the banks of Euphrates and Tigris, &c. and bewailing our loſſes, and recounting the felicities we once enjoyed, when we were allowed the ſolemn publick meetings for the ſervice of God at the Temple.

1. BY the waters of Babylon there we ſat down, yea we wept, when we remembred Zion.

2. As for the inſtruments of our Muſick, which were wont to aſſiſt in the quire, and help to commemorate the mercies of God moſt chearfully, we could not think it a ſeaſon to make uſe of them, and therefore hanged them on the trees in a neglected forlorn manner.

2. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midſt thereof.

3. Then they that had carried us up their captive ſlaves, would needs have us recite ſome of thoſe joyous hymns which we were wont to ſing in our ſolemn feſtivals at the Temple.

a. 3. For there they that ‖ carried us away captive required of us a ſong, and a they that † waſted us required of us mirth, ſaying, Sing us one of the ſongs of Zion.

‖ took us captive, שבינו
† carried us up,

4. But our Levites gave anſwer preſently that it was not fit for them to ſing thoſe feſtival hymns that belonged to the praiſes of the God of Iſrael at a time of publick mourning, and withall in a land and among a people that acknowledged him not for God, or indeed any where but in the Temple, the place of his ſolemn feſtival worſhip.

4. How ſhall we ſing the Lords ſong in a ſtrange land?

5. If ‖ forget.

5. If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand [b] ‖ forget her cunning.

5. 'Tis not possible for us so to put off the memory of our sufferings, so to devest our selves of our great concernments and interests in the welfare of Jerusalem, which now is despoiled of her inhabitants, or to put off the sorrow conceived for the loss of those joyfull advantages of God's publick worship which there we injoyed: should we convert such days of mourning as these into seasons of joy, 'twere not fit we should ever more use those sacred instruments, set apart for the praising and glorifying of God; b.

† or, advance not Jerusalem in the beginning of my joy, or mirth.

6. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I † prefer not Jerusalem [c] above my chief joy.

6. Not fit we should ever be permitted to sing any joyfull hymn again, if we can think fit to apply it to such purposes as these, of pleasing or gratifying our oppressours, or indeed ever sing again, till we can celebrate our return to our countrey and temple by our singing. c.

7. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem, who said, Rase it, rase it even to the foundation thereof.

7. It is more seasonable for us to recount that sad time when our captivation befell us, when our unkind neighbours the Edumæans were so forward to joyn their hands with our enemies to demolish our city and temple utterly; see Ezec. 25. 12. But for this their malice, the time will come when they shall pay full dear; see Jer. 49. 8.

* the destroyer,

8. O daughter of Babylon, [d] * who art to be destroyed, happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.

9. Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones.

8, 9. But alas, this is not like to be their lot alone, but in the first place the Babylonians themselves, they which had laid our city waste, are sure to be sadly repayed: All their injuries and cruelties to us will be visited on the universality of them, even to their infant children; the youngest of them shall be dasht to the ground, and all their people within a while signally destroyed. d.

Annotations on Psal. CXXXVII.

a. חוללינו

V. 3. Wasted us] The Hebrew חוֹלְלֵינוּ is from חָלַל to take, or lift, or carry up, and from thence the noun חֵל is an heap, from that notion of elevating or raising; and from thence it is conceived by some learned men, that the verb here signifies laying waste, demolishing, and so turning cities into heaps, but without any example of such signification. Others would have it a participle, and so to signifie their harps lifted, or hanged up, v. 2. But the ancient Interpreters all accord in a facile interpretation, and that which agrees with the ordinary use of the word, for taking, or carrying up, as that is appliable to deportation or carrying up of captives from their own to another countrey. The Chaldee reads it בָּזְזָנָא they that carried us away, from בָּזַז to spoil, or prey on, and carry away (so that word is used Ezec. 26. 12. בָּזּוּז, we reade, they shall make a prey of, but the Chaldee there וְיִשְׁבּוֹן, and they shall carry them away:) but the LXXII. more expresly, οἱ ἀπαγάγοντες ἡμᾶς, they that led or carried us away, and the Syriack ... ܣܒܘܢ and they that subdued us, (so יְדַבֵּר is rendred by the LXXII. ὑπόταξε subdued, Psal. 47. 3.) or, as the Syriack use is, carried us away. And so the Latin, qui abduxerunt nos, they that carried us away, and the Arabick, they that snatched us, or forcibly carried us thither. And thus it agrees well with שׁוֹבֵינוּ they that took us captive, αἰχμαλωτεύσαντες ἡμᾶς, they that captivated us (so שְׁבָה signifies) in the beginning of the verse. The Jewish Arab read מעלקונא they that hanged us up, as Buxtorf in his Hebrew Concordance, Suspensores nostri. Abu Walid mislikes that it should be from חל an heap, and would have ת not to be radical, but the Root to be ילל, and so the meaning to be, and, or when, or seeing our mournfull cry is to them joy, or rejoycing. Aben Ezra seems to dislike this (cited from Moses Haco.) and proposes two other conjectures: as 1. that חלל might in Hebrew signifie to destroy, or pull down; 2. (which he saith is the opinion of some) that חוֹלְלֵינוּ should be all one with שׁוֹלְלֵנוּ, by change of letters, they that spoiled us.

b. V. 5. Forget her cunning] In the Hebrew there is no more but תִּשְׁכַּח יְמִינִי let my right hand forget, which the Chaldee render אִנְשֵׁא לִי let me forget my right hand, and the Syriack ܢܬܟܚܕ &c. let my right hand forget me, but the LXXII. ἐπιλανθέσθω let my right hand be forgotten. And thus it may well be, to expres the great and fresh memory and care he hath of Jerusalem, that that shall certainly be the last thing which the Psalmist, or the Levites in the Psalm, will forget. But the conjunction here between the right hand and the tongue, v. 6. as the two instruments of Musick, the one to play, as the other to sing, do rather incline it to be interpreted by supply of an Ellipsis, let my right hand forget, i. e. forget to play, as my tongue to sing, v. 6. תִּשְׁכַּח יְמִינִי

c. ראש

V. 6. Above my chief joy] The Hebrew רֹאשׁ head is frequently used for the beginning of any thing, and not onely for the principal part of it. Gen. 2. 10. four רָאשִׁים heads are four beginnings, ἀρχαὶ say the LXXII. of rivers. So here the Chaldee שְׁרוֹי the beginning, and so the LXXII. ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς εὐφροσύνης μου in the beginning of my mirth. And אַעֲלֶה I will lift up, or advance, Jerusalem in the beginning of my mirth, is to make that the prime or chief ingredient in their rejoycing, the principal subject of their hymns.

d. הַשְּׁדוּדָה

V. 8. Art to be destroyed] הַשְּׁדוּדָה from שָׁדַד to lay waste, or destroy (in Paül instead of Poel, which is frequent) may be rendred vastatrix, destroyer. So the Chaldee, בָּזּוּזְתָא the waster, or spoiler; and so the Syriack in the same word. Onely the LXXII. reads ταλαίπωρος, which as it signifies miserable, so it signifies vile and wicked also: and so even the Hebrew, if taken in the passive, will be but answerable to ἀπολλύμενος, perditus, wretched, wicked, and so fit to be destroyed. The Jewish Arab reads, O thou spoiled; and so 'tis agreeable to the custom of the Eastern people, by way of omen or presage, to put with the name of a city an Epithet of Preserved, or guarded, if they wish well to it: and so 'tis proportionable it should be in the contrary signification, if they wish ill to it, to speak of that as done, which they wish to be done.

The Hundred and Thirty Eighth P S A L M.

A Pſalm of David.

The hundred Thirty eighth is a Pſalm of Thankſgiving to God for his mercies, his gracious audiences afforded to the prayers of his lowly ſervants, his powerfull deliverances of them, moſt admirable in the ſight of their heathen enemies: And being firſt compoſed by David, is ſaid by the LXXII. to have been made uſe of by || Haggee and Zachary at the re building of the Temple.

|| Ψαλμὸς τῷ Δαυὶδ Ἀγγαίου καὶ Ζαχαρίου.

Paraphraſe.

1,2. Bleſſed Lord, thou haſt been exceeding gracious to thy ſervants, and never failed to anſwer them that rely on thee, thy mercies and fidelity are much ſpoken of, thou art known by this title of merciſull and gracious, and one that never fails to perform his part of the Covenant with any. But thou haſt infinitely exceeded all that is or can be either ſaid or believed of thee, thou haſt made us admirable divine promiſes (that eſpecially of giving us thy Son, and in him all things) and wilt certainly perform them all to the utmoſt importance of them. And now what return ſhall we make unto thee for all this? having nothing elſe, we muſt in all equity pay thee the humbleſt acknowledgments of our very ſouls, and in thy publick aſſembly, in the preſence of the holy Angels, the witneſſes of our performances, and aſſiſtants and partners of our praiſes, bleſs, and laud, and magnifie thy glorious name for all thine abundant mercy toward us.

a. 1. I Will praiſe thee with my whole heart: before the [a] Gods will I ſing praiſe unto thee.

b. 2. I will worſhip toward thy holy Temple, and praiſe thy name † for thy loving kindneſs and * for thy truth; for thou haſt [b] magnified thy word above all thy name. † above * above

3. Whenſoever I have addreſt by prayer to thee, thou haſt never failed to anſwer me and relieve me; which, together with thine own free promiſe, gives me full confidence to beg and crave thy grace, to ſtrengthen and ſupport my ſoul againſt whatſoever danger, and to reſt ſecure in thee, that thou wilt grant it me.

3. In the day when I cried, thou anſweredſt me, || and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul. || thou ſhalt ſtrengthen חַזַּבְנִי

4,5. Theſe magnificent promiſes of thine, v. 2. ſhall be proclaimed and made known (thy Goſpel preached) to all the world, and thereby the greateſt potentates on earth, they and their kingdoms with them, ſhall at length be brought in to worſhip, and ſerve, and glorifie thee, and in ſo doing, never give over ſinging, and praiſing, and magnifying thy great, and gracious, and glorious works of mercy, thoſe wonderfull diſpenſations of thine in the gift of thy Son, and that gracious divine Law given us by him.

c. 4. All the Kings of the earth ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord, † when they hear the words of thy mouth. † or, for they ſhall יִ֝

5. Yea they ſhall ſing in the [c] ways of the Lord: for great is the glory of the Lord.

6. The ſum whereof is this, that as the ſupreme God of heaven hath humbled himſelf to this earth and fleſh of ours, ſo he will favourably behold and deal with all lowly, humbled, penitent ſinners, but proceed moſt ſeverely with all proud, obdurate impenitents.

6. * Though the Lord be high, yet hath he reſpect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off. * For the Lord is high, and hath— וְ—גָבֹ֥הַּ

7,8. And as for ſpiritual, ſo for temporal mercies, God will not fail to perform them alſo to his faithfull ſervants, whatever their diſtreſſes be, he will relieve or ſupport them, repel and ſubdue and repreſs their enemies, and ſecure them by his immediate divine interpoſition, if humane means do fail: what they are not able, and what indeed belongs not to them to doe for themſelves, he will moſt certainly perform in their ſtead, having begun a work of mercy, he will not leave it imperfect, he will certainly go through with it. Thus doth God abound in mercies of all ſorts to all his humble faithfull ſervants. Lord, be thou thus graciouſly pleaſed to deal with me, and with all thy poor helpleſs creatures, which being made by thee, have none other to fly to but thy ſelf.

d. 7. Though I walk in the midſt of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thine hand againſt [d] the || wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand ſhall ſave me. || noſe

e. 8. The Lord [e] will † perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O Lord, endureth for ever: * forſake not the works of thine own hands. † perform for me, * do not thou let go Annotations on Pſal. CXXXVIII.

a. אֱלֹהִים V. 1. Gods] Of the notion of אֱלֹהִים firſt for Angels, then for Magiſtrates, Judges, Kings, ſomewhat hath been ſaid, Note on Pſal. 82. b. Now to which of theſe it ſhall be applied in this place, is not agreed among the ancient Interpreters. The Chaldee reads דַּיָּנַיָּא Judges, the Syriack ܡܠܟ̈ܐ Kings, the Jewiſh Arab, the Nobles, but the LXXII. (and the Arabick and Æthiopick and Latin follow them) Ἀγγέλων Angels. And conſidering that in the next words v. 2. he mentions worſhipping toward the הֵיכַל קָדְשֶׁךָ (not temple, if it were, as the title directs, compoſed by David, but) palace of holineſs, i. e. the Sanctuary, where the Cherubims of glory, repreſentations of Angels, ſhadowed the mercy-ſeat, Heb. 9. 5. and that in that houſe of God, and houſe of prayer, the Angels were preſent, according to that of Saint Chryſoſtome, μετ' ἀγγέλων ᾄδεις, μετ' ἀγγέλων ὑμνεῖς, thou ſingeſt and chanteſt with the angels, and on this place, μετ' ἀγγέλων ᾄδειν βιάσωμαι, καὶ φιλονεικήσω τὴν ἀμιλλαν πρὸς αὐτοὺς θεῖναι, καὶ συγχορεῦσαι ταῖς ἄνω δυνάμεσι, I will ſtrive to ſing with the Angels, contending with them in this holy ſtrife and emulation, who ſhall praiſe him loudeſt, joyning in quire with the ſupernal powers; 'tis not improbable that this ſhould be the notion of the word in this place, and ſo ſinging praiſes to God before the Angels, be the praiſing him in the Sanctuary appointed for his worſhip, and where by his Angels he is preſent to his worſhippers. So Eccleſ. 5. 6. Say not before the Angel, viz. the Angel that is preſent in the houſe of God, v. 1. So Agrippa (in Joſephus de Bell. Jud. l. ii. c. xvi.) ſpeaking to the people near the Temple, ſaith μαρτύρομαι ἐγὼ μὲν ὑμῶν τὰ ἅγια, καὶ τοὺ ἱερεῖς ἀγγέλους τοῦ θεοῦ, I call call your Sanctuary to witneſs, and the holy Angels of God, thoſe that are there preſent, (Angelus orationis, ſaith Tertullian de Orat. the Angel of prayer), which the Jews believe to be preſent with them, and meet them, and praiſe God with them in their Synagogues; and of which that ſpeech heard in the Temple, before the deſtruction of it by Titus, is moſt probably to be underſtood, Migremus illinc, Let us depart thence. The LXXII. render נֶגֶד before, by ἐναντίον over againſt, referring probably to the way of alternate ſinging, one part of the quire ſinging over againſt and anſwering the other, ſinging together by courſes, Ezra 3. 11. and that S. Chryſoſtom's ἄμιλλα contention, and φιλονεικία emulation, and συγχορδίαν joyning in quire with the Angels ſeems to refer to. In the end of this firſt verſe the LXXII. add, above what is in the Hebrew, ὅτι ἤκουσας πάντα τὰ ῥήματα τοῦ στόματός μου, becauſe thou haſt heard all the words of my mouth, which the Latin affix to the firſt part of the verſe, Confitebor tibi, Domine, in toto corde meo, quoniam audiſti verba oris mei, I will confeſs to thee, O Lord, with my whole heart, becauſe thou haſt heard the words of my mouth. But this is ſure ſome Scholion, which crept from the margin into the text, and is not owned either by the Chaldee or the Syriack.

b. V. 2. Magnified thy word] For word here the copies of the LXXII. which now we have and which S. Hierom, S. Auguſtin, S. Hilary, S. Chryſoſtom and Theodoret uſed, read τὸ ἅγιόν σου, thy holy; which therefore the Latin joyning with τὸ ὄνομα name, reade, magnificaſti ſuper omne, nomen ſanctum tuum, thou haſt magnified thy holy name above all; and ſo the Arabick, thy holy name above all things. But in all probability ἅγιον and λόγιον being ſo near, the true original reading of the LXXII. was λόγιον word or ſpeech, by which they render the Hebrew אִמְרָה no leſs than five and twenty times, and never by ἅγιον, ſave in this one place. However it be, the Syriack as well as Chaldee adhere to the Hebrew, and reade the one אִמְרָה ܡܶܠܬܟ thy word, the other תְּהִלָּתֶךָ ܫܘܒܚܟ the words of thy praiſe. All the difficulty will be, what is meant by God's magnifying his word. His word, being here annext to loving kindneſs and truth, muſt needs be that part of his word to which theſe two are applicable, i. e. his promiſe, the matter whereof is mercy or loving-kindneſs, and in the performance of which is truth or fidelity. And then to magnifie this word of promiſe ſeems to ſignifie two things; 1. the making very great and excellent promiſes, and then 2. the performing them moſt punctually, (and ſo that double meaning of the phraſe will be perfectly anſwerable to the חֶסֶד and אֱמֶת benignity and fidelity foregoing:) and the doing it עַל כָּל שִׁמְךָ above all his name, is promiſing and performing moſt ſuperlative mercies, above all that is famed or ſpoken or believed of God. This will be yet more manifeſt, if we render the עַל twice uſed in the former part of the verſe, not for (proportionably to the LXXII. their ὑπὲρ with the Dative caſe) but above (proportionable to their uſe of it with an Accuſative) as in this place it is acknowledged to ſignifie. For then thus it will run, I will worſhip, &c. and praiſe thy name above thy loving-kindneſs, and above thy truth; i. e. 'twill be too low, too ſhort a compellation, to call thee mercifull or veracious, or ſtyle thee after any other of thy Attributes, thou art all theſe, and more than ſo, thou haſt magnified thy word, given and performed moſt glorious promiſes, above all thy name, above all that men have apprehended or ſpoken of thee. The Jewiſh Arab reads, I will give thanks unto thy name for thy bounty and beneficence, ſeeing thou haſt magnified above all thy Attributes, (or thy deſcription, or whereby thou art deſcribed) thy word. And in this ſenſe, though not from the importance of thy word for the eternal Word, or Son of God, this Verſe and Pſalm may reaſonably be interpreted of God's mercies in Chriſt, ſo far above what could be famed, or ſaid, or believed, or apprehended of him.

V. 5. Ways] What is here meant by in the ways of the Lord hath ſome difficulty. דֶּרֶךְ hath many ſignifications. 1. Its local importance for a way by which we paſs, and then the ways of the Lord, will mean the coming to worſhip at Jeruſalem, foretold in ſeveral of the Prophets; and then ſinging there will be very proper, becauſe in the march to Jeruſalem at the ſolemn feaſts, the people were accuſtomed thus to entertain themſelves with ſinging the praiſes of God. 2. 'Tis taken for the Law, as was obſerved on Pſal. 119. Note a. and in that ſenſe it will well cohere with the end of the foregoing verſe, the Kings, &c. ſhall praiſe thee, when they hear the words of thy mouth; Yea they ſhall ſing in the ways of the Lord, rejoyce and praiſe his name, and ſolace themſelves in the Law of God. 3. 'Tis taken for the manner of God's diſpenſations, his nature, and attributes, and dealing with men, according to the requeſt of Moſes, that God would ſhew him his way, Exod. 33. 13. And this alſo will be a convenient rendring in regard of the ſubſequent verſes, though the Lord be high, yet hath he reſpect to the lowly, &c. And the full ſenſe will be compounded of all theſe, that in the ſerving of God, in conſidering his dealings to us, and performing obedience to him, they ſhall rejoyce, and bleſs his name, and chearfully entertain themſelves. c. בִּדְרָכֵי

V. 7. The wrath] Of the notion of אַף for a noſe, ſee Pſal. 135. Note b. and ſo the Interlinear renders it here, ſuper naſum, upon the noſe; ſo the Chaldee, עַל נְחִירָא thou ſhalt put thy hand upon the noſe. Thus in our common ſpeech, to lead one by the noſe, imports a perfect rule over him that is ſo dealt with; and in a like proverbial ſpeech, to put a book into the noſtrils ſignifies reſtreining of the inſolent, Iſa. 37. 29. And ſo it will fitly ſignifie here, עַל אַף תִּשְׁלַח יָדְךָ thou ſhalt put thy hand upon the noſe of mine enemies, repreſs, and turn them which way thou pleaſeſt. The Jewiſh Arab reads עלי רגם אנף אעראי, which, according to the common uſe of the word, ſignifies in our Engliſh uſual expreſſion, in ſpite of the noſe of mine enemies. d. עַל אַף

V. 8. Perfect that which concerneth me] The Hebrew here reade יִגְמֹר בַּעֲדִי ſhall perform for me; ſo Pſal. 57. 2. the Lord גֹּמֵר עָלַי which performeth for me. The Chaldee here expreſs it by way of paraphraſe, יְיָ יְשַׁלֵּים &c. the Lord ſhall repay evil to them for me, and ſo the LXXII. Κύριε, ἀνταπόδωσαι ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, Lord, thou ſhalt repay or retribute in my ſtead: and ſo the word גָּמַר will poſſibly bear, being interpretable either to a good or ill ſenſe, but here by the context inclined to the ill ſenſe, puniſhing the enemies foregoing, as in that other place Pſal. 57. 2. 'tis by the LXXII. rendred in a good ſenſe, εὐεργετῶν doing good to him. But the word תָּרֶף in the cloſe, from רָפָה to ſlacken or let go, either what we hold in our hand, or are in purſuit of, makes it probable that גמר is here to have its primary notion of perfecting, performing or making good, according to that frequent form of prayer, that God will perfect the work of mercy begun, or taken in hand by him. Abu Walid explains it, by ſhall perfect or complete his goodneſs on or towards me, and ſaith that בַּעֲדִי here ſignifies עלי on me, or towards me. e. יִגְמֹר בַּעֲדִי חָרֶף

The Hundred and Thirty Ninth PSALM.

To the chief Muſician a Pſalm of David.

The hundred thirty ninth is the acknowledgment of God in that great attribute of his, of being the ſearcher of hearts, and conſequently an appeal to him, as the witneſs of his ſincerity, and the avenger of him againſt his enemies. It was compoſed by David, it appears not on what particular occaſion, and commended to the Prefect of his Muſick.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Bleſſed Lord, thou haſt the perfect inſpection and knowledge of me, of all my deſigns and undertakings, of the beginnings and ends of my actions, of all the traverſes of our lives, Deut. 6. 7. and even of my very thoughts. A long time before my deeds diſcover them to men, they are all naked and bare to thine all-ſeeing eye in heaven. Thou haſt ways of diſcovering and diſcerning the bent and inclination of my heart, not onely as men have by words (and actions) but by immediate inſpection into the heart, being ſo cloſe and preſent to me in every the leaſt motion of that, that a man can no more eſcape or march undiſcovered out of a city the moſt cloſely beſieged, when the galleries are prepared, and the aſſailant juſt ready to enter, than a thought can ariſe in my heart which is not perfectly diſcerned by thee, who art nearer and more intrinſick to me than my very ſoul. See Heb. 4. 13.

1. O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me.
2. Thou knoweſt my down-ſitting and mine up-riſing; thou underſtandeſt my thoughts ‖ afar off.
3. [a] Thou † compaſſeſt my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways.
4. * For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knoweſt it altogether.
5. [b] Thou haſt ‖ beſet me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. This is an admirable power or vertue, a moſt divine excellence of thine, ſuch as I am no way able to deal with or reſiſt. There is no means imaginable for me or any mortal to eſcape the reach of thy moſt penetrating eye, to ſecure our ſelves from thy all-ſeeing preſence: neither could an aſcent to heaven, nor deſcent to the ſtate of the dead, (that which hath its denomination from being inviſible) nay though we were able to fly as ſwift as light, which of an inſtant overruns the whole horizon, and carries day to the moſt diſtant regions, the utmoſt parts of the world, thoſe beyond the Ocean (whither it is thought there is no paſſage) can ſtand us in any ſtead toward the concealing us from thy ſight and judgments. The darkeſt night, the cloſeſt and moſt artificious receſs, the ſubtileſt diſguiſes and hypocriſies are all naked and bare and diſcernible before thee, and as much ſo as any the moſt open ſcandalous ſins, which are committed before the ſun, or on the houſe top.

6. Such knowledge is † too wonderfull [c] for me: it is high, I cannot * attain unto it.
7. Whither ſhall I go from thy ſpirit? or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence?
8. If I aſcend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there.
9. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea,
10. Even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me.
11. If I ſay, ‖ the darkneſs ſhall cover me, then the night ſhall be light about me.
12. Yea the darkneſs hideth not from thee, but the night ſhineth as the day: the darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee.

13. My very affections and inclinations, the original bents and pronenеſſes of my nature are within thy reach; my fabrick and formation in the very womb of my mother being a work of thine.

14. I will * praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works, and that my ſoul knoweth right well.

* confeſs to אוֹדְךָ

15, 16. But even then when in the womb of my mother, that place which no mortal eye can look into, my body was moſt ſecretly wrought, and all the art uſed that is imaginable to adorn it with the moſt various imbroidery, from the firſt being of that maſs, through all the changes that daily and hourly and minutely were made, till at length it came to a perfect formation, with all the parts which it brings into the world with it; thy all-ſeeing eye long before, even from all eternity, exactly diſcerned every the leaſt change or variety which happened all that while, and thy book of regiſter ſtill retains them, not one the leaſt circumſtance being omitted.

15. My ſubſtance was not hid from thee when I was made in ſecret, and [e] ‖ curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth.
16. Thine eyes did ſee my [f] † ſubſtance yet being imperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there were none of them.

† rude maſs, and on thy books were all written (as they were daily faſhioned) and not one of them was left out, or when there was not one of them.

17, 18. And as thy omniſcience and all-ſeeing power is moſt wonderfull, ſo are thy counſels, and moſt wiſe and various diſpenſations of thy providence moſt obſervable. Onely the depth of them is ſo great, and the variety ſo infinite, that it is not poſſible for me to get by all my ſearch to the bottom of them. The farther I proceed in this ſtudy, the farther I am from an end of it; I am as it were in a maze, no farther advanced to day than I was yeſterday, this being indeed an abyſs unſearchable, which cannot be ſounded by any humane underſtanding. In all the turns and varieties of my life, whatſoever my condition is, thy aſſiſtance and ſafeguard is continually preſent to me.

17. How precious alſo are thy [g] thoughts unto me, O God! how * great is the ſumm of them!

19. † Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20. For they h * speak against thee wickedly; and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21. Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee? and am not I ‖ grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22. I hate them with a perfect hatred: † I count them mine enemies.

19, 20, 21, 22. All that I can reach unto in the view of thy acts of providence, that particularly of permitting wicked men to prosper here in their impieties, is, that they are reserved for some greater evil, their prosperity will not long last, but end in utter ruine and destruction. Whether this be the design of thy permitting them to prosper, I cannot affirm; but this I am resolved of, that I will have nothing to doe with such kind of bloody men, such as oppose and hate God, yet talk demurely of him, make use of his name in their professions and protestations, as of an art of deceiving and mischieving others more advantageously. And those that doe so, that profess kindness to God, and yet resist and oppose him, and under the veil of piety cover their mischievous designs, I cannot but abhor, and nauseate, and vehemently dislike; I am weary to think of them: I am as much concerned, as nearly toucht with these their impieties, as if they were acts of injury and enmity against my self; no wrong that could be done me, would incense me more than what I see thus committed against piety and humanity it self, under the pretence of both. h

23. Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts.

24. And see if there be any i wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.

23, 24. And for this I appeal to thy all-searching eye, which I am sure discerns the deepest of my heart, v. 4. even the secrets of my thoughts, in which I hope thou wilt not finde any the least degree of unsincerity, any false accursed concealment. If there be, I heartily desire to be rid of it, to have it quite purged out of my heart, and to be constantly led and directed in that course of uprightness, both toward God and man, which alone can be able to bear the inspection of that all-seeing eye, and which alone will finally be the gainer, when frauds and colours and disguises are brought forth and severely punished. i

a. רִבַּעְתָּ

V. 3. Compasseth my path and my lying down] For רִבַּעְתָּ my lying down, from רָבַע recubuit, our copies of the LXXII. reade κοῖτόν μου, and from thence the Latin funiculum meum, my cord. But the Chaldee retains the Hebrew, with an addition of לְמֶעְסַק lying down to study: and the Syriack ܡܥܣܩ which the translater renders my path, may more fitly be rendred my rest, my vacancy; for there appears no reason why for lying down they should render path, when אָרְחִי immediately precedent had signified that. The LXXII. as now we have them, reade κοῖτον: but 'tis the conjecture of the learned Hugo Grotius, that they read not κοῖτον but κεῖτον, not cord but lying down, and that the affinity caused the change of one into the other, and then the Latin following the corrupted copies, render κοῖτον funiculum. The greater difficulty is how זֵרִיתָ is to be rendred. The Chaldee certainly mistake it, rendring it אִתְעַבַּרְתְּ חִילוֹנַי art become strange, as if it were from זוּר strange; but the Syriack ܝܕܥܬ thou knowest, and the LXXII. ἐξιχνίασας thou hast sought out and investigated, and so the Latin and Arabick, (though the Jewish Arab, deriving it against analogy of Grammar from זרת a span, render it, thou hast as it were spanned.) And this comes neerest the sense of it; for the Hebrew זָרָה as it signifies to disperse and dissipate, so 'tis peculiarly taken in the sense of fanning or ventilating. So Jer. 4. 11. לִזְרוֹת to fan, and so Jer. 51. 2. וְזֵרוּהָ and they shall fan them. And then as fanning is designed to the separating and discriminating the good corn from the chaff, so the word is here used in the metaphorical sense for searching, examining, as sifting, ventilating, winnowing, doth oft signifie. As for the supposed use of the word for incompassing, it is no where met with in Scripture, nor pretended by Lexicographers, save onely in this place whereof the question is, and so that deserves not much to be considered.

b. צַרְתָּנִי

V. 5. Beset me] The Hebrew צור signifies 1. to press, afflict, distress, 2. to besiege, 3. by pressing to form or frame any thing. The LXXII. taking it in the last sense render צַרְתָּנִי here, ἔπλασάς με, thou hast formed me, (and so the Syriack, ܝܨܪܬ thou hast framed me, and so the Latin and the Arabick, thou hast coagulated me) and to that purpose joyn the אָחוֹר וָקֶדֶם behind and before, to the former part of the period, thus, σὺ, κύριε, ἔγνως πάντα τὰ ἔσχατα καὶ τὰ ἀρχαῖα, thou, O Lord, knowest all things, the last and the first. But the Chaldee confirm our punctation and reading of the period out of the Hebrew, onely with this change, v. 4. that they render כִּי not for but when, When there is not a word in my mouth, and then suppose the כֻּלָּהּ all to belong to all that is within, i. e. to all the thoughts of the heart. And truly that is a very probable interpretation, כִּי אֵין מִלָּה בִּלְשׁוֹנִי when there is not a word in my mouth, הֵן יְהוָה יָדַעְתָּ כֻּלָּהּ behold, O Lord, thou knowest all. Our words are the onely instruments by which men come to know our hearts: but God without that help, though there be not a word spoken, knows, discovers all, hath his immediate inspection into the heart, and there sees the thoughts, without any optick of our words to look through. And then for צָרְתָנִי, they render it אֲעָקְתָא thou hast prest, distrest, driven me to straits, as one that hath laid a close siege on every side, that there is no escaping. And that this is the meaning of it appears by what follows, וְתָשֵׁת עָלַי כַּפֶּךָ and thou hast put thy hand upon me, as they that have besieged so close that they can sieze on or take when they please. And so 'tis all one whether we reade it distrest me, or begirt me, taking it either way in the notion of a strict and close siege, by which means the besieger, i. e. God here, hath exact knowledge of the state of the besieged, and can seize on him whensoever he pleaseth.

c. פֶּלֶא אֵיה מִמֶּנִּי

V. 6. Too wonderfull for me] The Hebrew פֶּלֶא אֵיה מִמֶּנִּי is best rendred admirable above me, i. e. more admirable than that I can resist it or avoid it. To that sense the Antecedents and Consequents exact it: the Antecedents, which affirm the very thoughts to be manifest, and discernible before him; and the Consequents, that whithersoever he goes, he is still within his prospect. To the same sense is the other part of the verse, It is high, לֹא אוּכַל לָהּ, I cannot to it, or with it, i. e. I cannot deal with it. I am not able to doe ought that may be of any force this way, i. e. toward the concealing any thing from him; whither shall I goe?

d. קָנִיתָ V. 13. Possessed my reins] The word קָנָה as it signifies to get, to acquire, so 'tis also simply to have in ones power or dominion. In the notion of getting, 'tis indifferently used of whatsoever kind of acquiring, particularly of that which is by way of generation; as when Eve names her first-born Cain, Gen. 4. 1. she renders that reason of it, קָנִיתִי I have gotten a man from the Lord (or a man the Lord, as אֶת may probably be rendred.) In that place, as in this, the LXXII. render it by ἐκτησάμην I have possest. But Gen. 14. 19. where God is called קֹנֵה, we reade possessor of heaven and earth; the LXXII. reade ὃς ἔκτισε who created, and so the Latin, qui creavit, and so the Persian Targum, the Creator of heaven and earth. And here the Syriack, that retains (as the Chaldee doth also) the Hebrew word, ܩܢܝܬ, is by the interpreter rendred condidisti, hast framed. Thus 'tis certain the Chaldee have rendred the word, Prov. 8. 22. where for the Hebrew קָנָנִי the Lord hath possessed me, they reade יְיָ בְּרָאַנִי the Lord hath begotten or created me, and so the Syriack also ܒܪܝܢ, as well as the LXXII. ἔκτισε. And though that were made use of by the Arrians, to prove Christ to be κτίσμα a creature, and to avoid that consequent 'tis conjectured that the true reading was ἔκτησε possest, not ἔκτισε created; yet some prejudices there are against that conjecture: as 1. that the LXXII. never use that word in the active, but still κτήσασθαι, and κέκτημαι, and ἐκτήσατο, which hath not that affinity with ἔκτισε: 2. that the Chaldee and Syriack render it by בָּרָא, which exactly accords with ἔκτισε, not with ἔκτησε. It will therefore be more reasonable to render such an account of the LXXII. their rendring it by ἔκτισε, as may be applicable to those other interpreters, and yet reconcileable with Catholick doctrin, viz. that κτίζειν with them is not so strictly or nicely to be taken, as to denote a creation ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντων out of nothing, nor any more than what is taught by the Church, of Christ's eternal generation, in respect of which he is truly styled the eternal Son of God. Thus we know that בָּרָא is used in Chaldee of generation, Job 3. 3. There is a man-child conceived, they reade אִתְבְּרָא. And so the Hebrew קָנָה is Zach. 13. 5. rendred by the LXXII. ἐγένετο begotten (where yet the context inclines it to the notion of educating.) And so still this notion of קָנָה for forming or begetting may have place in this verse of this Psalm, and the rendring be, thou hast formed (in stead of possessed) my reins; as Deut. 32. 6. after, is he not thy Father? is added קָנָךְ, we reade, that hath bought thee, the Chaldee more generally דִּילֵיהּ thou art his, and the Jewish Arab, thou art King or possessor of my inward parts, but the Persian Targum, he hath created thee; and to that the consequents also incline it, עָשָׂךְ וַיְכוֹנְנָךְ he hath made thee and formed thee, (as all the interpreters acknowledge.) And thus it well connects here with the Psalmists argument, of God's knowing him, and nothing being concealed from him; for having formed the reins, the natural seats of the affections, from whence proceed the very first motions of sin, he must needs be acknowledged to know them exactly. And thus it best suits also with what follows, תְּסַכְּנִי, we render, thou hast covered me, but the Chaldee אַשְׁתֵּית thou hast founded me, Castellio, composuisti me, hast compounded me: and so it may most probably be from the notion of סָכַךְ to mix or put together, thereby expressing the formation of the child in the womb. Or if it be in the notion of covering, then 'tis to be expounded by Job 10. 2. thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, תְּשַׂכְּכֵנִי (from שָׂכַךְ, which is all one with סָכַךְ) thou hast fenced me with bones and sinews, (to which notion the LXXII. their ἀντελάβου hast holpen me in this place must be referred, so as covering and fencing, protecting and helping are all one) and so still this returns to that of compounding or compacting, (so the Chaldee renders it in Job) and then the whole verse will be best thus rendred, Thou hast formed my reins, thou hast compacted me in my mothers womb: and then regularly follows, v. 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made. If this notion of קָנָה be not yet accepted, then it must be resolved to signifie such a possessing as prærequires not any acquiring, but onely implies having power over, as the Jewish Arab rendred it. And so the sense will well bear, Thou hast power over my reins, thou hast covered, or formed me in my mothers womb; he that hath so formed, having certainly the power over his very reins, and he that hath that creative power, having nothing concealed from him.

e. רְקַמְתִּי V. 15. Curiously wrought] The Hebrew רָקַם signifies being embroidered. So Exod. 35. 35. with the ingraver and cunning workman is joyned וְרוֹקֵם and the embroiderer. Of this see the learned Nicholas Fuller, Miscellan. l. 1. c. 20. And thus is it here most fitly used of the formation and contexture of the child in the womb (that certainly is the meaning of בְּתַחְתִּיּוֹת אֶרֶץ in the lower parts of the earth; for which the Jewish Arab reads, as if I had been in the lowest or bottom of the earth, saying that he adds כְּאִן as if, because the scope of the words is to describe the state or manner of his forming in the mothers womb: and so the like phrase may be understood not improbably Eph. 4. 9. see note on that place) wherein the flesh, and bones, and skin, and veins, and nerves, and arteries are so artificially weaved together, that no embroidery or carpet-work in the world can compare with it. What is here said of being made in secret, may seem to have some Emphasis, and reflect on the way of tapestry work, which requires a clear light, both to see what is wrought, and to view the pattern. For this the LXXII. put ἐν ὑποστάσει μου, reading, as the learned Val. Schindler most probably conjectures, וְקוֹמָתִי (from קוֹמָה stature) through the affinity betwixt ר and ו, and not, as the learned H. Grotius, רְכוּשִׁי my substance, riches, which is much more remote in sound, if not also in signification.

f. גָּלְמִי V. 16. Substance being yet imperfect] The Hebrew here hath no more than גָּלְמִי. The word signifies an embryon, or unformed lump, or mass of flesh, which the Chaldee reade גוּשְׁמִי my body, but the LXXII. ἀκατέργαστόν μου that which was unwrought of me, the mass or lump, before it had that curious embroidery mentioned in the former verse. An evident continuation of the former similitude of tapestry, to the making of which there is nothing prærequired but rude glomi or skeins of silk, and yet when the artificers hand hath past upon it, there arises presently an unexpected beauty and accurate harmony of colours and proportions. And as the workman hath still his book or pattern before him, to which he always recurrs, by as exact a method were all my members fashioned. Rabbi Tanchum reads, my matter before the introduction of the form of man, and so makes the matter fit for the reception of any form, before the introduction of the form, to be גולם. The Syriack here seems to have misread it, by changing the order of the letters, letters, for נמלי, נמלי, and so render it כָּמוּשׁ my retribution. Of this rude mole or mass in the womb, two things are here added, one in respect of it self, the other in relation to God's seeing it, which is the principal thing here considered. In the first respect 'tis said, יָמִים יֻצָּרוּ they are formed or fashioned daily, i. e. from that rude mass receive daily some degree of figuration. In the second respect 'tis said, that in God's book, עַל סִפְרְךָ upon his book, or register, or book of remembrance, as the Chaldee styles it, כֻּלָּם יִכָּתֵבוּ they are all written; to which, I suppose, is to be annext that whith ends the verse, וְלֹא אֶחָד בָּהֶם: the LXXII. render it literally, καὶ οὐκ ἐν αὐτοῖς, and not one of or among them. Wherein being an Ellipsis, that may not improbably be thus best supplied, There was not one, or any of or among them, omitted. 'Tis true, the words are so placed, that that part of the period יָמִים יֻצָּרוּ are daily formed, lies betwixt their being written in the book, and this close of the verse, not one of, or among them: but this is no unusual Hyperbaton, and may be avoided also by including those words in a Parenthesis, thus, Thine eyes did see my rude mass, and on thy register all were written (they were, or as they were daily fashioned) and not any of them was left out or omitted. And this is very consonant to the context, which is wholly designed to set down how all things lie open before God's eyes, are discerned and registred by him, and so written in his book, even to the least figuration in the body of the child in the womb, not one of them omitted. But it may also be thus rendred, וְלֹא אֶחָד בָּהֶם and there was not one of them, i. e. before there was any one of them formed, for this answers the knowing the thoughts, afar off, the knowing the word, when 'tis not in the tongue, v. 4. which Aben Ezra understands of God's prescience.

וְלֹא אֶחָד בָּהֶם

V. 17. Thy thoughts] רֵעֶיךָ is an equivocal word, signifying both thy thoughts and thy friends. In the latter notion all the ancient interpreters take it: דּוֹדֶיךָ thy lovers, say the Chaldee; οἱ φίλοι σου, thy friends, the LXXII. and so the rest. But the design of the whole context inclines it the other way. How precious to me are thy thoughts? (as most latter interpreters have acknowledged) and then רָאשֵׁיהֶם must be lookt on as a numeral word, and is by us rightly rendred the summ of them (though the Chaldee, in accordance with their other interpretation, reade רַבָּנֵיהוֹן their rulers, and the LXXII. οἱ ἄρχοντες αὐτῶν, the Latin, principatus eorum, their principalities) as more clearly appears אִסְפְּרֵם If I number them — v. 18. But then מָה עָצְמוּ is not so fully rendred how great? but (as the LXXII. πῶς ἐπεδραξάμεθα they are advanced in strength) how prevailing is the summ of them, how exceeding? i. e. much above me, or my comprehension. For so it follows, If I number them יִרְבּוּן they are multiplied מֵחוֹל above the sand. All the difficulty is, what is the meaning of the conclusion of the verse, הֱקִצֹתִי וְעוֹדִי עִמָּךְ literally, I awaked, and I am still with thee. A way of explaining it will be by keeping this latter part of the verse to the same matter to which the former part belonged, and so making the parts of this answerable to the parts of that. There 'twas, I will number them, the future for the subjunctive, If, or when I would number them: Here, I awaked, i. e. in proportion with that, when I do awake. There 'twas, They are multiplied above the sands: Here 'tis, I am still with thee, i. e. still in a work which hath no end, (such is numbering of sands, and such is comprehending the counsels or thoughts of God) when I awake, I still am i. e. where I was before I went to sleep, the more I think of it the more I may, 'tis such an Abyss, that I can never get to the bottom of it. Another interpretation the phrase is capable of, by laying the weight on the Amphibology which הֱקִצֹתִי occasions, signifying 1. to be faint, and wearied out by work, then 2. to awake from sleep, which usually refreshes, and 3. to arise from the dead, see 2 King. 4. 31. the child is not awaked, i. e. revived, and Isa. 26. 19. Thy dead men shall live, arise, awake, &c. And then by the elegance of this comprehensive word, the meaning may be, that whether fainting, or refresht, or rising from the dead, in whatsoever condition we are, God is present with us by his special assistance; and then fitly follows on the other side, his vengeance on wicked men, surely thou wilt slay, &c.

V. 20. Speak against thee wickedly] The Hebrew h. זִמָּם signifying a thought (whence the LXXII. render it διαλογισμὸν) but that generally is an ill sense, a wicked, mischievous thought, a contrivance for the hurt of some body, the phrase לִמְזִמָּה must be rendred, for mischief, (and that so εἰς διαλογισμὸν signifies, by which the LXXII. render it, see note on Matth. 15. e.) and then יְמָרוּךָ must be interpreted (not they speak against thee, but) they speak or talk of thee, their talking of God, pretending to piety, is but a stratagem to doe mischief. That this is the meaning of the phrase, appears by that which immediately follows, נָשׂוּא לְשָׁוְא עָרֶיךָ. First, they are God's enemies (so certainly עָרֶיךָ signifies 1 Sam. 18. 16. and so עָרִים is rendred by the LXXII. τοὺς ἐναντίους enemies, Isa. 14. 21. though here they reade it, as from עִיר city, τὰς πόλεις σου thy cities) and being so, sure their mentioning or naming of God must be on design to doe mischief by it. Secondly, their assuming in vain, (λαμβάνειν εἰς ματαιότητα assuming for vanity or falseness, say the LXXII.) is swearing falsely, mentioning the name of God for the confirming some falsity; and so that perfectly agrees with the former sense, of speaking of God for mischief. And accordingly the Chaldee render both phrases to the same sense, יְמַנּוּן בִּשְׁמָךְ עַל נְבָלָא they swear by thy name for deceit, and again, they swear falsely.

נָשׂוּא לְשָׁוְא

V. 24. Wicked way] The Original hath דֶּרֶךְ עֶצֶב way of falseness. עֶצֶב signifies sorrow, labour, and withall any thing laboriously or artificially contrived, and so frequently an idol or image, which is exprest in scripture style by vanity and falseness. And so here the Chaldee render it אוֹרַח רְשָׁעָן the way of error, and the Syriack ܐܘܪܚܐ ܕܣܛܢܐ of falseness; the LXXII. reade more generally ἀνομίας iniquity. This the Psalmist here disclaims in reference to the deceitfull pretenders to piety, v. 20. their way being a way of deceit and falseness; and because he looked on that as that which would not long stand, God would at length discover and bring out such glozers, he therefore here adds, and lead me בְּדֶרֶךְ עוֹלָם into the way of lasting, of eternity, that way which alone will hold out when all others faile, when the way of the ungodly shall perish.

The Hundred and Fortieth Psalm.

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David.

The hundred and fortieth is a prayer of David's for deliverance from his malicious treacherous enemies, such as ‖ Doeg, &c. 1 Sam. 22. or rather the Ziphites, who had undertaken to overthrow his goings, v. 4. see 1 Sam. 23. 20, and 22. and a prediction of the evils which should fall upon them, the just reward of their dealings with him. It was by him appointed for the publick service, and committed to the Prefect of his Musick.

Paraphrase.

1. DEliver me, O Lord, from the evil man, preserve me from the violent man.

1, 2. O Lord, I come now to thee for thy seasonable relief and rescue, for wicked and injurious men, whose thoughts and actions are wholly set on doing of mischief, are now resolved to set upon me with the greatest violence, with all their heart as it were.

3. For this they prepare by slanders and malicious forgeries, their weapons are like those of the serpent, or most venemous vipers, they carry them in their mouths: the tongue of the one is not more sharp, nor the teeth of the other more poisonous, than are their words and slanderous fictions against me. (See Rom. 3. 14. Psal. 58. 4.

3. They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent: adders poison is under their lips. Selah.

4, 5. Many insidious and treacherous ambushes have they laid for me; no fouler is provided with greater variety of gins, and nets, and springes, than they are with artifices of deceit to supplant and ruine me, and these they contrive, whithersoever I go; so that I have no means or hope of safety, but by my resort and appeal to thee, for thy safe conduct, to secure me through all these dangers.

4. Keep me, O Lord, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man, which have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5. The proud have laid a snare for me and cords; they have spread a net by the way side, they have set gins for me. Selah.

6. To thee therefore I humbly address my self, as to a God of mercy, and to me of most fatherly care and kindness, as well as to a Lord of all power and might, beseeching thee in mercy to look upon me.

6. I said unto the Lord, thou art my God; hear the voice of my supplications, O Lord.

7, 8. O thou eternal God, the governour of all, from whose power it is that all my preservations and deliverances come, from thee I acknowledge to have received most particular and signal protections in all my former dangers: be thou now pleased to continue this thy good hand of safeguard over me, to blast, in stead of prospering, the designs of my malicious enemies, and not to allow them that temptation to exalt and elevate themselves, which good successes are wont to give wicked men.

a. יגורו מלחמות

V. 2. Are they gathered together for war] The Hebrew reads יָגוּרוּ מִלְחָמוֹת, from גור to collect or draw together or congregate; so Heb. 1. 15. יְגוֹרֵהוּ he gathers them into his net: and being here in the active sense, and joyned with wars, it must be to prepare, put in order, instruere prælia, muster and set their affairs in order for battel. The LXXII. duly render it παρεταξαντο πολεμους, they set their battels in order; order; the Chaldee מְגָרְגִין they excite, or inſtigate; and ſo the Syriack alſo.

b. V. 8. Further not] What was formerly noted of the conjugation Hiphil, that it ſometimes imports not cauſing, but any degree of occaſioning, or but permitting, is here obſervable of אַל תַּפֵּק from פוּק exivit to goe forth. From whence in Hiphil as it ſignifies to bring forth, to advance, ſo alſo to permit to go forth or advance; and ſo the prayer here is, not ſo much that God will not give them a good ſucceſs, as that he will interpoſe to their hinderance, blaſt and fruſtrate their deſigns, in ſtead of permitting them to proſper. To that the Chaldee applies יְרוֹמוּ that follows, not in the notion of רוּם for attolli exalting, but for tolli being taken away or deſtroyed, for ſo they reade, יִסְתַּלְקוּן they ſhall be taken away or deſtroyed for ever, rendring Selah, as they conſtantly doe, לָעַד for ever; or perhaps in the notion of רוּם to corrupt, or putrifie ſo as to breed worms, Exod. 16. 20. they will be corrupted for ever. The LXXII. have ſomewhat deformed this verſe: for מַאֲוַי deſires, they reade, as with other points, מֵאַוַי, ἀπὸ τῆς ὀδυνίας μου, from my deſire; for וְטֻמְאָתָם his wicked thought or device, וְטֻמְאָתָם, and ſo rendring it διελογίσαντο καὶ ἐμοῦ, they thought or reaſoned againſt me; then for אַל תַּפֵּק ſuffer them not to advance or proſper, μὴ ἐγκαταλίπῃς με, forſake me not, from ſome other ſuppoſed notion of פוּק. Yet they ſeem beſt to have rendred יְרוֹמוּ they will be exalted, by μὴ ὑψωθῶσιν leſt they be exalted. So v. 9. for רֹאשׁ מְסִבָּי the head of thoſe that incompaſs me, they reade (as if it were מְסֻבָּי) ὁ κεφαλὴ τῆς περιχώρου μου, the head of their circuit.

c. אִישׁ לָשׁוֹן

V. 11. Evil-ſpeaker] אִישׁ לָשׁוֹן a man of a tongue, is proverbially a detractor, or Sycophant: So Eccl. 10. 11. בַּעַל לָשׁוֹן a man of a tongue, is by the Chaldee rendred אֵבֶל קְרִיץ צִין one that eats accuſations, the phraſe by which they expreſs a ſycophant; and ſo the ſimilitude of the ſerpent biting doth inforce there. In this place they expreſs it by גְּבַר מְסִיתָנֵי לִישָׁן תְּלִיתָאי a delator with a three-fold or three forked tongue, which is another ſtyle of theirs for a ſycophant, becauſe ſuch a man wounds three at once, the receiver, the ſufferer, and himſelf. Of him it is here ſaid, לֹא יִכּוֹן he ſhall not be eſtabliſhed, in the future, (as all the former verbs v. 9, and 10. may be read,) and not in the imperative; and ſo by way of pronouncing or prediction onely, and not by way of wiſh.

The Hundred and Forty First P S A L M.

A Pſalm of David.

The hundred and forty firſt is an ardent prayer of David's for deliverance from his enemies; but firſt and eſpecially for patience under them, that he be not by their oppoſitions, or the incitements of others, moved out of his courſe of meekneſs, of piety and the other parts of duty incumbent on him. It ſeems to have been compoſed (as the next is by the title affirmed to be) on occaſion of Saul's perſecuting him to the cave of Engedi, 1 Sam. 24.

1. LORD, I cry unto thee, make haſte unto me: give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee:

2. Let my prayer be ‖ ſet forth before thee as incenſe, and the lifting up of my hands as an [a] evening ſacrifice.

‖ directed תִּכּוֹן

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. O Lord, I am in diſtreſs, and have no other refuge but thee to whom I may reſort. To thee therefore I moſt humbly and ardently addreſs my prayers, in the ſame manner as thy prieſts are by thee appointed to addreſs their daily oblations, to attone thee, beſeeching thee graciouſly to accept and anſwer them, and in thy time to reſcue me out of mine enemies hands. a.

3. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep [b] the † door of my lips.

4. * [c] Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practiſe wicked works with men that work iniquity; and ‖ let me not eat of their dainties.

† lifting up

* or, My heart ſhall not incline to an evil word, to contrive devices inimpiety,

‖ I will not partake in their delicacies.

3, 4. Meanwhile, O Lord, grant me thy guidance both for my words and actions: for my words, that whatever their dealings toward me are, I may not be provoked to any ſpeech of raſhneſs or impatience or diſloyalty toward Saul; and for my actions, that I may not be tempted to any unlawfull practice, that I may not for any appearance of advantage to my ſelf thereby, give ear to any evil counſel. My reſolutions are firm to the contrary, and how inviting ſoever the temptations are, I hope I ſhall never taſte of the ſweets of them. b. c.

5. † [d] Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs; and let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oile, which ſhall not break my head: for yet my prayer alſo ſhall be in their calamities.

6. * When their [e] judges are overthrown in ſtony places, they ſhall hear my words, for they are ſweet.

† Reproach will bruiſe me that am righteous, and rebuke me, but that poiſonous oyle ſhall not bruiſe my head; for my prayer ſhall be in their miſchiefs.

5, 6. I have been moſt carefull to preſerve my loyalty to Saul, and am not guilty of the leaſt diſloyal attempt toward him; yet calumniators have made other repreſentations of me, that I ſeek his life, &c. and ſo have incited him to purſue me to death. But how low ſoever my condition at preſent be, I am confident they ſhall not prevail againſt me to my final ruine. Againſt their bittereſt and moſt poiſonous calumnies, their moſt miſchievous attempts againſt me, my prayers are a ſufficient antidote, and will, I doubt not, avert the miſchief from me. When Saul went into the cave, and left his Commanders and followers without by the ſides of the cliff, they were witneſſes of my dealing with Saul, and the ſignal evidences I gave him of mine integrity, ſufficient to convince the moſt inveterate malice and moſt obſtinate calumny, and accordingly ſo it wrought on Saul himſelf, 1 Sam. 24. 16, 17, 18, 19. d. e.

* Their Judges are left by the ſides of the rock, and have heard my words, that they—

7. Our bones are ſcattered at [f] the ‖ graves mouth, as when one cutteth and heweth [g] wood upon the earth.

‖ As one that cuts and ſlits the earth, our bones are ſcattered at the mouth of Scheol.

7. We have been terribly harraſt and oppreſt and perſecuted, and now are every minute ready to be deſtroyed. f. g.

8. But mine eyes are unto thee, O God the Lord; in thee is my truſt, † leave not my ſoul deſtitute.

9. Keep me from the ſnare which they have laid for me, and the grins of the workers of iniquity.

10. Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilſt that I withall eſcape.

† ar, pour not out, waſt not away

8, 9, 10. But, O Lord, on thee is our full affiance and confidence, thy power and thy mercy is our ſure refuge; to thee we addreſs our humbleſt requeſts, that thou wilt not caſt us out of thy care, but preſerve us from all the ambuſhes and treacherous deſigns that wicked men have laid againſt us. And this I have full confidence thou wilt doe, bringing miſchief on them that deſign miſchief, and by the ſame means deliverance to us who are injured by them.

Annotations on Pſal. CXLI.

a. מִנְחַת עֶרֶב

V. 2. Evening ſacrifice] The reaſon why the Evening ſacrifice is here named, is rendred by Kimchi, becauſe that ſuppoſeth and comprehends the morning ſacrifice; but by R. Saadiah, becauſe there is no ſin-offering brought after that, all things being then atoned. The Jewiſh Arab reads, as an accepted or acceptable oblation.

b. דַּל

V. 3. Door] From דָּלָה to draw up, is דַּל here, and ſo ſignifies the lifting up: וְקָלִי ſaith the Chaldee, elevation; and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, the lifting up of my lips, making it to be of the ſame root that דְּלוּ עֵינַי לְמָרוֹם Iſa 38. 14. which according to him muſt be, Mine eyes are lifted up on high, from דלל and ſo Kimchi ſaith his father interpreted it, that the meaning ſhould be, the words which I take into my lips. So Abu Walid ſeems to have taken it. From the root דָּלָה is דֶּלֶת a door, and that metaphorically applied to the lips, Job 41. 14. Who ſhall open דַּלְתֵי פָנָיו the door of his face, i. e. his lips? and ſo דַּל is thought here to be uſed by Apocope. But although the lips are fitly ſtyled the door of the face, or the mouth, yet they will not ſo commodiouſly be ſtyled דַּל שְׂפָתַי the door of the lips, eſpecially when that other rendring of the Chaldee is ſo much more agreeable, the lifting up, as that ſignifies the opening of the lips, or mouth, which is the moſt obvious and frequent Periphraſis of ſpeaking: Job 11. 5. O that God would ſpeak, וְיִפְתַּח and open his lips againſt thee; and ſo Job 32. 20. I will ſpeak that I may be refreſht, I will open my lips — and Pſal. 51. 15. Open thou my lips — And therefore as the Syriack omits the rendring of this word דַּל, and onely reads, ſet a guard ܢܛܘܪܬܐ on my lips; ſo the LXXII. that have θύραν a door, do uſe that with περιοχῆς joyned with it, for a Periphraſis of the guard, the rendring of נְצָרָה, not of דַּל, Θὲ, κύριε, φυλακὴν τῷ στόματί μου, καὶ θύραν περιοχῆς περὶ τὰ χείλη μου, ſet, O Lord, a watch on my mouth, and a door of guard about my lips: and ſo the Latin and Arabick, oſtium circumſtantiæ, and oſtium munitum, a guarded door to my lips; where 'tis evident the lips are not lookt on as the door, but the guard, the grace of vigilance and circumſpection, that is to be ſet upon them, and is uſefull, as a door, to keep all cloſe, to keep any thing from coming out that ought to be kept in.

c. עָלַל

V. 4. To practiſe wicked works] The Hebrew here reade, לְהִתְעוֹלֵל עֲלִילוֹת בְּרֶשַׁע to machinate machinations in evil: the LXXII. reade πρόφασιν πρόφασεως ἐν ἁμαρτίαις, to pretend pretences in ſins, and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, that I ſhould pretend cauſes with the people that work deceit; noting this to be the manner of wicked men, when they project or contrive iniquity, to project alſo ſome ſpecious pretences of doing it, whereby they much facilitate the practice of it, and hope to gain impunity, if they proſper not in it. And thus indeed doth the Hebrew עָלַל, here uſed ſignifie, ſeeking occaſions, pretences of doing any thing. But the Chaldee interprets it here by לְמֶחְשַׁב thinking, contriving, and the Syriack by ſpeaking and committing iniquity; and ſo 'tis not amiſs expreſt by our Engliſh, to practiſe wicked works. In the end of the verſe, for אֶלְחַם בְּמַנְעַמֵּיהֶם eat of their dainties, from נָעַם pleaſant, delightfull, the LXXII. reade συνδυάσω μετ' ἐκλεκτῶν αὐτῶν, combine, or, as the Latin, communicabo, communicate with their choſen things, i. e. certainly with the beſt or fatteſt of their diet, as ἐκλεκτὴ ὄψις is a cram'd fowl, and as the LXXII. Gen. 49. 15. render the ſame word נָעַם by πίων fat. The Chaldee reade, בְּזֻמָּר — I will not be fed with the ſong of the houſe of their feaſts, from a notion of נָעַם, in which the Rabbins uſe it, for Muſick, or Song, and becauſe Muſick was a feſtival ceremony. But the Syriack ܐܠܐ ܐܣܟܟ I will not joyn, or mix, or, from the notion of מֶלַח for ſalt, I will not eat ſalt with them, as συναλίζεσθαι Act. 1. 4. to eat ſalt with, is to converſe familiarly with them. The onely difficulty in this verſe is, whether it be a prayer, or a reſolution: and indeed the words will bear either ſenſe, אַל תַּט לִבִּי being interpretable, in accord with the former verſe, in form of a prayer, Incline not my heart, and yet (as beginning this period) they may as fitly be rendred, my heart ſhall not incline; and to this the deſign of the following verſes ſeems to exact it. The occaſion of the Pſalm ſeems to have been that eminent paſſage of David's ſtory, to which the title of the next Pſalm refers, when he was in the cave, 1 Sam. 24. when Saul entred into the cave to cover his feet, and David might have killed him if he would, and was by his ſervant incited to doe ſo, but reſolved he would not touch the Lord's anointed; and when he had cut off the skirt of his garment, his heart ſmote him for it. To this the verſe ſeems to refer, as a reflexion on that reſolution of his, not to joyn with any, on never ſo advantageous a proſpect, in any unlawfull practice, yea though it were to get the inſtant poſſeſſion of a Kingdom. And therefore that ſeems to be the moſt commodious rendring of it, My heart ſhall not incline, &c. The Jewiſh Arab interpreting it as a prayer, ſaith in a note, that he means not a forcing, but the defending him from his enemies, that his heart might not include, or bend aſide, to buſie his thoughts about them, and how to doe, or to think of them, or ſeek to beware of them.

אַל תַּט לִבִּי

d. חֶסֶד

V. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs] The Hebrew words יַהֲלְמֵנִי צַדִּיק חֶסֶד are acknowledged very obſcure; yet by obſerving the deſign of the Pſalm forementioned, and the ambiguity of the word חֶסֶד, which ſignifies reproach as well as mercy, they may receive their explication: for then it will thus readily ſignifie, Reproach will bruiſe me that am righteous, and rebuke me. Herein there is no difficulty, the like elliptical ſcheme being elſewhere not rarely met with, Ezech. 22. 5. יִתְקַל שֵׁם בָּךְ טְמֵאַת they ſhall mock at thee infamous, i. e. which art infamous, and Jo. 8. 40. ζητεῖτέ με ἀποκτεῖναι ἄνθρωπον, &c. ye ſeek to kill me, a man, i. e. who am a man, &c. Then follows שֶׁמֶן רֹאשׁ אַל יָנִי רֹאשִׁי. That רֹאשׁ ſignifies poiſon, as well as head, appears by Deut. 29. 18. and Jer. 9. 15. Hoſ. 10. 4. Am. 6. 12. and here Pſal. 69. 21. and that it is thought appliable to wine, ſee Deut. 32. 32. Their grapes are grapes of gall, i. e. poiſonous, and their cluſters are bitter. And then why may it not as fitly be the epithet of oyle, and ſo ſignifie calumnies or reproach (ἔλαιον ἁμαρτωλοῦ ſay the LXXII. the oyle of the wicked) ſuch as David fell under among Saul's ſervants, as if he ſought the King's life, &c. But this, ſaith he, אַל יָנִי רֹאשִׁי ſhall not break or bruiſe mine head, (by that cuſtomary ſcheme of alluſion betwixt רֹאשׁ my head, and רֹאשׁ poiſon, the ſame word in different ſenſes, here farther exemplified in יָד and פֶּה and the like) i. e. ſhall not finally deſtroy me. So bruiſing the head ſignifies Gen. 3. 15. in contradiction to bruiſing the heel, which hath not that fatal conſequence. That their calumny, though poiſonous, and probable to bring ruine on him from the King, ſhould yet not doe it, his argument of aſſurance is, from a ſure

Antidote

Antidote to which he had resort, כִּי עוֹד תְּתַלַּחְתִּי בִּרְעוֹתֵיהֶם for my prayer shall be in their mischiefs; i. e. my addresses to God shall be the instrument of preserving me from any real or considerable harm that calumny can do me. For בִּרְעוֹתֵיהֶם in their mischiefs; (actively, their mischievous designs and enterprises) the LXXII. reads ἐν τῇς ἐυδοκίαις αὐτῶν in their good pleasures, (as from רָצָה which in Chaldee signifies will;) and it may well enough be born, by wills meaning their evil designs or attempts. In a place of so much difficulty, it will not be amiss to add some other conjectures, as, by retaining the usually-received signification of the words, thus, Kindness will bruise me that am righteous, and rebuke me, i. e. work on me more than harsher dealing; Let not oyle on the head, i. e. flattering words, as smooth as oyle poured on the head, break my head; i. e. overcome me to be perswaded or enticed by them: for my prayer shall yet be in or against their mischiefs, i. e. that I may not be intrapped by those mischiefs which they intend when they speak me faireſt. Some Jews, by another sense of גִּי, would have this the sense, rendring the first words, Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness, and reprove me, the oyle of my head, with which I was anointed for King, shall not remove my head from the stroke of his correction or reproof, but my prayer shall be for them, that God would repay them good, and deliver them from their calamities.

c. V. 6. When their Judges are overthrown in stony places] This passage also will receive its explication from the story 1 Sam. 24. Where Saul seeking David upon the rocks of the wild goats, v. 2. left his captains and followers there on the sides of the rock, whilst he went into the cave to cover his feet. Of them therefore it is here fitly said, their Judges (i. e. the commanders of his army, according to the style known in the book of Judges) are left (so נִשְׁמְטוּ usually signifies) בִּידֵי סֶלַע by the sides of the rock (so יָד hand metaphorically signifies:) the LXXII. reads ἐχώσθη πέτρα near or close by the rock. And being there left, it is aptly added, וְשָׁמְעוּ אֲמָרַי כִּי נָעֲמוּ and have heard my words that they are sweet; for so 'tis certain they there heard David expostulate his case with Saul, with those gentle words which melted the inveterate hatred of Saul himself, who upon that Apology then made by David v. 14. dismist his people from all further pursuit of him.

V. 7. Graves mouth] לְפִי שְׁאוֹל at the mouth of Scheol, is a very full expression of the condition of David and his men in the cave, in which they seemed as it were buried alive, and yet were in so desperate a condition as to be worse than dead. f. לְפִי שְׁאוֹל

Ibid. Wood upon the earth] The Hebrew here reads, כְּמַ֣ן פֹּלֵחַ וּבְקָע בָּאָרֶץ as one that cuts and slits the earth, (so the Jewish Arab) or upon the earth, and in all probability belongs to the digging or ploughing up the surface of the earth: so the Chaldee render it, as a man that slits and cuts the earth בְּמַרְיָא with plough-shares, and so the Syriack, as ܡܨܥܐ the share cleaves the earth; and to that sense the LXXII. also, though not by literal rendring, yet by way of paraphrase, ὡσεὶ πίχος ἐπὶ γῆς διαῤῥηγνυμένη ἐπὶ γῆς, as the thickness, the crust, i. e. the uppermost clod of the ground is broken in pieces on the earth. And so in all reason we are to render it, not by supposing an Ellipsis, to be supplied by addition of wood; but without any Ellipsis, as he that cuts and slits בָּאָרֶץ the earth, the ב being frequently abundant. And then this is a fit description of a great distress, and very proportionable to David's then present condition in the cave expresst in the beginning of the verse, by Our bones are scattered at the mouth of Scheol. When a pit is made, the earth that is digged and fetcht out to make the pit, lies in an heap rudely at the mouth of the pit, and that that lies so is ready to tumble into it: Just so, saith the Psalmist, we have been ploughed and harrast out by sharp oppressions, we now lie like earth so digged or ploughed, at the mouth of the great pit, call'd Scheol, i. e. ready to be destroyed. g. בְּקַע וּבָקַע בָּאָרֶץ

V. 8. Leave not] From עָרָה to empty or pour out, is תַּעַר here in the notion of casting away, pouring out, as that which one cares not for. So the Chaldee render it, תְּרוֹק pour not out my soul, the LXXII. μὴ ἀνταναλῃς take not away, the Syriack ܠܐ ܬܫܕ cast not off, or away, my soul. f. תַּעַר

The Hundred and Forty Second PSALM.

Maschil of David, A prayer when he was in the Cave.

The hundred and forty second is a prayer of David for deliverance in his helpless state, when having escaped the treachery of the Keilites, he was now in the Cave of Engedi, 1 Sam. 24. 1. It was set to the tune called Maschil (see note on Psal. 32. a.)

Paraphrase.

1. I ‖ cried unto the Lord with my voice; with my voice unto the Lord † did I make my supplication.

1, 2. In the distress wherein now I am, this state of absolute destitution, there is none to whom I should resort but to thee, O Lord, who art able and willing to relieve those that in their greatest straits apply themselves to thee. To thee therefore I most humbly and devoutly address my petitions, beseeching thee favourably to behold and rescue me.

2. I * poured out my complaint before him: I ‖ shewed before him my trouble.

3. When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then [a] thou knewest my path: in the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

3. I am in great perplexity, not knowing which way to turn my self: I am even at the last gasp of earthly hopes, my treacherous enemies being very solicitous to insnare and betray me. Thou seest, O Lord, the sadness of my straits, and withal knowest the sincerity of my heart: To thee therefore do I make my supplication, v. 1. that thou wilt now take my part, own, and defend me. a.

4. † I looked on my right hand, * and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge ‖ failed me, no man [b] † cared for my soul.

4. I have no human strength to defend or patronize me, all worldly friends and auxiliaries have utterly forsaken me; my life is left as an orphan, destitute and helpless, to him that will be so bloody as to take it away from me. b.

5. I cried unto thee, O Lord; I said, thou art my refuge, and my portion in the land of the living.

5. To thee therefore I pour out my prayers, O God of all power and grace, on thee do I wholly depend for my succour and preservation, as on the onely sanctuary of my life, as on the onely inheritance that is left me in this world.

6. Attend

6, 7. I am now very fitly qualified for thy ſovereign hand of relief to interpoſe: my perſecuting enemies are much too hard for me; I am now ſhut up in a cloſe Cave, as in a priſon. O do thou in this my time of diſtreſs ſend me thy relief, and it will be a means of bringing in much honour to thy name, many proſelytes to thy ſervice, when by thy dealing with me they are ſo fully convinced of thy power and protection over all that rely on thee.

6. Attend unto my cry, for I am brought very low: deliver me from my perſecutors, for they are ſtronger than I.

Annotations on Pſal. CXLII.

a. יְדַעְתָּ

V. 3. Thou kneweſt] What ידע ſignifies here will be judged by Deut. 2. 7. He hath known thy walking through this great wilderneſs, i. e. hath preſerved thee in all thy journying; and ſo it agrees with what went before, for the Lord hath bleſſed thee in all thy works. So Pſal. 31. 7. Thou haſt known my ſoul in adverſity, i. e. taken notice of me, patronized me. And ſo here, thou kneweſt my path, i. e. haſt taken notice of me, to defend and ſecure me.

b. דוֹרֵשׁ

V. 4. Cared for my ſoul] The Hebrew hath דוֹרֵשׁ לְנַפְשִׁי ſeeking for my ſoul. The word דָּרַשׁ to ſeek, is ſometimes uſed for vindicating, avenging, taking part, or defending any. So Gen. 42. 22. Reuben ſaith of Joſeph, behold his blood נִדְרָשׁ is required, i. e. avenged and puniſht upon us; and Gen. 9. 5. אֶדְרֹשׁ I will require the life of man, i. e. avenge it on him that kills any man; and in Ezekiel oft, his blood will I require — Thus when God is ſaid to require ſimply, without any addition, the meaning is, to avenge and puniſh. And proportionably here, requiring or ſeeking לְנַפְשִׁי for my ſoul, moſt probably ſignifies vindicating or puniſhing another for the evil deſigned by him unto my ſoul. For this is the part of a Goel, an avenger of blood (ſuch was the next of kin to him that was ſlain) to require juſtice for his ſoul, or blood, or life; and ſo ἐκζητεῖν to require, by which the LXXII. here render it, frequently ſignifies. And to this the Syriack directs the interpretation, ܘܠܝܬ ܠܗ ܡܚܐ and there is no avenger for my ſoul; vindex animæ meæ, vindicator of my ſoul, ſaith their Latin Tranſlatour; and ſo the word ſignifies, from חָבַע to avenge, which the Chaldee alſo uſeth in this place, וְלֵית תָּבַע לְנַפְשִׁי there is none to vindicate or avenge my ſoul. That this is the meaning of the phraſe, beſide the authority of thoſe Interpreters, ſeems farther evident by the beginning of the verſe, הַבֵּיט יָמִין וּרְאֵה look (or looking) on the right hand, and ſee (or ſeeing) (ſo the words in the Imperative or Infinitive are literally to be rendred, and not, as the Interpreters more paraphraſtically reade, ἐπέβλεπον, I looked) וְאֵין לִי מַכִּיר and there is not for me that knows me, i. e. acknowledges me, none that takes my part. The Advocate was wont to ſtand at the right hand of his Client (ſee Pſal. 109. 31. Note i.) And to this the phraſe ſeems to refer, look, or looking, on my right hand, where the Patron or Advocate uſeth to ſtand, and there is no man that acknowledges or takes my part. So again אָבַד מָנוֹס מִמֶּנִּי refuge is loſt or gone from me, to the ſame ſenſe, there is none to whom I can fly to take my part; and then in the concluſion, none that requireth or avengeth for my ſoul, none that defends or vindicates it.

הַבֵּיט יָמִין

c. לְהוֹדוֹת

V. 7. That I may praiſe] The Hebrew לְהוֹדוֹת ad laudandum, to praiſing, may indifferently be rendred, either in the firſt perſon, that I, or in the third plural, that they may praiſe, i. e. the juſt in the next words. And to that latter ſenſe the following words ſeem to incline it, בִּי יָכְתְּרוּ in me ſhall the righteous come about: in me, אֲמָטוֹלָתִי for my cauſe, ſaith the Chaldee, ſhall they come about, יְעַטְּרוּן לָךְ כְּלִיל דְּשִׁבְרָא the juſt ſhall make thee a crown of praiſe, ſay they, not, come about me (or, as the LXXII. καὶ περιμένουσιν, they watch for me, in the notion wherein they render כָּתַר by μένειν, expect, wait for, Job 36. 11.) but בִּי as that ſignifies for me, or for my cauſe, on occaſion of me, come about, incompaſs God, believe in him, praiſe his name, when (ſo בִּי is to be rendred) they ſee how graciouſly God hath dealt with me. The Jewiſh Arab reads, And the righteous ſhall take me for a crown (to them.) The word כָּתַר ſignifies ſo to incompaſs or come about, as when a multitude of people aſſemble on any occaſion: ſo Prov. 14. 18. the ſimple inherit folly, but the prudent יַכְתִּירוּ ſhall incompaſs knowledge, i. e. ſeek it, and follow it with all diligence: and ſo to incompaſs God, is to frequent his ſanctuary, devoutly and diligently to make addreſſes to him. The word alſo in Arabick dialect ſignifies to be multiplied, and ſo it will commodiouſly be rendred, on occaſion of me the righteous ſhall be multiplied, when they ſee thy mercifull returns, or dealings toward me.

The Hundred and Forty Third P S A L M.

A Pſalm of David.

The hundred forty third is a mournfull ſupplication for deliverance from powerfull enemies, and was compoſed by David, ‖ as ſome think, at the time of Abſalom's rebellion; as † others more probably, and in harmony with the two former, at the time of his being purſued by Saul, in the Cave of Engedi.

‖ Sive David ob filii rebellionem, when his ſon purſued him, LXXII. † R. Kimchi.

a. 1. O Lord, I beſeech thee to hear and anſwer my requeſts which my preſent diſtreſſes force me to preſent to thee, and thy abundant grace and promiſes of never-failing mercy give me confidence that thou wilt favourably receive and perform unto me.

1. HEar my prayer, O Lord, give ear to my ſupplications; in thy faithfulneſs anſwer me, * and [a] in thy righteouſneſs.

* in

2. I know my ſins have juſtly provoked and brought down theſe preſſures on me; but thou art graciouſly pleaſed to be reconciled with humbled penitent ſinners, thou haſt promiſed by a covenant of mercy not to charge on ſuch, with ſeverity, all the ſins of which they have been guilty: and were it not for that covenant, 'twere impoſſible,

2. And enter not into judgment with thy ſervant; for in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified.

impossible for any frail imperfect sinfull creature, such as every meer man is, to appear with hope or comfort before thine exact tribunal. To this thy promised mercy mine onely appeal lies; and having sincerely vowed to perform unto thee all faithfull (be it never so mean and imperfect) obedience, I can put in my claim, founded on thy faithfull promise (v. 1.) and hope and beg for this seasonable mercy and deliverance from thee.

‖ beat—to דִּכָּא † the dead of the age.

3. For the enemy hath persecuted my soul, he hath ‖ smitten my life down to the ground, he hath made me to dwell in darkness, ᵇ as † those that have been long dead.

3. For my malicious enemies have calumniated first, then persecuted me, and now at length brought me to a very sad and dejected estate, forced me to hide my self under ground, to fly from one cave to another, from the cave of Adullam, 1 Sam. 22. to the cave of Engedi, ch. 24. b.

* And ו

4. * Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me, my heart within me is desolate.

5. I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works, I muse on the work of the hands.

4, 5. This hath cast me into great perplexity (see Psal. 142. 3.) filled me with a most anxious horrour, wherein yet I have been able to support my self by reflecting on thy former mercies and deliverances which thy acts of power have been signally interposed to work for me.

‖ is to thee — לְ

6. I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul ‖ thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land, Selah.

6. To thee therefore I address my prayers with all the earnestness which my distresses can infuse into me. The ground that is parcht with heat and drought, and gapes for some showre from the clouds to refresh it, is an emblem of me at this time, who pant and gasp and call importunately for some refreshment and relief from thee, having no other means in the world to which I can apply my self.

7. Hear me speedily, O Lord, my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

7. O Lord, I beseech thee, hasten to my relief, my present exigences challenge and importune it from thee: If thou do not interpose in my behalf, I shall suddenly be overwhelmed by mine enemies and destroyed.

8. Cause me to hear thy loving kindness in the morning, for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk, for I lift up my soul unto thee.

8. O be thou graciously pleased to shew forth thy pity and thy bounty timely and speedily to me, who have no other refuge to resort to, but that of thine overruling sovereign aid: in this is my confidence, for this I offer up the humblest devotions of my soul. O be thou my guide, to direct me to that course, whatever it is, which thou shalt chuse, and wilt prosper to me.

9. Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies: ᶜ I flee unto thee to hide me.

9. Lord, to thee do I betake my self, as to mine onely refuge; under the safeguard of thy protection I desire to secure my self: O be thou graciously pleased to afford me that mercy, and thereby to rescue me out of mine enemies hands. c.

† let thy good Spirit lead me: רוּחֲךָ טוֹבָה תַּנְחֵנִי

10. Teach me to doe thy will, for thou art my God: † thy spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

10. Above all, by thy paternal goodness I beseech thee, be thou pleased so to conduct me in all my ways, that I may doe nothing but what is perfectly good and acceptable in thy sight. To which end, Lord, let thy gracious and sanctifying spirit, the onely fountain and authour of all goodness and holiness, direct and assist me in every turn and motion of my life, and bring me into a steady constant course of all strict and righteous living, (that antepast or first part of heaven on earth, which thou wilt be sure to crown with a state of perfect purity and impeccability hereafter.)

‖ thou shalt— † thou shalt * shalt thou

11. ‖ Quicken me, O Lord, for thy names sake: for thy righteousness sake † bring my soul out of trouble.

12. And of thy mercy * cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul; for I am thy servant.

11, 12. And thus, O Lord, I trust thou wilt answer my requests, restoring to me that chearfull and comfortable state of which these my sad distractions have deprived me. Two ingagements thou hast to this, the honour of thy Name, which is concerned in thy protecting thy servants and suppliants, and thine own gracious and mercifull disposition, which inclines thee to relieve and assist those that most stand in need of it. And the same goodness of thine and mercy to me, as to one who am resolved for ever to continue thy constant servant, doth oblige thee to take my part against these my malicious adversaries; and accordingly thy power will certainly interpose, and magnifie it self in their utter excision and destruction.

Annotations on Psal. CXLIII.

a. בְּצִדְקָתֶךָ

V. 1. And in thy righteousness] The Hebrew reads בְּצִדְקָתְךָ in thy righteousness, without any Copula, and neither the Chaldee nor LXXII. think fit to supply it. And this seems to be the truer rendring. For taking צְדָקָה righteousness in the notion frequently exemplified, of mercy or favour, 'tis an act of that in God, viz. of divine mercy and grace, to answer in faithfulness, i. e. to perform his promise: for the promise of God being free, but yet conditional, and so not due by any tenure or claim (but that of his promise) to be performed to any, and not so also to any but him that performs the condition, and our sins and frailties being such, that we stand in need not onely of God's grace, but also his mercy and ἐπιείκεια, his moderation of strict right, v. 2. his grace to qualifie us for a due performance of that condition, and his mercy to make us capable of being accepted in the number of those who have performed the condition; it follows, that it must be an act of God's meer mercy and goodness to perform to any man that which he hath promised to his faithfull servants, and so it must be בְּצִדְקָתְךָ in God's righteousness or mercy that he answers the Psalmist בֶּאֱמֻנָתֶךָ in thy, i. e. God's, truth or faithfulness. And this is most fully expresst by reading in thy righteousness, without any copula or form of conjoyning it to faithfulness.

b. מֵתֵי עוֹלָם

V. 3. Long dead] What מֵתֵי עוֹלָם here signifies, is not clear. The LXXII. render it, ὡς νεκροὺς αἰῶνος, as the dead of the age; the Syriack black, לָעַד for ever. The Chaldee hath לְעָלְמָא וּלְעָלְמֵי עָלְמַיָּא as they that lie along (ſee Pſal. 88. 5.) in, or of that age. What they mean by that ſtyle, may perhaps be gueſt by other parts of their dialect. The grave or ſepulchre they uſually ſtyle בֵּית עָלְמָא the houſe of the age, (as we ordinarily ſtyle it our long home.) So Iſa. 14. 18. where from the Hebrew we render, all of them lie in glory, every one in his houſe, the Chaldee reads בְּבֵית עָלְמָא in the houſe of his age; and this from the deſcription of death, Eccl. 12. 5. אֶל בֵּית עָלְמוֹ to the houſe of his age, which the Chaldee there render בְּבֵית קְבוּרְתֵּיהּ to the houſe of his ſepulchre. To this belongs the phraſe Tob. 3. 6. of αἰώνιος τόπος eternal place, for the grave, juſt anſwerable to בֵּית עוֹלָם the houſe of the age, for which the Hebrew of Paulus Fagius's edition (for Munſter's leaves it out) hath בֵּית לְוַעַר לְכָל חָי the houſe appointed for every one living. So Ezek. 26. 20. I will bring thee down with them that deſcend unto the pit, אֶל עַם עוֹלָם to the people of the age. And the ground of the phraſe is there expreſt, I will place thee בְּאֶרֶץ תַּחְתִּיּוֹת in the infernal land, בַּחֳרָבוֹת מֵעוֹלָם in the ſolitudes from the age, i. e. in thoſe infernal vaſt receſſes, whither from the beginning of the world all men have deſcended, and there remained in condition of deſolation, though the number of them that are there be never ſo great. In proportion to which dialect בְּמִתֵּי עוֹלָם will here be literally rendred, as the dead of the age (by the age meaning the place or ſtate of the dead, hades, or ſcheol) but according to ſenſe, as the dead in the grave, the very ſame which Pſal. 88. 5. is expreſt by שֹׁכְבֵי קֶבֶר they that lie in the grave.

c. אֵלֶיךָ כִּסִּיתִי

V. 9. I flee unto thee to hide me] So we paraphraſtically render אֵלֶיךָ כִּסִּיתִי. The LXXII. reade σοὶ κατέφυγον, I have fled to thee as to a refuge. The Chaldee מֵימְרָךְ סַגֵּיתִי לְפֻרְקָנִיךְ thy word have I ſet up for my redeemer. The Radix כָּסָה ſignifies to hide, and ſo in Piel (as here it is) Pſal. 32. 5. לֹא כִסִּיתִי, I have not hid, Pſal. 44. 15. כִּסַּתְנִי hath covered me, and 69. 7. כִּסְּתָה hath covered my face. Accordingly the Interlinear render it, ad te abſcondi me, to thee have I hid me. The learned Val. Schindler ſuppoſes an Ellipſis, thus to be ſupplied, tibi revelavi quod hominī celavi, I have revealed to thee what I have concealed from men, ſo Kimchi, to thee alone have I cried, or made my petition in ſecret, viz. not revealing his caſe to men, as not hoping in them for help. And if this notion for hiding muſt be reteined (as 'tis in all other places wherein 'tis uſed in the Bible, and ſo generally and conſtantly rendred by κρύπτω and the like) then the rendring muſt be, to, or at thee I have hid my ſelf; as thoſe things which we are afraid to loſe, we hide in a ſure place; and thus it is all one with depoſiting in God's hands. So the Jewiſh Arab, With thee have I ſought to be hid, or for an hiding place, or refuge. So Abu Walid, To thee have I fled for refuge, and with thee ſought for an hiding place, making it contrary to Iſa. 57. 8. מִמֶּנִּי גָלִיתָ וַתַּעֲלִי which the Interlinear renders, quia à me diſcooperuiſti & aſcendiſti, and our Engliſh, thou haſt diſcovered thy ſelf to another than me and art gone up. But 'tis not unuſual with Hebrew words to enlarge their ſignifications, and ſo it is reaſonable to believe (though it cannot be demonſtrated from any other place of the Bible) that כָּסָה to hide, may in Piel ſignifie to fly unto as a refuge, becauſe ſuch καταφύγια refuges are either really or metaphorically hiding places. And then the LXXII. their κατέφυγον, I have fled, will be a literal rendring of כִּסִּיתִי, and ſo the Latin confugi.

d. בְּאֶרֶץ מִשׁוֹר

V. 10. Land of uprightneſs] בְּאֶרֶץ מִשׁוֹר is literally to be rendred to or in a ſtraight ground: ſo the Chaldee, בְּאַרְעָא תְּרִיצָא into a ſtraight ground, and the Jewiſh Arab, in a right or ſtraight region, and ſo the Latin in terram rectam; by which we are to judge of the reading of the LXXII. ἐν τῇ εὐθείᾳ, in the right, that it ſhould be undoubtedly, as Aſulanus's copy hath it, ἐν γῇ εὐθείᾳ, in a ſtraight ground. By this ſtyle is metaphorically ſignified a regular courſe of life, in obedience to all the commands of God, the onely rule of the good man's walking. The Syriack have duly explain'd it by ܠܐܪܥܐ ܕܫܘܝܐ into thy way of life, that courſe of living which thou requireſt, or which may be acceptable to thee.

The Hundred and Forty Fourth P S A L M.

A Pſalm of David.

The hundred forty fourth is a fiducial and humble prayer to God for deliverance from his heathen enemies, and proſperity upon his people, and this founded in his former experiences of God's interpoſition for him, for which he humbly praiſeth and bleſſeth his holy name. It was compoſed by David, in reflexion, ‖ as 'tis thought by ſome, on Goliah and the Philiſtims; but moſt certainly of a latter date, when he was ſettled in the Kingdom, ſee v. 2, and 10. By the Jews, Kimchi and Saadiah Gaon, it is referred to the Meſſias.

‖ περὶ τοῦ Γολιάθ, LXXII. ſo the Chaldee alſo v 10.

Paraphraſe.

1. BLeſſed be the Lord my ſtrength, which teacheth my hands to war and my fingers to fight.

2. My † goodneſs and my fortreſs, my high tower and my deliverer, my ſhield, and he in whom I truſt, who ſubdueth my people under me.

† חַסְדִּי

1, 2. For all the preſervations and victories which have been injoyed by me, I am infinitely obliged to bleſs and praiſe and magnifie the one ſupreme God of heaven and earth, from whom it is that I have received all the ſtrength and skill in military affairs which I have ever ſhewed; an act of whoſe ſpecial mercy and favour, preſervation and protection I muſt acknowledge it, that I have ever been ſucceſsfull or ſafe in any enterpriſe. In him therefore with all reaſon I wholly repoſe my full truſt and confidence.

3. Lord,

3. Lord, [a] what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him? or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt account of him?
4. Man is like to vanity: his days are as a ſhadow that paſſeth away.

a. 3,4. For my ſelf, I am but a mean, infirm, frail, mortal man, ſubject to all the miſadventures which are conſequent to the feeble, inconſtant, tranſitory condition of men, and it is an infinite mercy of dignation in God, to take ſo much conſideration of me, as to make uſe of me as his inſtrument in ſubduing the enemies of his people. (And herein was David a type of Chriſt, who having humbled himſelf to aſſume our humane mortal fleſh, became by his divine power in that fleſh victorious over the powers of hell. Heb. 2. b.)

5. Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down; touch the mountains, and * they ſhall ſmoak.
6. Caſt forth lightning and ſcatter them; ſhoot out thine arrows and deſtroy them.
7. Send thine hand from above, rid me and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of ſtrange children;
8. Whoſe [b] mouth ſpeaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falſhood.

* let them ſmoke ויעשנו

5,6,7,8. It muſt therefore be thine own work, O Lord, the interpoſition of thine own almighty hand, to which we muſt owe all our deliverances and preſervations. If thus thou wilt vouchſafe to own thy ſervants, and by thy meſſengers and miniſters, the Angels of thy preſence, exhibit and preſentiate thy ſelf among us, then ſhall all our enemies be diſperſt and deſtroyed, not by the ſtrength or dint of our weapons, but as by thy thunderbolts and darts of lightning, by the artillery of heaven, by thy divine aſſiſtance, and protection over us (ſee note on Pſal. 18. d.) And thus be thou graciouſly pleaſed to magnifie thy power and mercy to us at this time, to deliver us from theſe puiſſant heathen armies, which have nothing but their own ſtrength and number to depend on or boaſt of, which worſhip and rely on falſe idol gods, which are not able to help, and ſo are ſure to diſappoint them, and ſo their hands fail no leſs in their undertaking than their mouths do, when thou the onely Lord of heaven and earth, of thoſe angelical hoſts, comeſt out and appeareſt againſt them. b.

9. I will ſing a new ſong unto thee, O God: upon a Pſaltery, || and an inſtrument of ten ſtrings, will I ſing praiſes unto thee.

|| of ten ſtrings עשור ſo Pſal. 92. note b.

9. All the returns that I can make for this mercy, is my praiſing and magnifying thy name for it: And that I ſhall be carefull to perform with the choiceſt ditties and ſweeteſt inſtruments, (and all little enough to reſound thy praiſes, who haſt wrought ſo wonderfully for us) ſaying,

10. It is he that giveth ſalvation unto Kings, who delivereth David his ſervant from the hurtfull ſword.

10. All honour and praiſe be aſcribed to the ſupreme God of heaven, from whom it is that the greateſt Kings of the earth receive their ſtrength and authority, and to whom they owe all their deliverances and preſervations. And the ſame ſtrength and power of his hath he graciouſly pleaſed to afford me at this time, that have no other title to it, but that I am his ſervant, and of my ſelf ſo much weaker than my adverſaries, that I am ſure to be * deſtroyed by them, if God do not defend and preſerve me.

11. Rid me and deliver me from the hand of ſtrange children, whoſe mouth ſpeaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falſhood.

11. O be thou now pleaſed to continue this thy mercy to me, the enemies being ſtill the ſame, idolatrous, heathen, wicked men, that do not acknowledge or confeſs the true, but profeſs and depend on falſe Idol gods, and ſeaſonably at this time to reſcue and preſerve me out of their hands.

12. That our ſons may be as plants † grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as [c] corner-ſtones, poliſhed after the ſimilitude of a palace:
13. That our garners may be full, affording * all manner of ſtore: that our ſheep may bring forth thouſands and ten thouſands in our || ſtreets:
14. That our oxen may be [d] † ſtrong to labour: that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no * complaining in our || ſtreets.

† growing גדלים
* from this to that ſort, ſee note c.
|| folds, ſee note d.
† fat, or fleſhy
* cry
|| fields, or yards.

12, 13, 14. Be thou pleaſed at length to reſtore peace and proſperity to the land; that our families may flouriſh in goodly and beautifull children; that our proviſions at home, and our flocks and herds abroad may be very thriving and proſperous; and that thoſe goods which thy bleſſing beſtows upon us may not be in danger of hoſtile invaſions; that we may poſſeſs and injoy our ſelves in a chearfull continued peace, without any diſturbances or diſquiets. c. d.

15. Happy is the people that is in ſuch a caſe: yea happy is the people whoſe God is the Lord.

15. This were a very happy condition indeed; and this and all other happineſs of what ſort ſoever is the ſure and conſtant portion of thoſe that perform faithfull obedience unto God, and depend on him onely for the acquiring it.

Annotations on Pſal. CXLIV.

a. אָדָם בֶּן אֱנוֹשׁ

V. 3. What is man] By אָדָם man, and בֶּן אֱנוֹשׁ ſon of man, as all or any of mankind may be underſtood in the condition of frail, mortal, miſerable, and unworthy creatures; ſo the Pſalmiſt himſelf, David, and the ſon of David, the Meſſias, is eſpecially to be underſtood in this place. The occaſion of the Pſalm is, by the title in the LXXII. and Latin and Arabick, not improbaly noted to be the combat with Goliah. And for the ſetting out the wonderfull mercy of God to him in that, 'twas very conſiderable, that he was but a young ſtripling, the youngeſt and moſt inconſiderable of all the ſons of Jeſſe, who alſo was but an ordinary man. And accordingly Pſal. 8. which hath probably been reſolved to be compoſed on this occaſion of Goliah of Gath, the ſame conſideration hath a principal place, v. 4. What is man, that thou art mindfull of him? and the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him? there אֱנוֹשׁ and בֶּן אָדָם, weak man and ſon of mortal ordinary man, as here אָדָם and בֶּן אֱנוֹשׁ. Which accordance as it is ſome argument to confirm that (as this) Pſalm to have been compoſed on that occaſion, ſo it will apply theſe words in their more eminent, prophetick, myſtical ſenſe, to Chriſt our Saviour in his ſtate of humiliation (wherein yet by the power of his Divine nature he did ſo many wonderfull works) by virtue of the Apoſtle's teſtimony, Heb. 2. 6. where he cites thoſe words from Pſal. 8. 4. (exactly parallel to theſe) and applies them particularly to Chriſt.

b. פִּיהֶם דִּבֶּר שָׁוְא

V. 8. Mouth ſpeaketh vanity] In this verſe ſomewhat more ſeems to be expreſt than is ordinarily obſerved in it. The Chaldee interprets it of falſe oaths and wicked laws; and the moſt obvious ſenſe is fol-is followed by the reſt of the interpreters, vain or lying ſpeeches, and wicked works or actions: and thus it may fitly enough be adapted as the motive to God to deſtroy them. But if we conſider 1. that the prayer is againſt David's enemies, the Philiſtims, and thoſe by the title of בְּנֵי נֵכָר ſons of the ſtranger, the title that ordinarily belongs to Idolaters, and 2. that שָׁוְא and שֶׁקֶר vanity and falſhood frequently ſignifie the falſe Idol gods, and 3. that their mouth ſpeaking fitly ſignifies profeſſion either of a true or falſe God, and 4. that יְמִינָם their right hand may poetically ſignifie, him, or them, oh whom they depend, as their προστάται, their patrons or auxiliaries, (as when it is ſaid, the Lord at my right hand, Pſal. 110. 5. and many the like, the meaning is, he aſſiſts and takes my part) and ſo יְמִין שֶׁקֶר right hand of falſhood, be a vain gainleſs helper, that fails all that depend on him; on theſe conſiderations it will not be unreaſonable thus to interpret the whole verſe of theſe idolatrous Philiſtims, whoſe gods cannot ſtand them in any ſtead againſt the one true God of heaven, to whom David makes his addreſs; and that this is the fuller importance of it, and that as a motive fit here to be uſed in a prayer to God, to incline him to own his ſuppliants againſt ſuch kind of enemies as theſe.

שָׁוְא
יְמִינָם יְמִין שֶׁקֶר

c. V. 12. Corner-ſtones] From זָוִיָה an angle or corner, two formations there are in theſe 12, and 13. verſes זָוִית and מְזוּיָם, and are to be diſtinguiſht by the matter of the context. For as in a building there are either the exteriour or interiour parts and corners; ſo here the זָוִית or outer corners are the ſtones in the corners of the building, angular pillars ſaith Caſtellio, which are here מְחֻטָּבוֹת hewen, and ſquared, and carved, and ſo for the beauty of them, in an הֵיכָל palace eſpecially, are fit to expreſs the daughters of a proſperous family, in whom beauty is much valued. But מְזוּיָם the inner parts or corners of the building, are the repoſitories, places on purpoſe for keeping of ſtore and proviſions (ſuch are cellars, larders, and the like) which the LXXII. rightly render ταμεῖα, and the Latin promptuaria, repoſitories for all kind of proviſions (and not ſo fitly garners or granaries, which are proper to corn or grain.) The former of theſe זָוִית is rendred by the LXXII. κεκαλλωπισμέναι beautified, either by way of paraphraſe (as מְחֻטָּבוֹת, carved or poliſhed, they render περικεκοσμημέναι adorned about) or as if it were from זִיו beauty or ſplendour; and ſo the Chaldee, זְוִיתָנִין beautifull. Of the latter when 'tis here ſaid, that being full they bring forth or yield מָזוֹן אֶל זֶן, this is interpreted by them ἐκ τότε εἰς τοῦτο, from this to that; not by miſtake probably of זֶן for זוּ, as ſome conceive, but as taking זוּ (as it is) for a word of a large ſignification, to ſignifie any thing to which the matter ſpoken of ſhall determin it, (and ſo ſure the Chaldee doe, which render it מִן שַׁתָּא לְשַׁתָּא from year to year) particularly any kind of food or victuals, and ſo by this phraſe, from this to that, meaning from this ſort to that ſort, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand it, i. e. ſomewhat of all ſorts, to expreſs the greateſt plenty of all commodities for daily uſe or proviſions. The Jewiſh Arab renders זן by meaſures.

d. V. 14. Strong to labour] From סָבַל to carry on ſhoulders, as a porter doth, is סְבָלִים here, not ſo much to ſignifie their patience of weight (as the Chaldee interpret it by מָרֵי מְטוּל patient of burthen, and ſtrong-backt for carriage or ſervice, ſaith Abu Walid, and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, our oxen carrying forth good) for oxen were not then wont to be ſo imployed to bear burthens on their backs or ſhoulders, (though now adays the Turcomen and ſuch like moving people uſe to carry their tents and other utenſils on cows backs) but more probably to note the weight of fleſh they carry about with them, which therefore the LXXII. render παχεῖς, the Latin craſſa, thick or fat, the Syriack חסינא ſtrong, for ſo thoſe are that are moſt fleſhy, and ſo onuſtus is wont to be uſed for rich, or one that is in all plenty, and ſo not for patience of burthens, though that, as this, do thus originally ſignifie, and though with us the lading be in a cart, yet we uſe to ſay the oxen are heavy laden. The phraſe that here follows in this matter of oxen, אֵין פֶּרֶץ וְאֵין יוֹצֵאת not breaking in and not going out, is not improbably to expreſs the ſafety of their herds, not onely from ſtraying, but, as in time of war, from invaders and abactors, whoſe breaking in (κατάῤῥωμα φαγμοῦ, breaking down or fall of the partition, or wall, or ſept, ſay the LXXII.) is attended with the cattels διέξοδον paſſing through, or going out: and then follows צְוָחָה clamour, vociferation; κραυγὴ cry, ſay the LXXII. The ſame word they uſe Iſa. 5. 7. to render צְעָקָה, which is there oppoſed to righteouſneſs, whether in the notion of juſtice or mercy, and is the conſequent of oppreſſion; and ſo it may be here fitly uſed to expreſs hoſtile oppreſſions and invaſions. But the phraſe may be alſo applied, that among their cattel none maketh abortion, אֵין פֶּרֶץ never a breaker out: ſo Pharez came by his name, *Gen.*38.29. How haſt thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee; therefore his name was called Pharez. יצא alſo hath a peculiar notion in relation to the birth of children; But that being the regular birth, it is not ſo well appliable to this place, unleſs by the figure ἐνδιασυρσμὸν we thus read, no eruption, and no going out, i. e. no violent going out, for then that is clearly no abortion. Kimchi obſerves of theſe three verſes 12, 13, 14. that there is mention of all thoſe three bleſſings of the Womb, of the Earth, and of Cattel, ſet down Deut. 28. 4. The laſt word of the verſe, בְּרְחֹבֹתֵינוּ, we render in our ſtreets; ſo רְחוֹב ſignifies Gen. 19. 2. as the ſtreet is oppoſed to an houſe or covert, from רָחַב broad, or large. But our Engliſh ſtreet hath a particular relation to a town, or village, or city; and ſo it ſeems not ſo proper to this place, where being applied to oxen, it will ſignifie in reaſon the place where they lie and feed, ἐν ταῖς ἐπαύλεσιν, the LXXII. duly reade, in their ſtabula, whether fields or cloſes, where they are kept. Or if in that verſe it may retein the notion of ſtreet, being applied to the men who are thus oppreſt, and may bemoan their loſſes in the field by their complaints in the city, (ſee Mar. 5. 14.) yet this will not be applicable to v. 13. where the ſame word being uſed בְּחוּצֹתֵינוּ, we render it in like manner, in our ſtreets, but being applied to ſheep, muſt ſignifie their folds or paſtures, where they lie and bring forth; which though it be abroad, without doors, that is all that חוּץ imports, from the literal notion of which the LXXII. there have their rendring ἐν ταῖς ἐξόδοις αὐτῶν, and the Latin in egreſſibus ſuis, in their goings out) yet they are ſafe there, and multiply exceedingly. The Jewiſh Grammarians, Abu Walid and Kimchi, aſſign not to the word בְּחוּצֹתֵינוּ any more particular ſignification than of broad-places, which may then be as well back-ſides; as we ordinarily call ſuch yards as are about the houſe, in which cattel are kept, or the like places, as well as ſtreets. And the word which the Jewiſh Arab uſes may be rendred fields.

The

The Hundred and Forty Fifth PSALM.

David's Pſalm of Praiſe.

The hundred forty fifth is a form of ſolemn Thankſgiving to God, deſcanting on all his glorious attributes. It was compoſed by David, and is one of thoſe wherein every verſe begins with a ſeveral letter of the Hebrew Alphabet.

1. I Will extol thee, my God, my King; and I will bleſs thy name for ever and ever.
2. Every day will I bleſs thee, and I will praiſe thy name for ever and ever.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. The Lord of heaven is my onely God and King, a gracious Father, and a vigilant guide and conductor of me in all my ways; I am infinitely obliged to praiſe and magnifie his holy name, and never to intermit that office till I come to heaven, there to ſing continual Hoſannahs and Hallelujahs to him.

3. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed; and his greatneſs is unſearchable.

3. He is a God of a vaſt unfathomable power and dignity, his excellencies, and the effluxions thereof toward us, not to be traced or meaſured by humane faculties: But the leſs they are comprehended, the more are they to be admired, and adored, and magnified by us.

4. One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another, and ſhall declare thy mighty acts.

4. Every age of the world, and perſon that lives in that age, hath new and freſh experience of the goodneſs and power of God in his gracious and glorious diſpoſals, every where illuſtriouſly diſcernible, and ſo every age is obliged to make their acknowledgments, to record to poſterity, and ſo to incite and call up all that live after them to the diligent and devout and vigorous performance of this duty.

‖ beauty or ſplendor of the glory הוֹד כְּבוֹד

5. I will ſpeak of the ‖ glorious honour of thy majeſty, and of thy wondrous works.

5. Whether I conſider the infinite incomprehenſible beauty and ſplendour of his divine eſſence and attributes, or the moſt admirable operations and productions thereof in the framing and governing of the world, there is matter of all praiſe and thankſgiving to me, and to every other man living.

6. And men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible acts, and I will declare thy greatneſs.

6. And accordingly both they and I, even all of us, with united hearts and voices, will proclaim and promulgate the wonderfull and admirable acts of his power and glory.

† Iſſue or pour out

7. They ſhall † [a] abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodneſs, and ſing of thy righteouſneſs.

7. And therein moſt peculiarly ſhall we count our ſelves obliged to magnifie and recount with the moſt exuberant joy the diſpenſations of his moſt abundant graces and mercies toward us, eſpecially that towards our ſouls. Theſe flow every minute from him, as from an inexhauſtible fountain and abyſs of goodneſs. O let our hearts learn of thoſe fountains, continually to pour forth at our mouths the praiſes that are proportionably due to him. a.

8. The Lord is gracious and full of compaſſion, ſlow to anger, and of great mercy.
9. The Lord is good [b] to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works.

8,9. 'Tis the title by which he was pleaſed to make known and proclaim himſelf to his people, Exod. 34. 6. The Lord, the Lord God, mercifull—— very forward and willing to pardon repentant ſinners, and not denying them that grace, or proceeding in judgment againſt them, till he be provoked to it by great ingratitude and obdurations: and this mercy of his is not incloſed to a few ſpecial favourites of his, but inlarged and vouchſafed to all and every man in the world, upon the title of his fatherly mercy to his creature, till by their impenitence perſiſted in, againſt his means of grace, they render themſelves incapable of it. b.

10. All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord, and thy ſaints ſhall bleſs thee.
11. They ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

10, 11. And proportionably according to the juſt merit of it, all the men in the world are obliged to pay thee the acknowledgments of thy ſupereminent tranſcendent mercy, but eſpecially thoſe that are ſo qualified by the power of thy grace obediently received by them, as to have a more particular intereſt therein.

* glory of the ſplendor of כְּבוֹד הוֹד

12. To make known to the ſons of men his mighty acts, and the * glorious majeſty of his kingdom.

12. Theſe ſhall never ſatisfie themſelves that they have ſaid enough in deprecating the inward beauties, and felicities, and admirable excellencies of the kingdom of God in mens hearts, that ſtate of ſouls, when by the divine and ſanctifying power of his grace the dominion of ſin and Satan is ſubdued, and the kingdom of heaven erected in the ſtead of it, and all the faculties of the ſoul voluntarily and chearfully and conſtantly ſubjected to it. The ſweetneſs and comforts of this ſhall ſo tranſport and raviſh them that have a vital taſte of it in their own hearts, that they ſhall earneſtly deſire and endeavour to diſcover and recommend it to others, and bring all men to a ſenſe and acknowledgment, how deſirable a thing it is to be the ſubjects of this kingdom.

13. Thy kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom; and thy dominion endureth throughout all ages.

13. The magnificence and glory of any other the greateſt kingdom is but finite and tranſitory, and ſo oft in few years is removed and deſtroyed: but the kingdom of God is as durable as God himſelf, and the comforts of ſubjection and obedience thereto, which all pious men injoy, have never any end, but are ſwallowed up in the ocean of eternal bliſs and glory, the never failing portion of all ſuch.

14. And one ſpecial act of this his kingdom, one exerciſe of this power of his grace it is, that thoſe which are ſincere faithfull ſubjects thereof, ſhall never want a ſufficient ſupply of ſtrength from him for all their wants, whether of ſouls or bodies: Be they never ſo weak in themſelves, never ſo near falling, and unable to ſupport themſelves, and ſtand by their own ſtrength, they ſhall yet be ſure of a ſufficiency in him; he will ſupport them in the moſt infirm, feeble, tottering condition; and when through humane frailty they are brought low, and actually fallen, he will not deny them grace to get up again, but afford them effectual means of recovery, if by humble confeſſion of their lapſes they beg and ſolicit it, and induſtriouſly make uſe of it when it is given them. And ſo for outward diſtreſſes, he will either preſerve them from them, or ſupport them under them, and in his good time deliver them out of them.

14. The Lord upholdeth all that fall, and raiſeth up all thoſe that be bowed down.

15, 16. This mercy and benignity of his is a ſpring inexhauſtible of all kinds of good things, a treaſure of abundant ſupply to all the creatures in the world, which conſequently attend and wait his pleaſure, and never fail to receive from him timely and ſeaſonably to their neceſſities, whatſoever they really ſtand in need of.

15. The eyes of all wait on thee, and thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon.

c. 16. Thou openeſt thy hand, and ſatisfieſt the [c] deſire of every living thing.

d. 17. In ſum, all God's diſpenſations and dealings with us are made up of abundant mercy and compaſſion, charity and liberality to all our wants; and ſo are to be acknowledged and devoutly praiſed by all the men in the world.

17. The Lord is righteous in all his ways, [d] and || holy in all his works. || merciful

e. 18. Whoſoever addreſſes his prayers to God, and faithfully adheres to him, that flies not to any indirect courſe for aids, but keeps faſt to him in conſtant obedience, and waits God's time with patience, and perſeverance in prayer, ſhall be ſure never to fail of anſwers of mercy from him.

18. The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in [e] truth.

19. If they faithfully ſerve and obey him, he will not be wanting to them in their greateſt wants, but will ſeaſonably grant them their requeſts, and deliver them out of all dangers.

19. He will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him: he will hear their cry, and will ſave them.

20. Thoſe that love God and keep his commandments, have by his promiſe a claim and right to his protections and preſervations; but for tranſgreſſours, which are accounted haters of him, he will certainly pour out his vengeance upon them.

20. The Lord preſerveth all them that love him: and all the wicked will he deſtroy.

21. All this exacts the moſt ſolemn acknowledgments, all the praiſes and Hallelujahs that our hearts or tongues can expreſs. O let all the men in the world joyn to perform this duty, and never give over praiſing and glorifying his holy name.

21. My mouth ſhall ſpeak the praiſe of the Lord: and let all fleſh bleſs his holy name for ever and ever.

Annotations on Pſal. CXLV.

a. יַבִּיעוּ

V. 7. Abundantly utter] The Hebrew יַבִּיעוּ is from נָבַע to bubble, to iſſue, to ſend out as a ſpring or fountain iſſues out water: and though here it be metaphorically uſed of ſpeaking, yet it muſt in reaſon be rendred with reſpect to the original uſe of it. The LXXII. therefore render it ἐξερεύξονται, the Latin eructabunt; for which our Engliſh yielding no proper word, we muſt be content with that of iſſuing or pouring out, or ſending forth. The Chaldee, which reads יְבַעְיוּן (the ſame word with their termination) is rendred by the Latin Tranſlator perſonabunt, ſhall ſound forth, as if it were from בּוּעַ which ſo ſignifies, and is by the Greek lightly changed into βόαν, to proclaim.

b. לְכָל

V. 9. To all] In this place the reading of the LXXII, both in the Roman Edition and others, is undoubtedly corrupted. The Hebrew reads לְכָל to all, and ſo is followed by the Chaldee and Latin and Arabick (the Syriack omitting it wholly) and onely the copies of the LXXII. (and from them the Æthiopick) reade τῆς ὑπομονῆς, to them that expect, and others add αὐτὸν, that expect him. But Aſulanus's reading is doubtleſs here to be preferred, which hath τοῖς σύμπασι, to all; which being the original reading, and ſo followed by the Latin and Arabick, was changed by the ſcribe into ὑποκειμένοις, and ſo taken up by the Æthiopick.

c. רָצוֹן

V. 16. The deſire] In this place it is doubtfull to what ſubject רָצוֹן, the laſt words of the verſe, belongs. From רָצָה voluit, placuit, the noun ſignifies will, good pleaſure, benevolence, favour. With thy favour רָצוֹן haſt thou defended me, Pſal. 5. 12. ſo Iſa. 49. 8. I have heard thee in the time רָצוֹן of favour, we render it acceptable time, parallel to a day of ſalvation that follows; where, as the ſalvation is the deliverance wrought by God, ſo the favour muſt be God's alſo. And thus the word may probably ſeem to be uſed here, he ſatisfieth every living thing (ſo מַשְׂבִּיעַ לְכָל חַי muſt be rendred) רָצוֹן with or by his favour: ἐμπλᾷς πᾶν ζῶον εὐδοκίας, ſay the LXXII. thou filleſt every living thing with thy good pleaſure; the Latin have benedictione, with thy benediction (perhaps reading εὐλογίας for εὐδοκίας) and the Æthiopick more expreſly, according to thy decree or good pleaſure: the Jewiſh Arab reads every living thing with favour, good will, or complacency, from thee. But the Chaldee reads רְעוּתְהוֹן in the plural, which cannot belong to God, thou ſatisfieſt all living with their will, or deſire; and the Syriack, ܡܫܒܥ ܠܟܠ ܚܝܐ thou ſatisfieſt the deſire of all living. And ſo the learned Caſtellio, optatis ſatias, thou ſatisfieſt them with their deſires, i. e. with the things which are deſired by them. And to this ſenſe the uſe of the ſame word v. 19. inclines, where of God it is ſaid, רְצוֹן יְרֵאָיו יַעֲשֶׂה he will he will doe or perform the will of them that fear him.

d. חָסִיד V. 17. And holy] Of חָסִיד there can be no queſtion but 'tis to be rendred, when ſpoken of God, mercifull, abundantly good; and ſo 'tis here joyned with צַדִּיק righteous, in the notion thereof frequently exemplified for ἐλεήμων pitifull, or charitable, or liberal: for both theſe are here clearly inferred from the three laſt verſes, which are inſtances of his mercy and bounty. In this place is fit to be obſerved what we find in the LXXII. their tranſlation, after v. 13. and before v. 14. Πιστὸς κύριος ἐν τοῖς λόγοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ ὅσιος ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ, The Lord is faithfull in his words, and holy in all his works. The ſame we have in the Syriack, and Latin, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, and onely miſs it in the Original and in the Chaldee. And that it is not added ſuperfluouſly by the reſt, but really wanting in theſe, we have this argument of ſome appearing force; Becauſe the Pſalm being Alphabetical, and exactly ſo in all other parts, is yet deficient in the letter Nun, as now we have it in the Hebrew, which yet from this reading of the LXXII, &c. is ſo readily ſupplied, [נֶאֱמָן יְהוָה בְּדְבָרָיו וְקָדוֹשׁ בְּכָל מַעֲשָׂיו] that there ſeemeth little cauſe of doubt but this was the ancient reading, and ſo continued to the time when the LXXII. firſt, and after when the Syriack made their tranſlations. If thus it were, the occaſion of the omiſſion ſeems moſt probably to be taken from this v. 17. the words whereof being of ſo great affinity with thoſe others, might by unskilfull ſcribes be confounded, and conceived to be the ſame with them, and ſo on that conceit deliberately left out in one place, to avoid that which they deemed a Tautology. But if this were it, then herein they erred more than one way. For firſt, it is no news for this Pſalmiſt in his lauds of God, to repeat the ſame expreſſion more than once, witneſs that ſolemn Epiphonema, His mercy endureth for ever. 2. Theſe two verſes, if they be better conſidered, are not the ſame, but perfectly different, and each of them, according to that difference, fitted to the place wherein according to the alphabetical order they ought to ſtand. The eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth verſes are ſpent in admiration of the power and glory of God's kingdom, and that is fitly concluded with an Epiphonema of God's fidelity in performing of all his promiſes, and perfect juſtice and holineſs, and other divine excellencies, in all his diſpenſations toward men. And that is the ſum of the letter Nun (which therefore with very good harmony follows the thirteenth verſe, and ſo will put forward the fourteenth, which now is Samech, unto the fifteenth, which is the proper place for it) נֶאֱמָן — The Lord is faithfull in his words, and holy in all his works, i. e. veracity and holineſs are two great inſeparable attributes of God; the one in his words, he never affirmeth what is not moſt true, or promiſeth what he doth not perform; the other in his actions, and works of providence, wherein he is ſo far from having any real cauſality in the ſins of Angels and Men, that he doeth all that reaſonably can be done by a God of holineſs and purity toward any rational and free agents, whom he means to puniſh and reward according to their works, to prevent them, and aſſiſt them, and inlighten their minds, and ſanctifie their hearts, thereby to keep them from ſinning, or to return them by repentance to that innocence (as near as may be) from which they are fallen. And this, as the chief exerciſe of his kingdom of grace, the glories whereof are ſet out in thoſe three verſes immediately foregoing. Whereas this which is now the ſeventeenth (but in that other account ought to be the eighteenth) verſe, as it is introduced by the three verſes more, which are all ſpent in the view of the tranſcendent compaſſion, mercy and liberality of God, ſo being duly rendred, it is a very proper Epiphonema, to conclude and ſhut up the praiſes of God in that behalf, The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and mercifull in all his works. Where צַדִּיק וְחָסִיד righteous and mercifull, are but two words ordinarily uſed in ſcripture to ſignifie charity and compaſſion: the former, not that righteouſneſs which we ſtyle juſtice, but that charity which is by the law of God due to all men, and ſo in us is our righteouſneſs, and in God is his goodneſs and charity to mankind, and the latter a more abundant degree of that, ſtyled goodneſs, graciouſneſs, bowels of compaſſion in man, and the moſt tranſcendent degree of infinite mercy and pity in God. The LXXII. render the former of theſe Δίκαιος, the Latin juſtus, and that being underſtood in our ordinary notion of juſtice, was apt to be conceived all one with faithfull or true in that former verſe. And the LXXII. again render the latter of theſe by ὅσιος, which Greek word indeed oft ſignifies holy, and ſo is interpreted ſanctus by the Latin; but being but lightly changed by cutting off the laſt letter from the Hebrew חָסִיד, and giving it the Greek termination ος (for ſo both ὅσιος and χασιδαῖος are deemed to come from that original) in this place and many others it is ſurely taken in the Hebrew notion of it, i. e. for mercifull and pitifull, and ſo ſhould better be rendred in Latin pius, than ſanctus, (as in Salvian and other good Authours pietas piety in God ordinarily ſignifies mercy.) However, this equivocalneſs of that word ὅσιος, taken by readers for holy, when it ſignifies mercifull, and the miſinterpreting צַדִּיק for juſt, when it imports mercifull, may well be deemed to have contributed occaſionally to the leaving v. 14. out of our Bibles. Of which the learned H. Grotius asks a queſtion, Quomodo ad hoc reſpondebunt — What anſwer will be given to this by thoſe men which require us in all things to ſtand to the decrees of the Maſorites, which by their fence have hedged this verſe out of the ſcripture? The onely anſwer to the queſtion, which I ſhall offer, is this, 1. That it is no news that one letter or more ſhould be left out and miſſing in an Alphabetical Pſalm, eſpecially Pſal. 25. where ר being twice repeated, ק is certainly omitted. 2. That the LXXII. and the tranſlations that depend on them, have admitted ſeveral verſes and larger additions, which are not in the Hebrew text. But then 3. ſince 'tis certain the Pſalms received divers alterations, and both copies were tranſmitted to the uſe of the Temple, the anſwer will be ſatisfactory, that ſo it was here. And that will both juſtifie the Jews from negligence, in looſing part of the ſcripture, and the other tranſlatours from preſumption, in adding to it.

e. בֶּאֱמֶת V. 18. In truth] The notion of בֶּאֱמֶת in truth, in this place, being the qualification required in prayer to make it effectual, is fit to be obſerved. The word ſignifies truth, firmneſs, fidelity, conſtancy, ſtability; ſo Jer. 14. 19. שְׁלוֹם אֱמֶת the peace of truth is a ſtable firm conſtant durable peace. And then that truth or conſtancy may be applied either to the perſon praying, or to the prayer it ſelf. Firſt, if to the perſon, then it ſignifies his firmneſs of adherence to God, ſtyled fearing him v. 19. conſtancy in his ſervice, keeping cloſe to God, and making good his dependence on him, and not applying plying himſelf to any indirect means to obtain what he prays for, but waiting onely on God, from him in his good time to receive it. Secondly, in reſpect of the prayer it ſelf, it ſignifies the continued conſtancy of addreſs, not giving over the petition when it is not immediately granted, but inforcing it with importunity. And the union of theſe two is that to which the promiſe is here made, that the prayers ſo qualified ſhall certainly in God's due time be anſwered by him. And this, ſpecially the former part, Saint James ſtyles asking in faith, the Hebrew אֱמֶת ſignifying both faith and truth. See note on Jam. 1. a. The Chaldee here reads בְּקְשׁוֹט; the word ſignifies truth, rectitude, integrity; and ſo the Syriack alſo. The LXXII. ἐν ἀληθείᾳ in truth, but that capable of this ſame notion, as when ἀληθὴς true is oppoſed to ἄδικος unrighteous. See note on Luke 16. a.

The Hundred and Forty Sixth P S A L M.

‖ Hallelujah. See note on Pſal. 106. a. and 111. a.

‖ Praiſe ye the Lord.

The hundred forty ſixth is another form of ſolemn praiſing of God, his ſole and ſupereminent power and mercy, his patronage to all that are in diſtreſs, his judgments, and the eternity of his kingdom. The title of it is Hallelujah, and it is anciently thought to have been compoſed † at the return from the captivity.

† Ἀγγαίου καὶ Ζαχαρίου LXXII.

Paraphraſe.

1. PRaiſe the Lord, O my ſoul.

2. While I live will I praiſe the Lord: I will ſing praiſes unto my God, while I have any being.

1, 2. I will excite and rouſe up all the faculties of my ſoul to the ſolemn performance of that great and neceſſary duty, of praiſing and magnifying the God of heaven. This is an office never to be intermitted by me, as long as I have a tongue or breath to proclaim the excellencies and glories of ſo great and gracious a Majeſty.

3. Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help.

4. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts periſh.

3, 4. As for any other, be it the greateſt and moſt powerfull Princes in the world (none born of woman excepted, ſave onely the Meſſias, the Son of God as well as man) they being but mortal men, have no power to relieve any, and conſequently will deceive and diſappoint all thoſe that rely on them. For how able or willing ſoever they may be in the eyes of men, or in their own reſolutions forward to perform any office of charity to any; yet 'tis certain their whole being depends every minute upon the will of God: whenſoever he pleaſeth they die, their ſoul is ſeparated from the body, the one is gathered to the earth from whence it hath its firſt beginning (ſee Pſal. 90. note c.) the other to the hands of God that gave it (Eccl. 12. 7.) and when this hour comes, 'tis then too late for them to help themſelves; whatſoever they deſigned for the relief of others, together with all their other worldly contrivances, are evacuated and fruſtrated.

a. 5. ª Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whoſe hope is in the Lord his God,

6. Which made heaven and earth, the ſea and all that therein is, which keepeth * truth for ever;

5, 6. The onely ſure hold, and never failing foundation of confidence, is the ſpecial mercy and protection of the one omnipotent Creatour of heaven and earth, the Lord of Iſrael, who as he is able to overrule all his creatures, and doe whatſoever he pleaſes, ſo he hath promiſed to protect thoſe that depend on him, and will certainly make good this promiſe to all that are carefull to make good their fidelity to him.

* or fidelity אֱמֶת

7. Which ‖ executeth judgment for the oppreſſed, which giveth food to the hungry: the Lord looſeth the priſoners.

8. The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind; the Lord raiſeth them that are bowed down; the Lord loveth the righteous.

7, 8. One peculiar property of his it is to interpoſe his aid moſt ſeaſonably when our diſtreſſes are the greateſt, to undertake the defence and patronage of thoſe which are moſt unjuſtly oppreſt, to work even miracles of mercy for them that ſtand in moſt need of them, ſignally to expreſs his favour to pious and charitable minded men, to provide food for ſome, as he did for Elias, to ſend others liberty from their reſtraints, as he did to Daniel, to reſtore ſight to the blind, to revive and comfort thoſe that are in the greateſt diſtreſs either of body or ſoul. (And this in a far more eminent completion by the incarnation of his Son, the Meſſias of the world. See note a.)

‖ or pleadeth the cauſe, ſee note on Pſ. 132. a.

9. The Lord preſerveth the ſtrangers, he relieveth the fatherleſs and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upſide down.

9. If there be any more deſtitute than other, more ſhut out from all ſorts of humane ſupportation, thoſe that have neither houſe, nor parent, nor husband, to relieve and comfort them, (eſpecially the poor in ſpirit, the meek, the mourners, thoſe that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, Matth. 5. 5, &c. are the fitteſt objects for God to afford his grace, to ſhew his compaſſion on: Of ſuch he will have a peculiar care, (of ſuch the Kingdom of the Meſſias is made up) if in the abſence of worldly aids they ſincerely apply themſelves and conſtantly adhere to his obedience. But for all godleſs wicked men, he will as undoubtedly pour out his vengeance upon them, and bring them to utter deſtruction.

10. The Lord ſhall reign for ever and ever; even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. † Praiſe ye the Lord.

10. God hath the onely ſupreme dominion over the world, and in a moſt eminent manner exerciſeth it in the hearts of all his faithfull people under the Meſſias. His regal power is exerciſed in his Church of Jews firſt, and after of Chriſtians, and ſo ſhall continue to the end of the world. His glorious name be ever magnified for it. To this onely King eternal be all honour and glory world without end.

Annotations on Psal. CXLVI.

2. אשרי

V. 5. Happy] This Psalm from this verse to the end hath a most visible remarkable aspect upon the Messias, the eternal Son of God, in his Incarnation. It is acknowledged by the Jews themselves; Sepher Ikkarim, מה המנוע &c. What forbids us to say that there shall come a divine law that shall make most of those things that are forbidden lawfull? This is the opinion of most of our Doctors, who in Tanchuma explain that of Psal. 146. 7. the Lord מתיר אסורים looseth or makes lawfull those things that are forbidden. And on the 10th verse, the Lord shall reign, &c. Sol. Jarchi saith, it belongs to the days of the Messias. And that it doth so indeed, it will best appear by comparing what here is added v. 7, 8. with the characters of the Messias delivered by Christ himself, Matth. 11. 5, 6. There upon the demand of John Baptist by his Disciples, whether he were the Christ or no, he returns this answer to John, The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them: And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me. These words are ordinarily referred to, and lookt on as a completion of Isa. 35. 5, 6, 7. and 61. 1, 2. and so no question they are: And by the same reason may be resolved also to reflect on this parcel of this Psalm, which bears a full correspondence with them in respect of the particulars mentioned in either. This is specially observable in the first branch of Christ's answer. The blind receive their sight. Of this sort of miracles, as it refers to those that perfectly want that sense, were born blind, this Maxim is delivered by one that had received such a cure, Joh. 9. 32. Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind. And the Pharisees, to whom this was so confidently delivered in an universal negative, were not, it seems, able to refute him. Nay it is observable, that God hath not left on record any example of his having wrought such a miracle as this at any time by the hand of Prophet, or ministery of Angel, till his Son incarnate came into the world, and did it with his own hands, that so these prophesies which principally insist on this, might appear to have their completion in the Messias. And when he wrought it, he did it by mixing Clay and Spittle; of which the Fathers observe, that he gave him eyes out of the * same and no other materials, out of which he first created man, viz. out of the dust of the earth, to signifie it an act of creative power by which he did it. And so this and the other like miraculous acts of his are here introduced with Which made heaven and earth— And therefore our Saviour, when he again met this blind man whom he had thus cured, his question to him is, Joh. 9. 35. Doest thou believe on the Son of God? intimating that this miracle wrought on him was a competent testimony, that he which wrought it was no less than the Son of God, and so God himself. But it may here be demanded, what prisoners Christ loosed, of which the mention should here be made, v. 7. The Lord looseth the prisoners, and of which there is no mention either in Christ's answer to John, or in the prediction, Isa. 35 to which that answer is thought to refer. To this I answer, 1. that this Objection would be of equal force against Isa. 61. 1. where there is express mention of proclaiming liberty to captives, and opening the prison to them that are bound, as here of loosing the prisoners: 2. that as in that place of Isaiah the phrase of opening the prison to them that are bound, is by the learned thought to be a prophetick elegance, to signifie the cure of those that are deaf and dumb, whose souls consequently were shut up from being able to express themselves, as language inables others to doe; so here it may poetically signifie also, and then it will be directly parallel to that part of Christ's answer, the deaf hear, and accordingly at the curing of such Christ's form of speech was, Ephatha, be opened, as to the doors of a prison, when those which were under restraint there were to be let loose out of it, their fetters being shaken off from them. But then 3. 'tis farther manifest, that those that were under any sore disease or lameness, &c. are said to be bound by Satan, Luk. 13. 16. and so to be loosed by Christ, when they were cured by him. So saith Christ v. 12. Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity: and immediately she was made streight. Her being made streight was her being loosed out of her restraint, or bonds, or prison. And in this latitude of the poetick or prophetick expression, the Lord's loosing the prisoners here will comprehend the walking of the lame, the lepers being cleansed, the hearing of the deaf, yea and the raising up of the dead, for those of all others are fastest bound, and so when they are raised, the style is as proper as to Lazarus, in respect of the grave-cloaths loose them, and let them goe. By this way of interpretation of this one phrase, (which yet farther also may be extended to the spiritual sense, of loosing us from the captivity of sin) 'twill now be manifest how exactly parallel this of the Psalmist is to that answer of Christ's, for then there be but two parcels of Christ's words behind, To the poor the Gospel is preached, and Blessed is he that is not offended in or because of me. To the former of these are answerable here these so many severals to the same purpose, Which executeth judgment, or pleadeth the cause of the oppressed, Giveth food to the hungry, Raiseth them that are bowed down (unless that literally belong to Christ's corporal cures) Loveth the righteous, Preserveth the strangers, Relieveth the fatherless and widow. All which are but so many prophetical expressions (to be understood in a spiritual sense) of his exceeding mercies under the Gospel to the poor in spirit, the humble and lowly in heart, the prime peculiar objects of Evangelical mercy, and those which are effectually wrought on by his grace, and so Evangelized by him, in that sense which belongs to that phrase in that place (see note on Matth. 11. b.) To the latter the words of this v. 5. are parallel, Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God: for so to hope, and adhere, and place his full trust in the one true God, is all one with not being scandalized or falling off from Christ, whatsoever befalls. And as that there is inferr'd from the other parts of the character of the Messias, as a Conclusion from Premisses, and so is set down in the close of all; so here 'tis set down as a principle in the front, and (which is all one) proved by what follows in the insuing verses. By all which it is farther evident that the Messias, whose character it is, is no less than the Creatour of heaven and earth, v. 6. and consequently the Lord that shall

* πηλὸν ἐμοι-

ſhall reign for ever and ever, v. 10. the God of Zion, or his Church, unto all generations. The latter of which is but proportionable to Chriſt's words to the Apoſtles, Lo, I am with you to the end of the world: And the former the very ſtyle where-in Chriſt's Kingdom is expreſt both in the Pſalms (ſee *Pſ.*93.1.) and in the New Teſtament 1 *Cor.*15. 25. and oft in other phraſes amounting to the ſame ſenſe, as, ſitting at God's right hand till he make his enemies his footſtool, *Pſ.*110.1. *Mat.*22.44. and *Act.*2.34.

The Hundred and Forty Seventh Pſalm.

‖ Hallelujah. ‖ Praiſe ye the Lord.

The hundred forty ſeventh Pſalm (which is divided into two by the Greek and Latin, &c.) is a ſolemn form of magnifying God in his works of power and mercy, and ſeems to have had for its title the cloſe of the former Pſalm, Hallelujah, and to have been compoſed after the return from the Captivity, v. 2.

Paraphraſe.

1. Many motives there are to excite and ſtir up all to the magnifying the name of God.

1. PRaiſe ye the Lord: for it is good to ſing praiſes unto our God; for it is pleaſant, and praiſe is comely.

'Tis a piece of ſervice moſt acceptable in his ſight; 'tis to them that perform it moſt pleaſant and delightfull, and that which beſt becomes us to pay to him, and him to receive and expect from us, who have our whole being from him.

2, 3. To this we are farther ingaged by his preſent deliverances: for though Jeruſalem and the Temple of God there, the ſtate and Church, have been ſadly waſted; yet hath God been pleaſed to return our captivity, to recollect our diſperſions, and reſtore us to our homes and his Temple, the chearfull performance of his divine ſervice, and ſo to refreſh and revive us, to cure the diſeaſes and wounds, to remove the ſorrows of our ſouls.

2. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem: he gathereth together the out-caſts of Iſrael.

3. He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.

4. So likewiſe his omniſcience and omnipotence exact our acknowledgments and adorations.

4. He telleth the number of the ſtars, and calleth them all by their names.

The ſtars of heaven, which are ſo impoſſible to be numbred by us, Gen. 15. 5. that they are compared and joyned with the ſand which is upon the ſea ſhore for multitude, Gen. 22. 17. are not onely numbred, but particularly known by God, what powers, qualities, influences there are in every one of them; and as they were all by a word or expreſſion of his will firſt created, ſo are they perfectly at his command, and at the leaſt beck or call of his, as ſouldiers at the directions of their General, the whole hoſt of them immediately obeys and doth whatſoever he pleaſes.

5. Thus infinite and boundleſs is the power, the knowledge, and the providence of God, which is to us abſolutely incomputable.

5. Great is our Lord, and of great power: ‖ his underſtanding is infinite.

‖ of his underſtanding there is no number or computation אין מספר

6. And theſe doth he exerciſe conſtantly for the ſupport and relief of all humble-minded men, for their ſpiritual advancement in ſtrength and grace, which to them peculiarly he affords in greateſt abundance: but for all proud obdurate ſinners, which perverſely reſiſt him, he is reſolved to reſiſt them, and ſubdue them, and magnifie his power in their deſtruction.

6. The Lord lifteth up the meek: he caſteth the wicked down to the ground.

a. 7, 8, 9. O then let us all with tongues and inſtruments of muſick, with all the ſolemneſt expreſſions of our hearts, celebrate thoſe divine exc. llencies of his, his power, his wiſedom, his goodneſs, and his providence.

7. †[a] Sing unto the Lord with thankſgiving: ſing praiſes upon the harp unto our God,

† Begin

8. Who covereth the heaven with clouds, who prepareth rain for the earth, who maketh graſs to grow upon the mountains.

b. 9. He giveth to the [b] beaſt his food, and to the young ravens that cry.

And here it will be very conſiderable, how in a ſeries and ſucceſſion of wiſe and gracious diſpoſals, he provides for the wants of all creatures here below, eſpecially of thoſe that are otherwiſe moſt helpleſs: he gathereth a multitude of watery clouds into regions of the air, that thoſe may diſtill and drop down moderate ſhowers upon the higher and drier parts of the earth, which have no other ſupply but that of rain; and by ſo doing he provides graſs for thoſe wilder beaſts that feed on thoſe mountainous parts, and are not beholden to the care of man, as other beaſts of the field, ſheep and oxen, &c. are, and conſequently would, without this ſpecial proviſion of his, be utterly deſtitute. And by the like way of providence it is, that the young broods of Ravens, which as ſoon as they are hatcht are forſaken and left deſtitute by the old ones, yet by ſome ſecret undiſcernible contrivance of God's (whether by dew falling into their mouths when they gape, or by flies in the air, or worms bred in their neſts, or by ſome other conſtant, though ſecret, courſe of divine providence) are ſufficiently furniſhed with neceſſaries of life by God, out of his unexhauſtible treaſury, their wants are conſidered by him, and certainly ſupplied (ſee Job 38.41.) and are emblems of his ſpecial protection and ſolicitude for thoſe which humbly and faithfully depend on him, when they have no means to provide for themſelves. See Matth. 6. 25, 26.

10, 11. In like manner, 'tis not the ſtrength or agility of horſe or man, the military proweſs or other humane excellencies, which recommend a man to God, or have any pretenſe of right to challenge any victories or proſperous ſucceſſes from him; but the fear of God,

10. He delighteth not in the ſtrength of the horſe: he taketh no pleaſure in the legs of a man.

11. The Lord taketh pleaſure in them that fear him, in them that hope in his mercy.

God, a constant obedience to his commands, and an affiance and trust and dependance on him, not by any tenure of merit in our selves, but onely of free undeserved mercy in him, is that which hath the assurance of acceptance from him, and is blest with more eminent prosperities from him, than all other intellectual, or corporal, or even moral excellencies without this.

12. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem: praise thy God, O Sion.
13. For he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy children within thee.
14. He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the † fines[t] wheat.

† fat חֵלֶב

12, 13, 14. At the present the whole Kingdom and Church of the Jews are most eminently obliged to acknowledge and magnifie the great power and mercy of God, who hath now restored peace and plenty and all kind of prosperity unto both, and not onely so, but confirmed their security unto them, fortified them against all fears of hostile invasions.

15. He sendeth forth his commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly.
16. He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoar frosts like ashes.
17. He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold?
18. He sendeth out his word, and melteth them: he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow.

15, 16, 17, 18. And this as a work of the same omnipotent power which continually shews it self to all the men in the world in some instance or other. They that have not such signal miraculous deliverances or rescues, have yet other most convincing evidences of his divine power and providence, which by the least word spoken, or appointment given, immediately performs the most wonderfull things. Of this sort there is one vulgar, but yet wonderfull, instance, in the coming of great frosts and snows, and the vanishing of them again: whensoever he pleases, without any visible mediate cause of it, we have great snows, that descend silently, and within a while lie in a great thickness as a fleece of white wool upon the ground, and no sheep is more warmly clad than the earth is by this means. At another time the frost comes, and scatters but a few ashes as it were upon the surface of the earth, and yet by that means the whole surface of the earth and waters is congealed into a firmness as strong as Crystal, able to bear any the greatest weight, and upon the face of the ground a multitude of small pieces of ice are scattered, like morsels of bread, without any appearance of moisture in them; and the severity of this cold so great, that no man can either resist the force of it, or long support it. And when both the earth and waters are thus crusted, and no humane means can dissolve it, God doth but send out a warm southerly wind, and, as at a word speaking, the snow and the frost immediately melt, and come down in full streams of water upon the valleys. A thing very observable, and sufficient to make known a divine power and providence to all men in the world.

19. He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel.
20. He hath not dealt so with ‖ any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord.

‖ every לְכָל גּוֹי

19, 20. But his mercies and dispensations unto his Church and people of the Jews are infinitely above the proportion and weight of these. He hath made known his will to them, given them very many admirable laws and ordinances, moral, and judicial, and ritual. And herein have they the privilege and advantage above all other nations in the world, who were not vouchsafed such illustrious revelations of the will of God as they, till the Messias, promised to all nations, and not onely to the Jews, should come, and take down the partition, and bring all in common into one pale, and make known to every creature what was before given to the Jews peculiarly, and add more divine precepts of inward purity, and more clear revelations of most transcendent celestial promises, than the Jews themselves had formerly received. For this and all other his infinite goodness and mercy, blessed be the name of the Lord for evermore.

Annotations on Psal. CXLVII.

a. עָנוּ

V. 7. Sing] The Hebrew עָנוּ, which the Interlinear renders Respondete, may here deserve to be considered. The theme עָנָה signifies either to begin, or answer in speaking or singing, and so may here in lauds, be appliable either to the Præcentor that begins the hymn, or to them that follow, and take up the counterpart. In the first sense it is that ἀποκρίνεσθαι to answer (by which it is ordinarily rendred) is sometimes used where there is no precedent speech to which any reply should be made, and so simply signifies to speak, and not to answer, see Mar. 2. 14. So Exod. 15. 21. of Miriam 'tis said, וַתַּעַן לָהֶם, we reade, she answered them, Sing ye to the Lord; but it should be, She began to them in the song. The LXXII. duly render it, ἐξῆρξε δ' αὐτῶν, she began to them. So Num. 21. 17. Israel sang this song, Spring up, O well עֲנִי לָהּ. The LXXII. again reade, ἐξάρξατε, begin. And so here, ἐξάρξατε τῷ κυρίῳ ἐν ἐξομολογήσει, not Answer, but Begin to the Lord in confession or acknowledgement of his power and mercy. And so here follows, sing praises upon the harp. The Præcentor beginning with the voice, it was ordinary for the instruments to follow to the same tune, and key.

b. בְּהֵמָה

V. 9. The beast] How בְּהֵמָה in this and other places is to be rendred, and how it critically differs from חַיָּה living creature, is not resolved among the Hebrews. That which is most generally received from Genebrard and Mercer and others, is, that בְּהֵמָה signifies a tame beast, such as are usefull among men either for work or food, as Oxen, Sheep, &c. and that חַיָּה signifies a wild beast: and to this the LXXII. here incline, which render בְּהֵמָה κτήνη, and the Latin jumentum, by which the tame beasts are signified, those that are usefull among men: and so Psal. 148. 10. θηρία wild beasts are set to render חַיָּה the living creatures, and κτήνη or juments for בְּהֵמָה. But this of the LXXII. their rendring is of no force, because though they do most frequently render בְּהֵמָה by κτήνη, yet ofttimes also they render it by θηρίον wild beast. And generally where they do so, the context shews that wild beasts are peculiarly meant by it. So Deut. 28. 26. thy carcass shall be food for the fouls of the air, and to the beasts of the earth, וּלְבֶהֱמַת הָאָרֶץ חַיַּת הָאָרֶץ say the LXXII. that must be to the wild beasts of the earth, for such onely feed on the flesh of men or other creatures. So Deut. 32. 24. I will send the teeth of beasts upon them; בְּהֵמָה is the Hebrew word, and θηρίον the Greek, and must necessarily be interpreted not of the tame, but wild beasts. See 1 Sam. 17. 44. Isa. 18. 6. Jer. 7. 33. 16. 4. 19. 7. and 34. 20. but especially Job 40. 10. Behold now בְּהֵמוֹת, we retain it in our English Behemoth, but it is resolved to signifie the greatest of wild beasts, the Elephant; and then by way of interrogation, will he eat grass as an oxe? directly to distinguish him (and so the word בְּהֵמָה here) from the tamer beasts, the one, &c. ſuch as eat graſs and hay, whereas the Elephant is ſaid to feed on the Palm-trees, the trunk and fruits of them, and when thoſe are wanting, their roots, which he digs up. From theſe evidences it is manifeſt, that though בְּהֵמָה ſignifie not in all places peculiarly the wild beaſts, yet that ſignifying all indifferently, it is by the context to be reſolved to which ſort it belongs, either wild or tame, in any particular place. And then it may here be worth obſerving, that the circumſtances confine it (contrary to the LXXII. their rendring) to the wild beaſts, ſuch are thoſe which dwell upon the mountains here (as elſewhere in the woods, or foreſt, or wilderneſs) the tamer being more properly beaſts of the field. And of theſe peculiarly is this paſſage of the Pſalmiſt to be underſtood, how God by his ſpecial providence prepares food for thoſe which have no other care taken for them. Beaſts that live among men, are by men taken care of, they inrich the ground with manure, and with water from ſprings and rivers, and till the ground, and that brings forth corn for the uſe of theſe cattel as well as men: But the wild beaſts that live upon the mountains, and in woods and deſert places, are fed onely from the heavens: the rain that from thence diſtills inricheth thoſe dry hills, and maketh graſs to grow there, which elſe would not, and ſo God giveth to theſe wild beaſts their food after the ſame manner of divine providence, as in the end of the verſe, he is ſaid to provide for the young ravens. Of which ſaith Ariſtotle, Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. ἐπιβάλλει ποσῶς ὁ κόραξ the Crow or Raven expoſeth and forſakes her young ones when they are not able to help themſelves, and muſt certainly periſh, if God by his ſpecial care did not provide for them. See Valeſius de ſacra Philoſoph. p. 317. This therefore being the clear deſign of theſe two verſes, 8, and 9. ſpent onely on theſe two inſtances, the wild beaſts and young ravens, which agree in this, that they are left deſtitute of all proviſion but what God ſends them (as a ſhower of Manna) as it were immediately from heaven; it is yet quite deformed by the vulgar reading of it, taken out of ſome copies of the LXXII. which at the end of v. 8. after the mention of the graſs upon the mountains, add καὶ χλόην τῇ δουλείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, and herb for the ſervice of men, of which there is no leaſt footſtep in the original (nor place in the due rendring of the words as there they lie) nor yet either in the Chaldee or Syriack, and of which therefore we may certainly reſolve, that it was taken in by ſome ignorant Sciolus from Pſal. 104. 14. where we find thoſe words, and from the copies of the LXXII. once corrupted, derived to the Latin and Arabick, &c. Of בְּהֵמָה Abu Walid ſaith, that it is ſpoken of four-footed living creatures, yet ſo as that it ſometimes comprehends birds alſo, which muſt be diſcerned by the place. Not unlike is the explication of the Arab. Lexicon, Al Kamus, of בהימה, viz. that it is any four-footed living thing, although of ſuch as are in the water, or perhaps any living creature indifferently without diſtinction, i.e. any irrational living creature; but Bahmah from the ſame root is reſtrained to lambs and kids.

The Hundred and Forty Eighth PSALM.

‖ Hallelujah. ‖ Praiſe ye the Lord.

The hundred forty eighth is a ſolemn invitation to all the ſeveral ranks of creatures in the world, to joyn in the celebration of God's praiſes, and is intitled Hallelujah, as a form of praiſing God (ſee note on Pſal. 106. a.)

Paraphraſe.

1. PRaiſe ye the Lord from the heavens, praiſe him in the heights.
2. Praiſe ye him all his angels, praiſe ye him all his hoſts.

1, 2. The majeſty, and power, and wiſedom, and mercy, and all other the glorious Attributes of God are ſuch, and ſo likewiſe the emanations and effluxions of all and each of theſe unto his creatures, that they exact the united acclamations, and moſt humble acknowledgments of all the creatures in the world; and all that but a poor unſufficient tribute to be returned to the great and glorious creatour of them all. And firſt and principally the Angels of heaven are obliged to come in and pay this tribute, thoſe bleſſed immortal ſpirits that always wait on his throne in the higheſt heavens, thoſe many bands of celeſtial ſouldiers, regularly marſhal'd in their creation one under another in ſeveral ranks and orders, but all in perfect ſubordination to the eternal God, the ſupreme Governour and Commander of all.

3. Praiſe ye him Sun and Moon; praiſe him all ye ſtars of light.

3. Next to them in reſpect of ſituation are thoſe glorious creatures, the Sun, Moon and Stars, and the ſpheres wherein they move, the works of his creation, made by him (though by ignorant men they are themſelves deified and adored) and ſo obliged in ſerving him to honour and glorify him.

4. Praiſe him ye [a] heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

4. Then all the regions of the air, in which are thoſe treaſuries of God placed, the clouds of water which at his pleaſure are diſtill'd down upon the earth, and ſo by obeying him, and relieving, or ſometimes (for our ſins) puniſhing us, bring in their tribute of honour and praiſe to their Creatour.

5. Let them praiſe the name of the Lord; for he commanded, and they were created.
6. He hath alſo eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which ſhall not paſs.

5, 6. All theſe, as they were firſt created by the command of God, ſo have they been governed and managed ever ſince by the ſame creative omnipotent power, performing a perfect conſtant obedience to his precepts or directions, doing nothing but what he will have done, and ſo ſetting forth the glory of the great Creatour and ſupreme Governour of the world.

7. Praiſe

‖ or whales תַּנִּינִים

7. Praise the Lord from the earth, ye ‖ dragons and all deeps,
8. Fire and hail, snow and vapours, stormy winds fulfilling his word,
9. Mountains and all hills, fruitfull trees and all cedars,
10. Beasts and all cattel, creeping things and flying foul,
11. Kings of the earth and all people, Princes and all judges of the earth,
12. Both young men and maidens, old men and children.

7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Lastly, this earth of ours, together with the vast ocean in the cavities and bowels of it, both making up but one region, and neither infesting nor annoying the other, were certainly thus ordered and disposed and governed by the omnipotent power of God, which therefore they make known and proclaim to all men in the world, and preach the knowledge of this one God and ruler of all, and so silently praise him, and leave all men without excuse which do not so also. And as the whole bodies of both these, the earth and ocean, so all the several creatures that are in either, the whales and other great and lesser fishes in the sea, the meteors that are begotten in the air, and descend upon the earth, the lightnings and thunder, hail and snow, congealed vapours, frost, ice and dews, the violent winds and tempests, every one of which are instrumental to him, perform his pleasure, are wholly commanded by him, and doe whatever he directs them, the mountains and hills, and forests adorned with stately, tall, but fruitless trees, and the valleys full of trees bearing fruit, and the cattel of daily use for man to doe their work, and affording them their flesh for their food, and their skins for their cloathing, and those also of a wilder sort, which dwell in the forests and woods and mountains (see note on Psal. 147. b.) yet are made usefull also, to the benefit of men, and so all that creeps, or swims, or flies: what have all these to doe but to sing forth the glories of the Creatour and Governour and disposer of them all? and so doe, by being used to the ends to which he designed them. Lastly, all the men of the earth, the greatest Potentates, their subordinate rulers and all inferiour subjects, of what sex or age soever.

13. Let them praise the name of the Lord; for his name alone is excellent, his glory is above the earth and heaven.
14. He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints, even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye the Lord.

13, 14. Let them all joyn in the same quire of praises to the great and glorious and sole Creatour and Governour of the world, whose mercy is such and so eminent, his gracious dealing with his people the Jews, and all the spiritual children of Abraham and Jacob's faith, (in revealing his will, and giving them the Messiah, and in him all things necessary to this life and another, in advancing their spiritual good, and rendring them acceptable to himself, and to all whose approbation or praise is worth the having) that they are for ever obliged to praise and adore and cleave fast unto him. For ever blessed be his holy Name.

Annotations on Psal. CXLVIII.

a. שְׁמֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם

V. 4. Heavens of heavens] What this phrase שְׁמֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם heavens of heavens signifies here, will best be gathered from the context, and by comparing this place with Psal. 104. 3. In that place after the description of the highest heavens, by the style of light covering God, (a luminous palace) is mentioned the stretching out the heavens like a curtain, (which that it signifies the whole body of the air, see note a. on that Psalm) and laying the beams of his chambers in the waters, (which that it belongs to the clouds of rain in the middle region of the air, see note b.) And just so here, after the Sun, Moon, and Stars of light, by which the whole body and spheres of the heavens are signified, there follows next the heavens of heavens, and the waters above the heavens: where, as in all reason the heavens of heavens are but the highest of those heavens, above some part of which the waters are here said to be placed; so in case the waters be no higher than that region of the air where the clouds are, the uppermost regions of the body of the air must be resolved to be that which is here meant by the heavens of heavens, and not the æthereal globe, which we call heaven. That this is so, may be farther approved by the use of the word שָׁמַיִם in Scripture; and that cannot better be fetcht than from the first chapter of Genesis. There 'tis certain the word is used first more generally for all the other parts of the world, beside the terrestrial globe, as when v. 1. (and in many other places) the heaven and earth are the dichotomie, by which the whole world was designed to be set down, all that God created. 2. 'Tis as evident that the word is used for the æthereal or celestial globe, as v. 14. when he saith, Let there be light in the firmament of the heavens, and v. 16. 'tis specified what that light was, the Sun to rule the day —— by which 'tis evident that רְקִיעַ הַשָּׁמַיִם the expansum of the heavens notes that æthereal body where the Sun and Moon, &c. are. 3. 'Tis still as manifest that the word is used also for the air, v. 20, 26, 28, 30. where the place wherein the birds fly is styled רְקִיעַ הַשָּׁמַיִם the firmament of the heavens, and simply the heavens; for which the Targum of Jonathan reads אֲוִיר רְקִיעַ שְׁמַיָּא the air of the firmament, or expansion of heavens, v. 20. and אֲוִיר שְׁמַיָּא the air of heavens, v. 26. and simply שְׁמַיָּא the heavens, v. 28. 30. So again when רְקִיעַ an expansion is made in the midst of the waters, that divided the waters from the waters, v. 6. this expansion v. 8. is called heaven (שָׁמַיִם in probability from מַיִם waters in the dual number, those two sorts of waters above, and below the firmament) which consequently must be the air, that intercedes and divides betwixt the watery clouds, and the waters on the face of the earth: and accordingly those upper waters are affirmed by the Hebrews, R. Solomon, &c. to be still תְּלוּיִים בַּאֲוִיר pendulous in the air, and that, saith he, בְּמַאֲמָרוֹ שֶׁל מֶלֶךְ by the word or command of the King: and so when the rain came down in the Flood, 'tis said the windows or floodgates or cataracts of the heavens were opened, Gen. 7. 11. as in a drought the heaven is made iron, Lev. 26. 19. and shut up, and many the like phrases. The air then being those heavens, above part of which are those clouds of waters, the heavens of heavens (immediately foregoing) cannot probably signify more than the whole body of the air, all the regions of it, or else the uppermost region of it, as Lord of lords is the supreme or sovereign Lord of all others. 'Tis true, when the context requires it, the heavens of heavens may signify the highest heavens, otherways called the highest, or the height in the abstract, the place of God's throne: so Deut. 10. 14. (and Nehem. 9. 6.) where by the heaven and the heaven of heavens, and the earth, the whole creation is signified; and therefore Jonathan's Targum there adds, וְכֵיתֵי סַלְאֲבַיָּא דְּבַדְרִין and the aſſembly of Angels that are therein, that they may be miniſters before him. And ſo, I ſuppoſe, 1 King. 8. 27. when of God's immenſity 'tis ſaid, behold, the heaven, the heaven of heavens (that habitation of his throne) cannot contain him, and Pſal. 115. 16. the heavens of heavens are the Lords, in oppoſition to the earth following. But that hinders not but that here, the place of the Sun, Moon and Stars being before mentioned, and the waters above the heavens, or clouds, after, the heavens of heavens in the midſt betwixt theſe may be the upper region of the air. And ſo I ſuppoſe Pſal. 68. 33. where of God it is ſaid, that he rideth upon the heavens of heavens, and ſends out his voice, and that a mighty voice, it may well refer to the coming of God by the preſence and miniſtery of his Angels, and thundring in the air, and declaring his will to his people in mount Sinai, as at the giving the Law it is deſcribed, and as elſewhere God is ſaid to come in the clouds, and his voice to be heard there, and to ride upon the Cherub, and to come flying upon the wings of the wind, whereas in that Pſalm the higheſt heavens are expreſt by another ſtyle, that of עֲרָבוֹת v. 4. (of which ſee note a. on that Pſalm.) As for any eternal or incorruptible waters, which from this text ſome mens fanſies have produced, and then found a ground for their fanſie, v. 6. he hath eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever, that place will never be able to conclude for them; the full importance whereof is no more than that all that was forenamed, being the good creatures of God, were by him preſerved and continued alſo, (and ſo God to be praiſed for his works of preſervation as well as creation) and ruled and managed by him, as it there follows, he hath made a decree which ſhall not paſs. The Chaldee, which may ſeem to have underſtood the heavens of heavens here for the æthereal globe, and above the heavens, for the place of God's reſidence, have given another kind of Paraphraſe of it, Praiſe him ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that depend on the word of him which is above the heavens; according to that of the Jews, which acknowledge the key of rain, as that of the womb, to be in peculiar manner kept in God's hand. But ſo it well may be, and yet be no higher elevated than the air, and there hang in clouds, till God pleaſe they ſhall diſſolve and diſtill upon the earth. And conſidering how frequently the place of rain and of thunder, and of all other meteors, is called the heavens, there is no cauſe to doubt but the air is here meant by the heavens above which the waters are. Aben Ezra here calls it כדור אש the ſphere of fire, which is above the things which are here, after this recited. Kimchi is obſerved ſomewhere to ſay, that the heaven of heavens may ſignify the loweſt heavens, as a ſervant of ſervants doth the meaneſt of ſervants, Gen. 9. 25.

The Hundred and Forty Ninth P S A L M.

‖ Hallelujah.

The hundred forty ninth is a ſolemn form of thankſgiving for God's people, on any ſignal victory afforded them by him, and myſtically contains the eminent favour of God to his † Church, and the conqueſt of the Chriſtian faith over the heathen Potentates. It was intitled, as the former, Hallelujah.

†So R. Saadiah Gaon and Kimchi interpret it of the days of the Meſſias.

Paraphraſe.

1. SIng unto the Lord a new ſong, * and his praiſe in the congregation of ſaints. * let his praiſe be תְּהִלָּתוֹ

2. Let Iſrael rejoyce in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyfull in their King.

3. Let them praiſe his name in the dance: let them ſing praiſes unto him with the timbrel and harp.

1, 2, 3. Let the whole Church of God through all ages conſtantly frequent his publick ſervice, and therein for ever magnifie the name of God for all his mercies vouchſafed ſo liberally to them. The people of Iſrael are ſignally obliged to this, in that the omnipotent Creatour of heaven and earth is pleaſed immediately to preſide among them, to give them laws by which to live, and to exhibite himſelf graciouſly to them in his Sanctuary, and to fight their battels for them againſt their enemies, having brought them out of the ſlavery of Ægypt into the plenty of Canaan. And the Chriſtian Church are much more obliged to this, for the redemption by Chriſt, and the regal government to which by his reſurrection he was inſtalled, ſpiritual, exerciſed by his word and grace in the hearts of his faithfull people. O let us all with all poſſible exultation, with all the ſolemneſt expreſſions of thankfull hearts, commemorate and celebrate theſe mercies of his.

4. For the Lord taketh pleaſure in his people: he will ‖ beautifie the meek with ſalvation. ‖ or glorify

4. For thoſe that humbly and faithfully adhere to him, he will never ceaſe to love, he will delight to doe them good, and, be they never ſo low, reſcue and exalt them, and give them illuſtrious deliverances from all their temporal (and ſpiritual) enemies.

5. Let

5. Let the ſaints be joyfull with glory: let them ſing aloud in their beds.

5. And when they are thus reſcued and injoy a quiet repoſe, they are in all reaſon obliged to praiſe and magnifie their deliverer, (and ſo to anticipate the ſtate of heavenly joys, where being arrived at our ſafe harbour, and reſt from the preſſures and ſins of this life, we have nothing to doe but to bleſs and glorifie God, to rejoyce and triumph in him.)

6. Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged ſword in their hand,
7. To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and puniſhments upon the people;
8. To bind their Kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;
9. To execute upon them the judgment written, This honour have all his ſaints. Praiſe ye the Lord.

6, 7, 8, 9. And thoſe that thus depend on God, and thankfully acknowledge his works of mercy toward them, ſhall be ſignally aſſiſted by him, as Moſes and Joſhua were, whilſt one held up his hands to pray and the other to fight, Exod. 17. 11. God will make uſe of ſuch, imploy and aſſiſt and proſper them wonderfully in executing his judgments on ſinfull people, when the meaſure of their iniquities is filled up, and God's decree gone out againſt them, as it was againſt the ſeven nations whoſe lands the Iſraelites took, deſtroyed their Kings, put ſome of them in gyves, as Adonibezek, Jud. 1. 7. and eradicated the whole people. (And thus in a myſtical ſenſe hath the faith of Chriſt been aſſiſted by God, and proſpered and propagated wonderfully, till it ſubdued the greateſt Princes and Empire of the world to the ſceptre of Chriſt.) And this certainly is a glorious prerogative of the people and beloved of God, for which they are obliged for ever to magnifie him, and ſing perpetual Hallelujahs to him.

The Hundred and Fiftieth P S A L M.

‖ Praiſe ye the Lord. ‖ Hallelujah.

The laſt Pſalm is a ſolemn exhortation to all men in the world, to make uſe of all melodious Inſtruments and Voices to celebrate the praiſes of God's power and majeſty. The title of it was, according to the matter, Hallelujah.

1. PRaiſe God in his ſanctuary: praiſe him in [a] the firmament of his power.

Paraphraſe. a.

1. O let us praiſe and magnifie the God of heaven, that dwelleth ſo high, in power and glory, above us poor creatures on this earth, and yet is pleaſed to exhibit and preſentiate himſelf to us, to hear and anſwer our prayers, and accept and reward our praiſes in the place of the publick aſſembly. O let us be ſure conſtantly to meet him there, and render him our humbleſt Euchariſtical acknowledgments for all his mercies (thoſe eſpecially vouchſafed to us in Chriſt.)

† the multitude of his magnificence. גֹּדֶל

2. Praiſe him for his mighty acts: praiſe him according to † his excellent greatneſs.

2. He hath ſhewed forth wonderfull acts of power toward us, not once or twice, but frequently reiterated his miracles of mercy: O let our acknowledgments indeavour to bear ſome proportion with them in the ardency and frequency of our ſervices.

3. Praiſe him [b] with the ſound of the trumpet: praiſe him with the pſaltery and harp.
4. Praiſe him with the timbrel and dance: praiſe him with ſtringed inſtruments and organs.
5. Praiſe him upon the loud cymbals: praiſe him upon the high-ſounding cymbals.

3, 4, 5. All the inſtruments of Muſick that are at any time uſed to expreſs the greateſt ovations, to attend the nobleſt triumphs or feſtivities, the trumpet, the pſaltery or decachord, the harp, the timbrel, the cymbals that have the loudeſt ſounds, and are fitteſt for exultation, and withall the attendants of muſick, dancings, ſuch as are cuſtomary in ſeaſons of rejoycing, Jud. 21. 21. Exod. 15. 20. are all very proper expreſſions of that thankſgiving which we owe unto God, and of the delight we take in paying him that tribute. There being no ſubject ſo fit for our devouteſt and moſt vigorous affections to pour out themſelves upon, as this of the glorious excellencies and gracious acts of the divine power and goodneſs toward us. b.

6. Let every thing that hath breath praiſe the Lord. Praiſe ye the Lord.

6. Let this therefore be part of the daily conſtant offices of the Church of God, to ſing Hoſannahs and Hallelujahs, Pſalms and Hymns to him (to frequent the bleſſed Euchariſt, the cup of bleſſing and rejoycing.) And let him be thought unworthy to live, to injoy the breath of life (or any of the graces of God's ſpirit) which doth not chearfully exerciſe himſelf in this part of devotion, as ready to acknowledge the receipt of mercies from God, as to ſolicit them.

HALLELUJAH.

Annota-

Annotations on Psal. CL.

a. בִּרְקִיעַ עֻזּוֹ

V. 1. Firmament of his power] The word רָקִיעַ expansion, which by the LXXII. is generally rendred στερέωμα firmament, (in respect of the firmness, stability and compactedness of that vast body, so distended and beaten out, as it were, by God, after the manner of a plate of gold or any other metal) is known to comprehend both the regions of the air, and all the celestial orbs, all that is above, and surrounds the earth. Here it is taken, as Gen. 1. 14. for the superiour part of this Expansion, that which we call the heavens, which being the place of God's special residence, is called the expansion or firmament of his power, the throne where this powerfull God of heaven dwells. But then, as the sanctuary, or place of God's appointed solemn worship here below, is by the Apostle, Heb. 9. 23, 24. styled the figure and pattern, or copy of heaven, and God pleased in a singular manner to presentiate and exhibit himself there; so the sanctuary in this verse, expresst by בְּקָדְשׁוֹ in his holy, or holiness, but by the Chaldee expresst to be בֵּית מַקְדְּשֵׁיהּ the house of his sanctuary, is poetically set down by this style which belongs to heaven it self, as the Church of God in the New Testament is oft styled the kingdom of heaven. So Aben Ezra renders the firmament by הָאָרוֹן the ark, and saith the Psalm is an exhortation to the Levites to praise God, who upon these ten sorts of instruments were wont to play in the Temple, and accordingly all of them are distinctly reckoned up.

b. בְּתֵקַע שׁוֹפָר

V. 3. With the sound of the trumpet] The Hebrew שׁוֹפָר undoubtedly signifying a trumpet, and so interpreted by the LXXII. σάλπιγξ, by the Chaldee דְּשׁוֹפְרָא, lightly varied from the Hebrew, is yet rendred by the Syriack ܒܘܩܢܐ (from which the Latin cornu is but little removed) an horn; but this not to inject any suspicion that any other instrument is here meant, but onely to refer to the ancient custom of making their trumpets of that matter, the horns of beasts bored or made hollow, agreeable to which is the Arabick בוק a trumpet (and the Latin buccina hath some affinity to that) from the common Hebrew verb בוק to empty or make hollow. The use of trumpets in war to celebrate a victory, and not onely so, but to excite their souldiers and encourage them to fight, is most known, and allowed by the usage of all nations to have that propriety in it, and so might not unfitly be derived from the camp to the spiritual σαλπιγξ or warfare, God's service in the Temple, both to celebrate their thanksgivings with this solemnity of greatest joy and transportation, and also to quicken, to stir up affections in the performance of such sacred Offices. The first mention we find of it in Scripture is in consort with thunder from heaven, Exod. 19. 16. to solemnize and signifie the presence of God on Sinai, and to raise a reverence in the people, and withall to assemble them thither. And that use of it for the calling assemblies, as it is taken from the military custom of assembling all to battel unanimously by this sound, so is it of God's own appointment, Numb. 10. 2. and to that use I suppose are the trumpets designed which are mentioned with other utensils of the Temple, 2 King. 12. 13. snuffers, basins, trumpets, &c. But for the use of trumpets in consort or harmony with other instruments, for the lauding of God, to which onely this place belongs, the first mention we find of them is 1 Chron. 13. 8. at David's fetching the Ark from Kiriath-jearim, when he and all Israel played before God with all their might, with singing, and with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets: so again c. 15. 28. So on another, and not so festival an occasion, when on Azariah's prophesie Asa and Judah made a covenant to God, 2 Chron. 15. they sware unto the Lord with a loud voice, with shouting and with trumpets and with cornets, v. 14. And as Jehoshaphat 2 Chron. 20. 20. at his going out against his enemies, to his exhortation to belief in God, adds the appointing of singers unto the Lord, v. 21. (and this attended with a signal blessing, v. 22. a victory over their enemies wrought by God's hand) so they celebrated their triumph accordingly, going in procession to Jerusalem with psalteries and harps and trumpets, v. 28. So on Hezekiah's reformation and sacrifice 2 Chron. 29. 26. the Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the Priests with the trumpets: and when the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David King of Israel. So at the laying the foundation of the Temple, when it was re-edified, Ezra 3. 10. they set the Priests with trumpets, and the Levites with cymbals: and so at the dedication of the wall, Neh. 12. 41. And as here, so Psal. 118. 6. the praises of God are appointed to be sung with that joyfull noise that the harps and trumpets and cornets do send forth. From these premisses it will not be difficult to judge of the solidity of that Annotation which the Geneva Bible hath affixt to this verse in these words, Exhorting the people to rejoyce in praising God, he maketh mention of those instruments which by God's commandment were appointed in the old Law, but under Christ the use thereof is abolished in the Church. If by this phrase, appointed by God's commandment in the old Law, be meant, that the use of these instruments was any part of the Ceremonial Law, given by God to Moses (in which onely the abolishing of it in the Christian Church can be founded with any appearance of reason) it already appears that there is no truth in this: For as this practice of praising God with the assistance of instrumental as well as vocal musick is found to be ancienter than the giving of the Law in Sinai, (much more then of the ceremonies in God's service either in the Tabernacle or Temple) being related of Miriam the propheteſs, the sister of Aaron, Exod. 15. 20. that to celebrate the delivery out of Ægypt, to Moses's song, took a timbrel in her hand, and the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances; so the appointment of it in God's service cannot by the scripture be deduced from any higher original than that of David, according to that of 2 Chron. 29. 26. which expresseth the instruments to have been ordained by David. The appointment, I say, or præscript command; for as to the practice of it, we have an earlier example and instance of that 1 Sam. 10. 5. where the company of prophets are met by Saul, coming down from the high place with a psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them, while they propheſied, or sang praises to God. And another yet earlier I mentioned, that of Miriam and her maidens. And indeed the universal usage among among all the nations that we reade of, gives us cauſe much rather to aſſign it a place in the natural Religion which the common light of Reaſon directed all civilized Nations to, in attributing honour to God, than to number it among the ceremonies of the Moſaical Law. Homer, one of the ancienteſt heathen writers that we have, gives a ſufficient account of the uſage of the Greeks in celebrating the praiſes of the Gods and Heroes upon the Harp; and after him nothing more frequent than the mention of the Paeans, Dithyrambicks, Choriambicks, Pythaulæ, the τυμπανοθηγη of Bacchus, the Phrygian way of ſervice unto Cybele with the Drum, the Egyptians to Iſis with the Timbrel or Siſtrum. Of the more Eaſtern practice the third of Daniel is ſufficient teſtimony, where the ſound of the Cornet, Flute, Harp, Sackbut, Pſaltery, Dulcimer, and all kinds of Muſick are uſed in the worſhip of their Idol-Gods, v. 5. As for the Weſtern or Roman, Muſick was ſo great an ingredient in their Religion, that in the firſt Ages of that ſtate, before they had learnt and received in to their own the rites of the nations they conquered, the Tibicines had a College or Corporation among them; and when upon a diſobligation they left the City, the Senate addreſt a ſolemn Embaſſy to them to bring them back, and at their return courted them with the donation of all the privileges they deſired. By all this it appears how little affinity to truth there is in that obſervation, which made Church-Muſick a piece of abrogated Judaiſm, it being no part of the Law given by Moſes, and ſo great a part of the Religion of thoſe to whoſe rites the Moſaical œconomy was moſt contrary; and yet ſo far alſo from being defamed by the Idolatrous heathens uſing of it, that the Prophets among the Jews practiſed it, Miriam celebrated the deliverance from Ægypt with it in the preſence of Moſes, and David ſolemnly ordain'd and endow'd it, (and from him the reſt of the Kings of Judah) in the Tabernacle and the Temple. Which appointment of David's although I ſuppoſe it not ſo far to be extended as to lay an obligation on all Chriſtians in all their ſervices to uſe this ſolemnity of inſtrumental Muſick, David's practices being not thus obligatory to us, nor his appointment reaching all Chriſtians; yet 1. neither is there any reaſon deducible from hence to perſwade us, that theſe Inſtruments taken in to aſſiſt in God's ſervice either then were, or now are, unlawfull on that account, becauſe they were not commanded by God, but appointed by David: for it being evident that David was both a Prophet and a King, the former (if not the latter of theſe alone) enabled and qualified him to ordain ceremonies in God's ſervice, as is viſible in his numbring the age of the Levites, 1 Chron. 23. 27. otherwiſe than Moſes had appointed, v. 3. and Numb. 4. 3. and by his deſign to build God a Temple not commanded (but after forbidden) and yet his deſign of doing it approved by God. And 2. the motives which recommended the uſe thereof to David and his ſucceſſours after him, being not ſhadows of things to come (which therefore by the preſence of the ſubſtance, the coming of Chriſt, are aboliſhed) but reaſons of equal efficacy now, and before, and in his time, viz. the propriety of thoſe ſounds to expreſs and add to the ſolemnity of rejoycing, to enliven and ſtir up dull, and to compoſe irregular affections, to raiſe and inflame devotion, to tranſport into holy ecſtaſies, and this, as Boethius tells us, by vertue of the anſwerableneſs of the notes in Muſick to thoſe obſerved by nature in the temper of the body, which makes a well-compoſed harmony, a moral at leaſt, if not even a natural inſtrument to work changes in humane affections, and if the Muſick be deſigned with Judgment, and with reſpect to the preſent occaſions, that change muſt in reaſon be to the better, and not to the worſe. On theſe premiſſes, I ſay, the leaſt that can be inferred is, that if we onely conſider Church-Muſick as a ſutable attendant on Divine Service, it is no more abrogated by the Goſpel, than proſtration of the body in prayer, ſetting apart Feſtival Solemnities, making Oblations, building Oratories, and the like; and 2. if we joyn to this the conſideration of the particular uſes of it, then unleſs we have none of theſe wants which Muſick is proper to ſupply, the Uſe may now as reaſonably be retain'd in the Church (and that for other parts of God's Service as well as that one of Lauds and Magnificats, from the examples of Aſa and Jehoſhaphat forementioned) as it was introduced into God's Service in, and before the Temple. Yet when I ſay it may, I do not aſſume it muſt: When by the conſent (in a manner) of all mankind I diſcern it look'd on as an agreeable attendant and ornament of natural Religion, I do not yet eſteem it either as any the leaſt part of the Subſtance, or ſo much as a neceſſary rite of Divine Service, but place it in the claſſis of thoſe things which, when they are ſeaſonably and decently and reverently uſed, expreſs our honour to the Deity. 'Tis moſt certain, I may ſpeak the praiſes of God without the addition either of Inſtrumental or even of Vocal Muſick; and ſo I know we may pray, and not in a Church or conſecrated place, and without the lowlieſt poſture of the body, that of proſtration. Yet it will as little be doubted upon Chriſtian Principles, or thoſe which are common to all Religion, but, as theſe, ſo that, when it is (by the Piety of Governours, or without, ſo it be not againſt, their commands) ſuperinduced, it will with good propriety fill up the ſolemnity and honourary reſpect, and ſo (though abſtracted from the forementioned acceſſory advantages) maintain, againſt all rational oppoſition, the decency of retaining it in the Church of Chriſt. 3. To ſay ſtill, after all this, that it is aboliſhed in the Chriſtian Church, and neither to ſhew where, nor to tender any analogy or parity of reaſon by which that may (with ſome probability at leaſt) be inferred, but having untruly ſuggeſted, that it was appointed by God in the Old Law, on that undue ſuggeſtion onely, without the leaſt tender of farther proof, to dictate magiſterially that it is aboliſhed, what is this but the fallacy in Logick of begging the Queſtion, and no ſmall degree of the ſin of dogmatizing, as far from the methods of Reaſon, as the purity or liberty of the Goſpel? Eſpecially when the Apoſtle under the New Teſtament, by preſcribing Pſalms and Hymns and ſpiritual Songs, Col. 3. 16. which three words are obſerved to comprize all the ſorts of Songs and Pſalms mentioned among the Jews in the Old Teſtament (of the laſt of which thoſe very Geneva-Annotations ſay, that they are peculiar and artificious ſongs, made fuller of muſick) and by the addition of ſinging, and making melody (the latter ψαλλοντες probably referring to ‖ Inſtrumental, as the former to Vocal Muſick) ſeems ſo far from the leaſt unkindneſs to the Muſick cuſtomary in the Temple, that he rather recommends it on fit occaſions to the Chriſtians. Nor can there be any reaſon rendred, either Chriſtian or Moral, why vocal vocal Muſick ſhould be commanded under the Goſpel, and yet inſtrumental forbidden; or why Songs more than ordinarily artificious, and fuller of Muſick, being in the Genevan judgment preſcribed, ſhould yet be interdicted the additional uſe of the Harp or Organ, or any other ſort of grave, ſolemn, and moſt eſteemed muſical Inſtruments, to accompany, and either aſſiſt, or adorn them. A more rational enquiry it would be, whether when the holy anointing oil, wherewith the Tabernacle was anointed, was not to be uſed for ſecular purpoſes under the ſevereſt penalty, Exod. 30. 33. ſuch Inſtruments, 1. ſo ſolemnly appointed, and thereby in a manner conſecrated by David the holy Pſalmiſt, and 2. honoured by the uſage of the Temple, and alſo the Chriſtian Church, be not in ſome degree debaſed, if not prophaned, by being forbidden their Original proper Uſe, and imployed to uſes moſt contrary.

THE PROVERBS.

CHAP. I.

1. THE Proverbs of Solomon, the Son of David, King of Israel.

Paraphrase.

1. This ensuing book was penn'd by that great and famous servant of God, King Solomon, that reigned over all the people of Israel, immediately after David his Father; and was endowed by God, in answer to his request, with a more eminent spirit of wisdom and knowledge, than ever was afforded to any mere man, 1 King. 3. 12. And it is a Compilement or Collection of divine Sentences, ‖ documents, or instructions of life, taken from his meditation, and observation of all sorts of things in the world, and adapted to the uses of all sorts of men, and that they may the more sharply and lively affect them, be more gratefully received, and more easily retained, and make the deeper impression on their minds, they are many of them framed by way of parable, or comparison, or similitude; which as they have somewhat of obscurity in them, before they be explain'd, and when they are so, (the Cabinet open'd, where the treasure is laid up) they are found to contein somewhat out of the common road, above vulgar observation; so by these advantages they may hope to gain the firmer rooting in the intelligent readers heart; and continue to him ready at hand on all occasions, to guide and direct the actions of his life.

‖ So the Arabick Interpreter expounds the word Proverbs.

2. To know wisdom and instruction, to perceive the [a] words of understanding.

2. And the proper aim designed by the Author, in collecting and publishing them, was to engage mens hearts to the study and practice of that which alone is true wisdom, the skill of regulating their lives, with that exactness, which may be acceptable in the sight of God, that great spiritual prudence, by which all our actions are to be managed and conducted, and withall to raise their understandings above an ordinary pitch, to comprehend obscure expressions that have especial weight and acuteness in them.

3. To * receive the † instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and ‖ equity.

3. To perswade men effectually to take off their hearts from the empty grosser entertainments, or studies, or pursuits of the world, and to be vacant for these nobler employments, 1, exercising their faculties in finding out sublime conceptions. 2. Imbibing most profitable rules for the conducting their actions of all kinds, by measures of perfect justice and charity toward all they have to deal with, of impartial distribution of punishments and rewards in publick judicatures, and of probity and uprightness in all their thoughts and enterprises.

* learn, see ch. 9. 9.
† discipline or exercise of wit, or understanding, see note g.
‖ rectitudes or probity.

4. To give * subtlety to the simple, to the young man knowledge and † discretion.

4. The reading this book will be an armature to all facile, flexible, seducible persons, to young men especially, which want experience in affairs, and so are subject to be misled and ensnared. The precepts here scattered will infuse into such, a pious craft, an honest and necessary cunning, enable them to countermine the deceits and stratagems of satan, and other seducers, render them more truly wise and sagacious to defend and secure themselves, than the subtlest machinators are to over reach them.

* cunning, עָרְמָה (Gen. 3. 1.) astutia, Lat. and so Chal. Syr. Arab.
† sagacity, or counsel, מוֹעָה from יָעַם excogitavit.

5. A wise man will hear, and will encrease learning, and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise ‖ [b] counsels.

5. He that shall diligently study and be versed in them, will gain much knowledge, and approve himself to be a wise man in thus imploying his time, and by help of the directions and rules that are here given, both Ethical and Political, for private men, and for Magistrates also, every considering person will arrive to a great proficiency of skill and dexterity, both in managing the affairs of his life, especially of his soul, moderating and ordering his affections, which is the prime piece of moral prudence, and also, if need be, for the governing of a Kingdom (the precepts of this wise Prince extending to that also.

‖ conduct, managery.

6. To understand a Proverb, and * the [c] interpretation, the words of the wise, and their † dark sayings.

6. And so likewise will his study of this book bring him acquainted with the most elegant, acute, and profound composures which are any where to be met with, and teach him the understanding of them, (Thus various and manifold are the uses and advantages of the diligent studying of this book, if we can attain to the full importance of the severals conteined in it.)

* elegant composure.
† extraordinary, or excellent.

7. The fear of the Lord is the [d] beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom, and instruction.

7. And the first lesson I shall commend to you, is most worthy very great consideration, being of a signal importance to our whole spiritual well-being, and 'tis this, that all saving knowledge, as that includes practice, answerable to knowledge, an uniform persevering obedience to all the commands of God, is founded in true humility (that fear signifies that, see Annot. on Phil. 11. c.) and ‖ piety, and holy awe and reverence to God, and a tender fear to displease him, and a readiness to receive and embrace and lay up in an honest heart his word and his grace, whensoever it shall be revealed and afforded him. This is the onely kindly temper of soil, where God's seed takes root, and abundantly fructifies, (and is it self a work not of nature, but of God's preparing and preventing graces, when they are successfull and attain their desired effect in us) whereas folly, and pride, contumacy, and all manner of impiety go together. Those that are not (by God's preventing graces taking deep roote in them) moulded into this humble, docible, pious temper, so as to be receptive of those good sober counsels (which God commends to them, and by his grace accompanies them, and promises and never fails to cooperate with them in all that effectually receive them, and traffick with them) but on the contrary, either resist or neglect, either vex and grieve, or, by not receiving and imploying, scatter and quench these graces of his spirit, they never attain to true saving wisedom, but remain in the dregs and on the lees of their corrupt natural state of folly and sin, wherein they were born, daily adding to, and improving that original stock of wickedness, by actual and habitual sins, wherein all impiety and (at least practical) Atheism consisteth.

8. To this purpose are the wholsome, and early advices and rules of direction, which parents give their children, on purpose to infuse into them betimes these seeds of all vertue; which benefit of a good education, with the early graces of God accompanying it, are the foresaid preventions of his spirit. And therefore if I were, as a Father to a deareſt Son, to give thee one fundamental counsel, which should have a signal influence on all thy future weal, it should be this, that thou most humbly and obediently receive, and perform what thy parents thus direct or command thee, and never forget or neglect or transgress their rules in any thing.

8. My Son, hear the instruction of thy Father, and forsake not the Law of thy Mother.

9. And to engage thee thereto, let me assure thee, this constant chearfull uniform obedience shall be so far from proving an ungratefull weight or burthen to thee, that it shall be to thy self (as experience will teach thee) the most pleasurable imployment, a yoke, but that a gracious one, Matth. 11. 30. and in the sight of all men most comely, and ornamental above any other sort whether of natural or artificial beauty, 1 Pet. 3. 4. and over and above most acceptable and rewardable in the sight of God, and so as far from being wearisome in any respect, as a royal * crown is from being a pressure, or as a golden chain about the neck is from being a yoke or collar.

9. For they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

*the LXXII. reade στέφανον.

10. Of this sort of paternal advices or precepts, a first is, to beware and keep thy self from the seductions of wicked men. Great store of such trials of thy constancy thou shalt be sure to meet with, and there is but one armature can secure thee against them, a standing steady, and yielding no consent to any. If thou doe thus, thou art as safe from the temptations of men, as he that resists the devil, is from being polluted by him; resist and they will fly from thee; thy not consenting, renders thee conquerour; but if thou yield, thou art ensnared and captivate.

10. My Son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

α 11, 12. These enticements are of many sorts and kinds; I shall instance in one, by which thou mayst estimate the rest: Suppose a knot of bloody fellows, which fear nothing but the eyes of men, dread not the foulest commissions, if they can hope to keep them undiscovered, shall without any provocation, design the slaughter of innocent persons, and invite thee to † take part with them in it, promising to contrive it so secretly, that it shall not be discerned, either at the present, so as to prevent it, or afterwards, so as to avenge, or bring any peril on the actours, assuring thee, they have such ways to dispach them, as shall leave no remainders or footsteps behind for discovery, any more than when the earth opens on a sudden, and swallows one up, and all that belongs to him, such therefore, as shall prevent all possibility of so much as pursuit, or ‖ enquiry after him, and so secure thee both of success, and of impunity (That this was a prediction of the crucifying Christ, is affirmed by St. Augustin de Civ. Dei, l. 17. c. 20. See Matth. 21. 38.)

11. If they say, come with us, α Let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause, β 12. Let us swallow them up alive, as the grave, β and whole, as those that go down into the pit.

† κτησόμενον ὅλων LXXII.

‖ ἁρπαγὴν αὐτῶν μεγάλην ὡς ἅδ. LXXII.

13, 14. Adding to the promise of perfect safety, assurance of rich spoils, such as will maintain you plentifully all your life after; and if you will but enter into the confederacy with them, vowing to allow you as great a share in the prey, as any of them.

13. We shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil.

γ 14. Cast in thy lot among us, * let us all have γ one purse.

* we will... or one purse shall be to us all כִּיס אֶחָד תִּהְיֶה לָנוּ כֻּלָּנוּ

15. When, I say, they shall thus have made their proposals to thee, and set them off with all possible advantages, to secure thy fears, and allure thy hopes; it still concerns thee most nearly to make good thy constancy, not to enter so much as party with them, to express thy utmost dislike, and abhorrence of them, to avoid their society, and remove far from them, to renounce all communion with them, in such black courses.

15. My Son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy feet from their paths.

16. If there were nothing else to deter thee from them, no fear of discovery, or punishment from men, yet the guilt of such a crimson crying sin, is enough to avert one of any tenderness, and give him a perfect horrour and detestation of any fact to which that adheres, there being no burthen apt to press down a conscience deeper than that of shedding innocent blood, Rom. 3. 16.

16. For their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood.

ε 17. Which he that considers, and can by any means possible get out of the confines of it, were more irrational than the silliest bird, should he permit himself to be thus ensnared in so hellish a guilt. For of a bird 'tis manifest, that be the net or toyles never so cunningly and advantageously laid, yea and baited too, yet if that espy the net, it will not, by the enticements of the bait, be incited to run into it, (and there is no need of any quick sight to discern that, the net being much more grosly visible, than the bait, which is but a few scattered seeds, &c. very unvaluable, if they might be gained, and hardly discernible, as they lie on the ground) but will make use of the wing to fly from and escape that danger. And the like will every rational man doe, when he is tempted to any such bloody act, which must bring that or the like horrid guilt upon him (which is visible enough to the bodily eye, much more visible than the advantages he can hope to acquire by it) and have any thing which may supply the place of a wing, (such is 1. prayer to God for his grace; 2. meditation of divine vengeance, of death, and hell, and judgment; 3. diversion to some better, at least to some other more innocent employment; and none so fit again for that turn, as prayer, which, if but as a diversion, hath a moral efficacy against temptations. 4. Constancy in resisting and not yielding any consent) some or all of these he may certainly make use of, and then, whatsoever the temptation be, it is frustrated and lost upon him, that is thus provided with an eye, and wing, and seeing and considering this danger, makes use of any of these means to keep out of it.

17. Surely ε in vain the net is spread in the sight of † any bird.

† every one that hath a wing, כָּל בַּעַל כָּנָף

18. ♪ And

18. ♪ And they lay wait for their own blood, they lurk privily for their own lives.

18. But beſide this black guilt, forementiond, v. 16. the preſent vengeance which ♪ ſuch deſigns are to expect, may ſeaſonably deter all from joyning with them; Their bloody enterpriſes generally rebound upon themſelves, their machinations againſt other mens lives, will certainly coſt them their own, it being ſeldom ſeen that men of blood eſcape preſent vengeance; or if they doe, their impunity and proſperous impiety will but the more ſecure them of their ſadder portion in another world.

19. So are the ways of every one that is ♦ greedy of gain, which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

19. The ſame may be ſaid of all other temptations, thoſe eſpecially of the world, all ♦ unlawfull ways of encreaſing wealth, which worldlings make uſe of, they are ſo far from tending to the deſigned end of happineſs here, that they are generally moſt treacherous, and ruinous to thoſe that deal in them; either they take them utterly, ſo doth oppreſſion, and ſacrilege, blaſt and melt all the former ſtore; or bring them to ſhamefull deaths, ſo do tyracies, and robberies, and rebellions, &c. or elſe deprive them of all enjoyments and comforts of this life; ſo generally the covetous miſer dares not diminiſh his heap, but conſumes himſelf to encreaſe that, and never receives any reward of all his drudgery, the richer he is, the leſſe he enjoys of his plenty.

Did not men let looſe the reins to all inordinate, and irrational appetites, making bruitiſhneſs and perdition their choice, placing all their delight on ſuch things as are moſt unſatisfactory, and yet moſt deteſtable, and ſcoffing at all others that accompany them not in all exceſs of riot, did they not hate piety (without any temptation) and reſolve never to taſte the ſweets of that gracious yoke, and ſo ſtand at the utmoſt diſtance of defiance and hoſtility with it, It were not imaginable they ſhould thus hold out, unmoved and impregnable to all ſober counſels.

23. Turn you at my reproof, behold I will pour out my ſpirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

23. If yet, after ſo many methods uneffectually uſed, they ſhall at length relent, and convert, and with ſincere contrition and confeſſion forſake their evil and ruinous courſe, upon the threats (and promiſes) which Chriſt brings into the world with him, and proclaims to the worſt of ſinners, to Phariſees, to Publicans, to Idolaters; they ſhall not onely be accepted, the worſt of them, upon theſe terms, but together with pardon for all that is paſt, he will give them the continued aſſiſtance of his ſpirit, that ‖ fountain (or ſeed) of grace, that ſhall flow continually to the ſupply of all their wants, and become a principle of new life and ſtrength unto them; and then, by the practice of all holy duties, they ſhall arrive to that experimental knowledge of the divine tranſcendent excellency and deſirableneſs of them, that they ſhall prefer them infinitely before all the empty joys that before they had courted ſo importunately.

‖ So אַבִּיעָה from נָבַע, ſcaturivit, refers to a fountain continually ſpringing and flowing.

27. When your fear cometh ♣ as † deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirlwind, when diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon you. ‖

27. And theſe they are without queſtion to expect; and the leſs beforehand they apprehend them, the more ſuddenly and frightfully, tumultuouſly and diſmally they will ſeiſe them, as an army falling in upon the unprepa- ♣ † tumult

‖ The Chaldee taking, in this word reſpect to be had more to the manner of coming, than of the thing ſaid to come, renders it by בְּשַׁלְיָא which ſignifies, ſuddenly, as likewiſe the Syriack ܒܫܠܝܐ, on a ſudden, looking on it, it ſeems, as ſuch, whether deſolation, or tumult, or commotion, which on a ſudden cometh or happeneth. The LXXII. alſo, &c.

red with an amazing noiſe, or a whirlwind that comes on a ſudden, and carries all before it, giving them no ſpace, or poſſibility to prevent them.

28. Then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer, they ♦ ſhall * ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me.

28. And then they that have held out againſt all God's importunities, ſhall find the ♦ ſad effects of it; their miſeries will ſet them a praying and importuning, when 'tis too late, and then it ſhall not avail; Thoſe that have lived impenitent and obdurate, till judgments ſurpriſe them, the attrition, the confeſſion, the ſorrow or requeſts for pardon, which the ſight of their preſent danger extort from them, cannot hope to be accepted by God, their former continued obſtinacy manifeſting, that it is not ſincere contrition from which it flows. * ſeek me, but——

29. For that they hated knowledge, and did not chooſe the fear of the Lord.
30. They would none of my counſel, they deſpiſed all my reproof.

29, 30. For thus in the caſe ſet, it was diſcernible, that till theſe judgments ſurprized them, they continued to avert and hate piety, v. 22. rebell'd and ſtood out obſtinately againſt heaven, whilſt God's proceedings were ſoft, though never ſo powerfull, whilſt he called, and adviſed, and inſtructed them, furniſhing them with light, and ſtrength, and all that was neceſſary, onely leaving them the liberty of their choices, if they would uſe them ſo perverſely to their miſchief, ſetting life and death before them, and in a moſt friendly manner adviſing them to chooſe life, and the ways that lead to it, and to avoid and forſake the contrary; As long, I ſay, as God dealt thus treatably with them, they would never be brought to piety, but ſtood out unchanged againſt all his moſt powerfull impreſſions, reſiſted and fruſtrated both the light and the grace, the advices and the reprehenſions that were afforded them: And then, what acceptation could that, which was ſo far from voluntary, or choſen, theſe their extorted prayers, and cries and importunities, expect at God's hands? Had they been earlier, whilſt the judgments were onely impendent, and might then fitly have infuſed or occaſioned ſober counſels to them, they might have been deem'd to have come from the heart, as ſincere and durable; but having held out as long as they could, and coming in onely when they could hold out no longer, God that ſees this, cannot be imagined to be atoned with ſuch a forced hypocritical change.

31. And then it is moſt juſt, that they ſhould not be denied, but granted their own choices, that having the option of life and death, of piety and impiety, bleſſing and curſing ſet before them, with ſufficient inſtruction and ſtrength, to chooſe and attain the one, and to avert and eſcape the other, if they will ſtill reſiſt, and deny their own mercy, and whilſt their time of choice laſteth, obſtinately perſiſt in the ways of death, 'tis agreeable to all rules of the mildeſt tribunals, (with which nothing is deem'd injurious that is will'd, or called upon a man by his own deliberate choice) that they that doe thus, ſhould finally fall under the eternal wrath of God, which they would not timely prevent, and ſo be more than fill'd, even glutted with their own choices, come to that ſad end, to which they ſo eagerly poſted, and then (though not till then) find cauſe to retract and repent, when they begin to taſte the bitterer part, to reap the fruits, and receive the juſt rewards of their own ways and works.

31. Therefore they ſhall eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

1 32. Thus nothing but their own perverſe obſtinacy, than which there can be no greater folly, is to be accuſed for the ruine of thoſe that periſh; God earneſtly deſired and endeavoured their reformation and ſalvation, but they would not be reſcued. If any thing on God's part contributed toward it, it was his long-ſuffering and mercy, which occaſionally encreaſed (as in Pharaoh) their obduration: And this is of all others the moſt irrational folly and madneſs, that the very bleſſings of heaven ſhould enhance their hell, and the tranquility and preſervations of God afforded them, ſhould become ſo noxious in their hands, as to be uſed for weapons to offend God, and ſo mortally wound their own ſouls.

32. For [1] the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, and the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them.

33. Yet thus it is with all that reject the admonitions, and fruſtrate the methods of heaven, as every obſtinate impenitent ſinner finally doth: whereas every faithfull obedient ſervant of Chriſt, ſhall by his ſpirit be furniſhed with ſufficient ſtrength to ſecure him againſt all danger of temptations, and be either delivered from, or ſupported under them, and ſo hath the privilege of living cheerfully and comfortably and * fiducially, need never fear being forſaken by God, as long as he continues carefull to keep cloſe to him; and then there is no enemy beſide himſelf that can ever harm him. As for any ſecular infortunities or miſcarriages, that can befall ſuch a man, as he hath not the privilege of exemption from them, ſo he hath an armature that ſhall fortifie him againſt the evil of them, a ſuperiority of mind, that keeps him from being concern'd in ſuch things, at leaſt, an acquieſcence in the wiſedom of God's choices, who ſees theſe beſt for him, to take off his heart from any thing ſo groſs or tranſitory, as all worldly felicities are, and ſo in all theſe he is more than conquerour by the inſtructions and aſſiſtance of Chriſt, that eternal uncreated Wiſedom.

33. But whoſo hearkeneth to me ſhall dwell ſafely, and ſhall be quiet from fear of evil.

* ſo בָּטַח alſo ſignifies ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, in hope, LXXII. בְּסִבְרָא Chald.

Annotations on Chap. I.

a אִמְרֵי בִינָה

V. 2. Words of underſtanding] The peculiar importance of the phraſe אִמְרֵי בִינָה in this place is fit to be conſidered, it is literally enough rendred words of underſtanding, or intelligent words, as that ſignifies, ſpeeches that have ſome weight, or depth of underſtanding in them; Caſtalio hath excellently paraphraſed it by ſcite dicta, things acutely and finely ſaid, that have ſome ſpecial ὕψος, or δεινότης, ſublimity or ſharpneſs in them, which none but piercing judgments will preſently reach and comprehend. Such were thoſe which the Græcians called παροιμίαι (by which the LXXII. here render מָשָׁל proverbs) conceptions that either in themſelves, or in the figurative, and parabolical, or poetical expreſſions, by which they are veiled, are παρ' ὁδὸν, beſide, or out of the way, or road, ſuch as the Son of Sirach, Ecclus. 39. 2. ſtyles διηγήσεις ἀνδρῶν ὀνομαστῶν, the ſayings of famous men, τροπὰς παραβολῶν, ſubtilties of parables, and again v. 3. ἀπόκρυφα παροιμιῶν, ſecrets of proverbs, and αἰνίγματα παραβολῶν, riddles of parables. And in this notion it will be the fitter for the uſe which is aſſigned it in this place, viz. to make up the full importance of מָשָׁל proverbs, in the former verſe, and in the title of the book, and in the beginning of the 10th chapter. For (as was ſhew'd on the 49th Pſalm, Note b) that word ſignifies not onely the γνῶμαι Ethical ſentences, and inſtructions of life, be they never ſo plain, (as wickedneſs proceeds from the wicked, 1 Sam. 24. 13. and the fear of God is the beginning of wiſedom, here v. 6. and the like) but alſo, and more eſpecially, the moſt quaint, or ſublime expreſſions, and poetical ſchemes: and the former of theſe are refer'd to in the former part of this verſe, under the ſtyle of σοφία καὶ παιδεία, wiſedom and diſcipline, or inſtruction; and ſo proportionably the latter are intimated by words of underſtanding, which though the LXXII. did not ſo fully expreſs by λόγοι φρονήσεως, as that is rendred, words of prudence (which ordinarily ſignifies that great practical vertue) yet they abundantly repaired this defect in the next words, where for מוּסַר הַשְׂכֵּל, which we render the inſtruction of wiſedom, they reade τροπὰς λόγων, verſutias ſermonum, ſubtilties, or cunnings of ſpeech, or ſubtle cunning ſpeeches, to which ſome ancient copies (that of Aſulanus, and the Complut.) add λύσεις τε αἰνιγμάτων (which as it is poſſible ſome Scribe may have inſerted from Wiſed. 8. 6. ſo 'tis not leſs probable that the authour of that book took it from hence) ſolutions of riddles, i.e. of ſuch dark reſemblances as that of Samſon's was, which he propoſed to the Philiſtims, ſuch as Pythagoras's Symbola, and ſuch as are properly ſtyled σκολιοὶ, parables, or ſimilitudes, (as theſe are oppoſed to plain precepts, literally underſtood, ſuch as the γνῶμαι were) of which ſort eſpecially are thoſe which follow in the 10th chapter, and ſo forward, which accordingly begins with מִשְׁלֵי rendred by the Latin parabolæ, the parables of Solomon. By what hath been ſaid, the whole third verſe will be explain'd, in perfect analogy to the ſecond, by obſerving onely the figure ἀπάνοδος, very frequent in Scripture (ſee Annot. on Matt. 7. 6.) of reverting firſt to that which was laſt, and afterward to that which was firſt; For thus the ſecond verſe compriſing the two ſorts of מָשָׁל, proverbs, 1. the plain, but weighty Ethical Sentences or γνῶμαι, which were ἀσχημάτιστοι, without ſcheme or figure, 2. the figurative or poetical, or parabolical paſſages, the firſt by by wiſedom and inſtruction, the ſecond by words of underſtanding; the third verſe exactly accords to it, onely inverting the order, 1. the inſtruction, or diſcipline, or exerciſe (ſo מוּסָר, muſeia, ſignifies) of underſtanding, or apprehenſion, or wit, or skill, (ſo הַשְׂכֵּל, from שָׂכַל, to underſtand, to diſcern, to look about, ſignifies) Caſtalio here renders it ingenium, wit, ingeny, the Lexicographers ſolertia, attentio, ingenium, in which notion undoubtedly the LXXII. took it, and rendred it; thoſe cunning or ſubtle ſpeeches and ſolutions of riddles, which they expreſs, being an eminent exerciſe of the wit, or apprehenſive and intellective faculty. 2. juſtice, judgment and equity, under thoſe three words comprehending all ſorts of Ethical Precepts, 1. thoſe that concern juſt dealing between man and man, yea and mercifulneſs alſo (ſo doth צֶדֶק, juſtice, ſee Note on Matt. 1. g) 2. thoſe that concern publick diſtribution of juſtice (ſo doth מִשְׁפָּט, for which the Chaldee and Syriack reade דִּינָא, from דָּן, to judge, or give ſentence, to rule, or adminiſter juſtice, and ſo the LXXII. have κρίμα, judgment, of which ſee Annot. on Matt. 23. f) 3. thoſe that concern the univerſal conduct of every man's life (ſo doth מֵישָׁרִים, rectitude, probity, uprightneſs, ſincerity of heart and actions, from יָשַׁר, to be ſtreight, plain, honeſt, approved, acceptable in the ſight of God and man, which therefore the Chaldee and Syriack expreſs by תְּרַצּוּתָא, from תְּרַץ, going ſtreight forward). All theſe three the LXXII. expreſs rather paraphraſtically, than by literal rendring, νοῆσαι δικαιοσύνην ἀληθῆ, καὶ κρίμα κατόρθωσιν, to underſtand true juſtice, and to ſtreighten or rectifie judgment, the firſt and the third they put together into true juſtice, the ſecond they explain by making ſtreight, or right judgment, yet this alſo, (as their manner is) with ſome aſpect on the word מֵישָׁרִים, rectitudes, to which their κατόρθωσιν hath affinity. In this the vulgar departs from them, adhering literally to the Original; onely for rectitudes, or probity (as Caſtalio moſt fully renders the laſt word) they have æquitatem, equity, which looks more on publick judicature, and ſo is not ſo proper for the third place, having been contein'd before in the ſecond. In proportion to the two grand heads or ſorts of Proverbs, the Ethical Precepts, and the acute, or deep Sayings, the three enſuing verſes alſo, 4, 5, 6. will be interpreted, as appears in the Paraphraſe, the fourth and fifth belonging to practical wiſedom or prudence, and the ſixth to the underſtanding of hard ſayings, &c.

b חַחְבֻּלוֹת

V. 5. Wiſe Counſels] From חָבַל, to bind, is חֶבֶל, a rope, and alſo the maſt of a ſhip, and thence is חַחְבֻּלוֹת, ſignifying the mariners art in governing a ſhip, and ſo more generally the skill of managing, or conducting, whether kingdoms, or any other affairs. In which notion the ancient Interpreters here generally underſtand it, the Chaldee and Syriack reade סַרְבִּרְנוּתָא, government, from רבר, which in Hiphil they uſe for governing, ordering, managing, and ſo the LXXII. κυβέρνησιν, and the Latin gubernacula, and the Arabick accords, and this may be either the more publick, the skill of ruling, if need be, a whole kingdom, in reference to the judgment preceding, v. 3. or elſe more private, that of every particular man, in ſubduing and regulating paſſions, managing all the affairs of life; and to both theſe great uſes theſe Proverbs have a propriety, as will appear in the ſequele.

c פְּלִיצָה

V. 6. The interpretation] The notion of פְּלִיצָה ſeems here to be miſtaken. From לוּץ, cavillatus eſt, deriding or ſcoffing, is הֵלִיץ, in a good ſenſe, to compoſe, or diſpoſe, or expreſs any thing, and ſo to interpret, and ſo the noun מֵלִיץ, by Lexicographers is rendred interpret, advocatus, and ſo מְלִיצָה, interpretatio here, but that not in our ordinary notion of interpreting for explaining a difficulty, but as ἑρμηνεία (which Aquila here uſeth) doth in oratory, and ſo in the title of Demetrius Phalerius's book, ſignifie eloquence, ſo here it is uſed for any elegant, whether rhetorical or poetical compoſure. So Eccles. 47. 17. having mentioned Solomon's odes and proverbs and parables, he adds, καὶ ἐν ἑρμηνείᾳ ἐθαυμάσθη σου ἡ χώρα, the regions admired thee, in, or for thy eloquence. Thus 'tis evident the LXXII. underſtood it here, rendring it σκληρὸν λόγον, a dark ſpeech. So Symmachus, who hath σκολιόμημα, a problem, or hard queſtion. So the Syriack and Chaldee, who both render it by פַּלְאָתָא, from פֶּלֶא, hard, wonderfull, and though the Interpreter of the Chaldee render that interpretationem, yet that muſt be in the ſenſe that now I ſpeak of, elſe that word פלא is moſt contrary to it, noting obſcurity onely, and not explicating of obſcurities, and ſo the Syriack is rendred parabolas, parables, and the Arabick peregrinos ſermones, ſtrange ſpeech, agreeably the Interlinear reads facundiam, eloquence, and ſo it beſt agrees with the other three expreſſions, before, and after it, in this verſe, proverbs, words of the wiſe, and dark ſayings, for the laſt of which the LXXII. have αἰνίγματα, riddles, and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack. The word both in Hebrew and in them חִידָתָם, from חוּד, to ſpeak obſcurely and acutely, is of affinity with חָדַשׁ and חָדַת, novavit, and from thence nova dixit, ſpeaking new things, ſo as a new ſong, frequently in the Pſalms, is that which is above vulgar, or ordinary, and nova carmina in Virgil, Eclog. iii. Pollio & ipſe facit nova carmina, rare or excellent lines.

V. 7. Beginning] The double meaning of this word, 1. for the firſt in order of time. 2. for the moſt excellent, hath been ſhew'd Annot. on Pſal. 61. f, where we had this ſame ראשׁ, or ſentence, lightly varied; There, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſedom, as here of knowledge. There, comparing it with Job 28. 28. the fear of the Lord that is wiſedom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding, (and Prov. 9. 10. the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſedom, and the knowledge of the holy is underſtanding) the latter notion ſeemed the moſt proper: But here, the latter part of the verſe ſeems to determin it to the former; for as the fools in the latter part are directly oppoſed to thoſe that have the fear of the Lord, by fools meaning Godleſs men, (ἀσεβεῖς, impious, the LXXII. reade, having in the former part farther explain'd the fear of the Lord by εὐσέβεια εἰς Θεόν, piety toward God) ſo muſt their deſpiſing, or ſetting at nought (ἐξουθένουσιν ſay the LXXII.) wiſedom and inſtruction, be interpreted ſo as to continue the oppoſition, and be contradiſtinct to the beginning of knowledge; whence the reſult is, that as they that want that preparation, or foundation of piety, deſpiſe all ſuperſtructures of that kind, ſo in thoſe that have it, it is the foundation (and that we know is in order of time firſt laid) of all true ſaving knowledge and practice; according to which was the note of the Jewiſh Arab on Pſal. 111. 10. The firſt thing that wiſedom gives in command is the fear of the Lord, and Eccluſ. 1. 14. To fear the Lord is the beginning of wiſedom, and it was created with the faithfull in the womb, referring expreſly to the primacy in order of time; From whence ariſeth that fundamental truth of Chriſtian Divinity, exemplified in the parable of the ſower by Chriſt, that the ground and immediate cauſe of the efficacy of grace in the hearts of ſome (and not of others) as alſo of their conſtancy and perſeverance, (when others fall away upon temptations) is the preparation of the ſoil (wrought by God's preventing graces) the ſoft mellow temper of humility and piety, and probity of heart, in oppoſition to pride, and impiety, and unmortified paſſions, love of the world, &c. To which it is conſequent, that thoſe that are not thus qualified, the fool, or impious here (of whom the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the ungodly is ſo proud that he careth not for God, and both Solomon and S. James, that God reſiſteth the proud, all ſuch as are of that impious temper, when he gives grace, and more grace to the humble) ſhould deſpiſe or ſet at nought wiſedom and inſtruction, fruſtrate and evacuate all the methods that are uſed by God for their converſion and ſalvation. Which ſenſe being prefer'd here, there will be place notwithſtanding in the Pſalmiſt, and Prov. 9. 10. for the other notion, as Eccluſ. 1. we ſee there is, where, after the words recited from v. 14. which refer to primacy of time, follows, v. 16. to fear the Lord is fulneſs of wiſedom, &c. which is the height of the other notion. In the LXXII. their reading of this verſe, there is a large addition inſerted, for after Ἀρχὴ σοφίας ὁ φόβος Κυρίου, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſedom, (for דַּעַת, knowledge, rendring σοφίαν, wiſedom, as in the Pſalm it was, and herein the Chaldee and Syriack, and Latin and Arabick agree with them, reading חָכְמָה, wiſedom, &c.) they add from Pſal. 111. 10. συνέσεως δὲ ἀγαθὴ πᾶσι τοῖς ποιοῦσιν αὐτὴν, a good underſtanding have all they that doe it, and yet farther, εὐσέβεια δὲ εἰς Θεὸν ἀρχὴ ἀδίκως, but piety toward God is the beginning of ſenſe, or feeling, which is but their (or ſome others) ſcholion, as it were, or farther explication of the grand maxim, and then follows σοφίαν δὲ καὶ παιδείαν ἀσεβεῖς ἐξουδενήσουσιν, but wiſedom and diſcipline the wicked ſhall ſet at nought.

חִנָּם V. 17. In vain] The difficulties of this verſe, which have cauſed the various interpretations of it, both among Jewiſh and Chriſtian writers, ſeem all to depend on this one word חִנָּם, which we render in vain, and ſo they may be removed by explaining it. The word coming from חָנַן, gratificatus eſt, hath a double ſignification, for as it excludes merit, ſo it excludes reward, the effect as well as the cauſe. As it excludes merit, ſo it is beſt rendred [without cauſe] and if a kindneſs be thus done [without cauſe] then 'tis δωρεὰν, gratuito, out of mere mercy, or favour; if any ill turn, then 'tis ἀδίκως, unjuſtly, which two, though they be as contrary as injuſtice and exceſſive mercy, yet among the Helleniſts one is frequently taken for the other, ſee Pſal. 35. 19. and Jo. 15. 25. they hated me δωρεὰν, not out of mere favour, but without any juſtice, or deſert. As it excludes the effect or ſucceſs, and ſo the reward of the action, that which the actour hath in his proſpect, ſo 'tis moſt properly rendred μάτην, fruſtra, in vain, without effect. And then the queſtion is whether of theſe notions belongs to it; The Syriack ſeems to take it in the former ſenſe, rendring it ܒܛܠܐ fraudulently, or perverſly, or maliciouſly, and in this ſenſe the Hebrew writers give various interpretations of it; which, becauſe I cannot approve any of them, I recite not. For the Chaldee and Latin agree on the latter ſenſe, דְּמָן, fruſtra, in vain; and to that the context well accords, for having exhorted not to yield to the tempters, whatſoever the pretended advantages or baits are, he deters them, v. 16. by the great guilt of blood they ſhall incur by conſenting; and farther, v. 18. by the danger that from this will divolve on their own lives, which being great and viſible evils, and as ſuch repreſented to them, this ſimilitude taken from birds is very pertinent, which, when the net is ſpread, and baited for them, if they ſee the net, will fly away, and never be circumvented by the bait, and then all the fowlers arts are in vain; and ſo are the tempters fair promiſes ineffectual; any prudent man that ſees what miſchief the yielding will bring upon him, will be ſure to fly from them. In the laſt place the Septuagint's rendring will deſerve to be conſidered, who reade ὅτι οὐκ ἀδίκως ἐκλείπουσι δίκτυα πτερωτοῖς, for not unjuſtly the nets are ſpread for the winged creatures; where it will be hard either to give any account of the addition of [οὐ, not] when, v. 11. the ſame word, חִנָּם, is by them duly rendred [ἀδίκως, unjuſtly] the direct contradictory to [οὐκ ἀδίκως, not unjuſtly] here, or of the ſenſe or pertinency of the place, if it be ſo underſtood; Neither is it imaginable that the οὐ is ſuppoſititious, crept in through errour of Tranſcribers, both becauſe the γὰρ, that follows, cannot be fit to begin a ſentence, and becauſe all Copies agree in the reading, οὐ γὰρ, and becauſe the Fathers in their citations generally reade it thus, witneſs two for all, firſt * S. Barnabas in his Epiſtle, § iv. and 2. † S. Cyril of Alexandria, on John i. 11. The one thing that ſeems probable here, is, that the words were deſigned by the LXXII. by way of interrogation, the more ſtrongly to affirm and aſſevere (as our Engliſh doth by ſurely) and then, as it is ordinary with the Helleniſts to uſe one ſignification of the Hebrew, when it is equivocal, for another, ſo here ἀδίκως, unjuſtly, being taken for μάτην, in vain, the rendring will be clear, For are not the nets ſpread in vain for winged creatures? underſtanding and ſtrongly intimating that undoubtedly they are. That the Fathers, which thus recite their words, thus reade them, I am not able to affirm; But this is manifeſt, that they draw the very ſame concluſion from the verſe, though perhaps another way, viz. that God having ſhew'd men the way of truth, and given them means to make uſe of it, may juſtly deſtroy them, if they ſhall go on in deeds of darkneſs, and that herein men are authours to themſelves of all their ſufferings. To this ſenſe are the foremention'd places in S. Barnabas and S. Cyril: In the Epiſtle of S. Barnabas it is thus introduced, and made uſe of; We have not the Greek, but the Latin lies thus, Supergratulari ergo debemus domino, quia & præterita nobis oſtendit, & ſapientes fecit, & de futuris non ſumus ſine intellectu, dicit autem, οὐκ ἀδίκως ἐκλείπει δίκτυα πτερωτοῖς, Hoc dicit quia juſte peribit homo habens viam, veritatis ſcientiam, & ſe à via tenebroſa non continet, adhuc. We ought to be extremely thankefull to the Lord, becauſe he hath both ſhewed us what is paſt, and made us wiſe, and concerning things to come we are not without underſtanding, whereto having added this Proverb, he preſently gives this gloſs of it, This he ſaith becauſe the man ſhall juſtly periſh who hath the [luminous] way, the knowledge of the truth, yet doth not contein himſelf from the dark way. And ſo S. Cyril, upon thoſe words of S. John, This is condemnation, that light came into the world, &c. where he renders the cauſe of this their condemnation, from this verſe in the Proverbs, οὐκ ἀδίκως, &c. and gives the reaſon, οἱ γὰρ ἐξὸν φωτοφορίζεσθαι, φησὶ, τὸ ἐν σκότει κεῖσθαι προῃρῆσθε, πῶς οὐκ ἂν εἶεν εἰκότως αὐτοὶ καθ' ἑαυτῶν αἱμάτων δεινῶν ὀφειλαὶ, καὶ αὐτόμολοι πρὸς τὸ πεσεῖν, ἃ καὶ διαφύγειν ἔξεσι, οἵπερ ἦσαν ὀρθοὶ καὶ πραγμάτων ἐξεταταὶ, τὸ φαυλίζεσθαι μᾶλλον ἐλέσθαι τὸ μὴ τοιοῦτο φερεγγύους, καὶ καθ' ἁμαρτάνων δικτύρα ποιεῖσθαι μελετῶντες τὰ αἰσχίονα; for, ſaith he, they who, when they may be illuminated, had rather remain in darkneſs, how ſhall they not be deemed to determin miſchief to themſelves, and to be volunteers in ſuffering what they might avoid, if they had paſs'd right judgment of things, and prefer'd light before the contrary, and that which is better before the worſe: adding, that God hath left them free will, inclining this or that way, ῥᾳθυμίας οἰκείας, by by their own bendings, that ſo they might be capable of praiſe and puniſhment for good or ill doing, according to that of Iſa. 1. If ye be willing and obedient ye ſhall eat the good things of the earth, &c. by all which it is manifeſt, that he thus underſtood and appeal'd to this Proverb, as a teſtimony that light might be made uſe of to repell and avoid temptations, and that the juſtice of our condemnation proceeded from our neglecting to make uſe of it, and ſo, that the power given to men by God, together with light, or knowledge of duty, as the wing join'd to the eye, were ſufficient, if made uſe of, to ſecure men againſt ſnares, though they were never ſo cunningly baited; which as it is the very importance of this verſe, which I have pitcht on, ſo can it with no propriety agree to the words cited from the LXXII. unleſs they be read interrogatively, and being ſo read, they are moſt commodious to bear all the ſtreſs that he lays upon them, and to found that great piece of chriſtian divinity, that they to whom God hath revealed his will, are by the conjunction of his grace to his word, enabled to reſiſt temptations, have means afforded them to get out of ſnares, (the Ἔκβασις, or eſcaping, which St. Paul ſaith God will give together with the temptation) and that hereon vertue and vice, all that is rewardable and puniſhable, and the whole judgment to come, depends, God giving, or being ready (in anſwer to our conſtant prayers and endeavours) to give ſufficient ſtrength to perform, what he now under the Goſpel requires and accepts, and all vertue conſiſting in the diligent exerciſe of this power, (whereby alſo 'tis improved) and all mortal ſin in the neglect of it.

V. 20. Wiſedom] The Hebrew is literally wiſedoms in the plural, but with a verb following in the ſingular; And there is no ſignal notation in that, onely an Hebrew poetical elegance; when it is ſaid of Her, ſhe crieth, and uttereth her voice, &c. that gives wiſedom the notion of a perſon, that cries and makes proclamation, and that as publickly as is poſſible, (ſo the places aſſigned to her crying ſignifie, ſee Note g.) The onely difficulty to be explained will be, what is the full notion of wiſedom here, which will alſo have an influence on this whole book, the precepts whereof are all parts of this proclamation of wiſedom. And 1. 'tis certain, that as wiſedom is oppoſed to folly, and folly in ſacred ſtyle, is all impiety, ſo wiſedom is univerſal piety, or obedience of all ſorts due unto God, and ſo the precepts of univerſal righteouſneſs are the proclamations of wiſedom. 2. As there have been divers ways of revealing God's law and will unto man, ſo there are divers notions of wiſedom; the Jewiſh Interpreters herein have not gueſt amiſs, that wiſedom ſignifies ſometimes the Law of Moſes, together with the meſſages of the Prophets, and theſe preſuppoſing the eternal Law of Nature, whereon both theſe were ſuperſtructed, and all together make up the firſt grand œconomy, that of the Old Teſtament, given to all the Sons of Adam and Noah, but with more peculiarity, and explicitneſs, and addition of many poſitive laws to the Jews. 3. As God's will was moſt eminently and illuſtrioufly revealed to the whole world by Chriſt, his eternal Son, whoſe title it is to be the wiſedom of the Father, and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſedom, and knowledge, ſo Chriſt himſelf, together with his ſpirit, or divine grace, is moſt reaſonably reſolved to be conteined under this ſtyle of wiſedom, Sapientia quæ Chriſtus eſt, wiſedom which is Chriſt, ‖ ſaith Hilary of this place, and his preaching foretold by wiſedom's crying. And ſo many other paſſages in this book have their moſt eminent, and even moſt literal completion in him, and cannot well be aſſigned any lower notion. That all theſe ſignifications of wiſedom ſhould belong to the word in every place, where it is uſed, there is no neceſſity; It is much more reaſonable, that the content ſhould determin to which of them it is moſt ſpecially to be reſtrein'd in each ſingle place, allowing it ſometimes the more general comprehenſive notion; and ſo here it ſeems to have, that of the Law of God, by whomſoever revealed to men, but eſpecially by Chriſt.

g בַּחוּץ

Without] The ſeveral places that here are named, wherein wiſedom cries and utters her voice, are conceived ordinarily to denote the ſeveral ſorts of men, to whom God's law is revealed; the vulgar, noted by the ſtreets, the magiſtrates by the gates of the city, (to which the LXXII. are favourable, reading ἐν πύλαις δυναστῶν, in the gates of the magiſtrates) who ſate and judged in the gates; and the rich citizens by the city and chief places of concourſe; But the more ſimple plain meaning ſeems to be the moſt natural, that there is an enumeration of all the publick places where, or from whence proclamations are made, the highways, the ſtreets, the tops of houſes, the gates where all go in and out, and particularly the Metropolis, or chief City, Jeruſalem, from whence all laws that are proclaimed, are diſperſed to the leſſer cities and regions. Thus בַּחוּץ will be no more than without doors, foris, ſaith the Latin, as that is oppoſed to ſecretly, or perhaps in the high-ways, where paſſengers go, ἐν ἐξόδοις, ſay the LXXII. in the goings out, or ways, of which * ſaith St. Hilary, Quod nos in exitibus dicimus, Græcitas ex Hebræo, ἐν ἐξόδοις, tranſtulit, making this the literal rendring of the Hebrew, and defining the exitus to be properly ubi ex multis anguſtiis viis in unam coitur, where from many narrow ways they meet into one; From whence Salvian hath in exitu † (ad Eccl. Cath. l. IV.) and applies it to old age, or going out of the world; Then בָּרְחֹבוֹת, in the broad places, or ſtreets or market-places, Urbium vias, ‖ ſaith Hilary, the ways or ſtreets of cities, where proclamations are frequently made; Then בְּרֹאשׁ הֲמוֹנוֹת, in the head of tumults, or meetings or concourſe, which the ancients interpret to be the tops of houſes, which were wont to be places of walking, and ſo of meeting, ἐπ' ἀκρων τειχίων, ſay the LXXII. on the top of the walls, as walls ſignifie caſtles or houſes, and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack, בְּרִישׁ בִּירְתָא, from the tops of caſtles or houſes, (ſo בִּירָא with them ſignifies an houſe or caſtle) thoſe being the places of advantage, from whence proclamations were made, and ſo Luk. 12. 3. proclaiming on the houſe top, is oppoſed to that which is whiſpered in the ear; and ſo when James the juſt was kill'd, it was as he was preaching on the houſe top, ſaith Euſebius: And ſo the other two expreſſions, in the openings of the gates, in the cities, are evidently to the ſame purpoſe, to denote no more, but the publick revelation, and promulgation of theſe laws of wiſedom; which (though in ſome degree before) was moſt eminently fulfilled by Chriſt.

h וַתִּפְרְעוּ

V. 25. Set at nought] The Hebrew וַתִּפְרְעוּ, from פָּרַע, ocioſus, or vacuus fuit, is moſt fully rendred by fruſtrating, or voiding, or making unprofitable; ſo the LXXII. reade ἀκύρους ἐποιεῖτε τὰς βουλάς, made fruſtrate my counſels; agreeable to which is that of our Saviour, Luk. 7. 30. where he ſaith of the Phariſees, that ἠθέτησαν τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ θεοῦ, they fruſtrated the counſel of God toward them. The Chaldee Copies reade וְשַׁנְיִתוּן, and have changed] but it ſhould without queſtion be וְשַׁטְיִתוּן, and neglected, or deſpiſed, for ſo ſo the Syriack, which in this book keeps cloſe to the Chaldee, reade ... What is here ſaid of this word belongs to the uſe of it again, ch. 8. 33.

i בְּשׁוֹאָה V. 27. Deſolation] The Hebrew שׁוֹאָה, ſignifies being waſted, deſolated, but primarily tumultuated or ſo; and ſo here it will beſt ſitly rendred בְּשׁוֹאָה as a tempeſt, (for ſo it will beſt agree with the whirlwind that follows) when on a ſudden a great noiſe and tumult is made, and ſo men are put into a great fright of ſome ſudden approaching danger, though not knowing what it is, they are leſs able to prepare for the averting it. The Chaldee reade בְּשַׁלְיָא, as a tempeſt, or בְּשַׁלְיָא, in, or with a tempeſt, and ſo the Syriack ... with a tempeſt. The LXXII. render this part of the period paraphraſtically, but exactly to this ſenſe, ... and when a tumult comes ſuddenly upon you; and the Latin, cum irruerit repentina calamitas, when a ſudden calamity breaks in, interpreting פַּחַד, fear, by calamity, as v. 26. quod timebatis, what ye feared, where the LXXII. render ἀπώλειαν, deſtruction, which is the cauſe of fear, (and ſo fear is frequently taken for the thing feared, ſee Annot. on Luk. 1. q.) and בְּשׁוֹאָה, by ſudden or tumultuous. And this ſuggeſts an unanſwerable argument, why it ſhould not be rendred deſolation, becauſe that would be tautological, idem per idem, the fear annexed ſignifying the object of fear, deſolation, or deſtruction. And juſt thus is the word uſed, ch. 3. 25. where we render deſolation of the wicked, but in the notion of tumult, beſt agreeing with the ſudden fear, or danger precedent, the LXXII. therefore render it ἐπιφορὰς ἀσεβῶν, the violences of the wicked.

k יְשַׁחֲרֻנְנִי V. 28. Seek me early] It is true that שַׁחַר ſignifies the morning, and with relation to that, the Syriack and the vulgar Latin, and our Engliſh have rendred the word ..., they ſhall come betimes, ſay the Syriack, mane conſurgent, ſhall riſe in the morning, the Latin, and ſeek early, in our Engliſh; But it is as vulgarly known, and granted that the verb שָׁחַר, from whence that comes, ſignifies ſimply to ſeek, and that from thence the noun comes to ſignifie the morning, becauſe that is the time of ſeeking, what in the night had been loſt, or could not be found. And then it is here to be conſidered, that the great guilt of thoſe, which are here ſo ſeverely puniſhed, was, that they had not ſought God in time, or early, and now onely, when their deſtruction ſeiſed them, call'd and importuned him. Which makes it unreaſonable to render it [ſeek him early] when 'tis ſo viſible, that it was too late, that they ſought him, and ſeeking and calling (we know) are words of the ſame importance, to note earneſt, or diligent, or importunate prayer, and ſo are calling, and ſeeking here. The LXXII. therefore renders it ſimply ζητήσουσιν κακοὶ, the wicked ſhall ſeek, and the Chaldee נְקָרְיָן, ſhall cry, and that they may doe, when 'tis too late, and not obtein, many ſhall ſeek to enter, and ſhall not be able, many ſhall knock, and call, when the door is ſhut, and be rejected, which they ſhould not, if they had been carefull to doe it more early. By this the ſame word, ch. 8. 17. muſt be ruled, and ſo beſt rendred, thoſe that ſeek me ſhall find me, proportionably to our Saviour's promiſe, ask and ye ſhall have, ſeek and ye ſhall find, and ſo the LXXII. reade there οἱ δὲ ἐμὲ ζητοῦντες εὑρήσουσι, they that ſeek me ſhall find, and ſo the Syriack ... thoſe that ſeek.

In this chapter beſide thoſe that have been noted, there are theſe ſignal variations of the LXXII. from the Hebrew. V. 11. for נִצְפְּנָה לְדָם נָקִי רָשִׁים, let us lie in wait for the innocent without cauſe, they reade ἀνομίαν δὲ εἰς ψυχὴν δικαίου ἀδίκως, let us unjuſtly lade the righteous man on, or in the earth, taking the ל for redundant, as oft it is, and then taking נִצְפְּנָה in the original notion of צָפַן for hiding, they paraphraſe and expound it by hiding in the earth, or in the notion of ἐν as oft it is uſed.

V. 12. Inſtead of וְתַמִּים כְּיוֹרְדֵי בוֹר, and whole, as they that go down into the pit, they reade, ... and let us take away their memory from the earth, merely as a paraphraſe of the other.

V. 14. For בִּיס אֶחָד יִהְיֶה לְכֻלָּנוּ, one purſe ſhall be to us all, they reade ... let us all have a common purſe, and let there be one ſachel to us, reading יִהְיֶה in the imperative ſenſe, as it is frequent, and adding the reſt by way of explication.

V. 18. For וְהֵם לְדָמָם יֶאֱרֹבוּ יִצְפְּנוּ לְנַפְשֹׁתָם, and they ſhall lay wait for their blood, they ſhall lurk privily for their lives, they reade Αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἱ φόνου μετέχοντες, ἐπισωρεύοντες ἑαυτοῖς κακὰ, ἃ δὲ κατεργάζονται ἀνδρῶν ἀδικίαν κακὰ, for they that partake of murther, treaſure up evil things to themſelves, but the overſion of wicked men is, or ſhall be evil. Merely by way of paraphraſe.

V. 19. For בֹּצֵעַ בָּצַע, deſiring again, they reade συναλλάσσουσι τὰ ἄνομα, they commit unlawfull things, expreſſing covetouſneſs by that effect of it, which is ſet down before v. 11. and for אֶת נֶפֶשׁ בְּעָלָיו יִקָּח, ſhall take or catch the ſoul of the owners thereof, they reade τῇ γὰρ ἀσεβείᾳ τῶν ἑαυτῶν ψυχῶν ἀφαιροῦνται, by wickedneſs they deſtroy their own ſoul, a clear paraphraſe.

V. 20. For חָכְמוֹת תָּרֹנָּה, crieth, they reade σωφροσύνη, is celebrated, but perhaps took it not in a paſſive ſenſe, and then 'tis literal enough, wiſedom ſingeth. For תִּתֵּן קוֹלָהּ, gives or lifts up her voice, they reade παῤῥησίαν ἄγει, uſeth freedom of ſpeech, or boldneſs, which is no unfit paraphraſe.

V. 21. For בְּפִתְחֵי שְׁעָרִים, in the doors of the gates they reade ἐπὶ πλατείαις δυναστῶν παρεδρεύει, ſits by, in the gates of the Noblemen, plainly taking שַׁעַר for the place of Judgment, Deut. 25. 7. For אִמְרֶיהָ תַאמֵר, uttereth her words, by way of paraphraſe they reade παῤῥησίαν λέγει, ſaith confidently.

V. 22. For how long, &c. they reade ἕως ἂν χείρων ἀκακοι ἔχωσι τὸ δικαιοσύνης, ὡς αἰσχυνθήσονται, οἵδε ἀφρονες τὸ ὕβρεως ὄντες ἐπιθυμητὰ ἀσεβεῖς γενόμενοι ἐμίσησαν ἀΐδιον, As long as the innocent adhere or keep cloſe to righteouſneſs, they ſhall not be aſhamed, but fooliſh men being deſirous of contumely, becoming impious, have hated ſenſe or underſtanding. Here 'tis plain they tranſlate עַד מָתַי, how long, without an interrogation, and then it is ἕως χείρων, as long as, Then they take פְּתָיִם in a good ſenſe, not for fooliſh, and ſo ſimple, but ἀκακοι, innocent: ſo they doe, v. 4. and ch. 8. 5. and ch. 14. 15. and chap. 21. 11. Next they ſeem to have read תָּאֹהֲבוּ for תְּאַוְּתוּ, and ſo render it ἔχωσι, in the Helleniſtick notion of that word, for being united to, adhering, which making an imperfect period, they ſupply the ſeeming Ellipſis, by underſtanding לֹא תֵבֹשׁוּ, they ſhall not be aſhamed; And then the following words proceed currently enough: Then in the end of the verſe where תָּשׁוּבוּ לְתוֹכַחְתִּי is conſtrued, καὶ ὑπεδύσαντο ἐλέγχοις, and they became liable to reproofs, they ſeem to have taken ת for י, and ſo reade וְישׁוּבוּ לְהֵיטִיחוֹת without the ſuffix, which gives their ſenſe, and ſhall return to, i. e. ſuffer rebukes. In the ſame verſe for רוּחִי, my ſpirit, they they reade ῥῆμά μου τοῦτο ῥῆσον, the ſpeech of my breath, in the notion of רוּחִי for breath, as that is the inſtrument of ſpeech.

V. 24. For לֹא אֲבִיתֶם, ye refuſed or would not, they reade ἠπειθήσατε, ye diſobeyed, as the Alexandrian copy, οὐ προσηκούσατε, ye heeded not, fully to the ſenſe.

After v. 27. the LXXII. add ἡ ὅταν ἔρχηται ὑμῖν ὄλεθρος, or when deſtruction comes to you, as a farther explication.

V. 32. For בִּי מְשׁוּבַת פְּתָיִם תַּהַרְגֵם, for the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, they reade Ἀνὴρ ὃν ἐὰν ἀδικήσῃ νηπίους, φονευθήσονται, For, for that they have wronged the little ones, they ſhall be ſlain, merely upon the former miſtake, v. 22. that פְּתָיִם ſignifies innocent ſimplicity; and thence taking מְשׁוּבַת in an active ſenſe, for ſubverting or wronging thoſe innocents.

For שַׁלְוַת, proſperity, or tranquility, they reade ἐξετασμὸς, examination. The word שָׁלֵוָה ſignifies to be in peace, and quiet, and beſide the uſe of that, for proſperity, it is ſometimes taken for that ſtilneſs or peaceableneſs, which hath treachery under it; as when Joab, 2 Sam. 3. 27. took Abner aſide to ſpeak with him quietly, or peaceably, it ſignifies inſidiouſly, or treacherouſly, and the LXXII. there renders it ἐν δόλῳ, in treachery: So Dan. 8. 25. בְּשַׁלְוָה is by them rendred ἐν δόλῳ, by deceit. In this ſenſe they ſeem to have taken it here, in conſequence to the former interpretation of ſubverting the ſimple or innocent, (to which the 11th verſe might lead them) and then I ſuppoſe they uſed ἐξετασμὸς in the notion of ἐνέδρα, treachery, becauſe examinations of others are eſpecially deſigned to that end, to entrap them whom they examine.

CHAP. II.

1. MY Son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2. So that thou incline thine ear unto wiſedom, and apply thy heart to underſtanding, a

3. Yea a if thou crieſt after knowledge, and lifteſt up thy voice for underſtanding,

4. If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her, as for hid treaſures,

5. Then ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5. The advantages of piety being ſo conſiderable, what ſhould avert any man from the vigorous purſuit of it? Sure, not that which perhaps is, (becauſe nothing elſe can be) pretended, the difficulties of attaining it. For whether it be in relation to our underſtanding the rules of it, or to our practice of them, the difficulties are not ſuch, but that we may, by God's help, which he is not backward to afford, be confident to overcome them. The whole matter may be referr'd to two heads, the ſame that were forementioned, ch. 1. 7. firſt the fear of the Lord, as that ſignifies a pious, and humble, tender fear of diſpleaſing him, and ſecondly, the knowledge of God, as that alſo includes an uniform practice, anſwerable to that knowledge; and toward each of theſe God fails not to contribute his part, to the firſt by his preventing, to the ſecond by his illuminating, and exciting, and aſſiſting grace: All that is demanded of us, is but to receive theſe, and faithfully to make uſe of them, to the purpoſes to which they are afforded. And our duty in this behalf is made up of four branches, 1. an humble pliableneſs to receive inſtruction when 'tis offered, together with a care to lay up what is thus received, for the direction of our lives; 2. a bending our ſtudies that way, taking our ſelves off from the groſſer cogitations of the world, and fleſh, and applying our ſelves to the great concernments of our ſouls: 3. a conſtant earneſt importunate petitioning of God, the fountain of all grace, for thoſe illuminations and aſſiſtances, which our wants ſuggeſt, and our condition makes neceſſary for us: 4. an ardent affection and deſire, and a vehement purſuit, animated therewith, ſuch as is ordinarily found in men toward the gains and advantages of the world, when they will not be gotten otherwiſe; and ought in all reaſon to be much more vigorouſly imployed in the gaining of this divine treaſure. Theſe he that wants, hath none to accuſe but his own ſloth, and great injuſtice, (God being not wanting to him, in his readineſs to contribute ſufficiently toward the acquiring of them.) And he that hath them, need never doubt, but he ſhall effectually attein what he ſo earneſtly and ſincerely purſues.

6. For the Lord giveth wiſedom, out of his mouth cometh knowledge and underſtanding.

6. For certainly God, to whom his petition is addreſt, is abundantly able to furniſh him. He is the unexhauſted fountain of grace, revealing his will, the rule of piety, and aſſiſting to the performance of it.

7. He layeth b up * ſound wiſedom for the righteous, he is a buckler to them that walk † uprightly.

7. And to thoſe that ſincerely make uſe of his preventing grace, receiving what he gives, and negotiating with it, he will give that abundance of aſſiſting grace, that ſhall ſufficiently enable them to walk acceptably before him; This is laid up for them, as riches in an inexhauſtible treaſure, and ſhall never fail to be ſeaſonably diſpenced to them, as they have need of it; God having promiſed to be the protectour of thoſe that keep cloſe, and approve their obedience to him; and the moſt eminent part of that protection is to ſtand by them, and aid and ſupport them in all their temptations.

* ſubſtance for the upright, or ſincere.
† perfectly, חֹם בְּלֹא מוּם, without ſpot, Chald.

8. ‖ He keepeth the paths of judgment, and * preſerveth the way of his ſaints.

8. To keep a ſtrong and watchfull guard over all thoſe ways that he hath authorized men to walk in (ſuch are the practices of all Chriſtian vertues, exact juſtice, and charity, and mercy, and piety towards God) and conſequently to ſecure them, as long as they ſhall continue ſtedfaſt, to thoſe ways, and not wander out of them into blind paths of their own; And as he hath promiſed, ſo he is ſure to perform; Thoſe that adhere to him he will never fail to preſerve in ſafety.

‖ to keep, לִנְצֹר, φυλάξαι, LXXII.
* he ſhall preſerve, יִשְׁמֹר.

9. This then is the ſure courſe (viz. diligence, prayer, &c.) to arrive to that experimental knowledge of all vertue, whether that of juſtice and charity, in private life, or uprightneſs in publick adminiſtrations (ſee v. 3. and Note a) and to diſcern the agreeableneſs of exact walking (and of all vertuous practice) to the eternal laws of reaſon and Religion, that are planted in man's heart by God, and to become able to ſteer thy whole life by thoſe excellent rules of all ſorts, and never tranſgreſs any of them.

9. Then ſhalt thou underſtand righteouſneſs, and judgment, and ς † equity, yea every good path.

† the rectitudes of every, כָּל, Chald. כְּחֵדָא, Syr.

10, 11. And when by theſe cloſer and more intimate embraces, by the conſtant practice of vertue, and experience of the ſweetneſs of it, (which at a diſtance is never diſcerned, wicked men knowing not what belongs to it) thou comeſt to eſteem it as it really is, the moſt deſirable, valuable, and even ſenſual pleaſing courſe, (eſpecially if compared with the unſatisfying empty joys, or rather vexations and burthens of the fleſh and world) this very apprehenſion of it, if there were nothing elſe, will prove a conſideration of great efficacy, a competent armature againſt all temptations, whenſoever any the moſt ſpecious, promiſing, ſenſual, or ſecular bait ſhall invite and ſolicit thee out of thy road of obedience, and adherence to the commands of God, thine own judgment will aſſure thee that it bids thee to thy loſs, that by catching after that phaſme or ſhadow of falſe pleaſure, thou ſhalt deprive thy ſelf of the moſt real, ſolid, and durable joys which are all made up in the conſtant exerciſes of all moral and Chriſtian duties, humility, meekneſs, mercifulneſs, peaceableneſs, contentedneſs, temperance, purity, juſtice, &c. and are not to be found in the confines of the contrary vices, which beſide the wounds and gratings of an accuſing conſcience, bring all manner of uneaſineſs and diſſatisfactions along with them, nay even pains and torments after them. And this, one would think, ſhould be ſufficient to uphold and continue us unchanged in the ways of vertue, to fortifie us againſt all ſuch treacherous competitours, as come on purpoſe to rob, and waſte, and undoe, when they moſt pretend and undertake to gratifie and oblige us,

10. When wiſedom entreth into thy heart, and knowledge is γ pleaſant unto thy ſoul;

11. Diſcretion ſhall ‖ preſerve thee, underſtanding ſhall keep thee.

‖ keep a guard over thee, תִּשְׁמָר עָלֶיךָ

12. To ſecure us from the ſnares that tempters are ready to lay for us, ch. 1. 10. and keep us from imitating or aſſociating with them in their unlawfull deſtructive practices, deſigned to ſhed others blood, but generally redounding to their own miſchief, bringing that on themſelves which they projected againſt others, ch. 1. 18, 19.

12. To deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that ſpeaketh * ∫ froward things.

* ſubverſions (ſee Deut. 29. 23.) or perverſneſſes, v. 14. חִרְפֻּכוֹת

13. Conſidering what a † ſtrange irrational choice it muſt needs be to forſake what is ſo infinitely valuable and advantagious, in exchange for that which is ſo deteſtable and deſtructive, even the ſame that it would be to leave a direct lightſome way, that conducts to all bliſs, for a melancholy gloomy crooked path, that leads to eternal miſery.

13. η † Who leave the paths of uprightneſs to walk in the ways of darkneſs.

† The LXXII. here add the interjection, Ὦ οἱ ἡγεμονεύοντες, &c. O ye that leave, by way of exclamation or expoſtulation.

14. Can there be any thing ſo diſtant from right judgment, ſo contrary to all even humane meaſures, as to delight and take joy in doing things that are moſt deteſtable, without any intuition of gain or advantage by them, to place a felicity in affronting God and nature, and going on obſtinately and imperſwaſibly in ſuch abhorred fruitleſs courſes, which, beſide the pleaſure of oppoſing all that is good, (which none but devils, one would think, ſhould have taſte of, or appetite to) have nothing elſe to recommend them to any man?

14. Who rejoyce to doe evil, and delight in the frowardneſs of the wicked.

15. Were they not as crooked and diſtorted as their ways are, were not their hearts ſet wholly on oppoſing and deſpiſing of all that is good, and perverſly bent never to hearken to any ſober counſels, it were impoſſible they ſhould thus like and love their wandrings and prevarications, ſuch chargeable gainleſs variations from their duty.

15. Whoſe ways are crooked, and they ‖ ς froward in their paths.

‖ ſcornfull, obſtinate, perverſe, נִלְוִים

16. The very ſame method will fortifie thee againſt all other the moſt enticing enſnaring ſins, particularly that of unlawfull embraces; The vertue either of virginal or conjugal chaſtity is certainly ſo much more pleaſant and deſirable, than the liberties of various luſt, be it recommended to thy phancy by never ſo many flattering and falſe colours, that thy own judgment and diſcretion, v. 11. is ſufficient to arm thee againſt any ſuch, be they never ſo inſinuating, propoſals.

16. To deliver thee ζ from the ſtrange woman, even from the ſtranger which * flattereth with her words.

* ſmootheth her חֲלִיקָה

17. Were there nothing but the breach of the conjugal faith and perjurious falſeneſs that ſuch commiſſions are guilty of, this were enough to avert any man from this ſin with another man's wife; The adultereſs is a moſt ſcandalous diſloyal perſon, breaks through the greateſt obligations both of duty and kindneſs, juſtice and gratitude to her lawfull and tender husband, and having entred into mutual ſacramental bands, a moſt ſtrict covenant to him, and vow to God of continuing her love and faith to him conſtant and undefiled, ſhe moſt traiterouſly violateth all theſe obligations, and thou that joyneſt with her in the ſin, art, beſide thine own, guilty of all her falſeneſſes.

17. Which forſaketh υ the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God.

18. But beſide the horribleneſs of the ſin, the puniſhments which it muſt expect to meet with, may moſt reaſonably deter any man from it; All the plagues and miſeries of this world, and rottenneſs and wretched diſeaſes and death, are the ordinary attendants of it; Whilſt men are in purſuit of this ſin it ſpeaks them fair, v. 16. promiſes them pleaſure at a diſtance, but they that are thus enſnared find an abyſs of infelicities inſeparably annext to it.

18. For her houſe enclineth unto death, and her paths θ unto the dead.

19. And beyond all, one curſe attends this ſin, that it is a kind of hell to them that are once engaged in it; As to him that is once in thoſe chains of darkneſs, there is no poſſibility of returning to a capacity of any tolerable, much leſs happy life; ſo thoſe that are any thing deeply immerſt in this ſin of adultery ſeldom ever get out of it again; Experience ſhews of ſuch, how unſucceſsfull all calls of God (the moſt powerfull methods of his grace and providence) are, to diſintangle them, or to recover them to a life of ſobriety and piety.

19. None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold of the paths ι of life.

20. And as this preſcribed method cannot doubt to be ſucceſsfull in fortifying thee againſt the temptations forementioned, ſo it will be abundantly ſufficient to ſecure thy perſeverance in all piety, by conſidering how much a more † eaſie, nay deleſtable joyous courſe it is, v. 10. than that which either the world or fleſh can tempt thee to.

20. κ That thou mayeſt walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous.

φ Εἰ ἐπορεύθησαν τρίβους ἀγαθὰς, εὗρον ἂν τρίβους δικαιοσύνης λείας, If they would have walked in good paths, they would have found the ways of righteouſneſs ſmooth. LXXII.

21. For

21. For the upright ſhall dwell in the land, and the perfect ſhall remain in it.

21. Piety having the promiſes even of this life, a laſting poſſeſſion of comforts and felicities here, and a firm tenure in the providence of God, which hath the diſpoſing of health and life it ſelf, and will ſecure each of them to thoſe that approve their ſincerity to him in an unblamable courſe, as long as he ſhall ſee either of theſe to be really beſt for them.

22. But א the wicked ſhall be cut off from the earth, and the tranſgreſſours ſhall be rooted out of it.

22. Whereas exciſion and extirpation are the proper portion of wicked men, either by the hand of humane juſtice lighting upon them, or by the flying roll, the curſe from God, which inviſibly purſues them and their families, till they are utterly rooted out; (the temporary proſperity of ſome wicked men being no real exception to the truth of this Aphoriſm.)

Annotations on Chap. II.

V. 3. If thou crieſt] In this place the Chaldee hath an obſervable unexpected paraphraſe, וְאִמָּא, &c. and ſhalt cry mother to underſtanding: The propriety of the paraphraſe no otherwiſe founded in the text, than either that the Hebrew אִם, if] is ſo near אֵם, mother] or that crying, or calling לִתְבוּנָה, to underſtanding, ſhould refer to a child calling to, or after a mother, not asking any thing elſe but onely the anſwer or preſence of the mother. Parallel to this is the Apoſtle's phraſe of κράζειν ἄββα, calling father, a filial addreſs of adherence, and dependence on God, ſeeking his favour and preſence, onif it be but the kindneſs of a fatherly look towards them; and not onely calling, but crying, (with the ſame paſſion that Eſau did his father's bleſſing, when he lift up his voice and wept, and ſaid, Bleſs me, even me alſo, O my Father) which, as it is an expreſſion of fondneſs, and ſome impatience in the poor child, ſo it is a fit deſcription of that vehement deſire of grace or wiſedom here, which is a ſpecial ingredient in piety.

a אִם תִּקְרָא

V. 7. Sound wiſedom] The Hebrew תּוּשִׁיָּה, from which the Greek ὐσία is but lightly changed, being derived from יָשָׁה, eſt, ſignifies eſſence; ſubſiſtence, any thing that really is, of what ſort ſoever, as the context ſhall determin it. So Prov. 18. 1. בְּכָל תּוּשִׁיָּה, in every thing, the LXXII. reade ἐν πάσῃ καιρῷ, in every occaſion. So Job 5. 12. they render אֱמוּנָה, true, He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hands perform not, תּוּשִׁיָּה, that which is true, or that which they deſigned to themſelves, he taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, i. e. all their enterpriſes miſcarry, and are unſucceſsfull, and bring miſchief upon themſelves. Elſewhere they render it βοήθεια, help, as Job 6. 13. and ſo it agrees with עֶזְרָתִי, my help, in the former part of that verſe. So Job 12. 13. with him is ſtrength, וְתוּשִׁיָּה, they reade κράτος καὶ ἰσχύς, ſtrength and power; Again Job 30. 22. they render it σωτηρία, deliverance; and ſo here, and Prov. 8. 14. ἀσφάλεια, ſafety, (which bears the beſt proportion to גְּבוּרָה, fortitude, which there is ſet anſwerable to it) but Prov. 3. 21. βουλὴν, counſel, to agree with diſcretion, that is joyned with it. In moſt of theſe places, though not here, the Chaldee render it by חָכְמְתָא, wiſedom, or ſomewhat the like, and from them our Engliſh ſeem to take their rendring, (either becauſe they placed ſolidity, and ſubſiſtence, or perſiſtence, onely in that; or becauſe by wiſedom they meant the aſſiſtences of God's ſpirit, which is help and ſtrength, and deliverance, and ſafety, and counſel to all that truly depend on that.) So in that difficult place, Mic. 6. 9. The voice of the Lord crieth unto the city, וְתוּשִׁיָּה יִרְאֶה שְׁמֶךָ, and eſſence or ſubſiſtence ſhall ſee thy name, the Chaldee reade וּמַלְפַּיָּא and the Doctours ſhall fear thy name, for which the vulgar have ſalus erit, &c. deliverance ſhall be to thoſe that fear thy name. By all this I ſuppoſe it appears, that this word is of a great latitude; and though as ſignifying eſſence and ſubſiſtence, it may proverbially denote true wiſedom, which is moſt ſuch, as moſt partaking of the divine being, and eternity, yet by the circumſtances of the context, it will oft be reaſonable to aſſign it other interpretations, and ſo here it will beſt accord with the buckler, that follows, and with analogy to the other forecited places, that it ſhould be thought to ſignifie help, or ſafety, or aſſiſtence, or deliverance, as a proof of his giving wiſedom and grace in the former verſe. The learned Caſtalio renders the place, probis profectum reſervat, he reſerves proficiency to the honeſt, according to that of our Saviour, reſembling the honeſt heart to the good ground, where the ſeed thrives and brings forth moſt plentifully in the harveſt; and this well agrees to one notion of the word which Kircher gives it, for ſucceſſus, thriving, or good ſucceſs: and thus it is very conſonant to the τὸ λογικὸν, or rational importance of the place, where from the beginning of the Chapter he was ſhewing that upon the uſe of thoſe means, which every honeſt heart will apply it ſelf to, diligence, and prayer, &c. true piety will certainly be had; of which this is then a perfect proof, for God will proſper, or give good ſucceſs, and ſo growth and proficiency in piety, to all that are thus qualified, and will be a buckler to them to defend them from all aſſaults of danger. The Syriack render it ܣܒܪ, which from שָׂבַר or סָבַר, that in Piel ſignifies both ſuſtentavit and ſperavit, may note either help or hope; to the latter of which agrees the Helleniſtical notion of ὑπόστασις, Heb. 11. 1. and elſewhere, for confident expectation which is exactly anſwerable to the origination of תּוּשִׁיָּה, from יָשָׁה, to ſubſiſt, or be; When all is conſidered, the literal rendring may be the beſt, He layeth up ſubſtance for the righteous, (the Interlinear eſſentiam) as that is all one with true riches, by which that abundance of grace is expreſt by Chriſt, which he hath promiſed to give to thoſe that make uſe of the talent of preventing grace, which he gives them to negotiate with; and this conteins in it all the other forementioned notions of help, and ſafety, and confidence, and preſervation, and true wiſedom, as that ſignifies the grace of Chriſt. What hath been ſaid of this word, is alſo to be applied to the Verb יָשׁ from whence it is derived, which is, chap. 8. 21. uſed as a Noun, לְהַנְחִיל יֵשׁ, to cauſe to inherit ſubſtance, ὕπαρξιν, being, ſubſiſtence, ſay the LXXII. שְׁנֵיָּא סַגְיָאתָא, many years, ſay the Chaldee, but the Syriack ܣܒܪ, hope.

b תּוּשִׁיָּה

In this Chapter there are theſe variations of the LXXII. from the Hebrew.

After verſe ſecond there is this addition, παρεβαλεῖς δὲ αὐτὰ εἰς νουθέτησιν τοῦ υἱοῦ σου, but thou ſhalt apply it for inſtruction to thy ſon, i.e. apply thy heart to underſtanding for that end, to inſtruct thy ſon, merely as a gloſs or explication of the phraſe precedent. a ε V. 9. Κατορθώσεις by the punctation ſeems to be taken for a verb, and ſo is rendred diriges, thou ſhalt direct, whereas taking it for a noun in the accuſative caſe plural, it is exactly anſwerable to the Hebrew מֵישָׁרִים, rectitudes, and then follows by appoſition πάντας ἀξονας ἀγαθὰς, all good paths.

γ V. 10. For יִנְעַם, ſhall be pleaſant, they reade καλὴ ἔσῃ ἄξον, ſhall ſeem good; merely a paraphraſe, the pleaſantneſs of wiſedom being the apparent goodneſs to the ſoul.

δ V. 12. For תַּהְפֻּכוֹת, perverſeneſſes they reade μηδὲν πιστὸν, nothing faithfull, which is no unfit paraphraſe.

ε V. 13. For הָעֹזְבִים, who leave, they reade Ὦ οἱ ἐγκαταλίποντες, O ye that leave] beginning a new period, and they ſeem to be moved thereto by the change of the number, the man that ſpeaketh, v. 12. and here who leave] in the plural; But ſuch changes of the number are ordinary in theſe Books.

ϛ V. 15. For נִלְוִזִים בְּמַעְגְּלוֹתָם, perverſe in their paths] they reade καμπύλαι αἱ τροχιαὶ αὐτῶν, their paths are crooked; An eaſie figure, by crookedneſs of paths, to ſignifie the ſins of thoſe that walk in them.

ζ V. 16. For מֵאִשָּׁה זָרָה, from a ſtrange woman, they reade ἀπὸ ὁδοῦ εὐθείας, from a ſtraight way; It is not eaſie to conjecture by what miſtake, unleſs for מֵאִשָּׁה זָרָה, they reade מֵאִשְׁרֵי זָהָר. Having made this change, they proceed to alter the whole ſenſe, for סַנְּבִרְיָה אִמְרֶיהָ הַחֲלִיקָה, from a ſtrange woman which hath ſweetned her words, they reade ᾗ ἀλλότριον τῆς δικαίας γνώμης, alien from a right mind, reading perhaps וְנָכְרָ מְאִמְרֶה הַחְלָקָה. All this by connecting the beginning of this verſe with the end of the former, (whereas it begins a new ſenſe, in coherence with v. 12, &c.) for ſo after the mention of crooked paths, v. 15. they render לְהַצִּילְךָ, to deliver thee, by τὸ μακρὰν σὲ ποιῆσαι, to remove thee far, which being done, they thought it neceſſary to render that a ſtraight way, from whence the crooked paths removed them. This being done, the Tranſcribers found it neceſſary to add at the end of this verſe, ἵνα μὴ σε καταλάβῃ κακὴ βουλὴ, ſon let not evil counſel apprehend thee] to ſupport what follows in the Hebrew of the ſtrange woman. (But theſe words are not found in many Greek Copies, and certainly were not in that from whence the Arabick tranſlated.) In all this though the original ſenſe of the ſtrange woman be loſt, yet another good ſenſe, which the words bear not, is ſubſtituted in the ſtead of it. Symmachus's rendring is literal, ἀπὸ γυναικὸς ἀλλοτρίας, ἀπὸ ξένης ἢ οἱ λόγοι ὀλισθηροὶ, from a ſtrange woman, from a ſtranger, whoſe words are ſmooth, or ſlippery, through which 'tis eaſie to fall.

η V. 17. For אַלּוּף, the guide, they reade διδασκαλίαν, doctrine, in conſequence to their former change, when for the ſtrange woman, they rendred evil counſel.

θ V. 18. For אֶל רְפָאִים, to the dead, they reade πλησίον τοῦ ᾅδου μετὰ τῶν γιγάντων, near hades with the gyants, (from the double notion of רְפָאִים, for the dead and for gyants,) which ſeems to be two interpretations put together, or if not, the ſame word twice rendred.

ι V. 19. For חַיִּים, of life, they reade εὐθείας, ſtraight (which is the ſenſe, though not the words, the ſtraight paths being the paths of life,) adding moreover, ἃ γὰρ καταλαμβάνονται ὑπὸ ἐτῶν ζωῆς, for they are not apprehended by the years of life] by way of paraphraſe, to ſhew the mutual dependence between ſtraight paths and long life.

κ V. 20. For לְמַעַן תֵּלֵךְ, that thou mayeſt walk, they reade εἰ γὰρ ἐπορεύθησαν, for if they had walked, and inſtead of תִּשְׁמֹר, keep, they reade εὕρωσιν, they had found, from the affinity betwixt finding and keeping.

λ V. 22. For רְשָׁעִים, the wicked, they reade ὁδοὶ ἀσεβῶν, the ways of the wicked, by way of paraphraſe, and in conſent with Pſal. 1. 6.

CHAP. III.

Paraphraſe.

1. There is nothing wherein I can expreſs a more paternal kindneſs to any man, than by my moſt earneſt advice, that he will be mindfull of all the commands of God, and heartily ſet to the uniform conſtant practice and performance of them; The knowing or remembring his duty, will be far from an advantage or privilege to him, unleſs thereto be added a conſcientious obſervance of it.

1. MY ſon, forget not my law, but let thine heart keep my commandments.

2. And to engage thee to this, I can give thee all aſſurance from God, that (beſide the endleſs advantages of another world) the promiſes of all the bleſſings of this life, ſhall be on this condition made good to thee; the prolonging of thy days here, and all manner of quiet, ſafety and proſperity accompanying it; not that no pious faithfull ſervant of God ſhall ever fall under any afflictions in this world, (for there are many ineſtimable benefits of thoſe changes ſometimes, for which God ſends them to thoſe he loves beſt) but becauſe in general obſervation, the moſt obedient pious perſons, by God's ſpecial bleſſing on them, and by the very temper of Chriſtian vertues, have a ſecurity of much greater wordly felicities (thoſe which are truly ſuch) than thoſe which make uſe of any unlawfull arts to gain, or encreaſe, or continue the riches or honours of this world.

2. For length of days, and long life, and peace ſhall they add to thee.

3, 4. For example, there is no ſurer way to get the love and kindneſs of all, to be approved of, and highly eſteemed both by God and man, than to keep cloſe to the conſtant continual practice of all works of juſtice and mercy, and never to ſtray from them; never to meditate or attempt, much leſs to act the leaſt injuſtice, to be guilty of the leaſt deceit toward any, but to go about doing good to all, even to ſinners and enemies, giving, and forgiving. This courſe never did, nor ſhall fail to gain a good reputation, and even veneration among men, and is alſo ſecured of the favour and rewards of God; And beſides, that in the enjoying of theſe two, the main of the felicity of this life conſiſts, they ſhall alſo be means of accumulating all other proſperities upon us; They whom all men love and revere, will be in leaſt danger of being hurt by them, but on the contrary ſhall receive all aids and aſſiſtance from them, and they that have the favour of God, have thereln a title to all auſpicious influences of his providence, which are the onely ſure way to proſperity, here, and to all eternity.

3. Let not mercy and truth forſake thee, bind them about thy neck, write them upon the table of thy heart.

4. * So ſhalt thou find favour, and [a] good underſtanding in the ſight of God and man.

a

* or And find favour, and provide good in—

5. Truſt

5. Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and [a] lean not to thine own understanding.

6. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall [b] direct thy paths.

5, 6. A second duty that I shall recommend to thee, on the same account, as a special ingredient in thy prosperities, is the reposing thy trust entirely and cordially on God, so as not to rely on thine own wisedom, contrivances, or artifices, to compass thy designs in this world, but to keep thy self to the ways and means which God affords thee, and approves of; and this beyond all worldly policies will secure thee of a most happy, and easie, and expedite passage through all the dangers of this life.

7. Be not wise in thine own eyes, fear the Lord, and depart from evil.

8. It shall be † health to thy navel, and ‖ [c] marrow to thy bones.

† medicine, רִפְאוּת

‖ moisting, suppling.

7, 8. A third quality of the same form is humility, as that contains a very lowly opinion and conceit of ones self, Rom. 12. 16. and withall a render awe and reverence to God, and fear of displeasing him, a readiness to obey him in all he shall require of us, a conscientious abstaining from all sin, a conquest over the temptations of the world, or flesh, an uniform obedience, in opposition to that pride, and contumacy, and despising of God, which the Psalmist notes in the wicked, Psal. 10. 4. And nothing can more contribute to thy prosperity bodily and ghostly, than this. Confident overweening persons run themselves into strange inconveniencies; but humility keeps men safe, makes them seek aid and help from others, and call constantly to God for that direction and assistance they stand in need of, and the rejecting and averting of all wicked proposals secures us from them, and neither the most sovereign medicines, nor the most plentifull provisions of all things conducible to the body, tending and cherishing it as the Gardner doth his ground with continual watering, can contribute more to the acquiring of health and strength and agility, and an athletick habit of body, than this one advantage of humility and conscientious exact walking contributes to all worldly good successes. As for ghostly health and strength, which come wholly from the grace and spirit of God, that is in especial manner promised to the humble and obedient, and withdrawn from the proud, or else repell'd by them.

9. Honour the Lord with thy [β] substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine encrease:

10. So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

9, 10. A fourth duty, that will tend extremely to the same end of advancing not onely thy eternal but even thy secular interests, is a carefull constant paying to God all that he hath, by any law required of thee, (and even by voluntary oblations exceeding that proportion which is strictly required) hereby acknowledging that all thou hast cometh to thee merely from his bounty, and is no way owing to thine own labour or subdety, but merely to his blessing. Of this sort are the tithes and first-fruits, and all other payments among the Jews, due to the Temple, and the Priests, and other Officers of the Temple, (and in proportion, all that hath ever been consecrated to God or his service, in the Christian Church.) And of this sort also is the second tithing, part whereof was spent at the feasts, part assigned to the refreshing of the poor, fatherless, &c.) (so was the second tithing every third year, and so the gleanings of their harvest, &c.) and being given to them is acceptable as given to God, and so is much to the honour of God, and an act of acknowledgment and thanksgiving to him (answerable to which is setting apart some constant considerable proportion out of our revenues, or gains, for a stock of charity to our poor Christian brethren:) And if this duty be carefully, and liberally, and chearfully performed, merely on design to bless and praise God, and to provide for those whom he hath appointed his proxies upon earth, to receive our works of piety and mercy, it shall be so far from lessening thy store, that it shall generally be a means of encreasing it exceedingly Nothing shall more tend to the bringing down a blessing upon all thy undertakings, and so to the enriching thee, than this, see Mal. 3. 10. Whereas they that withhold what is thus due, much more they that sacrilegiously invade what is by others consecrated unto God, or that oppress the poor, are to expect nothing but blasts and improsperities, and beggery. It being ordinary for great estates, and whole families to be utterly wasted by these means, which yet according to wordly measures might expect to be most enriched and raised thereby.

11. My Son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither be weary of his correction.

12. For whom the Lord loveth he correcteth even as a father the son, ‖ in whom he [d] delighteth.

‖ whom he accepteth.

11, 12. It is true that every of these Aphorisms premised must be understood with a limitation, or condition, leaving place for some mixtures of the cross, which all men, in this valley of tears, as the punishment of sin, must sometimes expect, and pious men have no exemption from them; their greatest temporal felicities come with some allay or dash of afflictions, and persecutions, Mar. 10. 40. When these come, then is the season of another sort of (Christian) vertues, patience, meekness, submission, not onely to God's will, which may not be resisted, but also to his wisedom, who can and doth choose for us that which is absolutely best and most wholesome, (though at the present dolorous and unwelcome) and from that consideration ariseth also matter of refreshment and chearfulness, so far at least, as that we be not discouraged in our course of piety, or any way tempted to slacken our zeal, or to discover the least wearines or despondency of mind on this occasion, (but rather to rejoyce and be exceeding glad, Matth. 5. 12.) And this thou wilt find no difficulty to doe, if thou but consider that as all afflictions come from God, so they are not acts of hatred in him, but preparatives to his favour and reconciliation, punishments indeed for sin, but such as God in mercy inflicts here, that he may not condemn with the world; the very same that the corrections of a Father to a Son, designed onely to his good, and are therefore generally most frequent to those Children, when they offend, whom the Parents love most tenderly; In them whatsoever is amiss (or any way improveable) the Parents excessive love makes them very desirous to amend it, and in Children correction is the most proper instrument of working that, and therefore they that are most loved are most chastened, and though they had offended, yet having corrected them, the Father receives them into favour again; and so it is with those whom God loves most tenderly.

13. Happy is the man that findeth wisedom, and the man that [γ] getteth understanding.

14. [δ] For the merchandise thereof is better than the merchandise of silver, and the * gain thereof than fine gold.

15. She is more precious than rubies, and [ε] all the things thou canst desire, are not to be compared to her.

* income, תְּבוּאָתָהּ

13,14,15. By these advantages of piety, in these so many premised instances, (to which many more might be added) it appears, how unvaluable a possession it is, and what a rich acquisition and treasure that grace (by which feeble corrupt nature may be heightened and enabled to live after these so excellent divine rules) even such, that all felicity in this world (to omit that infinitely more transcendent, the vision of God in another life) is inseparably annext to the constant persevering practice of those duties, which this onely true wisedom comprehends and prescribes; and therefore we may surely conclude that whatsoever labour or cost is laid out in the exercises thereof, will never be repented of; This voyage, though very short, and † easie, brings us home far richer merchandise, a [illegible] more plentifull encrease, by way of return, or harvest, than all the traffick to the Indies for silver or gold, when it p[illegible] most prosperous. The purest gold, the most valued radient gems, whatsoever is most desirable among men, is not [illegible] degree equal to the advantages which come in to us thereby, even in this life, the joys and comforts of a good conscience, in the works of justice, mercy, trusting, and owning, and keeping close to God, humility, victory over the world and flesh, works of piety to God and his Church, and our poor brethren, patience, constancy, chearfulness in afflictions, contentment in whatsoever state, &c. 'Tis certain all the sensual joys or gains that come in by ‖ sin can no way be compared with it.

17. Her ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace.

ζ 18. But beyond all this which concerns the felicities but of a ſhort and tranſitory mortal life, piety hath the aſſurance of immortality, the reward of infinite, everlaſting bliſs is made over to it, by the mercies of God in Chriſt: As the Tree of life in Paradiſe was there placed by God, that they that eat thereof ſhould never die, ſo this of an obedient gracious life, hath the crown of righteouſneſs confirmed and ſealed unto it, and ſo not onely the promiſes of this life, but of that which is to come; Thrice happy that man then, even every ſuch, that continues conſtant in that courſe.

19, 20. What hath hitherto been ſaid belongs to created wiſedom, that which by the grace of Chriſt, men are enabled to attain, but there is an uncreated eternal wiſedom, Chriſt the eternal word, and wiſedom of the Father, by whom the whole world, and all things conteined therein were in the beginning created, from whence it is that ſo deep tranſcendent various wiſedom is diſcernible in the fabrick thereof: And as the creation, ſo the ſupport and preſervation of them is wholly imputable to this divine wiſedom. By the natural courſe of things, the water firſt encompaſſed the earth, as the air now encompaſſeth the terreſtrial globe, but had it continued ſo, it could not have been inhabited by men and beaſts, &c. therefore God in his all-wiſe diſpoſal brake open hollow receſſes and receptacles in the earth, whither thoſe waters ſhould retire, Gen. 1. 9. and by that means dry land appeared, and the earth became fruitfull and habitable, and that water by certain ſubterranean paſſages was appointed to diſperſe it ſelf, and break out into ſweet and pleaſant ſprings, and partly by them, partly by rain, deſcending drop by drop ſoftly (and ſo as it may be ſuckt in by the earth) out of the clouds, all things below are watered, and refreſht, and grow fruitfull, and this moſt provident diſpoſition that the earth ſhould neither be drown'd with water, nor parched with drought, to which all the preſervation and fertility of things below are imputable, is an eminent work of this uncreated wiſedom, fit to be joined with that maſter-piece of wiſedom in the firſt Creation.

19. The Lord by wiſedom hath founded the earth, by underſtanding hath he † eſtabliſhed the heavens.

21, 22. There cannot then be a better exerciſe for thee than daily to reflect on ſuch ſubjects as theſe, to behold and admire the various ineffable wiſedom of God diſcernible in every part of the creation, and in his gracious providence continually watching over it: Such lectures and contemplations as theſe may teach thee ſolid durable wiſedom, (ſee Note on ch. 11. b.) and judgment in all thy ways, eſpecially that which conſiſts in the practice of all vertues, in which to walk is thine onely wiſedom, and that which will heap all felicities of life upon thee, and ſet thee out moſt gratefully in the eyes of men, and obtein for thee from God alſo a crown of immortality and glory.

I ſhall eſpecially recommend to thee (for the ſecuring the foregoing promiſes of God's ſafeguard to thee) that of charity and mercy to thoſe that ſtand in need of it, and the readineſs and chearfulneſs of performing this when thou art furniſht with ability for it; If thou haſt plenty, and another poor brother wants, it is but juſtice and reaſon that thou relieve him, the law of doing as we would be done to, requires it, and God hath ſo unequally diſperſed the riches of the world, that the rich ſhould account himſelf God's ſteward, to diſtribute to the ſupply of the poor man's wants. What therefore is by this tenure from heaven the indigent man's right, do not thou defraud him of, nor detein it any time from him, when his needs exact it. It is the part of a covetous-minded man, when he is at preſent very able to give, to delay or procraſtinate; Beware of this when thou art any way tempted to it, be as ready and chearfull to give preſently, as he can be to receive it from thee.

32. And the reaſon is clear; for as all proſperity, even of this world, is in the hand of God to diſpoſe of, ſo it is certain none have leſs pretence to his favour, the fountain of all good things, than theſe; Such tranſgreſſors and prevaricators, that violate all laws of God, and nature, and common humanity, are moſt deteſtable in the ſight of God; as he withdraws his grace from ſuch, ſo it is to be expected, that inſtead of bleſſing, he ſhall purſue and curſe them, blaſt all their former felicities. The juſt and upright, that will doe good to all, but injure none, the exact conſcientious dealers are the men to whom his favour and preſence, and ſo bleſſing, belongs, and none elſe have any right or pretence to it.

33. The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked, but he bleſſeth the habitation of the juſt.

33. Nay not onely the withdrawing of his auſpicious influences, but the heaping all maledictions and curſes upon whole families of the wicked, and all their poſterity, that continue in the ways, or make no reſtitution and ſatisfaction for the violences of their anceſtours, is with great reaſon to be expected from an holy and juſt Judge, all his bleſſings being, meanwhile, entailed on juſt and mercifull men, and their progeny.

34. For the rule is of eternal truth concerning all God's diſpenſations, both ſpiritual and temporal, which tend to the felicities of this or another life, God withholdeth them from all thoſe which preſumptuouſly contemn and violate his law, and ſetteth himſelf as an enemy profeſſly againſt them. Onely his humble, pliable, docible, obedient ſervants, have the promiſe of his continued favour, and all the gracious effects of that, and the continual ſupplies and encreaſe of all good that they can ſtand in need of, in anſwer to their prayers in all lowlineſs of heart addreſt unto God, they being thus qualified to receive and make uſe of it.

35. The wiſe ſhall inherit glory, but ‖ [1] ſhame ſhall be the promotion of fools.

ı

35. The concluſion then of theſe premiſes is, that good men ſhall meet with a ſure reward, though not as a ſtipend due to their works, yet as an inheritance by a mercifull Father made over to them, all comforts and advantages here, and eternal glory hereafter; but wicked irrational men, that deſpiſe all laws of piety and juſtice ſhall get nothing by all their artifices, oppreſſions, &c. but reproach and ignominy in this world, and eternal confuſion of face, rejection from the preſence of God in another world.

Annotations on Chap. III.

2 שֵׂכֶל

V. 4. Good underſtanding] The Hebrew שֵׂכֶל, from שָׂכַל, to underſtand, ſignifies prudence, or intelligence, but in that ſenſe ſeems not to fit this place, or with any propriety to be joyned with favour, which is the favour, or kindneſs of others, nor will it eaſily be reſolved, in this ſenſe, what ſhould be meant by finding good underſtanding whether with God or man, unleſs the underſtanding be taken in the paſſive ſenſe, for that whereby God or man conſiders, or eſteems, or underſtands him that finds it, which is a mere Angliciſm, and hath nothing of Hebrew propriety in it. To avoid this inconvenience it would not be unreaſonable to take notice of another notion of the Verb in Hiphil for being happy, or proſperous, or ſucceſsfull: So Iſa. 52. 13. Behold my ſervant, יַשְׂכִּיל, the Chaldee renders it יִצְלַח, ſhall be happy, and we in our Margent, ſhall proſper; So Deut. 29. 9. that תַּשְׂכִּילוּ we reade, ye may proſper, and ſo the Chaldee תִּצְלְחוּן, may be happy; ſo Joſh. 1. 7. the word is uſed in a place ſomewhat agreeable to this, where to obedience this proſperity is promiſed, ſee v. 8. And ſo Jer. 23. 5. the King ſhall reign וְהִשְׂכִּיל and be ſucceſsfull or proſper, as the Chaldee and we reade it. And this ſenſe would much better accord with the Noun in this place, than the former of good underſtanding, rendring שֵׂכֶל טוֹב, good ſucceſs, for then the promiſe of finding favour and good ſucceſs, both in the ſight of God and man, would ſignifie his obtaining all his deſires, or requeſts, that he makes to either, his being loved, and kindly treated by all, (and that a very fit reward for the juſt and mercifull man) and, under theſe two words, all manner of felicity; And ſo it would be of great affinity with that of Chriſt, Bleſſed are the mercifull, for they ſhall (indefinitely) obtain mercy. But after all this endeavour to clear the interpretation of theſe words, as they lie in our Copies, it is worth obſerving how the LXXII. have rendred them, by προνοοῦ καλὰ, provide fair, or good, or honeſt things, for the Noun שֵׂכֶל, reading the Verb שְׂכֵל, and ſo the other Greek Interpreters Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, appear to have done, who render it by the verb θεωρῆσαι, to conſider, or mark. From this reading of the LXXII. there is little reaſon to doubt, but the Apoſtle hath twice borrowed the phraſe, 2 Cor. 8. 21. προνοούμενοι καλὰ οὐ μόνον ἐνώπιον κυρίου, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐνώπιον ἀνθρώπων, providing good things not onely before God, but alſo before men, exactly anſwerable to the LXXII. here, προνοεῖς καλὰ ἐνώπιον κυρίου καὶ ἀνθρώπων; So likewiſe Rom. 12. 18. προνοούμενοι καλὰ ἐνώπιον πάντων ἀνθρώπων, providing good things before all men; in both places applying it to works of mercy, (as here it is) in giving and forgiving: This repeated uſe of the phraſe by the Apoſtle, in all probability taken from hence, makes it reaſonable to propoſe this as the truer reading, not וְשֵׂכֶל, the noun, but וְשְׂכֵל, the verb in the imperative; And thus indeed will it beſt agree with what goes before, for that is viſibly in the imperative mood, though we render it in the future thus, וְתִמְצָא חֵן, and find favour (and then it regularly follows) and provide good things before God and man, by providing good things meaning our enterpriſing and acting ſuch things as are eſteemed good and commendable in the ſight of God and man, (for this is but an explication of the finding favour) and ſuch, beyond all others, are works of juſtice and mercy, ἐυεργεῖν καὶ ἀληθεύειν, benefaction, and truth, of which the Heathen ſaid, that they were the two things common to men with God. Thus alſo it coheres with the former verſe in the vulgar Hebrew dialect, that being all along ſet in the imperative ſcheme, Let not, &c. bind them, write them, &c. and ſo alſo with the immediate conſequents בְּטַח, truſt thou. And having the addition of ſo great an authority as that of the Apoſtle's to patronize it, I ſhall adventure to prefer this reading and ſenſe before any other, wherein alſo 'tis clear that all the Greek Interpreters render it.

b יִישַׁר V. 6. Direct] יִישַׁר in Hiphil, from יָשַׁר, rectus or planus fuit, ſignifies to make ſtraight, or plain, (the Arabick uſe it for explaining a difficulty in an Authour) The word is frequently applied to paths, or ways, ὁδοὺς τροχιὰς, ſtraight paths, Prov. 4. 11. ὅδοι ὀρθαὶ, ſtraight ways, chap. 16. 25. thence is מִישׁוֹר, a plain, or campania, or field, rendred πεδίον, the plain, Joſh. 20. v. 8. and מִישׁוֹר, the plain country, Deut. 4. 43. 2 Chron. 26. 10. Jer. 21. 13. and 48. 8. Hence the verb in Hiphil is ſometimes rendred ὁμαλίζειν, to make plain, Iſa. 45. 2. and here, and chap. 11. 5. ὀρθοτομεῖν, to cut ſtraight, as chap. 11. 7. καλοποδεῖν ἀξονας, to ſtraighten paths. This the Apoſtle expreſſes by τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς ποιεῖν ποσὶν, Heb. 12. 13. to make ſtraight paths for the feet, i. e. removing all ſcandals, or impediments out of them, that the lame or weak be not turned out of the way, which being there applied to the ſchiſm and hereſie of the Gnoſticks, which was the ſeducing of ſo many, the making ſtraight paths is teaching, and ſetting up, and ſecuring the profeſſion of the true Catholick Doctrine againſt the ſcandals or ſeductions, the falſe doctrines, and unchriſtian practices brought in by them; and in like manner ſo is ὀρθοτομεῖν τὸν λόγον ἀληθείας, to cut ſtraight the word of truth, 2 Tim. 2. 15. teaching and defending, clearing and plaining to others the word of truth, the path that every man is to walk in, in oppoſition to the hereſies, and ſcandals, and ſeductions of falſe teachers. And ſo ὀρθοποδεῖν, Gal. 2. 14. is to go in the path of plain Catholick doctrine, which they oppoſed, which there taught circumciſion. In conſequence to all this, the phraſe here of God's making plain his paths, muſt ſignifie God's removing all impediments out of his way, all unevenneſſes, ruggedneſſes out of his courſe, affording him all things that be required to an eaſie and happy paſſage, through the uncertainties, or difficulties, or encumbrances of this world, conducting him ſafely and eaſily to his journeys end; And the promiſe of that is here very fitly affixt to truſting on God, and adhering to him, acknowledging him in all our ways, taking him for our ſafe conduct, and ſteering all our actions by that compaſs, which his word and providence directs us to.

c שִׁקּוּי V. 8. Marrow] The Hebrew שִׁקּוּי, from שָׁקָה, potavit, irrigavit, ſignifies watering, making to drink, moiſtening, ſuppling; It belongs primarily to watering of grounds, and thence to cattel, and to men, and is rendred πότῳ, drink, Pſal. 101. 10. The LXXII. here render it ὁμιλεια, care, the word that ſignifies the whole proviſion of dyet, and all that is uſefull for any man, and this in the greateſt plenty. They render it Hoſ. 2. 5. by πάντα ὅσα καθήκει, all things that are fit for one, and in that place it is obſervable, that after the mention of bread, and water, and wool, and flax, and oyle, all the neceſſaries of daily uſe for food, and rayment, &c. is added וְשִׁקּוּיָי, not my marrow, as we render it here, nor my drink, as there, for that was mentioned before, but as a general word comprehending at leaſt all that was not before named; the Chaldee reade all my food, the Syriack whatſoever was neceſſary to me, the Arabick whatſoever I had need of. As in the looking to a garden, the care of conſtant watering it; ſupplies it with all neceſſaries and advantages for fruitfulneſs. This word ὁμιλια the LXXII. elſewhere uſe for fattening, rendring דָּשֵׁן by it, ſo chap. 13. 4. the ſoul of the diligent תְּדֻשָּׁן ſhall be made fat, they reade ἐν ὁμιλείᾳ, richly provided for, and chap. 28. 25. he that putteth his truſt in the Lord ſhall be made fat, ἐν ὁμιλείᾳ ἔσται, by way of periphraſis, becauſe they that are thus carefully looked to, and furniſhed with all they can need, will thrive, and grow fat by that means. This proviſion therefore of all that any man wants, proportionable to the diligent watering of a garden, is that which is here meant by שִׁקּוּי.

d יִרְצֶה V. 12. Delighteth] The Hebrew רָצָה ſignifies to delight, or be pleaſed, and to be reconciled, or accept, or approve; That here it is to be taken in the latter ſenſe of accepting, approving, being reconciled, may appear 1. by the matter in hand, a Father's correcting his Son, which is not ſimply an effect of his being pleaſed with, or delighting in him, but is occaſioned by ſome fault which provokes his diſpleaſure: That which is obſervable of the Father's correction is, that it precedes the receiving him into his favour again, after the commiſſion of any fault; and then thus the ſenſe here is, that he chaſtens every ſon whom he receiveth to favour, reconciliation. 2. This appears by the LXXII. their interpretation of the word, which is from hence taken and uſed by the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 6. and ſo their interpretation authorized, which is ὃν παραδέχεται, whom he receiveth, thereby meaning not receiving him to be a Son, (for he ſpeaks not of the Father's act of adopting Children, but of ſuch as are born in the family, natural Sons) but receiving him to reconciliation, after any offence, and that is accepting him.

e מָכַן V. 19. Eſtabliſhed] מָכַן, from כּוּן, which ſignifies both to prepare and to eſtabliſh, may here beſt be rendred in the former notion, not to import any difference between the heaven and earth in point of ſtability, whatſoever that may be thought to ſignifie, but onely to refer to the firſt creation of them both, in the very ſame ſenſe as when the Pſalmiſt ſaith, by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, his word there, and his wiſedom here being all one, his uncreated word and wiſedom both, being the known title of Chriſt, by whom St. John tells us, Jo. 1. 3. all things were made, and St. Paul, Col. 1. 16. that by him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, (by heaven and earth there ſignifying the whole world, as they muſt here alſo be underſtood, though they be ſevered, according to the manner of Scripture ſtyle, in enumerating the parts, when the whole is meant) and Heb. 1. 2. by whom alſo he made the worlds. And thus all the ancient Interpreters render כּוֹנֵן, the Chaldee וְאַתְקֵן, from תְּקֵן, to prepare or frame, and ſo the Syriack, and the LXXII. ἡτοίμασε, prepared, onely the Latin have ſtabilivit, from whence it ſeems we took it.

f שָׁכַב V. 24. Lyeſt down] The Hebrew שָׁכַב ſignifies to lye, but that in a double ſenſe, firſt for reſting, or dwelling, 2. for lying down to ſleep; In the latter notion 'tis certainly taken in the latter part of the verſe, which makes it more probable that here it ſhould be taken in the former, elſe it will be tautological. Thus Lev. 26. 6. in the ſame circumſtances as here וְשָׁכַבְתֶּם, and you ſhall lye, and none ſhall terrifie you, the Chaldee reade וְתִשְׁרוֹן, and ye ſhall dwell; and

1 Sam. 26. the people, שׁוֹכְבִים, lay round about, the Chaldee hath שָׁרְיָן, dwelt, ſo Hoſ. 2. 18. יְהַשְׁכִּבֵתִים, in Hiphil, I will make them lye, the Chaldee hath וְאַשְׁרְנִנוּן, I will make them dwell ſecurely, and ſo the LXXII. κατασκηνῶ αὐτοὺς ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, I will make them dwell in hope, and accordingly here they reade ἐὰν καθῇς, if thou ſit down. By this rendring, it will be fitly oppoſed to walking in the way, v. 23. as dwelling at home to travelling abroad, and differenced from lying down to ſleep, in the end of this verſe, and ſo more fully expreſs the different ſtates of men, abroad, at home, aſleep, and ſecurity in all theſe.

בְּכִסְלֶךָ V. 26. Thy confidence] The Hebrew כֶּסֶל, light, fooliſh, inconſtant, is thought by antiphraſis to ſignifie conſtancy, hope, confidence, Job 8. 14. where 'tis joyned with hope, and ſo we render it truſt; ſo Pſal. 78. 7. they ſet God בְּכִסְלָם, the Targum reade סְבָרֵיהוֹן, their hope or confidence, taking the prepoſition, as it is ordinary, for redundant. But there is another notion of כֶּסֶל, for ile a part of the body, the place where the kidneys lye; Thus 'tis frequently uſed in Leviticus, and rendred μυελὸν by the LXXII. and ſo Pſal. 38. כְּסָלַי, my loins. And thus it may very fitly be rendred here [at thy ſide] as that notes proverbially thy helper, and ſo the Targum renders it בְּסַעְרָךְ, for thy help, and the LXXII. paraphraſtically ἐπὶ πασῶν ὁδῶν σου; over all thy ways, but the Syriack בסטך with thee, and the Latin literally in latere tuo, at or on thy ſide; and with that beſt agrees that which followeth, the keeping the feet from being enſnared or taken, for which the LXXII. again in their paraphraſtical manner, ἐρείσει τὸν πόδα σοῦ ἵνα μὴ σαλευθῇς, he ſhall ſupport thy feet that they be not ſhaken.

h בָּעַל V. 27. Them to whom it is due] The Hebrew בָּעַל, ſignifies an husband, lord, maſter, poſſeſſour, or owner, and ſo ch. 1. 17. בְּעַל כָּנָף, owner or maſter of a wing] denotes a bird. In this ſenſe it is here uſed on purpoſe to ſhew the obligation that lyes on the rich to relieve the poor, the rich man's barn being, as the ſon of Syrach ſaith, the poor man's ſtorehouſe; and ſo (by equitable eſtimation founded in the command of God) that of thy wealth which he wants, he is the owner of, and thou wrongeſt and robbeſt him, if thou withholdeſt it from him. So Deut. 24. 13. ſpeaking of the pledge of a poor man, and commanding to reſtore it before the ſun goes down, it is added, and this ſhall be thy righteouſneſs, this kind of mercy to the poor being a part of juſtice and righteouſneſs in the rich, and ſo δικαιοσύνη oft ſignifies ἐλεημοσύνη mercy. The Latin here, for want of conſidering this, have very much transformed this verſe, Noli prohibere benefacere eum qui poteſt, ſi vales, & ipſe benefac, Do not hinder him that is able to doe good, if thou art able doe thou alſo good. The Chaldee and Syriack take no notice of this word in their rendring. But the LXXII. ſet ἐνδεῖ, the poor for it, exactly according to the ſenſe, though nothing to the letter. The literal notation ought to be preferred, that it may teach us the right which the poor have to the rich man's charity.

i אַל תָּרוֹב V. 30. Strive not] That תָּרוֹב, from רוֹב, litigavit, ſignifies ſtriving, there is no doubt; The onely queſtion is, whether that which is here forbidden, be with a friend, or any other man indifferently. To the latter the word עִם אָדָם, with a man] inclines; but the רָעָה גְּמֻלָה in the cloſe determins it to the former. For that ſignifies returning of evil, and that in theſe circumſtances muſt be the retributing evil for good; Thus then the whole verſe will be moſt literally rendred, Quarrel not, fall not out with a man without cauſe, (which the LXXII. moſt fully render μὴ φιλαχθρήσῃς πρὸς ἄνθρωπον μαλθῆ, fall not out with a man in vain, make him not an enemy of a friend) אִם לֹא, &c. unleſs he have, or if he have not returned evil to thee, as an explication of the חִנָּם, without cauſe. And thus it ſhews the great advantages of friendſhip, ſuch as no man ſhould willingly or impertinently part with, as long as it may be kept; nothing but the breach of the laws of it on one ſide, (ſuch is falſeneſs, treachery, returning evil for good) can be a fit motive to break it off, or but leſſen it, to chide or quarrel, and ſo looſe the great pleaſure and benefit of uninterrupted kindneſs on the other. For the latter part the LXXII. reade μὴ τι σοι ἐργάσεται κακὸν, leſt he work ſome harm againſt thee, adding this as an enforcement to the advice, becauſe of the advantages he hath to hurt thee above all others, by having been thy friend, and communicated of thy ſecrets.

k סוֹדוֹ V. 32. His ſecret] סוֹד as it ſignifies a ſecret, ſo alſo conſultation, familiar diſcourſe, or converſation, (ſee Pſal. 55. 14. Note e) ſociety, ſo 'tis rendred elſewhere by the LXXII. Jer. 6. 11. συναγωγὴ, aſſembly, and Jer. 15. 17. συνέδριον, the place of counſel. This makes it unqueſtionable that their rendring in this place ſhould be read (without ὁ, not) ὁ δὲ δικαίοις συνεδριάζει, he aſſembles among the righteous. As for their note, that would have συνεδριάζειν ſignifie agere pro tribunali & longo ſubſellio, deal as judges with thoſe before their tribunal, in oppoſition to amice & familiariter, they conſider not (that which is the main objection againſt this reading) that the LXXII. being allowed and acknowledged to render סוֹד by συνέδριον, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that if the Hebrew be true, which hath no negation, the negation muſt needs be quite contrary, to the original, and ſo no way of reconciling the LXXII. with it, but by leaving out the negation. This then being premiſed, the Septuagint's rendring will be very uſefull to the right underſtanding the verſe, and maintaining the oppoſition betwixt the firſt and ſecond part of it; In the firſt, the contumelious נִלְוָז, the deſertour, tranſgreſſour, from לוּז, receſſit, abberravit, πᾶς πλάνος, ſay the LXXII. every wicked man is abomination to the Lord, i. e. ſuch as he averts, and avoids, and ſeparates from ἀκάθαρτος ἔναντι Κυρίου, unclean or polluted before God, (for ſuch are ſhut out from the congregation) God will have nothing to doe with ſuch, withdraws his favour and grace from them, his ſpirit will not abide when unrighteouſneſs comes in, but with, or among the righteous is his counſel, i. e. he aſſembles, and congregates with ſuch, is to them, deals with them, as a friend, he favourably and amicably exhibits and preſentiates himſelf to ſuch, familiarly converſeth with them. And in this ſenſe the next verſe is fitly ſubjoyned to it, of God curſing the houſe of the one, and bleſſing the habitation of the other.

l מְרִים V. 35. Shame ſhall be the promotion of fools.] All the difficulty of this paſſage will be removed by adverting to the notion of מְרִים the participle, from רוּם, to lift up, or carry away, or bear. According to theſe ſeveral ſignifications, the LXXII. ſometimes render it ὑψόω, to lift up, ſometimes αἴρω, tollo, to take away, and ἀπαίρω, and ἐξαίρω, and ὑπαίρω, and ἀναφέρω, and ſixteen times ἀναφέρω. And in this latter ſenſe it ſeems to be taken here, the correſpondence with the former part thus inclining it. The wiſe ſhall inherit glory, i. e. receive it, carry it away, as victors their reward, or heirs the inheritance or poſſeſſions of their fathers, but fools (oppoſed to the wiſe) ſhall carry away (in oppoſition to the others inheriting) ſhame, the contrary to glory. Thus moſt of the ancient Interpreters render the place, the Chaldee, and fools, וְקַבְּלוּ

נְקַבְּלוּ צַעַר, shall receive tribulation or distress, and so the Syriack ܢܦܩܒܘܢ shall receive; and though the LXXII. reade ὑψωσαν, exalted, yet this probably (as with them 'tis ordinary) in the other notion of the Hebrew; for else what should they mean by their rendring? οἱ δὲ ἀσεβεῖς ὑψωσαν ἀτιμίαν, but the wicked have exalted shame, unless by exalting they meant receiving, or carrying it away. The Latin indeed have stultorum exaltatio ignominia, the exalting of fools is shame, and from them our English was surely derived, shame shall be the promotion of fools. To this they were lead by the singular number of the participle מְרוֹם, which they therefore render exaltatio, promotion; But the enallage, or change of numbers is so frequent, that nothing can be solidly concluded from thence, and the Chaldee, Syriack, LXXII, and Arabick all render it here in the plural, and therefore that can be no exception against a sense that so well agrees with the context, which therefore must be preferr'd.

a V. 5. For אַל־תִּשָּׁעֵן, rely not, the LXXII. reade μὴ ἐπαίρου, be not exalted, or puffed up, either by way of paraphrase, or perhaps by errour of the Scribe, ἐπαίρου for ἐπείδου, which Theodotion here useth, and signifies to rely.

c V. 9. For מֵהוֹנֶךָ, from thy substance or wealth (or Mammon, saith the Chaldee) the LXXII. reads ἀπὸ σῶν δικαίων πόνων, and so again for תְּבוּאָתֶךָ, thine incomes, or encrease, they reade σῶν καρπῶν δικαιοσύνης, thy fruits of righteousness, (which phrase with light change the Apostle makes use of from them, 2 Cor. 9. 10. γενήματα τῆς δικαιοσύνης ὑμῶν, the productions of your righteousness; and Phil. 1. 11. καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης, fruits of your righteousness, &c.) Both these, with the liberty of Paraphrasts; not thinking that God will be honoured with any other part of our riches than that which comes from our just labours, and that is the fruit or production of our justice, or righteousness; the hire of a whore, or price of blood might not be brought into the Temple. This makes it reasonable to determin, that the like phrase, 2 Cor. 9. 10. is by analogy herewith to be understood for their wealth lawfully gotten, the encrease whereof he prays for, as the reward of their liberality, as here is promised, v. 10.

γ V. 13. For יָפִיק, bringeth forth, they reade εὗρε, hath seen, for so comparing wisedom to an hidden treasure, ch. 11. 4. and Matt. 13. 44. seeing of that, and bringing it forth to light is all one; The Scholiast reads ἔσχεν, hath had it, i. e. gotten it.

δ V. 14. For כִּי טוֹב, for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the income thereof (that which in the harvest it yields the owner, so. תְּבוּאָתָהּ, from בּוֹא, in Hiphil, to bring in, signifies the fruits of the field, &c. which they bring home to the barn) than fine gold] they reade χρεῖττον αὐτῆς ἐμπορεύεσθαι ἢ χρυσίου καὶ ἀργυρίου πωλεῖσθαι, it is better to purchase that than treasures of gold and silver. A perspicuous paraphrase.

ε V. 15. For וְכָל חֲפָצֶיךָ לֹא יִשְׁווּ בָהּ, and all thy desires (or, taking the act for the object, the things thou canst desire) shall not be equall'd to it] they reade οὐκ ἀντιτάξεται αὐτῇ οὐδὲν πονηρὸν, no wicked thing shall be weighed against it (for taking wisedom for piety, all that is likely to come into competition with it is impius) adding over and above what is in the Hebrew, εὐγνωστόν ἐστι πᾶσι τοῖς ἐγγίζουσιν αὐτῇ, πᾶν δὲ τίμιον οὐκ ἄξιον αὐτῆς ἐστι, it is easily known to all that come near unto it, but all that is precious is not worthy of it. An addition purposely used to express the desirableness of wisedom; that when it is beyond all things most precious, it is not difficult to be attained by any that hath a mind to it.

V. 16. For אֹרֶךְ יָמִים, length of days, they more largely reade μῆκος βίου, ἢ ἔτη ζωῆς, length of life, and years of life, which more confirms the conceit of Amo. Nobrissensis, that it refers to the custom of numbring by the hands, and that by the right hand centuries are numbred, as unites and decads by the left, according to that of Juvenal of Nestor, — jam dextra computat annos, he counts his years with his right hand, compared with Ovid's, Vixi annos bis centum, I have lived two hundred years. See him Quinquag. ch. xvi. which if it should hold for the interpreting of the length of days, in the right hand, then by proportion the riches and honour being in the left hand, which is for the numbring of unites and decads, must denote a competency of each of them rather than the greatest exuberance; and in that indeed the greatest felicity consists, the greatest abundance bringing excessive trouble, and so diminution of felicity, whereas the competency hath all the advantages of wealth, and none of the encumbrances of it. But this, as most others of that Authour, is but an operation of a refined wit; for sure 1. the rewards of wisedom are paid to men in this and other ages, wherein very few have attained to an hundred years; and 2. the felicities of living to that extreme old age, are not very discernible; and 3. the moderate length of age is as much preferrable before that as the competency of riches before the excess of them. The plain meaning is, that these are in the hands of wisedom to give, not that the man reckons them in his hands; that wisedom hath the dispencing of all these blessings, holds one in one hand, the other in the other, the long life in the right, as most valuable, affording us the larger opportunities of serving God, and bringing in fruit to our account, in the other accomplishments of temporal felicity, when in a plentifull or competent manner added to that; according to that promise, annext to the Fifth Commandment, long life in a Canaan, or fruitfull Land.

ζ V. 18. For וְתֹמְכֶיהָ מְאֻשָּׁר, literally, and they that retein it, (from תָּמַךְ, to hold) happy he, they reade τοῖς ἐπερειδομένοις ἐπ' αὐτὴν ὡς ἐπὶ Κυρίου, ἀσφαλὴς, to them that lean on her, as on the Lord, safe. This they do from the other use of תָּמַךְ, for sustentare, to sustein, they that lean being susteined by that they lean on. This makes it more probable that the reading v. 5. was μὴ ἐπείδου, rely not on thine own wisedom but on God, foregoing, from whence the addition here of ὡς ἐπὶ Κυρίου, as on the Lord, seems to be taken. Then for ἀσφαλὴς, that is but a paraphrase of מְאֻשָּׁר, safety, and happiness being all one, and wisedom's being safe to them, signifying its being the authour of all safety. This change seems to be caused from מְאֻשָּׁר being in the singular number, when תֹּמְכֶיהָ was in the plural; but nothing is more ordinary than such changes. If it here import any thing, it is that every such person is happy.

η V. 21. For אַל יָלוּזוּ מֵעֵינֶיךָ, let them not depart from thine eyes, they reade (and the Apostle, Heb. 2. 1. seems to take the phrase from them) μὴ παραῤῥύωσι, do not thou flow, or run away, be not thou poured out like water, their going from thee, or thou from them being all one, suffer not these things to run from thee, or thy self from them, as water doth when 'tis let out of a vessel, but keep, &c.

θ V. 22. For וְיִרְווּ חַיִּים לְנַפְשֶׁךָ, and they shall be life or lives to thy soul, they reade ἵνα ζήσῃ ἡ ψυχή σου, that thy soul may live; After that verse they add καὶ ἔσται τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖσι σου ἡ ὁδομάλευσις τῶν ὁσίων, and it shall be be healing to thy flesh, and provision to thy bones, an insertion clearly from v. 8.

V. 28. For יֵשׁ אִתָּךְ, and it is with thee, they reade paraphrastically δύναται σὺ ὄντος ἐυποιεῖν, thou being able to doe good, adding over and above the Hebrew, ὐ γὰρ οἶδας τι τέξεται ἡ ἐπιοῦσα, for thou knowest not what the next day shall beget, (i. e. how thou mayest be disabled or hindred by that time, if thou thus defer it) a proverbial speech to which S. James refers, Ja. 4. 14.

V. 31. For אַל תְּקַנֵּא, &c. Envy not the man of violence, and chuse none of his ways, they reade μὴ κλῆσῃ ἀνδρῶν κακῶν ὁυοίδη, μηδὲ ζηλώσῃς τὰς ὁδὸς αὐτῶν, possess not the reproaches of wicked men, neither envy the ways of them; for תְּקַנֵּא, emulate or envy, reading, it seems, תִּקְנֶה, from קָנָה, to acquire or possess, (which they the rather did, because in the latter part they thought חֲבֵרָה fitly rendred ζηλώσῃ, emulate) which being so mistaken, they were to add somewhat (to supply the Ellipsis) which might be possest, as the man of violence could not, and this caused the addition of ὀνείδη, contumelies, whether in the active sense, the wrongs, and contumelies which they deal out to others, or the reproaches that fall upon themselves for their sins, even their punishments in this world. As for κακοὶ ἄνδρες, that style fitly denotes the oppressours, violent, or injurious.

V. 34. For אִם לַלֵּצִים הוּא יָלִיץ, surely he derideth the deriders, from לוּץ, derisit, they reade Κύριος ὑπερεφάνοις ἀντιτάσσεται, God resisteth, is set against the proud, fully expressing the sense, (though not literally the words) for as those that violate and despise God's Law, are the proudest rebels, so God's setting himself against them (contrary to the giving them grace in the latter part) is the scorning of them, the not hearkening to, or relieving their greatest wants. And in this their rendring (onely changing Κύριος, Lord, into Θεὸς, God) two Apostles recite this verse, Jam. 4. 6. and 1 Pet. 5. 5.

be educated in, by the care and discipline of their parents, as the Laws of God for the directing of their lives; It is the best portion the parent can assign the child, more valuable than any other inheritance: And then it nearly concerns us all, that such a treasure be not cast away upon us, that we lay it up safely in the heart, make use of it to the direction and conduct of our whole lives, and never knowingly or willingly transgress it as long as we live.

3. For I was † my father's son, [a] tender, and onely beloved [b] in the sight of my mother.

great expression of this their love was, the affording him this timely instruction, daily inculcating to him the great necessity and advantages of exact and uniform obedience to all the commands of God, towards a happy and prosperous life here, and the attaining of eternity.

5. Get wisedom, get understanding, forget it not, neither decline from the words of my mouth.

5. And the same paternal affection obliges me to inculcate this admonition to all the sons of men, that, whatever labour or industry it costs them, they get this treasure into their possession (the onely true wisedom and prudence, that of knowing their duty of all sorts, in order to the practice of it) and never neglect or transgress those rules, which this book gives them for the direction of their lives.

6. Forsake her not, and she shall preserve thee, love her, and she shall [γ] keep thee.

6. And to this they have all encouragement as well as obligation; Nothing shall tend γ

more to their both present and eternal good than a strict, unintermitted, uniform observation of these rules. All safety, and tranquility, and happiness here, is made over to men on these onely terms; They that thus keep close to God, his providence is engaged to their protection; and the very practice of these vertues it self hath a moral efficacy (and an assurance of God's blessing accompanying it) to keep men from all evil, ghostly and bodily, here and hereafter.

7. ‖ Wisedom is a [c] principal thing, therefore get wisedom, and with all thy getting get understanding.

‖ First wisedom, get wisedom, and——

7. And therefore in all reason as this is to be the first and principal of our care, to possess our hearts of this treasure, so whatsoever else is afterwards sought or pursued must be with its due subordination to that; The constant practice of all Christian duties must never be intermitted by the intervention of our secular aims, but taken along to accomplish and secure all other acquests to us.

c

8. ♪ Exalt her, and she shall promote thee, [ε] she shall bring thee to honour, when thou dost embrace her.

8. And no man shall ever loose by what is thus bestowed; whatsoever value or love thou expressest to this sort of wisedom, shall be abundantly repaid to thee by her. They that endeavour not onely to exercise themselves constantly in the Law of God, but to bring it in credit and fashion in the world, to attract and engage all others in the same, that prize and love it above all that appears most splendid or amiable in the world, shall find this the most certain never-failing course to heap honour and estimation on themselves in the eyes of all such men whose good opinion is worth having; And over and above all this, the acceptation and praise of God, and eternal glory with him hereafter, is their most assured reward.

♪ ε

9. She shall give to thy head [ς] an ornament of grace, * a crown of glory shall she [d] deliver to thee.

* with a crown of glory shall she encompass thee.

9. And indeed this is a special privilege of piety, the exercise of Christian graces, humility, charity, temperance, &c. that it renders thee amiable in the sight of all men, (S. Peter calls it the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, 1 Pet. 3. 4. and S. Paul mentions it under the ſtyle of whatſoever things are honourable and of good report, Phil. 4. 8.) no external ornament or bravery like it; the moſt glorious regal crown doth not give ſuch a luſtre to him that wears it, as the exerciſe of theſe graces doth: But this is not all, it not onely adorns but protects, is by God's bleſſing and by the radiency of its own beauty, a defenſative and moſt ſovereign amulet to him that hath it, to ſecure him from the effects of mens malice, the maxime being generally true (though, as other general rules, it may bear ſome exception ſometimes) that men will not harm them who follow that which is good, 1 Pet. 3. 13.

10. Were I to exhort thee as a father a ſon, moſt fatherly and prudentially, to that

10. Hear, O my ſon, and receive my ſayings, and the years of thy life ſhall be many.

whereon thy greateſt and moſt durable weal, even in this world, depends, I ſhould abſolutely recommend to thee the conſtant practice of piety, the ſtrict obſervation of thoſe good rules which true ſaving wiſedom preſcribes thee, being able to aſſure thee from heaven, and even by a regular conſequence, that the bleſſings of a long and happy life do generally attend it; From the good providence of God, who hath the diſpencing of life and all good things, it is to be expected that obedience to his methods ſhall thus be crowned, godlineſs having the promiſes of this life (as well as of another) as far as God ſhall ſee them beſt for his ſervants. And even in ordinary reaſon the practice of vertues tends to the preſerving health and life, both from diſeaſes and from violent invaſions; temperance and ſobriety ſecures from thoſe many lothſome diſeaſes, to which the contrary betray men; and meekneſs and peaceableneſs and mercifulneſs, &c. gain the kindneſs, and generally ſecure us from the rages and violences and injuries of men; and the hand of juſtice, that avenges and cuts off ſinners, is deſigned not for the puniſhing, but rewarding them that doe well.

thoſe means; be carefull thou never ſuffer thy ſelf to engage with them, never flatter thy ſelf that any ſuch courſe is likely to thrive with thee; the wicked are ſo far from being juſt matter of envy to godly men, or conſequently of imitation, that their courſe is to be averted, and dreaded, and deteſted by all that mean kindneſs to themſelves, to be look'd on as a mere trap and ſnare from which every wiſe man will guard himſelf as diligently as it is poſſible, and never approach or enter the confines of it.

perſons, which is ſufficient to deter any man from their ſociety, from envying or imitating them; Their heart is moſt violently and tranſportingly ſet on their unjuſt deſigns, they cannot take any reſt, enjoy their neceſſary refreſhment of ſleep, unleſs they can compaſs the miſchief they deſign; By which means they put themſelves into moſt painfull diſtempers, through the eagerneſs of their purſuit, eſpecially if they encounter difficulties, and are croſt in them; And all this while it is not any advantage which they project to themſelves, and are at all this expence to purchaſe, but the bare empty gainleſs diabolical ſatisfaction of having done ſome miſchief to others. (Their whole life is beſt pourtray'd by the emblem of the moſt ſordid witch, that ſubmits her ſelf to the baſeſt and moſt horrid uſages, beſides the giving her ſoul by compact to the devil, onely that ſhe may have the pitifull noiſome pleaſure of doing ſome miſchief to her neighbour) Juſt ſuch is the whole life of malicious men.

17. And as for their ſleep, ſo for all other the moſt neceſſary refection, their very meat and drink they contemn and deſpiſe it in the eagerneſs of their purſuits: It is their meat and drink to wrong and defraud others, their heart is ſet importunately upon that; If they miſcarry in their enterpriſes, they are ſtrangely diſcontented (Ahab could enjoy nothing elſe, if he were denyed Naboth's vineyard, he turned away his face and would eat no bread, 1 King. 21. 4.) if they ſucceed, they have oft no other benefit by it, but the ſatisfaction of having been inſtruments of grieving others, i. e. ſo many lictors, or executioners, or fiends; (and this is a ſtrange ſort of ſenſuality for any ingenuous man to be emulous of.) Or if they reap gain to themſelves by rapine and violence, and oppreſſing of other men, even this is very unfit to be † enjoyed in them; The conſcience of the injuſtice will deprive them of all real contentment or comfort in enjoying it, when they know that every bit they eat is torn out of other mens throats, taken by fraud or violence from the juſt poſſeſſours. 18. Whereas the whole courſe of righteous men, the beginning, progreſs, conſummation, is all imitable and exemplary, fit to attract all others to it, whether in reſpect of the inward luſtre, and excellency of it, or the preſent ſatisfaction and pleaſure, that reſults from ſuch practices, above that which attends any other, or the joy and comfort of conſcience immediately following it. In all theſe reſpects it cannot be more lively reſembled than by the light of the Sun, when it is come above our Horizon, which is in continued increaſe till it come to high noon, the day is all that while arraying and adorning it ſelf, as it were conſtinually putting on addition of luſtre from morning till mid-day, and then the whole Horizon is fully illuminated, no ſhade or degree of darkneſs any where remaining. Such is the way of vertue and good men, it ſends out a luſtre conſtantly encreaſing, illuminates and warms at once, attracts all that ſee it, enamours them with its beauty, enlivens with its rays, (ſee Matt. 5. 14, 16.) till at length, if they be not perfectly blind, and inſenſate, it brings all to partake of its excellencies.

19. The way of the wicked is as darkneſs, they know not at what they ſtumble.

19. Whereas the wicked man's courſe is moſt black and diſmall, made up of all darkneſs, the image of death and hell, whether you reſpect the impiety of their deeds, or the both preſent and future miſeries that attend them: And one direfull part of their condition is, that as men that walk in the dark and ſee nothing, conſtantly ſtumble, and fall, and bruiſe themſelves, but know not what it is they ſtumble at, and ſo could not poſſibly prevent it; ſo theſe in the roads of their ſins continually ſtumble, and fall into miſery and ſad ruines, and diſcern not by what means they thus fall, and ſo cannot poſſibly prevent it; A ſecret vengeance finds them out, coming they know not from whence, an inviſible worm, bred from their ſin, gnaws and devours their eſtate, good name, and oft their very fleſh, and (like the flowing roll, in Zachary, ch. 5. 14. entring into the houſe, and remaining in the midſt of it, and conſuming it with the ſtones and timber) is hardly ever gotten out of the family of unjuſt and violent men.

20. My ſon, attend to my words, encline thine ear to my ſayings.
21. ℵ Let them not depart from thine eyes, keep them ‖ [h] in the midſt of thy heart.
22. For they are life unto thoſe that find them, and health to all their fleſh.

‖ in the midſt in thy heart, or within thy heart.

20, 21, 22. All this, and much more which ſhall be added may very reaſonably engage every ſon of wiſedom, every man, that is not utterly void of all, even ſecular, prudence or care of his own ſafety, to remember and practice all the wholſome admonitions that are given him, and never to indulge himſelf the leaſt liberty to deviate from them in the actions of his life, conſidering that all the eaſe and pleaſures and comforts of life depend upon this; that the life of wicked men is a continual diſeaſe, and miſery, and a kind of death, (ſave onely that in death there is no ſenſe of that wretched condition, but in a wicked life there is, torments and ſmart in great abundance) and on the contrary, the practice of piety, brings joy (which is the onely true life) and health with it, the good conſcience is a continual feaſt, ch. 15. 15. and doeth good as a medicine, ch. 17. 22. and both in that and many other reſpects, ſuch is the exerciſe of all pious duties here, abſtracted from the endleſs reward in another world.

23. Keep thy heart * [i] with all diligence, for out of it are the iſſues of life.

* from all that is to be warded, or above, or with all warding or cuſtody.

23. This therefore renders it a moſt ſeaſonable admonition, that every man be ſtrictly mindfull to guard and fortifie his heart, his will or elective faculty, the principle of motion and action, from all prohibited objects, that he beg God's continual reſtreining, preventing and aſſiſting grace, and make moſt diligent uſe thereof, to keep that from all conſent to any ſin, fencing himſelf with all the ſteddieſt reſolutions, and prayers for ſtrength to make them good, and wakefulneſs over all temptations, and courage and conſtancy for reſiſtance, theſe ſo many ſorts of the ſureſt ammunition and armour of proof; knowing and conſidering that as the heart is the ſpring or original of life in the body, ſo the will or conſent is the fountain from whence all life ſprings, whether that ſignifie vital, gracious actions (inſtead of which, if it be not diligently guarded, ſprings up all impiety) or whether the joys and comforts of this life preſent, (all depending upon a right ordering of our choices) or whether everlaſting life and continuance in bliſs: The guarding of the will or elective faculty from all conſent, the flying from, and deteſting all evil, and the vigorous chooſing and purſuing of all good, enters men upon ſuch a life of grace here, which is an inchoation of endleſs glory, and ſhall be ſwallowed up in it hereafter.

24. Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverſe lips put far from thee.

24. And as the heart muſt be moſt ſtrictly guarded, ſo muſt the mouth or tongue; The next care is due to that, to keep it from all malicious words, lying, whiſpering, detraction, contumely, that ſword of the tongue, which when it is managed by a malicious heart, doth wound moſt ſadly, commits the moſt intolerable fatal riots of any thing.

25. Let thine eyes [k] look † right on, and let thy eye-lids ‖ look ſtraight before thee.

† to the right ‖ direct

25. And ſo in like manner muſt the eyes be guarded alſo, not permitted to ſtray to any forbidden objects, but fixed on that which is perfectly upright and commendable, and made uſe of to direct and manage all the actions of our life, ſeeing and conſidering beforehand where dangers lie, that they may be avoided, and what means may moſt happily contribute to our ſpiritual ends, that we may make uſe of them.

26. [l] Ponder the path of thy feet, and * let all thy ways be eſtabliſhed.

* all thy ways ſhall be eſtabliſhed, יִכֹּנוּ.

26. Laſtly for the feet, by which are ſignified all the actions of our lives, they muſt be kept cloſe to the commands of God, and all conſideration and foreſight made uſe of to that purpoſe, minding always and pondering what is beſt, and never entring on any way that is unſafe or ſlippery: And this, beyond all other things ſhall tend to the confirming our proſperity, to the preſerving us from ſin firſt, and then from all miſchief attending it.

27. Turn not to the right hand nor to the left, remove thy foot from evil λ.

27. In a word, let no temptation either of hope or fear, paſſion or intereſt, be able to ſeduce or divert thee from the ſtraight and even path of vertue, but exactly and preciſely preſerve thy ſelf from every thing that is evil. (And nothing ſhall ſo certainly tend to thy peace and happineſs.)

Annotations on Chap. IV.

[a] לֶקַח

V. 2. Doctrine] The Hebrew לֶקַח ſignifies properly to receive, thence to acquire, or get, thence by a metaphor to learn, or receive doctrine. From hence the noun לֶקַח, is by us, with the authority of the Chaldee and Syriack read doctrine, but the LXXII. reade δόσιν, a gift, and ſo the Latin, with the Arabick, donum, and ſo the circumſtances encline it, the foregoing giving, and good, for ſo the inſtructing men not to forſake his law, though it be capable of the ſtyle of giving them a good leſſon, or doctrine, yet it is ſurely as (if not more) agreeable to call it the giving a good gift; and thus indeed the teachings, and deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, called God's giving gifts unto men, are Pſal. 68. 18. expreſt by receiving gifts for men. Thus λῆψις, and δόσις, a taking, and a gift, are with the Greeks all one, differing onely by the relation that one hath to the receiver, tother to the donor. In either of theſe interpretations the ſenſe is much the ſame; for ſuppoſing it a doctrine, the attribute of goodneſs intimates it to be a favour, and ſo a benefaction, or gift to him, who is willing to be taught.

[b] לִפְנֵי

V. 3. In the ſight] It is not amiſs here to note, what the Jews obſerve, that in this and one other place of the Bible the rendrings differ, and that לִפְנֵי, in the ſight, is written for לִבְנֵי, among the ſons: Thus the ſenſe well bears, onely beloved among the ſons of my mother, i. e. among my brethren, as Jud. 7. 19. the ſons of my mother, and 1 Chron. 28. 4. among the ſons of my father. And indeed there is great affinity betwixt twixt ב and פ as the learned Bochart notes in his Canaan, l. 1. c. 1. p. 336. where he ingeniously derives Phœnices from בְּנֵי עֲנָק, bene Anac, the sons of Anac, and gives many instances of the like changes. In this reading there is no place for the rendring יְחִיד precedent in the ordinary notion of unigenitus, onely begotten, because the mention of the sons of his mother precludes that, and so doth the story, 1 Chron. 3. 5. But after all this, as the observation is ordinary that יְחִיד signifies not onely the onely begotten, but the onely or principally beloved, and so the μονογενὴς and ἀγαπητὸς, the onely son, and the beloved, are equivalent phrases among the Hellenists, and so there is no need of this aid; so the ancient Interpreters generally retain the ordinary reading, לִפְנֵי, the Chaldee and Syriack reade קֳדָם, before, and the LXXII. ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς, in the presence, or eye of my mother, and the Latin coram. And in this concurrence there can be no cause to believe the reading should be altered.

c רֵאשִׁית

V. 7. The principal thing] That from רֹאשׁ, an head, רֵאשִׁית signifies either the first in order, or in dignity, the beginning, or the principal, there can be no question; and as with the preposition ב, Gen. 1. 1. it signifies in the beginning, so 'tis also without the preposition, see Prov. 8. 22. the Lord possessed me, רֵאשִׁית, in the beginning of his way, and this seems to be the best rendring of it, here, in the first place wisedom (not as the Latin, principium sapientiæ, the beginning of wisedom) get wisedom, the repeating the word giving the greater weight to the speech, as if he had said, get wisedom in the first place, and with it best coheres וּבְכָל, &c. and in or with all thy getting get understanding, there the getting is doubled, as before the word wisedom, to signifie that to be the most principal acquisition, which ought to be first sought, and to accompany every thing else that is sought by any. When all the other rendrings are considered, this will be found to be most literal and perspicuous.

d תְּסַנְּגֶךָּ

V. 9. Deliver to thee] What תְּסַנְּגֶךָּ here signifies is not unworthy enquiring; For though the verb סָגַן in Piel be thought to signifie delivering, in some sense, as when of God 'tis said, Gen. 14. 20. סִגַּן, which the Targum renders מְסַר, delivered thine enemies into thine hand, and so Hos. 11. 8. how shall I give thee up, O Israel? אֲסַגֶּנְךָ, we render deliver thee, yet it may much more probably be thought to signifie enclosing, in both those places, for so those that are enclosed, that they cannot get out, or escape, are in effect delivered into the enemies hands, and therefore in the latter place the Chaldee renders it אֲשֵׁיצְנָךְ, I will destroy, the LXXII. ἀφοπλίσω, I will disarm, which is distant enough from the notion of giving, or delivering, which is here affixt to it. In the notion of encompassing, it is near of kin to סָגֵן, a shield, or help, from גָּנַן, to cover, or protect, and so it is here interpreted by the ancient Interpreters. The Chaldee renders it not at all, save by עֲלָךְ, upon thee, shall be a crown of splendor upon thee, but the LXXII. reade ὑπερασπιεῖ σὲ, shall defend thee as with a shield, the Syriack ܢܣܥܕ shall defend thee with a crown of glory, and so the Latin, corona inclyta proteget te, he shall protect thee with an illustrious crown. And so the Interlinear, muniet te, shall defend thee, with whom the learned Castalio agrees. And there is no cause to doubt but this is the true rendring of the word; for in the literal rendring by cinget, encompassing, it is very fit for a crown which encompasseth the head; and in the metaphorical, of protecting, affords us a rich sense, that wisedom doth at once adorn, and fortifie, protect him also, whom it sets out most illustriously in the eyes of all.

e אַל תְּאַשֵּׁר

V. 14. Go not] The Hebrew אַל תְּאַשֵּׁר is equivocal, אָשַׁר signifies recta incedere, to walk straight on, and so simply, to walk, and direct his steps; But it signifies also metaphorically, to prosper, to be happy, and in Piel, to bless, whether another, or himself. So Matth. 3. 12. וְאַשְּׁרוּ, and shall bless you, and Job 29. 11. and Psal. 72. 17. and Prov. 31. 28. וַיְאַשְּׁרוּהָ, and call her blessed; And in this notion applied to ones self, it will signifie to bless ones self: And thus the ancient Interpreters seem to have understood it here; The Chaldee and Syriack reade וְלָא תְּסַגֵּן, emulate not, from סָגַן, to imitate, or zealously to pursue, as those that think themselves happy in the acquest; so the LXXII. μὴ ζηλώσῃς ὁδοὺς ἀδίκων, emulate not the ways of the wicked, and the Latin to the same sense, ne tibi placeat malorum via, let not the way of the wicked please thee, i. e. applaud not thy self (Castalio reads most fitly, ne jactato, boast not) as if it were likely to yield thee any thing of advantage: and this is to be adhered to, as the fullest and most pertinent interpretation of the place, as it comes in accord, and consent with what went before, of the advantages of a vertuous life.

f לֶחֶם רֶשַׁע

V. 17. The bread of wickedness] This phrase is capable of a double interpretation, 1. that wickedness is their bread; then their eating that, is their feeding on wickedness, as men feed on bread, they are as it were fed, and nourished with it; and so in proportion, they drink the wine of violence, violence, wronging and oppressing others is to them the greatest refreshment, supplies the place of wine to them: And this best agrees with the Hebrew style, and the Greek rendring, σῖτα ἀπιθείας, οἶνον δὲ παρανόμου μεθύσκουσι, they feed on the food of iniquity, iniquities is their food, they are drunk with transgressing wine, transgression is their wine wherewith they fill themselves, to the full. And so also the Context inclines it; for thus it best agrees with v. 16. they sleep not unless they have done mischief, &c. the designing and pursuing mischief supplies the place of sleep with them, they part with one in pursuit of the other; To which it very well agrees, that wickedness is their food, or supplies the place of it: Thus the learned Castalio having rendred it, vescuntur pane impietatis, explains it by impie vivunt, they live wickedly: 2. that their violence and rapine brings them in their food, and without those unjust ways they have not whereon to feed; And to this the Chaldee seems most inclineable, who reade, their meat is the meat דִּרְשָׁעֵי of wicked men, and they drink the wine of the violent, their meat and wine are the acquests of wicked men, such as their injustice and rapine furnisheth them with; and the probability of this, makes it not fit to leave it out in the Paraphrase.

g נָכוֹן הַיּוֹם

V. 18. Perfect day] What is meant by this phrase must be concluded by the original notion of נָכוֹן, in Niphal, to be prepared, i. e. made ready, dresst, adorned; Thus the day is figuratively supposed to adorn, and dress, and set out it self to the eyes of all beholders, when it puts on more and more light, as more and more ornaments, gems, and lustre; and when the Sun (the bridegroom, in the Psalmist, thus gloriously attiring himself) comes to the Zenith, or highest pitch, i. e. (not at the first rising, as the phrase may be thought to signifie, in opposition to twilight, which is no perfect day, but as R. Levi among the Hebrews interprets it) at high noon, or midday, then the day is said to be attyred, or ready, adorn'd with all the bravery that belongs to it. This therefore is a very clear meaning of the verse, the path path of the just is like the ſhining light, the light of the ſun, which wherever it is, ſhineth, giveth ſome luſtre; but this, as the giant, rejoyceth to run its courſe, and therefore begins, and enters on its progreſs, aſcends more and more, above the Horizon, (which is the meaning of הוֹלֵךְ, going, advancing as in a march or journey, προκοπὴ ἔστω ſay the LXXII. noting a progreſs) and as it goes, it more and more illuminates the medium (which is the plain rendring of וְאוֹר, φωτίζων, ſay the LXXII. enlighten) untill the day be fully dreſt, or ready, or adorned, ἕως ἑτοίμου ἡμέρα, ſaith Aquila, till dreſt, or ready day, ἕως ἑτοιμασίας ἡμέρας, ſaith Theodotion, till the preparation of the day, or till the day be ready, i. e. till high noon or mid-day; After which, within a while it begins to diſarray it ſelf again, and by little and little to lay off its luſtre. The Chaldee thus underſtand the word, rendring it here (and with them the Syriack) דְּמִקְּנֵי, (from חָסַן, paratus eſt) dreſt or made ready; and ſo Hoſ. 6. 5. where we reade prepared, as the morning, they reade דְּמִקְּשֵׁט, adorned, ready, dreſt, as the morning, i. e. as the day (for ſo the morning, Gen. 1. 5. ſignifies the whole day, as the evening, the whole night) when it comes to its high or full luſtre; The LXXII. reade ἕως κατορθώσῃ ἡ ἡμέρα, (in the notion of כּוּן, for rectus fuit) till the day get the upper hand, (as κατόρθωμα ſignifies a victory or maſtery) i. e. diſpels all ſhades, which it doth not, till the Sun be gotten to the Zenith, or higheſt point of the heavens. One other notion the words are capable of, from the uſe of the word כּוּן ſometimes for framing, forming, making, and then it may be rendred עַד נְבוֹן הַיּוֹם, till the day was made, referring the whole to the firſt Creation; when the light being firſt made by God, this light is ſuppoſed to travel forth, to ſend out its rays, and illuminate the medium, and then God dividing the light from darkneſs, called the light day, which was the framing of the day. And to this I ſuppoſe the learned Caſtalio had reſpect, when he rendred it, uſque ad conditum diem, even untill the day was framed. But the former ſeems to be the more probable underſtanding of it, and carries a greater elegance in it.

h בְּתוֹךְ לִבֶּךָ

V. 21. In the midſt of thy heart] The Hebrew may well be rendred, either in the midſt, in thy heart, (repeating the preposition ב, and putting it before the heart alſo, for without queſtion thoſe two are the ſame, the midſt of the man, and the heart) or elſe taking בְּתוֹךְ for a preposition, as ſometime it is uſed, it may be rendred, within thy heart; ſo Gen. 23. 6. thou art a mighty prince, בְּתוֹכֵנוּ, the Targum renders it בֵּינָנָא, inter nos, and ſo we, among us, and accordingly the LXXII. here reade no more than ἐν καρδίᾳ, in thy heart.

i מִכָּל־ מִשְׁמָר

V. 23. With all diligence] The onely difficulty in this place is in what notion the preposition מִן muſt be interpreted. The moſt ordinary ſignification of it, and that of which alone the Lexicographers take notice, is ab, ex, de, from, or out of; As Pſal. 19. 13. מִזֵּדִים חֲשֹׂךְ, keep thy ſervant from preſumptuous ſins, and innumerable the like. And if it be ſo here, as by the force of נְצֹר, keep, and by all reaſon it is, then מִשְׁמָר, cuſtody, muſt ſignifie the thing, which men are to be kept from, by a figure very frequent in Hebrew idiome, as when φόβος, fear, is oft taken for the danger that is to be feared, τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, 1 Pet. 2. 14. fear not their fear, i. e. the puniſhments, which they threaten, which are the object of fear; ſo when God is called the fear of Iſaak, the meaning is, he whom Iſaak feared, and which hath greater affinity with the phraſe here, εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, heard (we render it) in that he feared, but it ſignifies delivered from his fear, i. e. from that he feared, Heb. 5. 7. and ſo many other words in the like manner, ſee Note on Heb. 5. b. and Luk. 1. c. And thus Aquila and Theodotion render it ἀπὸ παντὸς φυλάγματος, from all guarding, i. e. from all that men are guarded from, as πᾶν σέβασμα, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. all worſhip, i. e. all that is worſhipped; and ſo I ſuppoſe the Chaldee underſtood it, who reade מִכָּל זְהוֹרָא, from all admonition, i. e. from all that men are admoniſhed or warned to take heed of: And this is evidently the moſt literal rendring of the place. But others take מִן in the notion of above, and then the rendring will be, keep thy heart above all keeping, i. e. (in the Hebrew dialect) more carefully than any thing elſe, (ſo in this ch. v. 3. מִשֶּׁמֶן, is above oyle, and ſo very frequently elſewhere, ſee ch. 8. 10, 11, 19.) to which the reaſon annext well accords, for out of it are the iſſues, literally the outgoings or beginnings of life: As in the natural body the heart is the beginning of life, ſo the will in the ſpiritual ſtate, πρόοδος, the proceſſion, ſaith Symmachus; and therefore as life is to be preferred before all things, ſo this muſt be guarded above all, as the greateſt treaſure, and in moſt danger to be loſt. Laſtly it is more generally thought to be uſed (as prepoſitions in Hebrew oft are) promiſcuouſly for ב, and then it will be rendred, keep with all keeping. This the LXXII. follow, reading πάσῃ φυλακῇ τήρει, keep or preſerve with all cuſtody, and ſo the Latin, omni cuſtodia, and the Syriack, ; with all caution. This latter, in reſpect to thoſe three Interpreters, I was to mention, but ſee no cauſe of doubt, but the firſt is to be adhered to.

k לְנֹכַח

V. 25. Right on] The Hebrew נֹכַח ſignifies right and ſtraight, and ſo לְנֹכַח, to that which is right and ſtraight, and ſo the Chaldee render it לִקְדָמוֹתָא, to that which is right, and ſo the Syr. and the LXXII. ὀρθὰ, right things, which I ſuppoſe the vulgar follows, when it reads, recta videant, ſee right things, rather than recta adverbially, ſtraight forward, or directly before thee. It is true נֹכַח is a preposition ſignifying ante, coram, before the eyes; but having here the preposition ב prefixt to it, we have reaſon to follow the interpretation of the Ancients, and render it as a noun. So in the latter part of the verſe, where we reade, look ſtraight, the Hebrew hath יְיַשְּׁרוּ, which in Hiphil ſignifies make right, or direct. Ordinarily it is joyned with way, or paths, ch. 3. 6. he ſhall direct thy paths, Pſal. 5. 8. direct my way before me; and ſo in all probability here, the word ways, or paths being underſtood, it is to be rendred, let thy eye-lids direct (i. e. direct thy ways) before thee, guide thee, ſee before thee, that thou adventure upon nothing that is ill: Thus the Chaldee and Syriack agreeing in the rendring it by נְהַרְצוּן, the Latin tranſlator of the Syriack ſupplies the defect, and reads dirigant viam tuam ante te, let thy eye-lids direct thy way before thee, the LXXII. reade paraphraſtically, πάλι βλεφαρὶς σοῦ γλύκανθ δίκαια, let thy eye-lids wink on, or look favourably on juſt things, according the latter, to the former part of the verſe.

l פַּלֵּס מַעְגַּל רַגְלֶיךָ

V. 26. Ponder the path of thy feet] The rendring of the Hebrew cannot be more literally than here it is; The onely thing worthy to be obſerved, is, that although the LXXII. their rendring be but paraphraſtical, yet the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 14. makes uſe of it; they render it ὀρθὰς τροχιὰς ποιεῖτε τοῖς ποσὶν, make ſtraight paths for the feet, which the Chaldee and Syriack more plainly expreſs, but not leſs paraphraſtically, אַעְבֵּר, &c. remove thy foot from evil paths; What follows in the latter part of the verſe, is variouſly underſtood, from the dubious uſe of יִכְנוֹ, which is both in the imperative, and the future, and ſo may be rendred either as an exhortation, or as a promiſe. As an exhortation, let all thy ways be eſtabliſhed, or as the LXXII. τὰς ὁδὸς σὺ κατεύθυνε, direct thy ways, or make them ſtraight; As a promiſe, ſo the Chaldee, סְתַקְּנָן, ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and ſo the Syriack and the vulgar Latin (which therefore I follow) omnes viæ tuæ ſtabilientur. But conſidering that this ſtability ſignifies proſperity, and the LXXII. their εὐοδοῦσθαι is frequently uſed for the ſame; in all reaſon, theſe too forms make but the ſame ſenſe, ponder thy actions, and be proſperous, being perfectly equivalent, with ponder them, and thou ſhalt certainly proſper.

a V. 3. For רַךְ, tender, the LXXII. reade ὑπήκοος, obedient, (joyning it with לְאָבִי, to my father) ſubject to my father, and loved by my mother; The word ſignifies ſoft, and they underſtood it in oppoſition to hard, or ſtubborn; but the Chaldee and Syriack reade סְפִנָּק, delicate, and the Latin, tenellus, all agreeing to joyn it to לְאָבִי, (tender to my father) as the LXXII. doe.

β V. 4. For יְחַזֵּק, from חָזַק, to retein and ſuſtein, they reade ἐρεισάτω, firmetur, in the latter ſenſe, and ſo the Syriack ܬܬܩܢ let it be firm, but the Chaldee יְקַבֵּל, let it receive, Symmachus, let it hold faſt, and ſo the Latin, ſuſcipiat, let it receive; But the ſenſe varies not, for ἐρεισάτω ὁ ἐμὸς πρὸς λόγος εἰς σὴν καρδίαν, let our word be confirmed on thy heart, is equivalent to, let thy heart receive or retein my words. What here follows in the end of the verſe, וְחָיֵה, and live, they omit, and ſo alſo the next paſſage, קְנֵה, &c. buy wiſedom, buy underſtanding; and joyn together φύλασσε ἐντολὰς, keep the commandments, v. 4. and μὴ ἐπιλάθου, forget them not, v. 5. and ſo doth the Arabick alſo. In like manner they omit the whole ſeventh verſe; But the Chaldee, Syriack, and Latin in both places retein the words which they omit; and here, the Syriack in the end of v. 4. after [and live] adde farther ܘܢܛܪ ܦܘܩܕܝ, &c. and my law as the apple of thine eye.

γ V. 6. For תִּשְׁמָרֶךָּ, ſhall keep thee, they reade ἀνθέξεται σου, ſhall cleave, or hold faſt to thee, fully expreſſing the ſenſe, and more cloſely obſerving the relation betwixt it, and not forſaking, precedent.

δ V. 8. For סַלְסְלֶהָ, from סלל, to exalt, they reade περιχαράκωσον αὐτὴν, encompaſs, or caſt a work about her; This they did from the uſe of סלל moſt frequent, for caſting up a way, exalting it, and ſo making it paſſable, whence our phraſe an high way, for that ε which is fitteſt for the traveller. In the latter part of the verſe for חִבְּקֶךָּ, &c. ſhe ſhall honour thee when thou embraceſt her, they reade τίμησον αὐτὴν, ἵνα σε ἀγαλλάσῃ, honour her, that ſhe may embrace thee.

ϛ V. 9. For לְוִיַּת, an addition, or ornament, they reade στέφανον, a crown, which is ſuch.

ζ V. 12. For לֹא תִכָּשֵׁל thou ſhalt not ſtumble, they reade οὐ κοπάσεις, thou ſhalt not be weary, from a double notion of the Hebrew כשל, for ſtumbling, and being weak, or faint, the latter the cauſe of the former, the wearineſs or faintneſs in a courſe, betraying to ſtumbling, and falling. But the Latin reads non habebis offendiculum, thou ſhalt not have a ſtumbling block, and ſo the reſt of the Interpreters.

η V. 13. For נִצְרָהּ כִּי הִוא חַיֶּיךָ, keep her, for ſhe is thy life, they reade φύλαξον αὐτὴν σεαυτῷ εἰς ζωὴν, keep her to thy ſelf for life, reading לְךָ, for כִּי, in all probability.

θ V. 15. For פָּרְעֵהוּ אַל תַּעֲבֹר בּוֹ, forſake it, ceaſe from it, paſs not in it, (not as we reade, paſs not by it, the Chaldee expreſſes the בּוֹ, by עִמְּהוֹן, with them, in their company) the LXXII. reade ἐν ᾧ ἂν τόπῳ στρατοπεδεύσωσι, μὴ εἰσέλθῃς ἐκεῖ, in whatſoever place they ſhall encamp, enter not there, by way of plain paraphraſe, but withall probably looking on ſome other notion of פרע, as that of otioſum eſſe, for that is reſting, ſetting up their ſtation, in any place, ſo the Syriack reads ܘܒܐܬܪ ܕܝܬܒ, &c. and in the place where they inhabit or dwell, paſs you not.

ι V. 16. For אִם לֹא יִכְשְׁלוּ, if they ſcandalize not, or cauſe not ſome body to fall, they reade, ἐὰν κοιμῶνται, they ſleep not, or lie not down to ſleep, ſetting that as an uſefull explication of what immediately preceded, their ſleep is taken away, (not that others take it away, but that they take it from themſelves, they apply not themſelves to ſleep) and thinking this of [except they cauſe to fall] ſufficiently expreſs'd before, by ἐὰν μὴ κακοποιήσωσι, unleſs they doe ſome miſchief.

κ V. 21. For אַל יָלוּזוּ מֵעֵינֶיךָ, let them not depart from thine eyes, they reade ὅπως μὴ ἐκλίπωσι σὲ αἱ πηγαί σου, that the fountains deſtitute thee not, probably reading עֵינֶיךָ, (without the prepoſition מִ) and ſo taking it in another notion of עַיִן, not for an eye, but a fountain. And thus the ſenſe is very good, and agrees well with the next verſe, for if the wiſe man's admonitions are life and health to them that receive them, i. e. if they cauſe both theſe to them, then are they fitly to be ſtyled πηγαί σου, thy fountains, from whence all good ſprings out to thee; but the Chaldee and all other Interpreters (ſave the Arabick, that conſtantly follow the LXXII.) reade as we doe, with the prepoſition, and ſo it muſt ſignifie eyes.

After the end of this Chapter, the LXXII. have λ a large addition, wherein they are followed by the Latin, (which generally in this book of Proverbs doth not adhere to them in their variations from the Hebrew) It is this, ὅτι γὰρ τὰς ἐκ δεξιῶν οἶδεν ὁ θεὸς, διεστραμμένας δέ εἰσιν αἱ ἐξ ἀριστερῶν, αὐτὸς δὲ ὀρθὰς ποιήσει τὰς τροχιάς σου, τὰς δὲ πορείας σου ἐν εἰρήνῃ προάξει, for God knows the right paths on the right hand, but thoſe on the left hand are perverted, but he ſhall make thy paths ſtraight, and advance thy ſteps in peace. But neither Chaldee nor Syriack have a word of this. And ſo it is to be looked on as a Scholion (though very ancient) which ſome reader had affixt to the Greek Copy, pertinent to the buſineſs of the verſes precedent, and as a deſcant on them.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

1. MY ſon, attend unto my wiſedom, and bow thine ear to my underſtanding:
2. That thou mayſt regard diſcretion, [a] and that thy lips may keep knowledge.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. Among all the acts of paternal and tender charity to the ſouls of men, there is none more precious and truly valuable, than that of communicating ſaving wiſedom and wholſome inſtruction to them; To that end this book is deſigned, and an humble docible heart is required to qualifie any man for the reaping the benefits and fruits of it; and if that may be found, infinite are the advantages of it for the regulating the affections, and the actions, and eſpecially the words. He that hath throughly imbibed the directions of it, will have more ſavour and taſte of good things than ever he had, will think that to be the onely true wiſedom, and affect and regard it as ſuch, which is here recommended to him, the practice of all duty toward God, and man, and himſelf, and accordingly his diſcourſe will be ſavoury and pious, profeſſing the joy he taſts in theſe exerciſes, and deſiring to recommend and propagate them to other men. [a]

3. For the lips of a ſtrange woman * drop as an hony comb, and her mouth is [β] ſmoother than oyl.

* are an hony-comb dropping, נֹפֶת תִּטֹּפְנָה

3. Of this ſort is that neceſſary advice, to beware of the flattery and deceits of ill women, whoſe beauty, and diſcourſe, and converſation, and the many allectives which that ſex is furniſhed with, are very winning and efficacious, promiſing the greateſt pleaſures and ſatisfactions imaginable. [β]

4. But her end is bitter as wormwood, ſharp as a two-edged ſword.

4. Which if they be believed, or hearkened to, will in the event prove moſt contrary to what they promiſe, bring all the ſadneſs and bitterneſs, the moſt painfull and noxious effects, infinitely more ſharp and dolorous than the ſo ſhort enjoyments were apprehended pleaſurable.

5. [γ] Her feet go down to death, her ſteps take hold on hell.

5. And beyond the temporal miſeries which attend this ſin inſeparably and indiſpenſably, the eternal deſtruction is moſt formidable, which is the juſt reward of it, and will be ſure to overtake it. [γ] † ſhe walks not the — ‖ unſtable or wandring ſhe knows not whither.

6. † [a] Leſt thou ſhouldſt ponder the path of life, her ways are ‖ moveable that thou canſt not know them.

6. Nor can any better event be rationally hoped to the temptations which are tendred from ſuch an hand: A whore being the moſt vile and miſerable creature in the world, engaging her ſelf in a courſe moſt diametrically contrary as to all vertue, ſo to all felicity, the joys and comforts of this or a better life, and proſtituting her ſelf to all the diſmal uncertainties, and ill conſequences of an endleſs inſatiate luſt, which carry her headlong, none knows whither, into a gulph of endleſs woe. [a]

7. Hear ye me therefore O ye children, and depart not from the words of my mouth.
8. Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her houſe.

7, 8. This makes it a ſeaſonable and neceſſary advice to all that fear God, or expect good from him, in this or another life, to all the children of wiſedom, profeſſours of piety, that they be moſt exactly cautious in this matter, that they yield not themſelves the leaſt liberty, or indulge to the beginnings of this ſin, that they keep as circumſpectly as is poſſible from entring into the confines of this temptation, and on the contrary remove to the greateſt diſtance from all occaſions and opportunities thereof.

9. Leſt thou give thy honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel.
10. Leſt ſtrangers be filled with thy wealth, thy labours be in the houſe of a ſtranger.

9, 10. If this advice be not timely obeyed, it will be hard, if not impoſſible, to keep out of the ſnare, and in that not onely thy ſoul, but all that is precious to any man is ſure to be moſt ruinouſly engaged, thy reputation utterly deſtroyed, by ſo baſe and ſcandalous and ſottiſh a ſin, thy body, and life it ſelf, the one as ſure to be decayed, the other ſhortened by this courſe, as it could by falling into the power of the moſt implacable enemy; And for thy wealth, and fruit of thy labours, and induſtry, and the divine bleſſing, this ſin is the certain blaſting and conſuming of all; ſhe that enticeth thee to her unlawfull bed, will be ſure to lay hold on thy eſtate, and enrich her own family with the ſpoils of thine.

11. And thou mourn at the laſt, when thy fleſh and thy body are conſumed.
12. And ſay, how have I hated inſtruction, and my heart deſpiſed reproof?
13. And have not obey'd the voice of my teachers, nor enclined mine ear to them that inſtructed me.
14. I was almoſt in all [b] evil in the midſt of the congregation, and aſſembly.

11, 12, 13, 14. Thus is it evident before hand, what cauſe of repentance and indignation at himſelf and his own folly, this ſin, if indulged to, is ſure to bring upon any man, when he hath exhauſted and rotted his very fleſh, and brought himſelf to utter ruine, he will (too late to mend his temporal condition) moſt ſadly bewail and lament his madneſs, wiſh every vein of his heart that he had taken the advice I now give him, betimes, that he had believed the ſerious and ſad truth of ſuch documents as theſe, by deſpiſing of which, and ſo adventuring on ſome beginnings and degrees of this ſin, he at laſt comes to be a moſt ſcandalous ſpectacle of miſery and woe to all the people, marked and pointed at for a wretched ſottiſh creature, that hath brought himſelf to the brink of endleſs ruine, by his own imperſwaſible folly and obſtinacy. [b]

15. Drink waters out of thine own ciſtern, and running rivers out of thine own well.

15. Having thus repreſented to thee the dangers and waſting miſeries of inconſtinence, the advice will be but ſeaſonable and neceſſary, that every man reſolve to ſatisfie himſelf with his own wife, and moſt ſtrictly abſtain from wandring luſts.

16. * [c] Let

c 16. This ſhall (beſide all other felicities) yield thee the comforts of a numerous and flouriſhing offspring, which as ſtreams, or rivers from a fountain, ſhall flow from a chaſt conjugal bed.

16. * c Let thy fountains be diſperſed abroad, and rivers of waters in thy ſtreets. * Thy fountains ſhall be.. יִפֻּצוּ

17. This ſhall give thee aſſurance, that the children thou owneſt are truly thine, whereas thoſe which come from the ſtrange woman, and call thee father, 'tis very uncertain whoſe they are, ſhe being no encloſure of thine, but common to others alſo.

17. † Let them be onely thine own, and not ſtrangers with thee. † They ſhall.. יִהְיוּ

♪ 18. This ſhall ſecure God's bleſſing of fruitfulneſs to thy wife, and that flouriſhing ſtate to thy offspring, which baſtard ſlips cannot pretend to; This ſhall yield thee a conſtant never fading pleaſure in the love and embraces of her, whoſe purity and loyalty thou haſt ſo long been acquainted with, and the longer thou art afforded this bleſſing, the more pure unallayed ſatisfaction thou wilt find in it, (when wandring luſts end in ſatiety and miſery) and being thus furniſhed by her, thou haſt no temptation to alienе thy ſelf from her, and take any other into thine embraces.

18. ‖ Let thy fountain ♪ be bleſſed, and rejoyce in the wife of thy youth. ‖ Thy fountain ſhall.. יְהִי

d 19. Thou mayſt alwaies find matter of pleaſure and kindneſs in her, the ſame that the ſtag, or rain-deer doth in his beloved mate, which he hath long aſſociated with, and ſo perfectly confine thy love to her, and never wiſh for the ſociety of any other, or be weary of hers.

19. Let her be as d the * loving hind, and pleaſant roe; let her breaſts ſatiſfie thee at all times, and be thou raviſht always with her love. * hind of loves, or loved hind.

20, 21. If all this be not ſufficient to engage thee to a conſtancy to thine own wife, and an exact abſtinence from all others, if the true joy and delights reſulting continually from the one, ballanced with the conſequent ſatieties and miſeries of the other, be not competent motives effectually to prevail with thee; then ſure this one determent may work on thee, the conſideration of the law of marriage, made by God in Paradiſe, that every man ſhall forſake all others and cleave to his own wife, and the ſevere judgments threatned againſt the violaters of this obligation, and the no poſſibility, that, be it never ſo cloſe, it ſhould be kept ſecret from God's all-ſeeing eye, which diſcerns and obſerves, and will ſeverely avenge all ſuch enormous ſins in all that are guilty of them.

20. And why wilt thou, my ſon, be raviſht with a ſtrange woman, and embrace the boſom of a ſtranger?

21. For the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings.

22, 23. And an eminent act of his vengeance and providence it is, that this ſort of ſinners ſeldom goes unpuniſhed in this life; His ſin, without any other aid, conſtantly brings ſore puniſhments upon him, ſeiſes on him, as the Hound or Vulture on its prey, or as the Lictor and Serjeant on the malefactour, lays him under the cuſtody of ſome noiſome diſeaſe. His unnurtured unſavoury life, his diſobedience to the laws of marital chaſtity, and continence, is the exhauſting his body, and perhaps eſtate, and good name, and all that is valuable, and brings him to a ſcandalous death; he goes out unpittied, and ſcorned, as guilty of the higheſt folly and miſtakes, (as well as injuſtice, and ſuch like enormous crimes againſt his wife, and others, and himſelf) he thought he had purſued his pleaſure, and at leaſt gratified his ſenſes, but in the end he finds it quite contrary, he acquires nothing but loathſome maladies, and untimely death, and ſo appears cheated of all that he projected to gain by his ſin, beſide the yet ſadder loſſes, and pains both of body and ſoul to all eternity.

22. His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and he ſhall be holden with the cords of his ſins.

Annotations on Chap. V.

V. 6. Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ponder] That פֶּן is here a פֶּן תְּפַלֵּס to be rendred not, and תְּפַלֵּס applied to the ſtrange woman, whoſe feet and ſteps are mentioned v. 6. is agreed on by all ancient Interpreters, and there is no cauſe of doubting it, לֹא תְרַכֵּא, ſhe goes not in the paths of life, ſaith the Chaldee, and ſo the Syriack, in the ſame words; ὁδοὺς ζωῆς οὐκ ἐπιβαίνει, ſhe enters not on the ways of life, ſay the LXXII. and the Latin, applying it to her feet precedent, per ſemitam vitæ non ambulant, they walk not by the path of life. Which agree alſo to give us the right notion of פלס here, for directing (the ſteps) i. e. walking, or going, which it is acknowledged to ſignifie, (as well as pondering) and which properly belongs to it in this place, the ſteps being mentioned in the former verſe; To this interpretation agrees that which follows, her paths are נָעוּ, wandring, vagi, ſaith the Latin, σφαλεραὶ, dangerous, ſay the LXXII. (becauſe they that wander run into danger) but unſtable, ſaith the Chaldee, לָא תֵדַע, literally, not to know, i. e. either thou canſt not know them, non ſcies, ſaith the Interlinear, οὐκ εὐγνωστοὶ, they are not eaſie to be known, ſay the LXXII. and ſo the Latin, (and the Syriack) inveſtigabiles, ſecret and inveſtigable; or rather ſhe knows not, i. e. ſhe wanders ſhe knows not whither, ſo the Chaldee, וְלָא יְדַעְנָא, and ſhe knows not, which the learned Caſtalio well expreſſes, errantibus neſcio quo ejus itineribus, her goings wandring I know not whither, i. e. to all the ill imaginable. This ſixth verſe ſeems deſigned as the character of a naughty woman to enforce the former exhortation, of not yielding to her moſt flattering and promiſing temptations.

V. 14. In all evil] The queſtion here is whether b בְּכָל רָע all evil ſignifie all ſin, or all miſery. The word רָע is common to both, but the context ſeems to reſpect the latter rather, the miſery being that, v. 11. that brings the unclean perſon to his ſad complaints of himſelf, and the foreſight of which is uſed as an argument to deter all men from falling into ſin; And thus the ancient Interpreters ſeem to have underſtood it, בְּכָל בִּישִׁין, in all ſhames, i. e. in a moſt reproachfull, ridiculous condition, the ſcorn and laughing-ſtock of the people, and ſo the Syriack alſo. The Arabick, into all miſery, of which alſo the LXXII. their εἰς πᾶσαν κακῶσιν, and the Latin's in omni malo may fitly be interpreted. Were it underſtood of ſin, it were then an expreſſion of godly ſorrow, and a reſcue from the power of this ſin, by repentance: But the intention of the writer looks not that way; but rather to the ſad condition that at laſt the adulterer finds himſelf reduced to for want of timely care, and therefore that is more probably to be pitched on.

V. 16. Let thy fountains, &c.] The Hebrew here c and יָפֻצוּ and v. 17, and 18. reads in the future יִפָּצוּ, ſhall be diſperſed, יִהְיוּ, ſhall be, and יִהְי, ſhall be; then in the latter part of v. 18. וְשׂמַח, and rejoyce, &c. And thus the Chaldee נְשַׁפְּכִין, thy fountains ſhall abound, יְהֵין, they ſhall be, and יְהֵוֹי, it ſhall be; Yet the LXXII. and the Latin reade in the imperative, ἐκχείσθω, let them be poured out abundantly; as for the οὐκ, not] which the ordinary Copies prefix, it is viſibly an errour in the Scribe, which the Alexandrian Copy hath mended, and the Arabick appears not to have read.

d V. 19. The loving hind] The Hebrew reade אַיֶּלֶת אֲהֲבִים, the hind of loves, which the Chaldee and Syriack render literally, as the LXXII. ἔλαφος φιλίας, the hind of love, as the following phraſe πῶλος σῶν χαρίτων, the ſole of thy favours; the Latin fitly render the ſenſe, chariſſima cerva, gratiſſimus hinnulus, the moſt dear and moſt acceptable: This therefore is to be preferred before our reading in the active, the loving hind.] The onely difficulty is, whether this do not refer to the cuſtom of Princes and great perſons, to have ſuch creatures tame, to accompany them wherein they took pleaſure; And thus ſure the LXXII. and Latin underſtood it, who for the roe, reade πῶλος, and hinnulus, in the maſculine; But the Hebrew יַעֲלַת is in the feminine, and then the moſt obvious interpretation may be beſt, that his wife ſhall be to him the continual, moſt delightfull companion of life, of whom he is never weary, as the ſtag, or other ſuch male creature of the field is always pleaſed, and never weary of the company of his beloved mate, ſome female, with which he hath long aſſociated.

a V. 2. For וְדַעַת שְׂפָתֶיךָ יִנְצֹרוּ, and let thy lips preſerve knowledge, the LXXII. reade αἴσθησις ἣν ἐντέλλεταί σοι, the underſtanding of my lips is commanded thee, or as other copies have it, (which the Arabick alſo follows) αἴσθησιν ἣν ἐντέλλομαι, I command or appoint thee the underſtanding of my lips; It ſeems they reade שְׂפָתַי, my lips, for שְׂפָתֶיךָ, thy lips; and then the ἐντέλλομαι, I command, was but expreſſive of the imperative יִנְצֹרוּ, let them keep.

c V. 3. For וְחֵלֶק מִשֶּׁמֶן חִכָּהּ, and ſmooth above oyle is her palate, καὶ ὑπὲρ ἔλαιον φάρυγξ αὐτῆς, (ſaith Symmachus) they reade πρὸς καιρὸν λιπαίνει σὸν φαρύγγα, for a time ſhe fattens thy palate; But I make no doubt, πρὸς χάριν, for favour, or by way of flattery, ſhould be the reading (though the Arabick reading for a ſhort time, ſhew that the other was read at the time of that tranſlation) For as חֵלֶק ſignifies ſmoothing and flattering, and ſo is uſed, Prov. 7. 5. as here, concerning the ſtrange woman, ſo the LXXII. there render it, ἐὰν σε λόγοις τοῖς πρὸς χάριν ἐμβάλῃ, if ſhe ſet upon thee with words for favour, i. e. flattering ſpeeches; ſo chap. 28. 23. for מַחֲלִיק, he that flattereth with his lips, they reade γλωσσοχαρίζωμενος, he that hath grace, i. e. flattery in his tongue; ſo Ezek. chap. 12. 24. μαντευόμενοι τὰ πρὸς χάριν, prophecying things for favour, or flattering divines: And then this being the reading, their interpretation is no unfit paraphraſe of the paſſage, though it be not a literal rendring of it, ſhe fattens thy palate for favour, i. e. ſhe flatters thee extremely, which is all one with her mouth is ſmoother than oyle.

γ V. 5. For [Her feet go down to death, &c.] they reade οἱ πόδες καταγουσι τοὺ χαιμῶνας αὐτῆ ὡ δυνατὰ εἰς τὸν ἅδην, πόδα ἴχνη αὐτῆς οὐ μὴ σαλευθῆναι, for the feet of folly (by which word ſins of that kind, viz. uncleanneſs, are frequently meant) lead thoſe that uſe it after death to hades, but the footſteps thereof are not ſuſteined; merely by way of paraphraſe, wherein yet the double ſignification of תמך is reſpected, which as it ſignifies to apprehend, or lay hold of, ſo it ſignifies alſo to ſuſtein or ſupport.

δ V. 18. For בָּרוּךְ, bleſſed, they reade σοὶ ἰδίᾳ, to thee alone, perhaps reading as v. 17. לְבַדֶּיךָ, to thee alone, perhaps onely by way of paraphraſe, accounting that wife onely the happy fountain which was kept proper to the husband. So v. 19. inſtead of let her breaſts ſatisfie thee at all times, they reade by way of paraphraſe clearly, ὁμιλάτω σοι, ἴδιά ἰδία ἡγείσθω σε, μὴ σωιέτω σοι ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, let her company with thee, let her be accounted thy peculiar, let her aſſociate with thee at every ſeaſon; In the end of that verſe for תִּשְׁגֶּה, חָמִיד, be raviſht always, they reade συμπεριτεθείμενος πολλοσὸς ἔσῃ, being carried about (with her love) thou ſhalt be long-liv'd, rendring the adverb תָּמִיד, continually] by carried about, and reading תִּשְׁגֶּה as if it had been from שָׁגָא, which ſignifies to multiply, or encreaſe, ſo v. 20. they render it by πολὺς ἴσθι, be thou much, whereby they do not amiſs expreſs the true meaning of being extraordinarily with her, which we ordinarily expreſs by a like phraſe of being great with her.

ε V. 23. For, In the multitude of his folly he ſhall be deceived] they reade ἐν ᾗ πλάνῃ τῆς βιότητος ἐξεβρίφθη: καὶ ἀπωλέσθο δι' ἀφροσύνω, he is caſt out from the length of his days, and periſhed through his folly,] clearly by way of paraphraſe, therein reſpecting the promiſe, which their former rendring of v. 19. had made to him, that continued conſtant to his own wife; There they had ſaid πολλοσὸς ἴσθι, thou ſhalt have long life, and in proportion being here to expreſs the miſcarriage and folly of the adulterer, they ſay he is caſt out, and looſeth, forfeiteth the forementionʼd length of days, and periſhes for his ſad miſtake.

CHAP. VI.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. Among all the actions of civil life, wherein our eſtates, and ſo our ſecular prudence is moſt nearly concerned, there is none more highly conſiderable than that of ſuretiſhip for other men; That which moſt frequently tempts a man to it, is the importunity of ſuch as he hath long aſſociated with; The cloſe league which hath been betwixt them, the communication of ſecrets, &c. ſeems to exact this from him, and to make it but reaſonable for him to yield to it. But the anſwer to this appearance of argument is very obvious; The yielding to this ſeeming office of kindneſs to a companion or friend, is really the obliging and ſubjecting thee to the creditour, i. e. to a ſtranger and enemy. And when thou haſt once thus enſnared and entrapt thy ſelf, though it be but by ſpeaking a few words, thou art as faſt and as irreverſibly engaged as the ſilly beaſt that is faln into the hunters toils which were cunningly laid for him; All the difference is, that thou art a captive of thine own choice, thine own act, whether of tongue or handwriting, hath brought this ruine upon thee.

1. MY ſon, if thou be ſurety for thy * friend, † if thou haſt ſtricken thy hand with a ſtranger:
2. Thou art ſnared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

* companion לְרֵעֶךָ
† thou haſt תָּקַעְתָּ ſo the Chaldee, Syriack, LXXII. and Latin.

3. As it is, thy kindneſs to thy friend is become thy ſnare, and hath put thee into the power of thy enemy, and it nearly concerns thee to diſintangle thy ſelf; and there is but one way poſſible to doe it, to haſten to thy companion, who hath drawn thee in, and uſe all importunity to prevail with him to get thee releaſed again.

3. Doe this now, my ſon, and deliver thy ſelf, ‖ when thou art come into the hand of thy friend, go [a] * humble thy ſelf, and make ſure thy friend.

‖ ſeeing כִּי
* ſtir up thy ſelf, and prevail with

4, 5. This is ſo great and cloſe a concernment of thine, that thou canſt not with any prudence ſleep or reſt till thou have done it, conſidering the danger that attends the leaſt neglect or procraſtination; even as great and preſſing as that of the deer or bird, which is ſhot or caught in a gin, and muſt expect ſpeedily to be deſtroyed, ruin'd irreverſibly, if by ſome ſpeedy courſe thou be not reſcued.

4. Give not ſleep to thy eyes, nor ſlumber to thy eye-lids,
5. Deliver thy ſelf as a roe from [b] the † hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

† ſnare, or ſtroke, and as——

6,7,8. As in this, the leaſt delay is moſt pernicious, ſo in all things elſe, ſluggiſhneſs or negligence of thoſe things which are ſo nearly our concernments, ought to be avoided; And to that, if we need any inſtructour, we may go to one of the leaſt and meaneſt of creatures, the ant or piſmire, which hath no proviſion made for it by any either man or other creature, hath none ſet over them, as the cattel of the field have, either to preſcribe them labour, and ſet them to it, or to provide them food, none of their own kind to conduct and rule them, as the bee and locuſt have, and yet this little creature lives in ſociety, great multitudes of them together, and in the ſummer, eſpecially the harveſt time, they go abroad, and bring home great ſtore of proviſion from all quarters, which they lay up moſt carefully (and after tend it, that it take no harm; when it is in danger to putrifie, they bring it out and air it; when it is apt to grow, as about ſeed time, they bite off the ends of it) and being thus gathered and preſerved, it maintains them liberally the whole year about; In all this, every one of them voluntarily labouring as hard as if he had a ſevere * taskmaſter or exacter placed over him. And this certainly is a moſt eminent degree of providence which nature teacheth them, and matter of imitation for thee, both in relation to thy temporal and thy ſpiritual eſtate, by diligence to improve all advantages to thy good of either ſort; and if thou do not tranſcribe this copy in ſome meaſure, thou art not ſo wiſe as all reaſon obliges thee to be, and thou wilt have the ſmart as well as reproach of this folly, that want and penury of all ſorts which is the ſluggards portion.

* τὸν ἀναγκαστήν, LXXII.

6. Go to the ant thou ſluggard, [a] conſider her ways, and be wiſe:

9, 10, 11. For ſo, inevitably, it is; and that ſounds a moſt rational and bitter reproach to thoſe that are guilty of this ſin: Such there are, good ſtore, in the world, ſleepy, ſlothfull perſons, which can never think they have been idle long enough, are always coveting and projecting for, and craving more reſt and quiet and ſecurity in ſin, cannot be perſwaded to labour, to excite their faculties, but give them up ſupinely to doing nothing, or worſe than nothing, an unprofitable, or, which is more criminous, a pleaſurable vicious life, have continual averſions to all exerciſe either of body or mind, to diligence in their particular calling, to the neceſſary duty of prayer to God, to works of mercy (any charitable office) to men, to reſiſting and ſubjugating their own paſſions, and the like; This is a moſt ſcandalous and deteſtable ſin, and (to make it more reaſonable for us to avoid it) 'tis that, which, as was ſaid, will betray him that is guilty of it, to all kinds of want, and extreme penury, ghoſtly and bodily. For example; He that neglects the works of his calling, and is not laborious in that, ſoon comes to utter beggery, in reſpect of the things of this world; he that neglects duties of piety, comes to want that grace which is promiſed to the importunate asker, and to none elſe; he that neglects duties to men, hath all the curſes of this and another world; he that is not at the trouble to mortifie his own unruly appetites, is ſoon overrun and laid waſte by them. All theſe ſorts of miſery, though he expects them not, but in confidence of ſafety, goes on in his idle ſlothfull courſe, will when he little thinks of it, knock at his door, as a traveller or way-goer to an hoſt, that knows nothing of his coming; and when it comes, it comes with a vengeance, there is no way of reſiſting, and as little of ſupporting it; This traveller is ſtout and armed, and will force his entrance, and lay all waſte, where he enters.

9. How long wilt thou ſleep, O ſluggard? when wilt thou ariſe from thy ſleep?
10. Yet a [γ] little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep,
11. So ſhall thy poverty come as [δ] one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

12. Among other moſt noxious effects of idleneſs and unprofitableneſs, one deſerves to be taken notice of and moſt carefully avoided; that of whiſpering and backbiting, calumniating and detracting, labouring nothing ſo much as to deprave and defame the actions of other men: This is an eminent fruit of ſloth and wickedneſs combin'd together, and a moſt diabolical ſin.

12. A naughty perſon, *a wicked man, walketh with [d] a †froward mouth.

* A man of Belial
† depraving, perverting

13. Such an one when he hath nothing of weight to ſay againſt a man, will by ſignificative geſtures of all ſorts, give intimations of ſome grand matters, and ſo perſwade others, without laying any particular to his charge, that he is a moſt peſtilent fellow.

13. He winketh with his eyes, he ſpeaketh with his feet, and teacheth with his fingers.

14. Fro-

14. Frowardneſs is in his heart, he deviſeth miſchief continually, he ſ ſoweth diſcord.

14. His thoughts, which have no good buſineſs to take them up, are continually imployed in projecting what miſchief he may doe, and are never more gratefully buſied than when he is a cauſing debate among neighbours: One ſuch perſon in a ‖ City is enough to embroil the whole, and put it into a tumult. ſ ‖ So the LXXII.

15. Therefore ſhall his calamity come ſuddenly, ſuddenly ſhall he be broken without remedy.

15. And as to idle perſons, v. 11. ſo to this, above all, a proportionable vengeance is to be expected; He that is of this temper, ſeldom fails to be met with in his kind, to fall unexpectedly by ſome ſecret hand, (parallel to the ſecrecy of his detracting whiſpering humour) and when he falls, he can never be recovered again, he periſhes unpitied, unregarded.

16. These ς ſix things doth the Lord hate, yea ſeven are an abomination to him.

17. A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that ſhed innocent blood.

18. An heart that deviſeth wicked imaginations, feet that be ſwift in running to miſchief.

19. A falſe witneſs that ‖ ζ ſpeaketh lies, and him that ſoweth diſcord among brethren.

16, 17, 18, 19. And there is all reaſon for this; for as there be ſeven ſins which be very hatefull to God, ſo this is a compound of five, if not of all ſeven, of them. The ſeven are theſe, 1. pride or haughtineſs; 2. lying or fraudulence; 3. guilt of blood; 4. malice or projecting of evil; 5. a pleaſure in miſchieving any; 6. falſe witneſs or calumny; 7. cauſing of diſcord or debates among thoſe that live friendly together. Of theſe, the ſecond, the fourth, the fifth, the ſixth and ſeventh are evidently in this of the detractour or calumniatour, ſee v. 12, 14. And that pride is the root of it, and blood-guiltineſs the effect of it, cannot be doubted; the pride and high opinion of our ſelves, and deſire to be eſteemed above all, conſtantly inciting us to defame others; and the debates and diſcord which are cauſed by back-biting, ending generally in feuds and the bloodieſt murthers. And this is a competent indication how odious this ſin is, and how puniſhable in the ſight of God. ς ‖ breatheth יָפִיחַ ζ

20. My ſon keep thy father's commandment, and forſake not the law of thy mother.

21. Bind them continually upon thy heart, and tie them about thy neck.

22. When thou goeſt it η ſhall lead thee, when thou ſleepeſt it ſhall keep thee, and when thou awakeſt it ſhall talk with thee.

23. For θ the commandment is a lamp, and the law is light; and reproofs of inſtruction are the way of life.

24. To keep thee ι from the evil woman, from the flattery of the tongue of a ſtrange woman.

20, 21, 22, 23, 24. In the next place, a principal caution there is for all young men, of which they are to take an extraordinary care; 'Tis that which all parents timely warn their children of, and it concerns them to lay it up, and never forget it, to carry it continually about with them, as the Jews do their Phylacteries, that it may be a perpetual memorative, never out of their ſight; If they doe ſo, they will have the comfort and benefit of it, at home and abroad, ſleeping and waking, in all the varieties of their life; they will ſee and diſcern that timely, which they that diſcern not, run into all the moſt noxious and ruinous courſes; And what is this ſo important a caution, thus pompouſly introduced? Why onely this, that thou be ſure to keep thee from that horrible ſin of fornication or adultery, and not ſuffer thy ſelf by whatſoever flatteries and deceits, by ſoft and fair ſpeeches, the common addreſs of whores, to be ſeduced and enſnared in it. η θ ι

25. κ Luſt not after her beauty in thine heart, neither let her take thee with her eye-lids.

26. For by means of a whoriſh woman a man is brought to a * piece of bread: and the adultereſs will hunt for the precious life.

25, 26. Whatever allurement is in her beauty, that may warm and attract thy love, whatever invitation in her behaviour, and amiableneſs of her looks or addreſs, thou art moſt nearly concerned to guard and fortifie thy ſelf, that thou beeſt not captivated thereby, that thou permit not any unclean deſire to kindle ſo much as in thine heart; for as that is adultery in the eyes of that God that requires purity of the heart as well as actions, (ſee Matt. 5. 8, 28.) ſo moſt ſad and diſmall are the effects of this paſſion, as by many thouſand examples hath been evidenced, both in relation to mens eſtates, and alſo their lives; Many great eſtates have been utterly ruin'd, and brought to the ſmalleſt pittance, by that ſin, and many bodies have been exhauſted, and brought to noiſome diſeaſes, and untimely death; the very life and ſoul, and whatſoever is moſt precious, is the prey that this vulture gorges herſelf on. κ * cake כִּכַּר

27. Can a man take fire in his boſome, and his clothes not be burnt?

28. Can one go on hot coals, and his feet not be burnt?

29. So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whoſoever toucheth her ſhall not be innocent.

27, 28, 29. It is as imaginable that a man ſhall put fire in his boſome, or walk upon live coals, and receive no harm from them, either to his garments or his fleſh, as that a man ſhall adventure on this ſin of adultery, and not exhauſt and ruine himſelf by that courſe; A fire in his bones, and a waſting to his eſtate, are the regular, natural, inevitable attendants of this ſin: But that is not all; The wrath and ſevere puniſhments of God are threatned againſt it, and ſhall purſue, as a moſt juſt revenge, every man that ſhall be guilty of it.

30. Men do not † deſpiſe a thief, if he ſteal to ſatisfie his ſoul when he is hungry.

31. But if he be found he ſhall reſtore ‖ ſeven fold, he ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe.

32. But whoſo committeth adultery with a woman lacketh * underſtanding, † he ϱ that doeth it deſtroyeth his own ſoul.

30, 31, 32. For indeed this ſin hath a vaſt aggravation of guilt, compared with moſt other ſins; Theft, for example, is not near ſo heinous; That is ſuppoſed to be committed upon the importunity of hunger, to ſatisfie the neceſſities of nature, and accordingly the puniſhment by the Law apportioned to that, is that of reſtitution, Exod. 22. 1. five oxen for an ox, four ſheep for a ſheep, and how oft ſoever he ſteals, thus ſhall he pay, as far as all his wealth or poſſeſſions will extend; which was very regularly provided by the Law againſt thoſe which ſhall by ſtealth invade other mens poſſeſſions. But adultery is not capable of this excuſe or extenuation, that it is done to ſatisfie any natural want, God having afforded a regular courſe to ſatisfie all ſuch deſires as are planted in men by nature, and adultery is a violation of that courſe, a breach of the Laws of Wedlock, neither proceeds it from any other defect or want but what is moſt unexcuſable, a want of a good and orderly will and choice, (ſee Note on ch. 4. i) an effect of great inordinacy of deſires, which hath raſed out that Law of reaſon and juſtice imprinted in the ſoul, and ſo it is a moſt wilfull, enormous, waſting and crying ſin, and that which by political Laws is awarded with death. † deal reproachfully with ‖ ſeven times * a heart, לֵב † whoſo corrupteth his own ſoul, he ſhall doe this, or whoſo deſtroyeth his life, &c. ϱ

33. To which moſt juſt puniſhment, is added that other of perpetual ignominy, and reproach, which inſeparably and conſtantly attends this ſin.

33. A wound and diſhonour ſhall he get, and his reproach ſhall not be wiped away.

34, 35. And as the law directs this revenge, ſo there is ſmall hope the guilty ſhall eſcape the utmoſt ſeverity of it in this caſe; The wronged husband is his proſecutour, 34. For jealouſie is the rage of a man, therefore he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance.

35. He will not ‖ regard any ranſome, neither will he reſt content, though thou giveſt many gifts.

‖ accept the face of יִשָּׂא פָּנֵי and he is ſure to be excited and armed with the utmoſt rage that jealouſie can ſuggeſt; and that is as cruel and implacable as the grave, Cant. 8. 6. In other injuries ſome reparation may poſſibly be made; but here 'tis not imaginable, no bribe can be thought on ſo great as may hope to propitiate or intercede for him; he will never be perſwaded to let ſuch a wrong paſs unpuniſhed, but will be ſure to purſue to death him that hath thus provoked him.

Annotations on Chap. VI.

a תִּתְרַפַּס

V. 3. Humble thy ſelf, and make ſure thy friend] The rendring of the Hebrew, הִתְרַפֵּס וּרְהַב, might be difficult and uncertain, did not all the ancient Interpreters joyn together in one notion, to ſecure us of the true and literal meaning of it. The Hebrew רָפַס and רָפַשׁ ſignifies not onely to tread on, but to trouble; ſo Ezek. 32. 2. וְתִרְפֹּס, and troubleſt the waters with thy feet, and ſo Ezek. 34. 18. ſo Prov. 25. 26. מַעְיָן נִרְפָּשׁ, a troubled fountain; Hence here in the reciprocal ſenſe, it may fitly note troubling, exciting, ſtirring up himſelf. Then for רָהַב, that ſignifies to prevail, Iſa. 3. 5. and ſo both together, join'd with the antecedents and conſequents, will thus be rendred, go ſtir up thy ſelf, and prevail with thy companion, i. e. as ſoon as ever thou ſeeſt thy danger by ſuretiſhip, make haſte, and importune him for whom thou art bound, to free thee preſently from thy engagement, give not ſleep to thine eyes, &c. v. 4. without any delay take this courſe to diſintangle thy ſelf; The Chaldee reade נְגַר הַבֵּיל, excite him, ſtir him up quickly, i. e. ſolicite him, and ſo the Syriack in the ſame words, and the LXXII. Μὴ ἀναδύμενος, παρόξυνε δέ, be not remiſs, but provoke, i. e. ſtir him up: uſing the phraſe ἀναδύμενος, as it belongs to the coward, or ſluggard, to which importunity of ſolicitation is moſt contrary; as Luk. 18. 1. ἐκκακεῖν, which is all one, is oppoſed to praying always; ſo alſo the Latin, feſtina, ſuſcita amicum tuum, haſten, ſtir up thy friend, παρόρμησον, ſaith Symmachus, incite, i. e. importune him till thou prevail.

b מִיַּד

V. 5. From the hand of the hunter] The Hebrew here hath no more but מִיַּד, which the Vulgar render de manu, from the hand, the LXXII. ἀπὸ βρόχων, from the ſnares. But as the verb יָדָה, ſignifies to dart, or ſhoot, or throw, ſo the noun יָד, is not onely an hand, but a blow, or ſtroke, or any kind of hurt; The Chaldee, Deut. 32. 36. render it מָחַת, a ſtroke, and ſo frequently elſewhere; Here they reade נְשַׁבָּא, which the Latin renders pedica, a ſnare, or toil, but the Tranſlatour of the Syriack (which uſeth the ſame) plagis, ſtrokes, and ſo it moſt probably ſignifies the wound, or ſhot, or ſtroke, that the roe receives from the hunter's arrow, or dart. In the latter part of the verſe, for מִיַּד יָקוּשׁ, from the hand of the fowler, the Chaldee and Syriack reade מִן פּוּחָא, from the ſnare; and ſo the LXXII. ἐκ παγίδος, from the ſnare, but this probably as a paraphraſe of the fowlers hand which layeth the ſnare, and into which it comes by being caught there. And ſo here, the double uſe of יָד, both for a ſtroke and an hand, hath a ſpecial elegance in it.

V. 7. Guide] For קָצִין, a captain, or guide, the ancient Interpreters ſeem to have read ſomewhat elſe, either קַיִץ, ſummer-fruit, or קְצִיצִים, in the plural, in the ſame ſenſe; for the Chaldee reads חֲצָדָא, which, from חָצַר, to mow, ſignifies any thing that is mowed, or reaped, and is uſed for the time of harveſt in the next verſe; and herein the Syriack agrees with the Chaldee, and the LXXII. vary but little, reading γεώργιον, husbandry, meaning, I ſuppoſe, the fruit of husbandry, as 1 Cor. 3. 9. thoſe whom by Paul's preaching God had brought in to the faith, are call'd God's γεώργιον, husbandry, by the ſame proportion, that they are his οἰκοδομὴ, building, the one ripe for harveſt as the other for habitation. Onely the Latin of all the ancients reade ducem, captain, which agrees ſo well with the other two that follow, that we have no reaſon to doubt of the preſent reading.

d מִקְשׁוּת פֶּה

V. 12. A froward mouth] The Hebrew reads עִקְּשׁוּת פֶּה, perverſeneſs of mouth, by which the Syriack underſtand ܟܫܝܐ ܦܘܡ, quarrelling, ſtrife, from עָשַׁק, litigare, jurare, or, as their Latin renders it, detraction, the cauſe of quarrels among neighbours: the Chaldee render it בְּעָקִימוּת, from עָקַם, to pervert, deprave, diſtort; and having for the man of Belial, in the beginning of the verſe, ſet בַּר נָשׁ טָלְיְטָא, a man that is a calumniatour, they ſeem to direct it wholly to this ſignification, of detracting and depraving the actions of other men, and ſo perverting all to the worſt ſenſe that is poſſible. The LXXII. reades more looſely, πορεύεται ὁδοὺς οὐκ ἀγαθὰς he goes ways that are not good; But Symmachus στρεβλώμασι στόματος, by diſtortions of the mouth, i. e. either making wry mouths, as detractours uſe to doe, or by his ſpeech diſtorting, depraving the actions of other men. This is here affirm'd of אָדָם בְּלִיַּעַל, a man of Belial, as that is derived from בְּלִי, without, and יָעַל, profit, i. e. ἀχρεῖος, an unprofitable perſon (as that ſignifies a very wicked man.) The phraſe is uſed of Nabal, 1 Sam. 25. 25. and there rendred by the Chaldee שְׁטָיָא, a fool, as elſewhere 'tis בְּנֵי רִשְׁעָא, ſons of wickedneſs, Deut. 13. 13. But in the New Teſtament it is applied to the Devil, 2 Cor. 6. 15. who we know is ſtyled διάβολος, calumniator, as here the Chaldee render it. The LXXII. reade ἀνὴρ ἄφρων, a fooliſh man, as folly and wickedneſs are all one; The Latin, homo apoſtata, an apoſtate, that being the notion of the word, Deut. 13. 13. In this place it moſt probably denotes an idle, fooliſh, and withall a wicked man, that cares not for God's directions of his tongue or life, for of ſuch a one that is true which follows, he goes about depraving and calumniating, idleneſs, folly, and wickedneſs leads to this courſe, ſee 1 Tim. 5. 13.

V. 30. Deſpiſe] What is the notion of יָבוּזוּ here, will reaſonably be reſolved by the conſent of all the ancient Interpreters. The Chaldee reads לָא לְסַתְרְרוּ, there is no cauſe why we ſhould be aſtoniſhed or wonder, and the Latin non grandis eſt culpa, culpa, it is no grand crime. But this, I ſuppoſe, not from any ſpecial notion of בּוּז, or בּוּשׁ, for wondring, but from that uſe of it for contumely or reproach, as that notes the capital puniſhment of malefactours, paradeigmatizing, bringing exemplary puniſhment upon them. To this ſure the learned Caſtalio refers, reading, Non tractatur contumelioſe, he is not handled contumeliouſly.

f V. 31. Sevenfold.] That the Law of Moſes required not a ſevenfold reſtitution, is manifeſt by the expreſs words, Exod. 22. 1. fourfold of ſheep, fivefold of oxen it preſcribes, but not ſevenfold of any thing. And in the New Teſtament, when Zacheus, Luk. 19. converts to Chriſt, and proffers a full reſtitution for all that he had injuriouſly taken from any, and by his abundant charity giving to the poor half that he had, demonſtrates his care of exact juſtice; yet the reſtitution he mentions is not ſevenfold but fourfold. It cannot then with truth be ſaid of the thief here, that he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold. And when ſome endeavour to ſalve this, by ſaying that ſeven is the perfect number, and reſtoring ſevenfold ſignifies making perfect reſtitution; it is not reaſonable to admit this Scholion, becauſe the perfect reſtitution being by the Law ſpecified to be four or fivefold, and not left indefinite, it were ſtrange that the legal definite proportion ſhould be omitted, and another definite proportion that of ſevenfold named, when but four or five at moſt was intended. It is therefore much more reaſonable, what the learned Franzius from Martin Luther obſerves, that the Hebrew שִׁבְעָתַיִם, is to be rendred ſeven times, not ſeven fold; ſo the word is uſed and rendred by us, Pſal. 12. 6. And then the meaning will be evident, he that ſteals, if he be found, ſhall reſtore, according to the legal rate of amercement; and if he ſteal again, ſo ſhall he ſuffer again; if he ſteal ſeven times, he ſhall be forced to reſtore ſeven times; yea though it amount to all the ſubſtance of his houſe, all that he is worth. And then the compariſon in the Text betwixt the Thief and the Adulterer lies thus; The Thief pays dear for his ſtoln goods, ſometimes whatever he is worth, but theſe other ſort of ſtoln goods, which to ſome men are the ſweeteſt prize, that of his neighbour's wife, this coſts him much dearer, even the loſs of his life and ſoul. The Thief as oft as he ſtole, ſo oft had he ways of redeeming himſelf; but the Adulterer cannot ranſome himſelf by any price, his life is forfeit to the Law, nay, if by ſecreſie he avoid that, he oft brings ſoul and deſtructive diſeaſes upon himſelf, and his ſoul is in the ſame danger as his life, ſee Note g.

g V. 32. He that doeth it, deſtroyeth his own ſoul.] The Hebrew ſetting of this paſſage, is moſt fully expreſſed by the Chaldee; The Hebrew literally ſounds thus מַשְׁחִית נַפְשׁוֹ, he that corrupteth his ſoul, or deſtroyeth his life, חֹטֵא יַעֲשֶׂנָּה, he ſhall doe this; And the Chaldee reade וּמַן וְבָעֵי לְיַחֲבָלָא, and he that ſeeks to corrupt his own ſoul, or deſtroy his life, he will doe this. All the difficulty is, whether it be to be rendred of deſtroying the life, or corrupting the ſoul, the words ſignifying both indifferently; If the latter, then it ſignifies this ſin of adultery to be againſt the notions of common ingenuous nature, and founded in a corruption of thoſe principles of right judgment, as Ariſtotle ſaith, ἡδοναὶ φθαρτικαὶ ἀρχῶν, pleaſures are corruptive of principles, and this foul ſin is an effect of that corruption, which was noted before, when it was ſaid of him that commits adultery, that he is deſtitute of a heart; But it is more probably interpretable of deſtroying the life, either by bringing diſeaſes, and ſo death it ſelf, or by calling down capital puniſhment on the malefactour, that ſo it may be here fitly oppoſed to theft in the compariſon here made, theft being puniſhed by the Law with reſtitution, but adultery with death.

V. 6. For רְאֵה—וְחָכָם, behold and be wiſe, the LXXII. reade ζήλωσον ἰδοὺ —— καὶ τὰ ἐκείνου σοφίσεται, ſeeing imitate, and become wiſer than he; An uſefull paraphraſe. a

V. 8. For אָגְרָה מַאֲכָלָהּ, gathereth her food, they reade πολλὴν ποιεῖται τὴν ἐφοδιασμὸν, maketh great proviſion, by way of paraphraſe alſo. But after this they add another example agreeable to the Ant, that of the Bee, in theſe words, Ἢ πορεύθηθι τὴν μέλισσαν, καὶ μάθε οἵα ἐργάτις ἐστὶ, τίμιον ἔργον ἐστὶν οὗ σμικρὰ ποιεῖται. Ἧς τοὺς πόνους βασιλεῖς καὶ ἰδιῶται ἐφ' ὑγείαν προσφέρονται, ποθεινὴ δ' ἐστὶ πᾶσι καὶ ἔνδοξος, καίπερ ὢν τῇ ῥώμῃ ἀδυνὸς, τὴν σοφίαν τιμήσασα ὑψώθη, Or go to the bee, and learn what an artificer ſhe is, and how venerable a work ſhe makes, whoſe labours kings and private men bring for health, and ſhe deſirable and famous to all, though weak in ſtrength, having honoured wiſedom, ſhe hath been advanced. This large addition having no footſteps in the Hebrew, cannot be thought any genuine original part of the LXXII. their Tranſlation, but inſerted by a later hand, yet it is ſo ancient as to be found in moſt copies, and there read by S. Ambroſe, Hexam. l. v. c. 21. and S. Jerom, on Ezek. iii. In Proverbiis de ape dicitur, &c. b

V. 10. For [a little ſleep] they reade ὀλίγον ὑπνεῖς, ὀλίγον κάθησαι, thou ſleepeſt a little, thou ſitteſt a little, to note the ſitting ſtill, as well as the ſleeping of the ſluggard. For [folding the hands to ſleep] they reade ἐναγκαλίζῃ χερσὶ σῷσι, thou embraceſt thy breaſt with thy hands, as it is the manner of the idle as well as the ſleepy perſon to doe. c

V. 11. For a traveller, they reade κακὸς ὁδοιπόρος, an evil way-goer, for אִישׁ מָגֵן, a man of ſhield, which we render an armed man, (Symmachus, ἀνὴρ ἀσπίδος, literally, and Theodotion ἀνὴρ δορυφόρος, a ſpear-man) they reade καλὸς δρομὰς, a good courſer, in the ſame manner as πόδας ὠκὺς, ſwift of foot, is Homer's Epithet for Achilles, that valiant Warriour; or as δρόμος is one of the Olympick Games, or exerciſes of Valour; and then they add, ἐὰν δὲ ἔσῃ πονηρὸς ἦν, ἥξει ὥσπερ πηγὴ ἡ ἄμπλος σὺ, καὶ ἡ ἔνδεια, ὥσπερ κακὸς δρομὰς ἀποδιωλήσει, but if thou be diligent, thy harveſt ſhall come as a fountain, and thy poverty ſhall fly as an ill courſer] meaning to illuſtrate the former ſentence by the contrary; But this with no more probability to be thought a genuine part of the LXXII. than the paſſage of the Bee, v. 7. was. d

V. 14. For ſoweth diſcord, they reade ὁ πονηρὸς παραχὰς στάσιν πόλει, ſuch an one brings troubles to a city. e

V. 16. For theſe ſix things doth the Lord hate, yea ſeven are an abomination to him,] they reade, in coherence with the former verſe, ἅτε χαίρων πᾶσιν οἷς ποιεῖ ὁ θεὸς, συνησθήσεται δ' ἐν ἀκαθαρσίαις ψυχῆς, becauſe he rejoyceth in all things which God hateth, but he is broken for the uncleanneſs of his ſoul. In the former part for שֵׁשׁ, ſix, they ſeem to have read שָׂשׂ or שָׂשׂשׂ, gaviſus eſt, which they frequently render χαίρειν (as here they doe) Iſa. 66. 10. and 14. Lam. 1. 22. 4. 21. And in the latter part, for שֶׁבַע, and ſeven, they ſeem to have read שָׁבַר, and is broken, and then תּוֹעֲבוֹת נַפְשׁוֹ, abomination to his ſoul, is eaſily transformed into [for the impurity of his ſoul. f

V. 19. For יָפִיחַ כְּזָבִים, breatheth lies, they reade ἐκκαίει ψεύδη, accendeth, inflameth lies, from the diverſe uſes of the breath to inflame, or ſet on fire, as well as to ſpeak. g

V. 22. For

V. 22. For תַּנְחֶנּוּ אֵלֶיהָ, ſhe ſhall lead thee, they reade ἀπάγων αὐτὴν ἀπὸ σοῦ ἔξω, lead it away, and let it be with thee, by way of paraphraſe; for as in taking a guide to conduct one in the way, this is the manner, the man takes the guide, and keeps him with him, and he directs the man in the ambiguities of his way, ſo here, the taking the Law and keeping it with him is equivalent, to the Laws conducting him in his journey.

β V. 23. For the commandment is a lamp, and the law is light] they reade λύχνος ἐστολὴ νόμος καὶ φῶς, the command of the law is a lamp and light, joyning thoſe into one, the commandment and law, which whilſt they are ſevered, are yet ſuppoſed to ſignifie the ſame thing. Whereas in the end of the verſe they ſever thoſe ἔλεγχοι καὶ παιδεία, reproof and inſtruction, which in the Hebrew are in regimine, reproof of inſtruction.

γ V. 24. For מַחֲלֶקֶת, from the ſmoothneſs or flattery, for which Symmachus hath λειογλώσσου, ſmooth-tongued, they reade διαβολῆς, calumny (whereas elſewhere they render it δολιότητι, deceit, and ch. 7. 21. βρόχος, a ſnare) either becauſe flattery and calumny go together, (he that flatters one, calumniates others to him) or becauſe the Hebrew חלק ſignifies firſt to divide, then to ſmooth, and that of calumniating may refer to the former ſignification, calumny, breeding diſcord, and diviſion. Accordingly the Syriack here reade מֵחֶלְקַת שָׂפָה from feeding on delations or accuſations, which is their phraſe for calumny, and accordingly they call the Devil he that eats accuſations) and the word חֶלְקַת which they uſe, comes from חָרַץ, to cut or divide.

δ V. 25. For luſt not after her beauty in thy heart] they reade μὴ σε νικήσῃ κάλλους ὀφθαλμός, by way of excellent paraphraſe; for if luſt gain the conſent of the heart, it hath certainly overcome that man, before it break out into the actions.

ε V. 26. For בְּעַד אִשָּׁה זוֹנָה עַד כִּכַּר לָחֶם, literally, by a whoriſh woman, to a cake of bread] they reade τιμὴ πόρνης ἕως ἑνὸς ἄρτου, the price of a whore is as much as of one loaf, thus ſupplying the Ellipſis, to which alſo the Latin agrees, pretium ſcorti vix eſt unus panis, the price of a whore is ſcarce that of one loaf. And the learned Caſtalio ſeems to approve it, nam meretrix & libidinoſa mulier cum valeat ipſa unum panem, pretioſam venatur animam, a whore when her ſelf is worth but one loaf, hunts the precious ſoul. And thus the ſenſe is well made up; But the Ellipſis is moſt readily ſupplied by that way which our Engliſh hath made uſe of.

V. 32. For לֵב, an heart, which the adulterer is ſaid to want, they reade φρένων, by φρένες, underſtanding the volitive faculty, which is ſeated in the heart.

CHAP. VII.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5. And as the caution thus far inſiſted on, ch. 6. was that which all parents ſee neceſſary, timely and frequently to inculcate to their ſons, v. 20. ſo is it an eminent part of the admonition of wiſedom, to all her children, as thereby is meant the commandment of God, and the eternal wiſedom of the Father, the Meſſias and Son of God. There is no duty that theſe exact of all more indiſpenſably to be treaſured up in the heart, in order to continual practice, to be prized as life, and guarded as that which is ſooneſt hurt, and moſt tenderly valued by men, to be obſerved in all their actions, and imprinted in their very hearts, as the Law by the finger of God was engraven in the tables of ſtone; No more genuine branch of true ſaving knowledge, that more nearly allies us to the purity and wiſedom of God, than is a conſtant and obſtinate chaſtity, that will never be enſnared with the moſt liberal promiſes and invitations of the moſt pleaſant ſin, or by the moſt cunning and flattering ſoliciter drawn into any unlawfull embraces.

1. MY ſon, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee
2. Keep my commandments and live, and my law as the apple of thine eye,
3. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.
4. Say unto wiſedom, thou art my Siſter, and call underſtanding thy * kinſwoman.
5. That they may keep thee from the ſtrange woman, from the ſtranger which flattereth with her words.

* acquaintance, מַיָּע

6, 7, 8, 9, 10. And certainly there is great need of caution to be timely given to all young men, and ſadly conſidered by them, there being nothing of more ordinary experience and obſervation than the ſeduction of ſuch to this waſting ſin; He that ſhall but look out of his window into the ſtreets, where the young men reſort, ſhall ever and anon ſee ſome ſuch unwary ſeducible perſon thus enſnared; If he have any deſign or project that way, and diſcover it but by walking toward that part of the city where any ſuch a Merchant dwells, either in the dark of the night, or the ſhutting of the evening, he ſhall be ſure to meet with this game, without much ſeeking; If any man be diſcern'd to be of ſuch inclinations, ſhe is ready for him, prevents his enquiries or ſolicitations, comes out in a dreſs which tells him what ſhe is, and addreſſeth her ſelf to him with her artifices, beſiegeth and takes him preſently.

6. For at the window of my houſe I looked through the caſement.

17. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes and cinnamon;

18. Come let us take our fill of love till the morning, let us ♪ solace our selves with loves.

13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. And generally the first of her address is with great familiarity of kindness, then with great constancy of look, as if she were in great earnest, she invites him home to an entertainment at her house, pretends she had received some mercy from God, for which she had vow'd a sacrifice of thanksgiving, and this being the day of paying her ♪ vow, she had consequently a sacrifical feast at home, and she could not furnish her self to eat it without his company; and to be sure of it, she would not trust to the care of a messenger to invite him, but came out her self to make diligent inquisition for him to carry him home with her; And having put on this mask of piety to introduce it, she proceeds to downright bare-fac'd solicitation, tells him how she hath adorned and perfumed the very bed with all costly furniture, and incense; and by these and the like advantageous allectives she ateracts him to her embraces.

19, 20. Then lest he should be deterred by the danger of the sin, and the effects of the husband's rage, she assures ♪ him, he is gone a long journey, and taken provision with him for a competent space, and will not return again till the next month.

21. With much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him.

21. And by these and the like artifices she prevails with him, and carries him with a kind of violence to his ruine.

* as a fool danceth to his chain, or, as a tinkling ornament to the correction of a fool.

22. He goeth after her [d] straight way as an oxe goeth to the slaughter, or * as [d] a fool to the correction of the stocks.

22. By such fair promises of sensual pleasures, and security in the enjoying them, he ♪ is led on as insensibly and unconcernedly as the Oxe that is led crown'd to the place of slaughter, and knoweth not nor suspecteth any such danger; and not onely unconcernedly, but gladly, danceth, as it were, to his execution, as a fool which is pleased and gratified with his tinkling ornaments, when indeed he is led to punishment in them; On these motives he goes on confidently and chearfully to the commission of this sin, which costs him so dear at last.

23. Till a dart strike through his liver, as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

23. And thus he goes on without dread or hesitancy, till he be wounded as a deer, by the arrow of the hunter, or engaged, like a bird, in the fowler's snare; one such act of sin introduced with these flattering invitations, becomes such a wound and snare to his soul, such a wasting of all grace, and even common notions of piety, and justice, and purity in his heart, that he seldom gets out again, and so though his expectations of carnal pleasure, and no apprehensions of any farther inconvenience, made him greedily to take down this morsel, it proves to his damnage most poisonous and mortiferous, and so his case, when he is thus seduced and ensnared, though to him it seem very desirable, is most sadly to be compassionated and averted, as being that which betrays all the joys and comforts of his life, delivers him up to all noisom effects, beggery, reproach, diseases, and even to death it self.

24. Hearken to me now therefore, O ye children, and attend unto the words of my mouth.

25. Let not thy heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

24, 25. This most sad but true and obvious representation, so frequently experimented among men, may render it a very necessary and seasonable advice to all that pretend to be the sons of wisedom, that make profession of piety, or that have any respect or care of themselves, even of their secular condition, the comforts and advantages of this life, to resist the first approaches of this sin, not to yield to the flattering tenders either of pleasure from, or security in it, to bid defiance to all these and the like suggestions, and to believe and constantly adhere to the sober advices here promised, of preserving entire the purity of the very heart.

26. For she hath cast down many wounded, yea many strong men have been slain by her.

27. Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death.

26, 27. For without laying this caution to heart, of resisting and defying the first suggestions, there is no hope of ever keeping from this sin; or, yielding to the sin, from the ruine that constantly attends it, without repentance and thorow change. All experience assuring us, that nothing else can possibly secure us, the most valiant and courageous heroes of the world, the most puissant souldiers that never yielded to any other enemies, stood out undaunted against all assaults, having generally been vanquished and captivated, and destroyed by the allurements of women; And so likewise nothing more visible and obvious to the observation of all, than the ruines which befall such as are thus ensnared, the yielding to this sin, is like the falling down a precipice, the direct path to irreparable destruction.

Annotations on Chap. VII.

[a] V. 10. Subtil of heart] What נְצֻרַת לֵב signifies cannot be doubted, if the concurrence of all the ancient Interpreters may have force with us. The Chaldee and Syriack agree in the same rendring דְמַפְרֵא לִבָּא דְעַלַיְמֵי, separating, or taking away the hearts of young men, from פרר which is used by them, ch. 4. 16. where we reade is taken away; The LXXII. reade ἡ ποιοῦσα νέων ἐξίστασθαι καρδίας, which makes the hearts of young men fly out, and the Latin, preparata ad capiendas animas, prepared to catch souls; All this, in all probability, as deducing the word; not from נָצַר, to keep, (as the Interlinear, reading servata, appear to doe) but either from a contrary notion of that word, to lay waste, or destroy, that which was kept, and fortified, as Nah. 2. 1. נְצֹר, to destroy the munition, saith the learned Schindler; and so Jer. 4. 16. נֹצְרִים, not watchers, but destroyers, (alluding to the name of Nebuchadnezzar נְבוּכַד נֶצַּר) where the LXXII. hath συντριμμοὺς, destructions; or else more probably from צוּר which among other significations cations imports to besiege a City, &c. in order to the taking of it. This I suppose (from the suffrage of all) in the active not passive sense, destroying or besieging others; and so the heart is by the Chaldee and Syriack and LXXII. explained to be the hearts of young men; for want of observing which, the learned Schindler explicating this passage twice, once under the word צוּר, and again under נָצַר, and taking it in the passive in both, gives interpretations not easily reconcileable; from נָצַר, rendring it destructa corde, omni carens prudentia, destroy'd in heart, wanting all prudence, and from צוּר, obsessa corde, circumvallata astutia, encamped or encompassed, or intrench't with subtlety, from which notion we seem to have taken [subtle of heart.

b V. 11. Loud and stubborn] The Hebrew הֹמִיָּה, from הָמָה, tumultuari, fremere, garrire, may here best be rendred prating or keeping adoe; the Chaldee and Syriack render it by סָרְהָנָא, from the notion of סָרַר, for querulous as well as rebellious; The translatour of the Chaldee renders it as from the latter praevaricatrix, the translatour of the Syriack, petulans, petulant, and the vulgar have garrula, prating. Then for סֹרֶרֶת, from סוּר, or סָרַר, it signifies diverting, flitting, not onely from the right way, but from one place to another, and so the Chaldee renders it פְּרִיחָתָא, wandring, and the Syr. ܡܫܬܠܚܐ, the very ἀσωτίαν, noting all kind of wantonness, and luxury, running from house to house, a feasting, &c. For the former of these the LXXII. have ἀποπλανωμένη, volatile, (Aquila, κενοζωΐαν, idle) for the latter ἀσωτίαν, luxurious. By both which, this ill womans character is set down somewhat like that of the younger women, 1 Tim. 5. 13. περιερχόμεναι τὰς οἰκίας, idle, going about houses, οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀργαὶ ἀλλὰ καὶ φλύαροι, and not so onely, but tatlers or praters. And this seems to be the exactest rendring, not loud and stubborn, but prating and flitting, or running about from house to house, as is expresst in what follows, her feet abide not in her house, (contrary to that of the sober women, Tit. 2. 5. who are οἰκουροί, keepers at home.) Now she is without, now in the streets, &c.

c V. 20. Day appointed] From כָּסָה, to hide, is כֶּסֶא, the new moon, or time when the moon is hidden; and so יוֹם הַכִּסֶּא here (ה being changed into א) the day of new moon. To this the Chaldee refer by יוֹמָא דְּעַרְעָא, the day of assembly, for such the New Moon was among the Jews, as the Calends among other Nations. The vulgar Latin render it in die plenae lunae, in the day of full moon, plenae being some way mistaken for novae, and so it should be in all probability the new moon. See Note on Psal. 81. 6. This the LXXII. expresses not, but content themselves with that which was sufficient to the matter in hand, δι' ἡμερῶν πολλῶν, after many days. Our rendring it a day appointed, supposes הַכִּסֶּא to be from כסס, supputavit; But the former is more genuine.

d כְּעֶקֶד V. 22. A fool to the correction of the stocks] The difficulty of understanding this passage must first be explained from the original; The words there are כִּבְעֶקֶד אֶל מוּסַר אָוִיל, and the onely word that will want explaining is עֶקֶד. This is thought to signifie a fetter, or some other punitive restreint belonging to the feet, which our English renders the Stocks, but it evidently signifies an ornament of the feet, somewhat used in time of jollity. Thus Isa. 3. 16. among the several expressions of the pride of Sion, we have בְּרַגְלֵיהֶם תְּעַכַּסְנָה, we render it, making a tinkling with their feet, as the Interlinear, tinniebant, the LXXII. τοῖς ποσὶν ἅμα παίζουσαι, playing with their feet, the Chaldee renders it מְרַגְּנָן, from רָגַן, which signifies motion, or commotion; If that be of the body, then it is moving with the feet, i. e. dancing (and to that the vulgar Latin seem to refer, composito gradu incedebant, they went in a formed path) but the word רָגַן belongs also to the motion of the mind, and then it signifies to provoke; and in that notion 'tis evident the Syriack there use it, who reade לָקֳבֵל יְיָ, they provoke the Lord. This rendring of the Chaldee's was most probably, by mistaking עֶקֶד for כַּעַס, for that signifies to provoke to anger, which the Syriack seeing, have rendred it by both dancing and provoking, they dance with the feet, and provoke the Lord to anger. But the true meaning of the verb in that place must needs be discerned by v. 18. where we have the noun, the same which here, אֶת תִּפְאֶרֶת הָעֲכָסִים, we reade, the bravery of their tinkling ornaments, but the Chaldee (and with them the Latin) reads דְּמַסְגְּרָא, of their shoes, and the LXXII. ἱματισμοῦ, of their cloathing, and so the Syriack and Arabick, all agreeing to make עֶכֶס as it must needs be there an ornament of the feet. And then in all reason we must so take it here, there being no other place of the Scripture, from whence we should pretend to fetch any other importance of the word. In this sense the literal rendring of the passage will be, as an ornament for the correction of a fool, i. e. as when a fool hath some ornament or bravery put on him, and in that goes, or is carried to correction. Thus will it perfectly agree with the foregoing similitude of an oxe going to the slaughter, or to the sacrifice, who when he goes thither, discerns not but that he is going to a fair pasture, or, as it was an ancient custom, goes with a Garland or Crown on his head when he goes to be sacrificed. As that Garland is to the Oxe, so this ornament to the fool; and then as the fool thus set out, never imagins he goes to correction, and the oxe never thinks of his approaching slaughter, so this seducible young man, allured by promises of pleasure and security, goes to his own mischief and ruine. If there seem any difficulty in this rendring, then will that be cleared by taking עָכַס for a verb, signifying as it doth in Isaiah, to wear that tinkling ornament on his feet, and then כִּבְעֶכֶס אָוִיל will be, as a fool decketh, (parallel to כְּמַהֵר צִפּוֹר, as a bird hastens, v. 23.) אֶל מוּסַר, to the bond or chain (so מוּסַר signifies from יָסַר, ligavit) by which he is tied to the post for correction, he goes on merrily and jollily though it be to the place of correction that he goes. Thus it is certain Symmachus understood it, who reads ἀκμαῖον ἐπὶ δεσμῶν ἀφέων, a fool leaping, dancing to the fetters or bonds: and to the same sense more paraphrastically the Latin, quasi agnus lasciviens & ignorans quod ad vincula stultus trahatur, and as a lamb leaping wantonly, and not knowing the fool is drawn to bonds. In this passage the last word אָוִיל, a fool, is by the Chaldee and Syriack and LXXII. and Arabick, transformed into אַיָּל, a deer or stagg, and so set, as another similitude to which that which follows of the arrow or dart striking through his liver, may be literally applied; and thus understanding it, seeing there is no substantive to supply the place of the fool in this part of the period, they all join to reade here a dog, (though there be no word that sounds that way, but meaning it as a paraphrase) וְיוּן כַּלְבָּא לְאַסְרָא, say the Chaldee, and as a dog to the chain or bonds, and the Syriack in the same words, and also the LXXII. ὡς ὕαινα εἰς δεσμούς, and as a dog to the bonds; And then follows, ἢ ὡς ἔλαφος τοξεύματι πεπληγὼς εἰς τὸ ἧπαρ, or as a deer struck with a dart into the liver, and so the rest also. From hence hence it is, ſaith the learned Val. Schindler, that the Hebrews expound כלב by one that hath thoſe tinkling ornaments, bells about his heels, leaping and friſking like a dog. And ſo by this underſtanding of the paſſage, all the rendrings of the ancient Interpreters, if not as literal, yet as uſing the liberty of paraphraſts, will be accorded.

c V. 26. Many ſtrong men] The Hebrew here reads not many, but all,] וְעֲצֻמִים כֹּל הרוגיה, i. e. literally, and ſtrong are all her ſlain, i. e. all the ſlain are the ſtrong, if we join כֹּל, all] to הרוגיה, her ſlain] as is moſt reaſonable; and ſo the Chaldee ſeems to reade וְעַשְׁתִּנִין כּוּלְהֵן קְטִילְהָא, ſtrong are all her ſlain, and ſo the Syriack, both literally following the Hebrew. And then the meaning is, men of ſtrength and valour in other things, thoſe that have been the moſt famed and reputed of in that kind have generally been wounded and ſlain by theſe darts. But if we permit כֹּל, all] to affect the foregoing עֲצֻמִים, ſtrong] then it is, all the ſtrong are her ſlain, by all the ſtrong, meaning all the moſt ſtrong or renowned for ſtrength, thoſe that have excelled all others in ſtrength. So the vulgar Latin reads expreſly, fortiſſimi quique interfecti ſunt ab ea, all the moſt valiant have been ſlain by her. The LXXII. to avoid the difficulty, leave out the word ſtrong, and reade ἀναρίθμητοι οἷον ὧς πορόντηκεν, they are innumerable whom ſhe hath ſlain. But Symmachus and Theodotion more literally, ἰσχυροὶ πάντες, all the ſtrong.

V. 1. In the end the LXXII. adds, ὑὸς τιμᾶ τὸν κύριον καὶ ἰσχύσεις, πλὴν τοῦ αὐτοῦ μὴ φοβοῦ ἄλλον, my ſon, honour the Lord, and thou ſhalt be ſtrong, but beſide him fear no other. a

V. 6. For my houſe] and I looked] they reade (as of the woman) οἶκον αὐτῆς, her houſe, and παρεκύπτουσα, ſhe looked] and ſo underſtand this and the following verſes of the whores watching whom ſhe may ſeduce. 'Tis probable this was by reading not בֵּיתִי, my houſe, as we have it, and the Chaldee, and the Latin, but בֵּיתָהּ, her houſe. c

V. 8. For יָצָעַר, he went, they reade λαλοῦντα, talking, not that the word hath any ſuch ſignification, but becauſe they thought that circumſtance of walking ſufficiently expreſs'd before in the beginning of the verſe. γ

V. 18. For נִחֲמָלְפָה, ſolace, from עלס, exultavit, they reade ἐγκαυχᾶσθαι, referring to the cuſtom of wreſtlers, to which Aquila alſo refers, in reading συμπεριπλακῶμεν ἐν ἀγάπαις, and the Chaldee נעסק, from עסק, to ſtrive, or wreſtle. δ

V. 22. For פֶּתִי ſtraight way, they reade κατεφωδεύσεν, eaſily ſeduced, the word is taken from a fooliſh bird which the fiſher boys toll and catch with the foam of the Sea, and ſignifies proverbially ὀξέως ἁλωνόμενον, one that is quickly and eaſily drawn or ſeduced or deceived, κατεφωδεύσεις (ἀπατηθεὶς, ſaith Heſychius) and this by way of paraphraſe; yet alſo with reſpect to the original notion of פֶּתִי, or פֶּתַא, ſimple or fooliſh. But Aquila and Theodotion reade more literally ἐξαίφνης παραχρῆμα, preſently. ε

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3. In this is the infinite goodneſs and abundant care and ſolicitude of God expreſſed, that when they provoke him in the higheſt meaſure to leave them to their own ungodly deſires and purpoſes, and to forſake them utterly without ever recalling them to repentance; he contrariwiſe is moſt importunate in his calls to them, by the law of reaſon and conſcience in the heart, by voices from heaven, by judgments, by mercies, by Moſes and the Prophets, and at laſt, when all other means were ſucceſsleſs, by his own Son, God-man, the great Prophet fore-promiſed, and after him, by the deſcent of his Holy Spirit on the Apoſtles, commiſſionated by him; by theſe ſo many diſtinct articulate ways of revelation, making known his will to them in ſuch a manner, as if he were reſolved to leave no one man in the world ignorant of his duty, and of his own neareſt concernments in the diſcharge thereof. Should divine knowledge be imagined to be an Herald with a Trumpet in his hand, or a Crier with his Oies ſounded aloud, in the preſence of the whole world, on a place of the greateſt advantage to be heard, in thoſe meetings of ways, entrances into cities, and houſes, that no man living might poſſibly be left ignorant of that which is proclaimed, it could not by that means be more audible, and leave mankind more inexcuſable in going on in their ſinfull ways than now it is, and doth by means of thoſe loud calls that God hath vouchſafed to the world. a β

4. Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men.

4. And is it not a great enhanſement of the mercy to mankind that when a multitude, whole legions of Angels were fallen into an abyſs of ſin and miſery, as well as mankind, yet this favour being not ſhewed to any one lapſed Angel of all that multitude, all the whole race and kind of men were thus graciouſly conſidered by God, as to have God's calls, nay his Son Chriſt, the moſt articulate calls, communicated to them, Gentiles, the moſt idolatrous, polluted Gentiles, as well as Jews, the moſt proud provoking, rebellious, crucifying Jews, all of each ſort, redeemed by him, and no one of all mankind left out of that purchaſe, and his calls to repentance diſpatched to all by the Apoſtles, in his name preaching pardon for what was paſt, and now commanding all men every where to repent. Act. 17. 30.

† cunning, עָרְמָה ſtrategem, LXXII. aſtutiam, Lat. ‖ underſtand with, or in the heart, הָבִינוּ לֵב

5. O ye ſimple, underſtand † wiſedom, and ye fools be ye γ of an ‖ underſtanding heart.

5. And the interpretation of that is, that they ſhould reſcue themſelves from the reproach and wretched effects of the utmoſt folly, judge what the rules of true wiſedom, or but craft and ſubtlety, and care of their own intereſts, will exact from them, and ſet cordially, and reſolutely to the practice of it. γ

6. Hear, for I will ſpeak of excellent things, and the opening of my lips ſhall be right things.

6. This certainly may deſerve audience from us, being a moſt venerable and excellent ſubject, and all other knowledge unworthy to compare with it, either for profit or certainty.

7, 8, 9. The precepts which thus are given us by God, in order to the regulating our lives, are moſt juſt and righteous precepts, moſt extremely far removed from all iniquity or impurity, ſuch as the law of reaſon in men's hearts, if it do not exact of all men, doth applaud and highly approve in thoſe that practiſe them. Onely thoſe that go on in their wicked courſes obſtinately and imperſwaſibly, that keep at a diſtance from them, that never had the leaſt experience of the pleaſures which vertue yields, they may doubt of the reaſonableneſs of theſe precepts, imagine them too ſevere, deſign'd to betray them to a joyleſs life. But for all that apply themſelves to true wiſedom, moderation of affections, acting according to rules of vertue, as they are moſt plain and obvious to be underſtood, as viſible as what is directly before me, ſo are they moſt agreeable to the better part of the man, to reaſonable and ingenuous nature.

7. For my mouth ſhall ſpeak truth, and ♪ wickedneſs is an abomination to my lips.
8. All words of my mouth are in righteouſneſs, there is nothing * froward or perverſe in them.
9. They are all plain to him that underſtandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

* wrong, crooked, נִפְתָּל עִקֵּשׁ

10, 11. And indeed, if the compariſon ſhould be made betwixt the practice of vertue in the one ſcale, and all the ſilver and gold and moſt precious ſtones, and whatſoever is moſt valued and eagerly purſued among men, it is certain the amiableneſs and true excellency of the former, would in any ſober man's eſteem, infinitely outweigh all the reſt amaſſed together. All that outward plenty and ſplendour can never make any man contented, much leſs happy; but generally brings additions of fears and turmoils, and ſo of miſeries to the poſſeſſours: Onely the practice of all vertue (moral and chriſtian) are the foundation and matter of a pure immixt, ſubſtantial, laſting ſatisfaction and happineſs to all that are uniformly exerciſed therein.

10. Receive my inſtruction, and not ſilver, and knowledge rather than choiſe gold.
11. For wiſedom is better than rubies, and all the things that are to be deſired are not to be compared to it.

12. And let all the cunning and ſubtlety in the world combine in the moſt dextrous artificious projects, which wicked men uſe in the bringing their unjuſt machinations to paſs; the practice of vertue conſtant and uniform, will be able to outvie and outwit them all; and though at firſt, the ſubtlety of the world may ſeem to get the ſtart, yet vertue will carry it at long running, and in fine, approve it ſelf the onely true policy.

12. I wiſedom dwell with † prudence, and find out ‖ knowledge of witty inventions.

† cunning, ſee v. 5. ‖ the knowledge of machinations.

13. This vertue if it be ſuch as will approve it ſelf to God, conſiſts in the forſaking of every wicked way, it being certain that not onely ſome, but every ſort of ſuch, in thought, deed and word, is moſt deteſtable in the ſight of God. The wiſedom that is from above, is extremely oppoſite to pride and haughtineſs of mind, and to every wicked work and word; and therefore ſuch muſt our practice be, never indulging to any known ſin of any kind, but on the contrary, uniformly averting and deteſting and abſtaining from all ſuch, whatſoever the temptation be.

13. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil; pride and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate.

14. And as this is the onely true wiſedom (ſuch as will make us moſt like unto God) ſo is it alſo the beſt ſort of ſecular policy, tending moſt to our preſervation in this world; no outward fortifications can ſo ſecure us againſt all miſchief as this; and this, both upon terms of reaſon, what is rationally to be expected, for who will harm you, if you be followers of that which is good? 1 Pet. 3. 13. and upon the enſurance of God's providence, which will watch over ſuch peculiarly, without which guard of his no other means can ſecure any.

14. Counſel is mine, and * ſound wiſedom, I am underſtanding, I have ſtrength.

* ſubſtance, ſee ch. 2. note b.

15, 16. And as for private men in their ſeveral capacities, ſo for Kings, Princes, Nobles, and all the Judges and Magiſtrates of this world, there is nothing can more ſecure them in their ſeveral ſuperiour orbs and ſpheres of motion, than the exact obſervation of thoſe rules which piety directs to, ſtrict juſtice in all their undertakings, never varying from that, on any ſeeming reaſons of ſtate; It being moſt certain, as it is moſt regular, that as all power comes down to Princes from God, a ray derived from that fountain of light, his ſupreme power, Rom. 13. 1. (and when it comes into the hands of oppreſſing Tyrants, it is not without God's ſpecial providence, thus ſcourging the peoples ſins, as * St. Auſtin concludes from this, and another Scripture) ſo the onely means duly to manage this policy, and to ſecure it to them, is the regulation of it, and all their affairs, by thoſe laws which God hath preſcribed them. (Thoſe Princes which with Solomon make wiſedom their option, which if they beg of God, and ſincerely labour for, before wealth, or any thing elſe, ſhall be ſecured hereby of thoſe additions, the greateſt abundance of all worldly bleſſings, peace and plenty, and dignity in this world.)

* De Civit. Dei, l. 5. c. 19

15. By me kings reign, and princes decree juſtice.
16. By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17. And the reaſon is clear; thoſe that adhere to God, God will adhere to, and patronize, and take all care of them; and in that all ſafety conſiſts; and thoſe that conſtantly pray for God's directions, (being duly qualified to receive) ſhall not miſs of them, and having and cleaving ſtedfaſt to them all felicity is conſtantly conſequent thereto, (which concludes for Princes as well as all other men, that true piety is the onely policy for the perpetuating their power and proſperity.)

17. I love them that love me, and thoſe that ſeek me early ſhall find me.

18. For certainly God is the diſpoſer of all the wealth and honours of this world, ('twas but a boaſt of Satan's, to aſſume, that they were in his power to give them to whomſoever he pleaſed) and the onely way to perpetuate either of theſe to our ſelves and our poſterities, is to keep cloſe to thoſe rules of exact righteouſneſs of all ſorts, performance of all duty to God, to man, and to our ſelves, which he requires of us, and wherein our wiſedom truly ſo called conſiſts.

18. Riches and honour are with me, yea ſ durable riches and righteouſneſs.

19. But beſide this, the advantages of true piety are infinitely greater than ſuch inferiour acquiſitions can amount to; All the wealth of the world ammaſt together, is not fit to be compared with the one benefit and comfort of a good conſcience, with the great tranquility and peace which that affords in general, and the practice of every particular vertue, juſtice, charity, ſobriety, meekneſs, contentedneſs and the like, the ſatisfactions that reſult to the ſpirit of a man from the conſtant exerciſe of all and each of theſe are ineſtimable.

19. My fruit is better than gold, yea than fine gold, and my revenue than choice ſilver.

20. I lead

20. I lead in the way of righteouſneſs, in the midſt of the paths of judgment,
21. That I may cauſe thoſe that love me to inherit ſubſtance, and I will fill their treaſures ζ.

20, 21. This kind of wiſedom is of a vaſt extent, belongs to all the actions of private and publick life, juſtice in all our tranſactions, but eſpecially in government and judicature, and the practice, exact practice of thoſe rules, which God gives for the conducting each of theſe, as it renders us acceptable to him, and cannot miſs of a future eternal reward and crown of glory, ſo it is the foundation of all durable wealth and proſperity in this life. No inheritance deſcends more ſurely upon an eldeſt ſon from his Father, than thoſe ſeem to be entailed on the exerciſe of theſe vertues. A man would think that God had no other deſign in preſcribing theſe, than by that means to enſure all felicity in the greateſt abundance upon us.

22. The Lord [b] poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.
23. I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.
24. When there were no depths, I was brought forth, when there were no fountains abounding with water:
25. Before the mountains were ſettled, before the hills was I brought forth:
† valleys. 26. While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the † fields, nor the higheſt part of the duſt of the world.

22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And indeed there will be no wonder in all this, when it is conſidered that the wiſedom which directs us to all this, is but a ray of that eternal wiſedom of the Father, the Word and Son of God, which in the fulneſs of time was to be incarnate (on purpoſe to call mankind to repentance, to redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie to himſelf a peculiar people zealous of good works, to give us the moſt divine ſublime precepts and promiſes, and grace to perform the one and embrace the other) but before all time was preſent with God, through that eternal ineffable generation, from everlaſting, before any part of this world, earth, ſea, fountains, hills, valleys or mountains were created.

27. When he prepared the heavens, when he ſet a compaſs upon the face of the depth,
28. When he eſtabliſhed the clouds above, when he ſtrengthened the fountains of the deep;
29. When he gave to the Sea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandment, when he appointed the foundations of the earth;
30. Then was I by him as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight, rejoycing always before him.
31. » Rejoycing in the habitable part of his earth, and my delights were with the ſons of men.

27, 28, 29, 30, 31. So likewiſe in the creation of the Univerſe, that admirable work of divine wiſedom, wherein the circle of the heaven was framed encompaſſing the air and ſuperiour abyſs, wherein the waters in the clouds, and thoſe in the bowels of the earth were aſſigned their manſions, wherein this globe of earth and ſea were ſo formed, that the one ſhould be confined to its channel, the other ſtand firm on its baſis; this eternal Word, and wiſedom of the Father was the great artificer, by which all was framed, inſeparably united, the Son to the Father, and as a Counſellor joining in all the wiſe fabrick of the Univerſe, and all therein contained: All which being formed by infinite wiſedom, all was exceeding good, and beautifull, and delightfull to the Creatour. And though it were ſo, yet the creating of mankind was a ſpecial and principal piece; whereto the whole Trinity was ſummoned, Gen. 1. 26. and about this one ſort of creature, when created, God took ſpecial delight to be employ'd, as bearing his image, in a ſpecial manner, and when that by ſin was defaced, immediately this wiſedom of the Father was promiſed to be incarnate, to unite it ſelf to our humane nature, thereby preferring it before the very Angels, on purpoſe to redeem and reſtore us to purity.

32. Now therefore hearken unto me, O ye children, for bleſſed are they that keep my ways.
‖ fruſtrate it not, ſee note on ch. 1. h 33. Hear inſtruction, and be wiſe, and ‖ refuſe it not.
34. Bleſſed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors.
35. For whoſo findeth me findeth life, and ſhall obtain favour of the Lord.

32, 33, 34, 35. Theſe conſiderations put all together (the all kind of advantages from obedience to the divine commands of God, and their flowing from that eternal wiſedom of God whereby the whole world was deſigned and created, and ſo unqueſtionably the moſt divine and excellently wiſe, and ſuch as the eternal Word and Son of God was to be incarnate in our fleſh to exemplifie and oblige to this practice) may make it moſt perfectly reaſonable for all that conſider themſelves, their preſent or future weal, to ſet to this exerciſe diligently and conſtantly (ſee Luk. 11. 28.) as the onely way to all kind of felicity; not to fruſtrate ſo great a mercy as is the inſtruction of God himſelf who certainly knows what is our beſt and wiſeſt courſe, and therefore preſcribes it us, becauſe he knows it moſt agreeable to the better part of us, but to apply themſelves to it, moſt ſolicitouſly, conſtantly, and unweariedly, as that which is made up of all kind of felicity, makes life worthy to be called life, prepares them that live well here for that favour of God which will never deny them any good thing here, and will over and above reward them for being thus happy here, with an eternal immarceſcible crown of glory hereafter.

36. But he that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own ſoul; all they that hate me love death.

36. Whereas the neglect of theſe precepts is the greateſt treachery againſt ones ſelf, the going on in any courſe of ſin, is the immerſing him in an abyſs of preſent wretchedneſs, the engaging him in certain eternal woes hereafter. So that every wicked man ſtands off on terms of the utmoſt defiance to wiſedom, and is onely in love with ruine and deſtruction, refuſeth happineſs when it is put into his hand, when he is courted to it, and wooes and importunes miſery, caſts himſelf away, and his body and ſoul to all eternity, for that that yields him the leaſt fruit in the enjoyment.

Annota-

a V. 12. Witty inventions] From זָמַם, excogitavit, is זִמָּה, and מְזִמָּה, counſel, machination, moſt frequently in an ill ſenſe; ſo Lev. 19. 29. it is rendred by the Chaldee עֲצַת חַטָּאִין, the counſel of the wicked, and by the LXXII. ἀνομία, wickedneſs; and Prov. 12. v. 2. אִישׁ מְזִמּוֹת, a man of cogitations, is by the Chaldee גַּבְרָא רְשִׁיעָא, a wicked man, and ſo by the LXXII. ἀνὴρ παράνομος, a wicked man: and accordingly here דַּעַת מְזִמּוֹת muſt be rendred the knowledge of machinations, which if it be in an ill ſenſe of machinations, then the finding them will be the finding them out; diſcovering and defeating and fruſtrating all ſuch the craftieſt contrivances of worldly and wicked men; but it may be alſo in a good ſenſe, and then it is the finding, i. e. the obtaining and acquiring them; and thus it beſt agrees with the beginning of the verſe, where of this true i. e. practical wiſedom it is ſaid, that it dwells with עָרְמָה, i. e. ſubtlety, cunning, craft, as before, v. 5. contrary to ſimplicity and deceivableneſs, and ſo the full importance of the place is, that this kind of wiſedom, the practice of vertue, though it be not ſo eſteemed, but be under the contrary prejudice is indeed the onely true ſubtlety. The LXXII. reade γνῶσιν καὶ ἔννοιαν ἐγὼ ἐπικαλοῦμαι, I invoked knowledge and cogitation, reading, it ſeems, וְזִמּוֹת, and cogitations; and ſo doth the Chaldee and Syriack, יְרִיעָתָא וְחַרְעִיתָא, knowledge, and cogitations.

b V. 22. Poſſeſſed one] The Hebrew קָנָנִי is thus moſt literally rendred, from קָנָה, to poſſeſs; But it muſt be remembred, that this poſſeſſion is ſometime acquired by begetting, as the Son is certainly to be reckoned among the poſſeſſions of the Father, as well as the Servant which is brought up by him, or the Cattel or Houſe in like manner; ſo Gen. 4. 1. upon the birth of Cain, Eve ſaith קָנִיתִי, we render it I have gotten a man, &c. And Zach. 13. 5. הִקְנָנִי is rendred by the LXXII. ἐγέννησε με, begat me. This makes it reaſonable to beſtow ſome conſideration on the reading of the LXXII. in this place, where we have it rendred, Κύριος ἔκτισε με ἀρχὴν ὁδῶν αὐτοῦ εἰς ἔργα αὐτοῦ, The Lord hath created me in the beginning of his ways, on, or over his works. That ἔκτισε, created, is miſtaken for ἔκτησε, or ἐκτήσατο, poſſeſſed, was St. Jerom's conceit, on Iſa. 26. and is obvious to imagine becauſe that will be directly anſwerable to the ordinary notion of קנה, for poſſeſſing, and becauſe Aquila reads expreſly ἐκτήσατο με, poſſeſt me. But beſide that the Ancient Fathers before St. Jerome, follow this reading of the LXXII. which now we have, 'tis evident the Chaldee concur in it, בְּרַךְ אֲנִי, created me. And the Son of Sirach more than once tranſcribes it, ch. 1. 4. πρὸ πάντων ἔκτισε σοφίαν, wiſedom hath been created before all things, and v. 9. κύριος αὐτὸς ἔκτισεν αὐτὴν, the Lord himſelf created her, and ch. 24. 9. πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἔκτισέ με, he created me from the beginning before the world: And Gen. 14. 19. the ſame word קָנָה is by the LXXII. rendred κτίζω, where ſpeaking of God, they reade ὁ ἔκτισε, who created heaven and earth. And ſo the Latin, creabit: and in all probability the phraſe belongs to the great Title of God as Creatour. This onely is, to this matter, worthy to be obſerved, 1. that בָּרָא which here the Chaldee uſe, though it be uſed of Creation, Gen. 1. 1. and in other places, yet it is alſo taken in a greater latitude for any kind of production, ſo Job 3. 3. ſpeaking of birth, and conception, the Chaldee reade אִתְבְּרֵא for the latter of theſe, and Pſal. 51. 12. בְּרָא is uſed, which we render create a clean heart, but that evidently in the notion of making, and Pſal. 102. 18. the people נִבְרָא, that ſhall be born, not created. And ſo Pſ. 104. ſpeaking of the creatures of the world already made, which at God's hiding his face is troubled, at his taking away their breath, die, v. 29. 'tis added, thou ſendeſt forth thy ſpirit, they are created— which what it ſignifies, is made evident by the following words, thou reneweſt the face of the earth; 2. that when it ſignifies Creation properly and ſtrictly ſo called, then the LXXII. do not render it by the word κτίζω, but ποιέω, as Gen. 1. 1. they have ἐποίησεν, the Lord made the heaven and the earth; and ſo the Authour of the Book of Maccabees, 2 Mac. 7. 28. ſpeaking of the Creation ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων ἐποίησεν αὐτὰ ὁ Θεὸς, God made them of that which was not; and the Authour to the Hebrews, ch. 11. 3. uſes καταρτίζω, being framed, and γεγονέναι, being made, ſpeaking of the Creation, but not κτισθῆναι; 3. that this word κτίζω here uſed is frequently found in the looſer notion for any kind of production; and yet more looſely for ordaining or appointing, and ſo is not peculiar to that which we ordinarily call Creation, or which the Arians meant by it, viz. production out of nothing. So when Eccluſ 7. 5, 'tis ſaid of huſbandry that 'tis ἐκτισμένη, we render ordein'd of the moſt High, and ch. 38. 1. of the Phyſician that ὁ κύριος ἔκτισεν αὐτὸν, God hath created, i. e. appointed him, and ch. 40. 10. ταῦτα πάντα ἐκτίσθη, death and bloodſhed, ſtrife and ſword are created, i. e. appointed for the wicked. If we ſhould here take it in this notion, then ἔκτισε με εἰς ἔργα αὐτοῦ, would be (not he created, but) he ſet me over his works, viz. thoſe which ſhould after be created, or for his works, for the creating them; and to that agrees v. 23. I was ſet up and conſtituted from everlaſting, But if we ſhall rather take it to denote generation, then as it beſt accords with v. 24, and 25. ſo that at utmoſt it will conclude no more than what the Church hath always thought of the eternal generation of this wiſedom of the Father, the Son of God, without the leaſt ſhew of patronizing the hereſie of the Arians, who from hence conclude the ſecond perſon to be κτίσμα ἐκ τῶν μὴ ὄντων, a creature created out of that which was not, out of nothing, as all the viſible world was. Thus 'tis certain St. Cyprian interpreteth it, in the beginning of his ſecond book againſt the Jews. Chriſtum primogenitum eſſe, & ipſum eſſe p. 205. ſapientiam Dei, per quam omnia facta ſunt, apud Solomonem in paræmiis: Dominus condidit me initium viarum ſuarum in opera ſua, &c. that Chriſt is the firſt begotten, and that he is the wiſedom of God, by which all things were made, is teſtified by Solomon, in the Proverbs, The Lord framed me the beginning (taking ἀρχὴν in the ſenſe of a noun) of his ways, on, or over his works. So Ter- p. 297. A. tullian adverſus Hermogenem, c. 18. ſophiam condit, & generat in ſemetipſo; Dominus, inquit, condidit me initium viarum ſuarum in opera ſua. God framed and generated wiſedom in himſelf, as in Solomon wiſedom ſaith, the Lord framed me, &c. So Lactantius, de ver Sap. p. 281. l. 4. p. 281. Ipſe eſt filius qui per Solomonem locutus eſt, Deus condidit me in initio viarum ſuarum in opera ſua, &c. It is the very Son of God which ſpake by Solomon, The Lord framed me in the beginning of his ways, for, or over his works, &c. adding that he was by Triſmegiſtus called called δημιουργὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, God's builder, and by Sybilla σύμβουλος, God's counsellour, because he was furnished by God with so great wisedom and power, that God used his counsel and ministery in the building of the world. Of the force of this place, under the style of Dominus condidit vel creavit me, The Lord hath framed, or created me, see S. Hilary de Synodis adver. Arianos, where though he oppose and anathematize the Arians conclusion that Christ is a Creature, meaning one created out of nothing, or that had any beginning of being, yet he infers hence the generation of Christ, and the immutable nature of God, quæ creavit ex seipsa quod genuit, which created out of it self that which is begot, and concludes that the profession of the natural generation extinguishes the heresie and wicked opinion of being a Creature of God, out of nothing. And so † S. Jerom, though he change the translation, and reade possedit me, the Lord possessed me, in the beginning of his ways, (and on ‖ Isa. 26. resolve that it is an ill reading, quædam etiam exemplaria male pro possessione habent Creaturam, (ἔκτισε pro ἐκτήσατο) some Copies reade amiss, creating for possessing) yet he allows, and makes no change in this part of the sense, Vox Christi, saith he, qui verâ est Patris Sapientia, quæ ante omnem Mundi Creaturam ineffabiliter ex Patre genita, &c. it is the speech of Christ, who is the true wisedom of the Father, which before the Creation of the world, was ineffably begotten of the Father. By all this it appears 1. how little reason there is to imagine a false reading in this passage of the LXXII. 2. how little cause to fear any advantage to the Arian heresie from hence, when the Fathers, as before, so in their disputes against the Arians, acknowledge this reading, and 3. that the words thus read, are favourable to nothing but that Catholick Doctrine of the Church concerning the eternal generation of the Son of God, and so assure us, that this part of the description of Wisedom is to be interpreted peculiarly of this uncreated Wisedom of the Father, his eternal Word or Son, though the former part, from the beginning of this Chapter to ver. 22. be intelligible of the Law of God, as that is revealed to us (but that again most eminently by Christ, since his Incarnation) yet not without some reflexion on this eternal Son of God, in the sublimer sense, as when v. 15. it is said, By me Kings reign, respecting (at least not excluding) Christ as God, whose Ordinance it is by which they reign. Accordingly Eusebius, Eccl. Hist. l. i. c. 2. designing to shew that Christ was οὐσία τὶς προαιώνιος ζῶσα καὶ ὑφεστῶσα τῷ Πατρὶ καὶ Θεῷ τῶν ὅλων, εἰς τὴν τῶν γιγνομένων ἁπάντων δημιουργίαν ὑπηρετησαμένη, λόγος θεοῦ καὶ σοφία χρηματίζουσα, a being before the world, living and subsisting with the Father and God of all, ministring unto him for the framing and building of all things that are made, called the Word and Wisedom of God, brings together these passages, by me Kings reign, &c. and Κύριος ἔκτισε με, &c. the Lord hath created or begotten me in the beginning of his ways, &c. as the LXXII. now hath it. In the same sense we must understand v. 23. where נְסַכְתִּי, I was anointed, ordeined, constituted, or as the Interlinear, principatum habui, I had the principality, because princes used to be anointed, is by the LXXII. rendred ἐθεμελίωσέ με πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος, he hath founded me before the Age, i.e. from all eternity constituted me as the δημιουργὸς of the future Creation.

c V. 26. The fields] What חוצות here signifies, is matter of some doubt; The Chaldee and Syriack render it בְּחַלֵי, which the Translatour of the one interprets flumina, rivers, of the other torrentes, torrents, and so the vulgar Latin reade, flumina, rivers, but the LXXII. ἀοικήτους, uninhabited places. The Hebrew חוץ, signifies abroad, or without doors, and so the plural חוצות, the fields, or deserts, (all that is without doors) in opposition to Towns and Cities, the places where men dwell. This is wont to be called ager, the field or countrey, and so may well be meant by the LXXII. their ἀοικήτους, which are not inhabited, and so I suppose, both the Chaldee and Syriack must be understood also, the word נְחָלֵי, signifying valleys, as well those without, as with water, (and indeed from נחל, hereditavit, possedit, inheriting, possessing, any possession or inheritance,) so Gen. 26. 17. נַחַל, the valley of Gerar, Numb. 13. 24. the valley of Eshcol or Cluster, φάραγξ βότρυος, say the LXXII. and so very frequently; and sometimes when 'tis rendred χειμάρρους, torrent, it signifies valley, as Joel, 3. 18. נחל, χειμάρρους τῶν ξυλίνων, we reade the valley of Shittim, and in agreement with this, it is best to render it here plains or valleys, as those are opposed to the hills, described by the highest part of the dust of the world, in the end of the verse, for which the LXXII. reade ἄκρα, οἰκουμένα τῆς γῆς ἔσχατον, the highest places that are inhabited of the Universe, thus making the opposition betwixt the valleys and these, that these are inhabited, the former not.

V. 27. Depths] What תְּהוֹם, depth, signifies in this place, must be judged by the former part of the verse, preparing or making the heavens, which being the circle or circumference, which encompasseth the regions of the air, it cannot be reasonable to understand the Sea, which is part of the Terrestrial Globe, by the depth here. The word abyss or depth (as hath been shewed Note on Psal. 42. d) signifies the whole body of waters here below, some of which are above, as others beneath the Expansum, some treasured up in the clouds or air, others in the ocean and other rivers; thus we have them in that Psal. 42. where one deep calls to and answers and meets the other; and thus here, v. 28. the clouds above, and the fountains of the deep, and in this place the former of these is meant, upon which the Globe or compass of the heavens is set, which is here called חָק, at his describing a circle upon the face of the depth, the Chaldee reade עַל חַד חוּגָא, when he circled a circle, drew a circumference, the LXXII. ὅτε ἀσφίστα τὸν ἑαυτοῦ θρόνον ἐπ' ἀνέμων, when he constituted his own Throne (by that paraphrastically expressing the celestial Globe) upon the winds, by the winds I suppose, meaning the regions of the air, where this superiour abyss was. So that this whole verse is the description of the creation of the heaven.

V. 30. As one brought up with him] From אָמַן, verax or fidus fuit, is אֹמֶן, nutritius, a tutor, or one that takes care of a Client, Numb. 11. 12. and אָמוֹן, nutritus, one so nourished or brought up, Lam. 4. 5. But אָמוֹן, also signifies a Workman or Artificer, and so is by learned men most reasonably rendred, Jer. 46. 25. אָמוֹן מִנֹּא, the artificer of No. To the same sense Jer. 52. 15. Nah. 3. 8. are applied by Crinitius Exercit. Heb. p. 3. so אָמָּן, Cant. 7. 1. the work of the hands of the Artificer, τεχνίτου, say the LXXII. and so Exod. 28. 6. where the Hebrew reads חוֹשֵׁב, the Chaldee reads אָמָּן, artificer, and so v. 12. And thus most probably it signifies here, in the notion wherein * Lactantius from Trismegistus applies to Wisedom here the Title of δημιουργὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, God's Artificer, in which the Psalmist saith of the word of the Lord, the title of the Son of God, by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and S. John ch. 1. that all things were made by him. To which signification of the word, doubtless, the LXXII. refer'd, reading, ἤμην παρ' αὐτῷ ἁρμόζουσα, I was by him framing, or composing, or putting in order.

V. 1. For

α V. 1. For הֲלֹא חָכְמָה תִקְרָא, doth not wiſedom cry, the LXXII. reade Σὺ τὴν σοφίαν κηρύξεις, Thou ſhalt proclaim wiſedom, reading תִּקְרָא in the ſecond perſon, and having done ſo, they make the latter part of the verſe the anſwer or return of wiſedom to that call, ἵνα φρόνησις ὑπακούσῃ, that prudence may anſwer thee, ſo rendring תִּתֵּן קוֹלָהּ, ſhall give forth the voice, by ὑπακούσῃ, in the notion of anſwering, to this the Syriack agree, but the Chaldee and Theodotion and the vulgar Latin accord with our rendring, ſave that the Chaldee and Theodotion turn the interrogatory into an affirmation, סָמוּל, &c. therefore, and הָא, behold, wiſedom cries, &c.

V. 2. They omit to render עַל דָּרְכָּה, on or by the way, as thinking it ſufficiently expreſt by that which immediately follows, ἀναμέσον τῶν τριβῶν, in the midſt of the paths, rendring, בֵּית adverbially, as the Chaldee alſo doth by בֵּינַת, in the midſt, the Syriack ܒܝܕ by the hand or ſide of the paths, not as we, in the places, as from the notion of בַּיִת, for an houſe.

β V. 3. For לִפְתַח קִרְיָת, at the mouth of the City, (parallel to בְּיַד שְׁעָרִים, at the hand of the gates, precedent) they reade δυναστῶν παρεδρεύει, ſhe ſits in the gates of magiſtrates, and then adding the verb [ſits] to ſupply a ſeeming Ellipſis. In this place the Tranſlatour of the Syriack ſeems to think that they reade קוֹרֵא, calls, for קִרְיַת, city, and ſo have tranſlated ܒܦܘܡܗ ܡܬܒܥ, ore ſuo clamitat, cries with her mouth; but by a groſs miſtake, the Syriack being exactly the ſame with the Chaldee בְּפוּמָא דְקַרְיָא (onely the ך wanting) as that is the literal rendring of the Hebrew, in the mouth of the city, according to the poetical ſtyle of this Book, which reſembling a city to a man, ſpeaks familiarly of the hand and the mouth, the hand of the door noting the ſide, the mouth of the city, the entrance into it, as v. 2. the רֹאשׁ, or head of the high places, is the top of them.

γ V. 5. For הָבִינוּ לֵב, underſtand with the heart, they reade ἐνθήσθε καρδίαν, ſet to your heart, which the Latin render well by animadvertite, mark or mind.

δ V. 7. For וְתוֹעֲבַת שְׂפָתַי רֶשַׁע, wickedneſs is an abomination to my lips, they reade βδελυγμένα ἐναντίον μου χείλη ψευδῆ, lying lips are abominated before me, probably reading שִׂפְתַי, lips, for שְׂפָתַי, my lips, and ſo joyning רֶשַׁע to it, lips of wickedneſs, for wicked or lying lips. Herein the Syriack agrees with them ܣܦܘ̈ܬ ܫܩܪ̈ܐ ܡܬܥܒ̈ܐ, &c. and lying lips are an abomination before me, but the Chaldee accord with our Hebrew וְיָרִיחַ רִשְׁעָא שִׂפְוָתַי, and my lips deteſt wickedneſs, and ſo the Latin alſo.

ε V. 13. For פִּי תַהְפֻּכוֹת, a mouth of perverſeneſs, they reade διεστραμμένας ὁδοὺς πονηρῶν, the perverted, diſtorted ways of the wicked, by way of paraphraſe.

ζ V. 18. For הוֹן עָתֹק, durable riches, they reade κτῆσις πολλῶν, poſſeſſion of many things; But this moſt probably by a miſtake of the Scribe for κλῆσις παλαιὰ or παλαιὰ, old, gray, or ancient poſſeſſion, i. e. that wich continues long with the poſſeſſours; ſo the Hebrew עָתֹק, from the verb ſignifying to grow old, imports, and ſo Symmachus reads βίος παλαιὸς, ancient life, in the notion wherein βίος, life, ſignifies wealth, poſſeſſions of this life; and ſo Theodotion ὑπαρξις παλαιὰ, ancient, i. e. durable ſubſtance.

η V. 21. In the end they have this addition over and above the Hebrew, ἐὰν ἀναγγείλω ὑμῖν τὰ καθ' ἡμέραν γινόμενα, μνημονεύσω τὰ ἐξ αἰῶνος ἀφιδρύσατό, if I ſhall have ſhewed you the things that are done every day, I will remember to recount the things done from eternity. This was deſigned to make a tranſition to that which follows of the eternal Wiſedom of God, before the creation of the world: and being firſt noted in the margin, ſeemeth from thence to have crept into the Text.

θ V. 31. For rejoycing in the habitable part of his earth (ſpeaking ſtill in the perſon of Wiſedom) and my delights, &c. they reade ὅτε ἐνηυφράνθη τῷ οἰκουμένην σωτηλῶσαι, when he rejoyced having finiſhed the world (in reference to God's reſting the ſeventh day after the ſix days creation, and rejoycing on it, as on a feſtivity) καὶ ἐνευφράνθη ἐν υἱοῖς ἀνθρώπων, and he rejoyced in the ſons of men.

ι V. 35. For רָצוֹן, favour, they reade θέλησις, will, in the notion wherein that word is among the Helleniſts frequently uſed for delight, or good pleaſure, θέλει ἐν σοὶ, he delights in thee, ſee Note on Col. 2. g.

CHAP. IX.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. This eternal ſon, and word and wiſedom of God, ſo begotten by, as to be co-eternal and co-eval with the Father, (ſet down in the former chapter as the great Artificer of the world and Counſellour both in the framing and managing of it) was by the eternal decree of God, before the creation of the world, deſigned, and ſoon after Adam's fall, promiſed, that in the fulneſs of time he ſhould prepare him a place of reſidence in the Virgin's Womb, be incarnate in our humane Nature, pitch his Tabernacle in our fleſh, Joh. 1. 14. and ſo abide and continue in it, as in an houſe firmly and fitly built on pillars, as the manner of ancient building was, and the number of thoſe pillars is here ſpecified to be ſeven, thereby perhaps denoting the ſeven graces of the ſpirit of God, with all which, in all abundance, he ſhould be repleniſh'd; perhaps, no more than the perfectneſs of his humane nature, that was thus framed, (the number of ſeven being the perfect number) perhaps the Church, which was to have to him the relation of inferiour members to an head, and ſo of this complete number of pillars to an houſe. And having taken up this place of reſidence, and ſo converſing familiarly with men, he was to make proviſion for the entertainment of the whole world, inviting all both Jews and Gentiles, but eſpecially the humble contrite hearts, (the weak and fooliſh things of this world to confound the mighty) to a magni-

a magnificent ſpiritual feaſt, ſending out Apoſtles (ſee Matt. 22. 4.) into all quarters, to proclaim this invitation made to all, and to doe it in the Synagogues of the Jews, and every where, in places of greateſt concourſe, ſo as might be to the greateſt advantage to its coming to the ears of all. For this feaſt of his, it was neceſſary ſome Victims ſhould be ſlain, ſome drink-offerings prepared, ſuch was his own death, ſaith S. Cyprian, Ep. lxxiii. ſuch the blood-ſhedding, the piety and patience of the primitive Martyrs (ſaith S. ‖ Auguſtin) in which this feſtival entertainment, this copious coming into the Church was founded. And the form of this invitation ſhould be an earneſt exhortation to faith and repentance; as that denotes an uniform reformation, and change of the mind and actions; and to all that would humbly and obediently come in to this call of his, the promiſe of a free and hoſpitable reception, pardon of all that was paſt, and ſufficient, if not abundant degrees of grace for the future, to enable them for the ſervice of God here, and acceptation and reward (to be received from his mercy) to all eternity. As a Symbol and pledge of this, he ſhould inſtitute and ordein the * Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ſo called as a feſtival by him provided for all that obey his call, the elements whereof were to be bread and wine, (in correſpondence with the Prieſthood of Melchizedeck, who brought forth bread and wine unto Abraham and bleſſed him) but the myſtical interpretation and importance thereof, the offering up his body on the croſs for us, the onely ſacrifice, that under the New Teſtament, was to ſucceed all thoſe of the Old, and ſuperſede them, and thereby obteining for us grace and pardon, ſtrength and refreſhment, which are exhibited by this Sacrament, and ſo ſecured to us, on condition we utterly forſake our ſins and folly, and be docible and patient of being made wiſe by him, i. e. in an honeſt heart receive and obſerve his inſtructions ſincerely, and ſo live and perſevere in the ways of vertue and piety, that true and divine wiſedom, which alone tends to render this life of ours a life indeed, or worthy any man's enjoying, (the courſe of ſin being but a continual death) and to qualifie us for eternal never fading life and bliſs to all eternity.

So that though by his coming ſome men ſhould become much worſe, adding their pride and ſelf-conceit, the greateſt impiety and ſacrilege, yet many others, even a multitude both of Jews and Gentile Idolaters, ſhould eminently reform by the coming and revealing his Goſpel to them.

up the dictates of this eternal wiſedom of God, in a lowly, and honeſt, and obedient heart, (ſee ch. 1. 3. and Note d.) there being no true knowledge, or which deſerves that title, but the practical, which as it hath the promiſes of another life, an eternal reward attending it, ſo hath it alſo the promiſes of this life, all manner of felicity in this world, length of days, and that in a Canaan. So that the pious man ſhall himſelf have the fruit of his piety, and the wicked be puniſh'd in his very ſin, if there were no other arere of puniſhment behind for him in another world. The end of Chriſt's coming into the world being on no deſign of advantage to himſelf, but onely to ſhew us the way of true wiſedom and durable happineſs, that if we will be his diſciples, and doe what he directs us, it may be well with us here and to all eternity. If we will not, we ſhall have the ſmart of it our ſelves, as being the onely authours and obſtinate contrivers of our own miſery.

them to their ruine; Juſt ſo, many allurements and temptations there are, to circumvent ſeducible perſons, but all directly contrary to true wiſedom, and the care but of our own ſafety and well-being, and ſuch as betray both the ſeducer and ſeduced to utter ruine; The whore indeed, that is ſet upon this ſin (ſo frequently ſtyled folly, being ſo eminently ſuch) is very bold and buſie, never quiet at home, but ſtill running abroad (ſee ch. 7. 11, 12.) incited by her own impatient luſt; Her whole behaviour is moſt extremely ſenſleſs and impudent, ſhe is folly in the abſtract, moſt ſcandalouſly removed from all that is ſober or decent. She ſetteth herſelf like a ſhameleſs proſtitute perſon, in ſome place of greateſt advantage, to ſeduce and invite paſſengers, even thoſe that are otherwiſe imploy'd, and come not with any evil deſign, and by her cunning and flatteries, and eſpecially by that enhancement of the unlawfull pleaſure, which the phancies of wicked men ſet upon it, becauſe it is gotten by ſtealth and deceit, and ſo gratifies their pride as well as their luſt, by the cunning and ſubtlety of compaſſing it; by theſe, I ſay, and other the like means, ſhe gains on fools, ſuch as have not the laws of true wiſedom inſcribed on their hearts (for thoſe would competently avert them from the leaſt beginning of this ſin, and infuſe into them the utmoſt averſion to it) and ſo leads them blindfold into utter perdition and irreverſible deſtruction. (And thus is it in all other ſinfull courſes, to which men are ſeduced by ſome fallacious bait, which hath ſome kind of gratefulneſs to the phancy, but really carries a barbed hook under it, the ſmart and danger of which is ſoon felt by them that ſwallow it, but then 'tis too late to prevent it.) This ſhews the infinite mercy of God in Chriſt, whom he ſent from heaven on purpoſe to teach us true wiſedom betimes (abſteining from all beginnings of ſin, all purity of the very heart) and calling to ſpeedy repentance all thoſe that have need of it.)

Annotations on Chap. IX.

V. 9. Give inſtruction] The notion of נתן, to give, and לקח, to receive, are in this verſe very obſervable. The former is here rendred by the Chaldee אֵילַף, teach, from a notion of it not for giving ſimply, but giving, as a maſter gives leſſons, inſtruction, i. e. teaching; This is imitated by Latin Authours, Da, ſi grave non eſt, Give, i. e. tell me if it be not troubleſome to you, in Horace, l. ii. Sat. 8. Iſte Deus qui ſit, da Tityre nobis, Tell us what God that is, in Virgil's Bucol. For this the LXXII. here reade δὸς ἀφορμὴν, give an occaſion, not obſerving the propriety of this idiome, but uſing the liberty of this paraphraſe, to ſupply the conceited Ellipſis. So לֶקַח, from a parallel notion of that verb, denotes not receiving ſimply, but receiving as a diſciple receives lecture, i. e. perceiving, apprehending. So Prov. 1. 3. לֶקַח is rendred by the LXXII. λῆψιν, to receive, but by the Chaldee לְקַבָּלָא, to accept or learn, (as 1 Tim. 1. 15.) the πᾶσα ἀποδοχὴ, all acceptation, of which the faithfull ſaying is there ſaid to be worthy, ſignifies being learnt and conſidered by all) and Job 22.22. לֶקַח is by the Chaldee rendred נְסַר, learn, (by the LXXII. ἔπλασε, apprehend) as here לֶקַח is סַנְרְטָא, ſcience, but by the LXXII. ſimply νήφειν, 1 Cor. 11. 14. the animal man, ὁ ἄνθρωπος, apprehends not, underſtands not the things of the ſpirit, for ſo it there follows, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned; where by that of knowing and diſcerning, it is evident what he meant before by νήφειν, receiving, i. e. perceiving.

V. 3. For חִקְרָא עַל—נַפֵּי טְרַמֵּי קָרֶת, ſhe calls upon the wings, i. e. battlements, of the high places, or walls of the city, the LXXII. reade συγκαλεῖται μετὰ ὑψηλῆς κηρύγματος ἐπὶ κρατῆρα, calling together or aſſembling with an high proclamation or loud voice unto the cup or goblet, miſtaking קָרֶת, the city, in the cloſe, as if it were from קָרָא, to call or cry out, for then טְרַמֵּי, high, being ſo applied, muſt ſignifie high or loud calling. Then for נַפֵּי, from נָף, clauſit, complexus eſt, it ſignifies a wing, as that which incloſeth the body, and (applied to a building) a battlement, or ſept, becauſe as the wing incompaſſeth the body, ſo doth the battlement the wall or houſe-top; but they (having otherwiſe underſtood the word קרת, city) transform by conſequence the interpretation of נף, to that of a cup or goblet, in reſpect of the cavity of it, and ſo render לְעַל—נַפֵּי, ἐπὶ κρατῆρα, unto the cup, (it is but a miſtake of the learned Conradus Kirkerus, Concordant. to. 2. to affix κρατῆρα, as the rendring of קָרֶת, city). In all which, though they recede much from the words, yet they vary not the ſenſe: For if we apply the cup to that wherein the wine is mixt, (for ſo they reade ἐκέρασεν εἰς κρατῆρα, mingled into the cup) that ſo [calling to the cup] may be inviting to drink of it (and thus S. Auguſtine reads it, de Civ. l. xvii. c. 20. miſcuit in cratere, & miſit ſervos convocans ad craterem, and ſo the following verſe admits, drink of the wine which I have mingled for you, viz. in the cup or goblet) it is then evident that the reſt of the period in their rendring is no unfit paraphraſe of the Original, the calling on the battlements of the walls or high places of the city, being very well explicated by calling together or aſſembling with a loud voice or proclamation.

V. 6. For וְחָיוּ, and live, the LXXII. reads ἵνα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα βασιλεύσητε, that ye may reign to eternity, to which is added by way of ſcholion, καὶ ζητήσατε φρόνησιν, and ſeek prudence, to which ſome Copies add καὶ βιώσεσθε, and live, the literal rendring of וְחָיוּ. In the end of the verſe for וְאִשְׁרוּ בְדֶרֶךְ בִּינָה, and go in the way of underſtanding, they reade καὶ κατορθώσατε ἐν γνώσει σύνεσιν, and make ſtrait prudence in or by knowledge, reading, it ſeems, וְאַשְׁרוּ, as from יָשַׁר, in Hiphil, rectificare, to make ſtrait, or plain, and then not unfitly rendring the way of underſtanding by φρόνησιν, prudence, onely adding ἐν γνώσει, by knowledge, as the means by which prudence is directed or conducted.

V. 7. For מוּמוֹ, his blot, they reade μωμήσεται ἑαυτὸν, ſhall reproach himſelf, as if מוּם were a verb. No ill paraphraſe. γ

At the end of verſe 10. they add τὸ γὰρ γνῶναι νόμον διανοίας ἐστὶν ἀγαθῆς, for to know the Law is a part of a good underſtanding, merely as a ſcholion, to prove what preceded, that the knowledge of the holy is underſtanding. δ

V. 12. When the Copies of the LXXII. reade ἐὰν σοφὸς γένῃ σαυτῷ, σοφὸς ἔσῃ καὶ τοῖς πλησίον, if thou beeſt wiſe to thy ſelf, thou ſhalt be wiſe alſo to thy neighbours; It is moſt likely that it was cauſed by ſome Scribe, which made a ſtop after σαυτῷ, which ſhould have been before it, for by that means it ſeemed neceſſary to ſupply in the latter part, ſomewhat which ſeemed wanting, which was done by adding καὶ τοῖς πλησίον, to thy neighbours alſo. But the Interpretation being left out, and the comma ſet after γένῃ, it is then moſt exactly agreeable to the Hebrew, and all other Interpreters, thus, ἐὰν σοφὸς γένῃ, σαυτῷ σοφὸς ἔσῃ, if thou become wiſe, thou ſhalt be wiſe to thy ſelf, i. e. thou ſhalt have the benefit of thy wiſedom. After the end of this twelfth verſe there is in ſome Editions a very large inſertion, Ὃς ἐρείδεται ἐπὶ ψεύδεσιν, οὗτος ποιμαίνει ἀνέμους, διώκει δὲ καὶ τὰ πετόμενα, ἀπέλιπε γὰρ ὁδοὺς τὰς ἑαυτοῦ ἀμπελῶνος, τοὺς δὲ ἀγροὺς τῆς ἰδίας γεωργίας πεπλάνηται, διαπορεύεται δὲ ἀνύδρους ἐρήμους, καὶ χλοῦ διαπαγιδεύει ἐν ἀψωθίοις, σωρεύει δὲ χερσὶν ἀκαρπίαν, He that truſts in lies, feeds on the winds, and the ſame ſtill purſues the birds flying (this paſſage is in the Latin inſerted at the end of the fourth verſe of the next Chapter) for he hath forſaken the ways of his own Vineyard, and wandred out of the paths of his own Field, and travelleth by a waterleſs deſart, and a land placed in thirſty places, and with his hands he gathereth together fruitleſneſs. But this is manifeſtly an inſertion, and is not owned by the Complute Edition, though ſome other Editions add yet more, and prefix before this addition υἱὸς πεπαιδευμένος σοφὸς ὄψει, καὶ ἄφρονι δουλεύσει χρήσιται, a ſon that is inſtructed ſhall be wiſe, and ſhall uſe the fool for his ſervant, i. e. the fool ſhall ſerve the wiſe, which words the Roman LXXII. inſerts at the end of the fourth verſe, of the next Chapter.

V. 13. For פְּתָיוּת, ſimple or ſimplicity in the abſtract, they reade ἐνδεὴς ψωμοῦ γίνεται, ſhe becomes to want a piece of bread, by this paraphraſing her ſimplicity, that her courſe of idleneſs and impudence brought her to extreme want, and in the end of the verſe, for בַּל יָדְעָה מָה, ſhe knows not what, or any thing, they reade οὐκ ὀπίσατο αἰσχύνην, ſhe underſtands not ſhame, merely as a ſcholion of what elſe ſeemed obſcure or imperfect, for which the Chaldee reade טָבְתָא, goodneſs.

V. 14. For מְרֹמֵי קָרֶת, in the high places of the city, they reade ἐμφανῶς ἐν πλατείαις, viſibly in the ſtreets, merely by way of paraphraſe, to expreſs the ſenſe, not the words. ε

V. 17. They

V. 17. They invert the order of the words, without any considerable change, paraphrastically, ἄρτον κρυφίον ἡδίως ἔδωδε, καὶ ὕδατος κλοπῆς γλυκεῖς, take the secret loaves pleasantly, and the sweet waters of stealth.

V. 18. For רְפָאִים שָׁם, the dead or carcases, (see Note on Psal. 88. d) are there, they reade γιγάντων πορ' αὐτῇ ὀλοῦνται, the giants or those that are born of the earth, perish by her, referring to the double notion of רְפָאִים, for those that are in the earth, as the dead are, or those that come out of the earth, as giants were believed to do. In the end, for קְרֻאֶיהָ, her guests, they reade συναντᾷ, he meets, as if it were קֹרֶה, which signifies so. And this also without any considerable change of the sense, for this simple one being one of her guests, her guests being in the depths of scheol, and his meeting or going to meet her εἰς πλάνον ἅδου, to the depth of hades, are equivalent. After this comes a very large insertion, merely as a scholion of some learned man, (an exhortation to avoid the forementioned danger) which in some (but not in the Complute) Editions is crept into the Text, and retein'd also by the Syriack and Arabick, but neither in the Chaldee nor Latin, Ἀλλὰ ἀποπήδησον, μὴ χρονίζῃς ἐν τῷ τόπῳ μηδὲ ὀπίσω τὸ σὸν ὄμμα πρὸς αὐτὴν, ὕτως γὰρ διαβήσῃ ὕδωρ ἀλλότριον, ἀπὸ δὲ ὕδατος ἀλλοτρίου ἀπόσχου, καὶ ἀπὸ πόσεως ἀλλοτρίας μὴ πίνε, ἵνα πλεῖω ζήσῃς χρόνον, προστεθῇ δέ σοι ἔτη ζωῆς, But leap back, stay not in the place, nor cast thine eye upon her; for so thou shalt pass over the strange water. But abstein thou from the water of another's fountain, that thou mayst have a long time, and that the years of life may be added to thee.

CHAP. X.

1. THE Proverbs of Solomon. A wise son maketh a glad father, but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

Paraphrase.

1. After the general preparatory exhortations to the care and practice of piety, enlarged on in the former chapters, by way of foundation and introduction, now follow the King his divine sentences, some plain, and yet weighty and important, but the most by way of parable, or ænigmatical allusion, fit to affect the reader and to have a deep impression on him, and commodious for memory also, (see Note on Chap. 1. a) And the first recommends true wisedom (the exercise of all vertue and piety) to all young men and women, as an act of necessary gratitude to their parents, as well as of kindness to themselves; for this certainly is the ensuring on them all manner of prosperity, and felicities, and flourishing condition in this life, and as that is their own neatest interest, so is it the parents greatest joy, the whole comfort of whose lives extremely depends as upon the thriving and prospering so upon the pious sober humble pure behaviour of their children. If they thrive and prosper in the world, much more in those ways of divine vertue which hath the promise of all secular prosperity annext to it, this must needs be matter of most ravishing delight to their parents. This is an aphorism of so general observation, that when the parents themselves are not so pious and gracious as they ought, yet they rejoyce to see their children such: And on the contrary, if they miscarry, and prove vitious in any kind, there is no such cause of trouble and grief to the parents, especially to the mother, whose love is most tender and passionate, and cannot choose but bewail it, as the most unsupportable affliction of her life, that she hath with so much pains and care brought forth a child to dishonour God, to disgrace and despise his parents, and to accumulate upon himself the direfullest woes of this and another life.

2. Treasures of wickedness profit nothing, but righteousness delivereth from death.

3. The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish, but he casteth away [d] the substance of the wicked.

2, 3. This you may discern in several branches of wisedom, as that is opposed to the different sorts of folly, that are observable among men. The first and most principal notion of wisedom, is that of all true and divine vertue; and of this it is manifest that nothing can secure any man of any ordinary degree of happiness, in this world, but this one tenure of piety, and justice and charity, and all manner of vertue: This is the one way of secular prudence and policy, the most certain thriving course; quite contrary to the worldlings measures; He thinks the devil's arts are likeliest to thrive in this world, injustice, oppression, deceit, covering and griping, gaining as much as he can, and parting with as little: and by these ways sometimes he fills his coffers, possesseth himself of vast treasures. On the contrary, he cannot believe, that justice and charity, which holy writers style righteousness (see Note on Psal. 37. h) and affirm them both to be ingredients of that righteousness which God's Law exacteth from men, will ever tend to any man's worldly advantages, but will be sure to keep him low, and improsperous and hinderly, that binds himself strictly to the exercise of them. But herein the love of the world hath strangely blinded and infatuated men, the truth of God's word and fidelity of his promises being engaged on the contrary observation, that the greatest riches either unlawfully acquired, or illiberally possest, bring not the least advantage or benefit to the owner, whilst he possesseth them, (his covetousness suffers him not to enjoy them himself, much less to make himself capable of that future reward which is laid up for the charitable and mercifull) and besides they are sure to meet with blasts from God, and so not long to be held by him, or his posterity. Whereas on the other side, the constant exercises of exact justice, and the most diffusive charity, which are so deeply under the worldlings prejudices, have the blessings of God, even those of this life, entailed on them, are so far from impoverishing or undoing any man, that they are the most auspicious means to enrich and enlarge both his days and his plenty, and rescue him from all the calamities to which this life is subject, or the malice of wicked and covetous men could design to bring upon him. And thus certainly it will be, as long as God hath the disposing of the things of this world, his providence being obliged to secure and prosper them which observe his directions, and to confute, defeat, and dissipate the atheistical enterprises of those who will owe their enriching either to Satan or their own evil arts.

[d] poverty depresseth the sloth-full hand.

4. * He becometh poor that dealeth with a [b] slack hand, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

4. So in another branch of wisedom, viz. diligence and industry, making carefull use of that strength which God bestows on men, in order to their thriving in their callings, or in their spiritual state; He that is truly industrious, (and withall applies himself faithfully to God, and so renders himself capable of his blessing) shall never fail of all prosperous successes; diligence makes rich in this world, and to the carefull use of God's talent of Grace, more shall certainly be given, and he shall have abundance, Matt. 25. 29. whereas on the contrary, sloth is sure to betray to beggary, and from the unprofitable servant, that talent, which he already hath, shall be taken away.

5. The like is obſervable of providence, another ſpecial ſort of wiſedom. For

5. He that gathereth in ſummer, is a wiſe ſon, but he that ſleepeth in harveſt, is a ſon that cauſeth ſhame.

as in worldly affairs, he that obſerves not the ſeaſons of the year, and induſtriouſly makes uſe of them, that doth not plow and ſow in ſeeds time, and reap and carry into the barn at harveſt, that takes not his advantage of the warm ſummer ſeaſon to make proviſion for the neceſſities of the winter; or when God's providence hath bleſſed him with a good crop, indulges ſo far to his own ſloth as not to gather in and ſecure what is thus reached out to him, is a ſtrange ſtupid inſenſate perſon, comes to diſtreſs and ſtarving unpitied, and is not onely himſelf under the reproach of a ſcandalous fool, but brings a blot on that family of which he is a member, on his parents eſpecially, who ſhould have educated him better. So they that make not uſe of thoſe opportunities and graces which God furniſhes them with, for their eternal well-being, that by deſpiſing the ſpace given for their repentance, and the manifold preventions and excitations of God's ſpirit, to bring them to it, or by egregious ſloth and idleneſs betray all thoſe precious advantages; muſt expect the portion and reward of fools, that ſhame and confuſion of face, that utter darkneſs apportion'd to that, which juſtly awaits the unprofitable ſervant. Such children as theſe are a reproach to the Church that hath educated them, and even to God himſelf, who is extremely diſhonoured, and his Spirit grieved by ſuch unnurtured obſtinate non-proficients, whereas he that humbly begs, carefully obſerves and receives, and induſtriouſly makes uſe of, and ſo improves his gifts, both ſecular and ſpiritual, ſhall be ſure to thrive here, and have all abundance, and receive the benediction of the beloved child and faithfull ſervant in another world.

c 6. So likewiſe for juſtice and charity, as that concerns not onely the actions but the words, they which keep a ſtrict guard over their tongue, that ſpeak no evil, wrong not, nor calumniate any, ſhall not miſs to have the proportionable reward, the good word and benedictions and prayers of others, and the proſpering hand of God call'd down upon their affairs by thoſe prayers, when on the contrary, the contumelious and calumniatour and curſer, &c. brings down all plagues and miſeries on himſelf, the juſt reward of his malice to others, all his curſes rebound and fall on himſelf, his mouth is full of bitterneſs, and as long as it is ſo, he may know that poiſon lies concealed there, the efficacy whereof he will ſadly find, not ſo much on others, at whom he aims his imprecations, but on himſelf.

6. Bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt, but [c] † violence covereth the mouth of the wicked. †

† the mouth of the wicked covereth miſchief.

† The Chaldee hath ובפומהון דרשיעא נכסי חטופא which I think ſhould be rendred, and rapine (or violence) ſhall cover the mouth of the wicked, rather than as the Latin Tranſlatour renders it, & in ore impiorum, operitur rapina, for the verb is active not paſſive, and the prepoſition ב ſerves onely for the conſtruction of the verb. The Syriack likewiſe, מכסי בחמא חמסא is ſo to be rendred, The mouth of the wicked ſhall wickedneſs cover: the letter ל L prefixed to the firſt word ſerving onely to ſhew that it is governed of the verb, and not having here other ſignification.

d 7. And beſide the benedictions (good words and praiſes which good men meet with here, and enjoy the benefits thereof) another portion of the like, remains even after this life; whenſoever a mercifull-minded man is mention'd, either in diſcourſe or hiſtory, by after-times, it is with liberal commendations, eulogies and encomiums: whereas the wicked and unmercifull, that are hated while they live, are by all deteſted after death. If their name be not drown'd and overwhelm'd in abſolute oblivion, it remains noiſome and odious; If it periſh not, ſo as to be extinguiſhed, yet it putrifies, ſo as to ſtink: and then if parents be accounted happy that leave proſperous children behind them, this muſt be addition of woe to deceaſed parents, v. 1. to be thus unhappy in their poſterity.

7. The memory of the juſt is ‖ [d] bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot.

e 8. Another part of wiſedom it is to moderate the tongue, to open the ear and heart to all good adviſes, eſpecially to the commandments of God, but to reſtrein and keep cloſe the lips, Jam. 1. 19, and he that doeth ſo, ſhall receive the benefit of it: whereas on the contrary, thoſe that keep no guard on their tongues, do frequently diſcover thoſe things which bring miſchief and ruine on themſelves.

8. The [e] wiſe in heart will receive commandments, but * a prating fool ſhall fall.

* he that is fooliſh in his lips ſhall fall, or the fool ſhall fall by his lips.

9. He that keepeth an exact watch over all his thoughts, words and actions, regulates all his life by the Commandments of God, and will not ſtray from them willingly, on the intuition of whatſoever advantage, may enjoy himſelf cheerfully and confidently, fear no miſchief either from God or man, but depend on God's protection to ſecure him from all evil; whereas the ſubtle deceitfull manager, that ſteers his courſe by any other chard, that eſpecially of worldly diſguiſes and artifices, as he is never ſecure, but always dreads being diſcovered or found out, ſo ſhall he by God's judgment at ſome time or other be delivered up to reproach and confuſion, which he ſeldom miſſeth to meet with in this world, and muſt certainly expect it in another.

9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh ſurely; but he that perverteth his ways, ſhall be known.

10. Two ſorts of deriding and ſcoffing, reproach and contumely there are, the one ſecret and clancular, the other open and avow'd, the one by winking or nodding, writhing the mouth, or other ſuch like ſigns of mocking, behind a man's back, the other by letting looſe a malicious tongue, audibly and in a man's preſence; Both theſe are very diſingenuous wicked qualities, the former the more wary and cowardly, (and is oft joyned with flattering to the face, Ecclus. 27. 23.) the latter the more bold-faced and impudent: and he that is given to either of theſe, will have little joy in either; The firſt will at ſome time be diſcovered, be it never ſo cunningly carried, and then brings miſchievous effects after it; the latter never fails of bringing thoſe effects, quarrels and blows and blood, the due rewards of that folly.

10. He that winketh with the eye, cauſeth ſorrow, but † a prating fool ſhall fall.

† he that is a fool by his lips, ſhall be caught. ſee Note e.

11. A good man makes excellent uſe of his tongue, in the calling upon God, bleſſing him, deprecating his judgments, interceding for his mercies on all, and again in kindneſs and civility, nay exhorting and reproving, counſelling his brethren, compoſing of differences between them; and by ſo doing, his mouth is like a rich vein or ſpring, Jam. 3. 11. perpetually producing to himſelf, and others, and to the honour of God, Jam. 3. 9. Whereas the tongue of wicked men is a moſt miſchievous inſtrument, moſt ſadly imployed in blaſpheming, murmuring, repining at God's providence, prophaning his name and word, in reviling, whiſpering, ſcoffing, and calumniating men, in impure noiſome diſcourſe, in perſwading and enticing to evil, in cauſing and fomenting debates, and ſo by this one engine, they bring a world of miſchief on themſelves and others, to the great diſhonour and provoking of God, Jam. 3. 6. &c.

11. The mouth of the righteous man is a ‖ well of life, but * violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

‖ ſpring or vein מקור

* the mouth of the wicked covers miſchief. ſee Note c.

12. Hatred

† over all, עַל כָּל

12. Hatred ſtirreth up ſtrifes, but love covereth † all ſins.

12. Where there is animoſity and hatred on either or both ſides, there every thing that is done becomes matter of quarrel, even ſuſpiciouſneſs and jealouſie is ſufficient to cauſe continual endleſs contentions; But where kindneſs or charity hath gotten poſſeſſion of the heart, the love of God, (expreſſing it ſelf by a chearfull obedience to his precepts) and the love of our brethren for God's ſake, there no place is left for jealouſies, ſuſpiciouſneſs, enhaunſing the faults of others; but on the contrary, whatſoever omiſſion or treſpaſs fall out, this engages the good man to forget and forgive, and never to charge that as a fault, which is capable of any more favourable interpretation, and enclines him to pardon and not avenge it when it is not capable. Such petty things as treſpaſſes are, weigh nothing among charitable minded men, which ſet the contentious world in ſuch fearfull flames.

13. In the lips of him that hath underſtanding, wiſedom is found; but a rod is for the back of him that is void of underſtanding.

13. Whoſoever hath any true wiſedom, i. e. piety, in him, will certainly diſcover it in his ſpeech, not by making vain oſtentations reflexions on himſelf, boaſting that he is not like other men, but in all humble and charitable and pious diſcourſe, acknowledging and bleſſing God, abaſing himſelf, and labouring the benefit of others, from his diſcourſe and converſation, and communicativeneſs, any man that is enclined to learn may receive great benefit, and therefore in all reaſon this uſe is to be made of ſuch men, every one taking care to draw from this flowing ſpring, v. 11. And he that is ſo negligent of his own welfare as to neglect ſuch opportunities as theſe, for them nothing is more proper and agreeable than ſtripes and chaſtiſements, which, if any thing, may work good upon him. He that neglects to ſeek or receive inſtructions where they are to be had, will pay dear for this contempt or negligence; The ſins, which this want of culture will engage him in, are one degree of puniſhment, and the vengeance that attends thoſe, another.

14. Wiſe men lay up knowledge, but the mouth of the fooliſh is near ‖ deſtruction.

14. The more judgment and knowledge men have, generally the more backward they are to diſcover it, they look upon it as a treaſure that muſt be laid up for uſe and not drawn forth, but in time of need; But indiſcreet ignorant perſons cannot contain or keep any thing ſecret, but out of loquacity and inconſideration, pour out any thing, by which they are ſure to make no other acquiſition, than to bring miſchief upon themſelves. g

* conſternation, ſee note g.

15. The rich man's wealth is a ſtrong city; the * deſtruction of the poor is their poverty.

15. Though riches are great temptations and hazards, yet one eminent advantage there is in the wealth of the world, that it fortifies and ſecures a man againſt many oppreſſions and affronts, and he that is ſo provided, may with more courage and confidence, engage himſelf in the ſervice of God, as having all the outward advantages he can wiſh, whereas poverty of eſtate brings many obſtructions and impediments, and hath as far an influence on mens minds, as to deject and diſcourage and deter them from any heroical enterpriſes of piety; As the Iſraelites were creſt fallen by their bondage in Ægypt, and ſo had not the heart to think of getting out of it, or partaking of the delivery God had ſent to them by Moſes. Exod. 5. 21.)

16. The labour of the righteous tendeth to life, the fruit of the wicked to ſin.

16. This therefore may excite men to labour and diligence to free themſelves from thoſe encumbrances, and to acquire ſo much of wealth as may ſecure them of theſe advantages. And indeed, what is acquired by honeſt labour, and means perfectly juſt, is ordinarily made uſe of to pious ends, and ſo tends to mens benefit here, all comforts and accompliſhments of life, and to the enhaunſing of their crown hereafter, and therefore is to be looked on as a ſingular bleſſing of God. But what comes in by indirect unlawfull means, by circumventing, or oppreſſing, outwitting or overpowering our brethren, is generally made uſe of to evil ends, becomes the inſtrument of our ſin and woe, and that is all we gain by it.

† Obſerving correction is the way to life; but forſaking reproof cauſeth to erre.

17. [b] He is in the way of life, that † keepeth inſtruction; but he that refuſeth reproof, erreth.

17. There is not a ſurer and directer path to all vertue, and withall to the felicities and comforts of this life, and the eternal joys of a better, than a patient willing receiving and making uſe of reproofs and admonitions (whatſoever ſuch a man may erre through weakneſs and humane frailty, he will by this means be moſt likely to amend, and for any known or groſſer ſin, he will never allow himſelf to go on, when he is minded of it.) Whereas on the contrary, an uncounſellable perſon, that hath no patience of reprehenſions, is owned to all the fouleſt and moſt dangerous errours, and is out of all hope of cure, being thus armed againſt the regular means of it. h

‖ lying lips conceal hatred, * defamation, דִּבָּה

18. ‖ He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a * ſlander is a fool.

18. An enemy, if he have but common underſtanding, and care of his own good, will be carefull to conceal his malice, and with fair words varniſh it over, leſt by profeſſing or diſcovering it, he teach the other to beware of him, and perhaps to be before hand with him in expreſſions of hatred; And though there be no truth or ſincerity, yet there is ſome prudence and worldly wiſedom in this. But on the contrary, he that is tranſported by his envy or malice to the reproaching another, he that ſpeaks evil, or appears to be the promoter of any contumelious defamatory libel againſt any is guilty, not onely of a groſs injuſtice to that other, but even of the * greateſt folly and madneſs againſt himſelf, gains nothing but a ſhort ſatisfaction to a diabolical malicious humour, and invites and calls down all the miſchiefs that provoked and injured enemies can bring upon him. * apoſtema, LXXII.

19. In the multitude of words there wanteth not ſin, but he that refraineth his lips is wiſe.

19. Men that give themſelves liberty to talk much ſhall be ſure to multiply ſins; There be ſo many ways of offending againſt God, or man, or our ſelves, by oaths and perjuries, and prophanations, by falſe ſpeaking, by ſlander, by rage, by unſeemly jeſting, by vain-glory, and the like, that there cannot be a more neceſſary ingredient either in ſecular or moral wiſedom, and wherein the exerciſe of true piety is more concerned than is the art of ruling and reſtraining the tongue, keeping himſelf within ſtrict bounds of that kind.

20. The tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver, the heart of the wicked is little worth.

20. As ſilver which hath been throughly refined in the fire is purged from all droſs, and mixture, and is now able to bear any teſt, ſo a good man's tongue is moſt carefully cleanſed and purged from all ſort of corrupt diſcourſe, and by ſober conſiderations ſo fortified, that it will not by any temptation be induced to offend againſt the rules of piety, juſtice, or charity; The tongue, 'tis true, is moſt apt, if it be not warily managed, to break out into all kind of enormities, but a good man will be ſure ſolicitouſly to reſtrain it. Whereas a wicked man hath nothing of weight or ſteadineſs in him, his will, as well as his tongue, his choices, as well as his ſpeech, are perpetually vain and precipicious, and neither what he thinks, nor what he ſpeaks, worth any man's regarding.

21. The

21. And 'tis but a ſmall thing for a wiſe and pious man to ſecure his tongue from the ſcandalous ſins which that part is ſubject to; The tongue was certainly deſigned for the moſt honourable employments, to bring in glory to God, by inſtructing and guiding thoſe that ſtand in need of it; And thus every pious man will be ſure to employ that part for the benefit of many: whereas the wicked is ſo far from doing good to others, that he practiſeth all that is miſchievous to himſelf, ſo far from feeding others that he famiſhes himſelf, deſpiſes piety and inſtruction, the regular means to bring him to it, and ſo goes on from one degree of ſin, and ſo of death, unto another, and hath never ſo much conſideration as to ſtop in ſo ruinous a courſe.

21. The lips of the righteous feed many, but fools die for want of † wiſe- † heart, לֵב dom.

22. Many are the engines and artifices of the world, to gather and encreaſe wealth, and moſt of them are found very improper for that purpoſe, fail and prove ſucceſſleſs, and when they bring in wealth, bring in ſuch appendant burthens and troubles with it, that when it is had it is not worth the having. There is but one true means that can ſurely be depended on, toward the acquiring the wealth and poſſeſſions of this life; and that is the benign auſpicious influence of heaven, the bleſſing of God's proſpering hand entail'd on thoſe methods which are moſt diſtant from the crafts of the world; prayer for daily bread, juſtice, obedience, meekneſs, charity, truſt in God, and the uſe of none but plain honeſt arts, induſtry, and contentedneſs, and the like, in oppoſition to ſacrilege, perjuries, worldly cares and fears and ſolicitudes, covetouſneſs, griping, oppreſſion, fraud, ſedition, enmity to the Croſs, and the like; And if this be relied on, and men thus labour duly to qualifie themſelves for it, it will queſtionleſs bring them a competency (if not affluence) of worldly felicities (Matth. 6. 33. 1 Tim. 4. 8.) and that is really the greateſt wealth, having all the advantages of wealth, and none of the burthens and diſquiets that attend it to worldly-minded men. 1 Tim. 6. 10.

22. The bleſſing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it.

23. As the wicked man's ſole pleaſure and delight is placed in the doing ſome hurt, he is never pleaſed or gratefully employed but when he is on ſome ſuch purſuit, and herein his folly and madneſs conſiſts, that he can take joy in that which is moſt truly lamentable, and is ſure to bring on him the utmoſt in this and another life: So on the contrary, to him that hath any true knowledge or conſideration of things, which judges by his mind and immortal ſoul, and not by his ſenſes or phancy, the practice of all kind of vertues, piety, juſtice, charity, ſobriety, contentedneſs, &c. is matter of all true joy and exultation, a continual feaſt, moſt tranſportingly pleaſant and delectable.

23. ‖ It is a ſport to a fool to doe miſchief; * but a man of underſtanding hath wiſedom. ‖ As it is mirth—— * So is wiſedom to a man of underſtanding.

24. Thoſe things that wicked men moſt fear and dread, ſhall never miſs to fall upon them; It is the part of natural conſcience to torment them with direfull aboads and expectations. In their greateſt proſperities they have ſad preſages about them; though they put the thought of God as far as they can from them, yet his judgments are their conſtant terrour, and that not without great cauſe; the divine vengeance awaits them, and will at length certainly find them out; On the contrary, the good man is always hoping and waiting for good things from the divine providence, hungring and thirſting for righteouſneſs, evangelical grace and mercy, and is ſecured never to fail of receiving it; And ſeeking firſt the Kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, all other external felicities, as far as they are truely ſuch, ſhall undoubtedly be ſuperadded to him.

24. The fear of the wicked, it ſhall come upon him; but the deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted.

25. And as for the felicities of this life, ſo for the durableneſs and ſtability alſo; The joys, and even life it ſelf, of a wicked man, are very tranſitory; In the midſt of his pride and luſtre, and jollity, he is oft ſurpriſed, and hurried away in a moment, he is gone, as if a whirlwind had caught and carried him hence, and then all his glory is at an end, no footſtep of it remaining: And what can be ſo diſmal and hideous as this, when it is conſidered, what vengeance expects ſuch a man in another world? Whereas on the contrary, the joys of a good man are moſt durable and firm, no foundation of the ſtrongeſt pile deſign'd to perpetuity, is more deeply laid, and conſequently more unmoveable, death it ſelf doth not diſturb or interrupt theſe, but conſigns them to immortality.

25. As the whirlwind paſſeth, ſo is the wicked no more; but the righteous is an everlaſting foundation.

26. He that is employed in any office or miniſtry (ſuch eſpecially as are the Embaſſadours for the reducing and reconciling of the world, 2 Cor. 5. 20.) muſt think himſelf under the ſtricteſt obligation of diligence and expedition; It is certain the Lord that employs ſuch inſtruments, expecteth fidelity and diſpatch from them, and as nothing is more gratefull to him than the chearfull and ſpeedy execution and account of his commands, ſo nothing is more provoking and grievous than the negligences of a ſlothfull ſervant, which undertakes and deceives the expectation.

26. As vinegar to the teeth, and ſmoak to the eyes, ſo is the ſluggard to them that ſend him.

27. The promiſes of length of days and joys of this as well as another life, are made to piety particularly, and no medicament can be ſo ſovereign to prolong or continue either as an humble diligent dependance on God, and conſcientious obedience: And as long as there is a providence over us, and God hath the governing of the world, it is thus in all reaſon to be expected. On the contrary, all wicked men put themſelves out of the reach of his divine protection, are not qualified to receive theſe ſpecial donatives from heaven, but on the contrary, are obliged to expect ſwift and ſudden vengeance, to be cut off in the midſt of their days, either by the hand of civil juſtice here below, or from God's juſt diſpleaſure againſt ſuch.

27. The fear of the Lord † prolongeth days, but the years of the wicked ſhall be ſhortned. † ſhall add, תוסף

28. It is common to good and bad men, that both entertain themſelves with hopes, each hath his deſigned felicity, which he propoſeth to himſelf, as the end of his endeavours: But as in the kind, ſo in the ſucceſs and iſſue of them, there is a vaſt difference; The good man places his chief end in approving himſelf to God, by uniform obedience to his commandments, and waiting and depending on him for all the advantages of this and another life; and this very dependance, and chearfull expectation of reward from God, and the comfort of a good conſcience in the diſcharge of this and all other parts of duty, is at the preſent matter of the greateſt joy to him; and this ſure to continue without danger of fruſtration, to all eternity: what he now profeſſeth before hand in hope, he ſhall triumphantly receive with all exultation, and ſo never meet with any cauſe of ſorrow from the defeat of his hopes. Whereas on the other ſide, the expectations of the wicked being all placed on the pleaſures, or profits, or honours of this life, are ſure to be ſadly fruſtrated; that which they take for pleaſure is far from ſuch, and ſo they'l find if they ever compaſs the enjoying of it; And ſo for riches and honour alſo, they ſeldom are gotten by thoſe that moſt impatiently thirſt after them, and when they are, they prove empty, unſatisfactory and vexatious, matter of far more trouble and diſquiet, than of joy, and at the end of ſuch ſad purſuits there remains an arrear of endleſs woes; and this is all that his eager thirſts and hopes come to.

28. The hope of the righteous ſhall be gladneſs, but the expectation of the wicked ſhall periſh.

29. The ‖ fortitude, or a fort. * fear to....

29. The way of the Lord is ‖ ſtrength to the upright, but * deſtruction ſhall be to the workers of iniquity.

29. Many unſpeakable advantages there are to us from the law of God, but eſpecially this, that it is matter of unſhaken courage to him that preſerves his obedience to it entire. Such a man fears nothing, the anger of God he is ſecure from and cannot reaſonably fear that, and againſt the threats of men he is impregnable, they cannot doe him any real hurt, and ſo the righteous man is bold as a lion, the conſcience of his integrity is a foundation of all confidence to him; and beſides, the providence and mercy of God is a compleat armature and ammunition to ſuch, will defend him from all poſſible evil. Whereas on the contrary, this law of the Lord is matter of all terrour and amazement to all wicked men, there is a ſecret dread and conſternation of mind to thoſe that go on in an evil courſe, that haunts them and purſues them for ever, the gripes of an accuſing and condemning conſcience, which cannot look on God's law without juſt cauſe of horrour and evil aboads againſt themſelves, and at laſt drags them to God's Tribunal, and there endites, witneſſes, and condemns them.

30. The righteous ſhall never be removed, but the wicked ſhall not inhabit the earth.

30. The bleſſing of God ſhall be ſure to ſupport and defend all good men, and ſecure a durable felicity to them; But a curſe from him is to be expected on all impenitent wicked men, which ſhall root out them and their poſterities, bringing ſignal puniſhments and judgments on them in this world, (beſide that ſad arrear in another.)

31. The mouth of the juſt bringeth forth wiſedom, but the froward tongue ſhall be cut out.

31. And the reaſon of it is clear; The good man lives to the honour and ſervice of God, he is uſefull for the attracting of many to the ways of piety, and inſtructing them therein; He lives not to himſelf, but as a fountain of common good, propagates all vertue to other men, labours to bring piety in faſhion, and to people the world with holy men; whenas the wicked are not onely an unprofitable burthen of the earth, but withall by their example and counſel, by their actions and words, propagate ſin, corrupt and poiſon the world with a peſtilencial converſation, and ſo provoke and call down God's ſpeedy and utmoſt vengeance upon them.

† favour, רָצוֹן ‖ perverſeneſs, תַּהְפֻּכוֹת

32. The lips of the righteous know † what is acceptable, but the mouth of the wicked ſpeaketh ‖ frowardneſs.

32. The good man maketh uſe of his tongue to pacifie and reconcile, intercedes with God for mercy to ſinners, and with returns of mildneſs and ſweetneſs to the injuries and provocations of men, preſerves concord and amity among them, (and ſo his life is prolonged to ſome benefit.) But wicked men make no other uſe of their tongues but to provoke and diſhonour God, and to cauſe debates and enmities among men, to enhaunſe differences by exaſperations and provocations, but never to leſſen or remove them (and ſo as noxious weeds, they are very fit to be rooted up.)

a הַוַּת

V. 3. The ſubſtance] What הַוַּת here ſignifies, muſt be ſomewhat doubtfull; From הָיָה, fuit, was] it may ſignifie ſubſtance, eſtate, poſſeſſions; and ſo Pſal. 52. 7. we render it riches, and have the Chaldees authority for it, who there reade מָמוֹנָה, his mammon or wealth, and ſo they reade here קִנְיָנָא, poſſeſſionem, for which the LXXII. have ζωὴν, life, in the notion of riches, which ſupport life, (ſee Note on 1 Pet. 3. c.) ſo we know βίος is oft uſed for poſſeſſions, and ſo Luk. 12. 15. ζωὴ ὲν ὅτι ὑπαρχόντων αὐτῶν, is the comforts or advantages of life that come in to him from his poſſeſſions. And if this be the notion of the word here, then יְהַדֵּף may beſt be rendred diſperſeth, diſſipates, as Pſal. 1. 4. the chaff which the wind תְּדָפֶנּוּ ſcattereth, diſſipates, which the LXXII. render in ſenſe, not literally, ἀναλίσκει, ſhall deſtroy, but the Chaldee נְסַחֵיף, ſhall diſtract, catch away, or diſſipate. But it is to be remembred that הָוָה and הַוַּת denotes, from הָיָה, factus eſt, any event, but it is uſed onely for ill ones, calamities, miſchiefs, and thoſe either in act or thought. So that place Pſal. 52. 7. our vulgar reads in his wickedneſs; ſo Pſal. 38. 13. they talked of הַוּוֹת, miſchiefs, Pſal. 91. 3. the peſtilence, הַוּוֹת, we render noyſome or noxious peſtilence. So Prov. 17. לְשׁוֹן הַוּוֹת, a naughty tongue, a tongue of miſchiefs, and Prov. 19. 13. a fooliſh ſon is הַוַּת, calamities to his Father; ſo Mich. 7. 3. הַוַּת נַפְשׁוֹ, the miſchief or wickedneſs of his ſoul, we render miſchievous deſire. And if this be the notion here, then the place will beſt be rendred, he diſſipateth or brings to nought the miſchievous either enterpriſes or purpoſes of the wicked, viz. thoſe which are aimed againſt the righteous man in the former part of the verſe, whom God hath promiſed to defend from want and diſtreſs, and ſo will defend from the miſchievous deſigns of wicked men, which if not diſſipated and defeated would bring that diſtreſs upon him. Thus the vulgar renders it, Inſidias impiorum ſubvertet, ſhall ſubvert the treacheries, i. e. miſchievous deſigns of the wicked, and ſo the learned Caſtalio, impiorum noxas repellet, he ſhall repell the miſchiefs or injuries of the wicked; and ſo the Interlinear, pravitatem impiorum expellet, ſhall expell or drive away, i. e. diſſipate, ſcatter the pravity of the wicked.

V. 4. Slack hand] The word רְמִיָּה, (from רָמָה, fraudavit, in Piel) is ambiguous: It ſignifies deceit, and it ſignifies ſloth, which is a kind of deceit, the ſlothfull ſervant robbing his maſter of that labour which is due to him, and the ſlothfull man deceiving himſelf of that which he might gain by his diligence. The Interpreter of the Chaldee renders the paraphraſe here in the notion of fraud; for when they thus render the paſſage מַסְכְּנוּתָא מְמַכְּכָא לְגַבְרָא רַמָּאָ he renders it paupertas attenuat virum doloſum, poverty depreſſet, attennates a deceitfull man; And in that ſenſe it is certainly taken Pſal. 120. 2. לְשׁוֹן רְמִיָּה, deceitfull tongue, and ſo Mich. 6. 12. and thus it well agrees with the words immediately foregoing, the Lord diſſipates whether the ſubſtance or the miſchiefs of the wicked. But if we look on the uſe of the word elſewhere in this book, it will encline us to the latter ſenſe; for ſo what is ſaid of רְמִיָּה, ch. 27. that he roſteth not that which is caught in hunting, muſt needs belong to ſloth, and not to deceit; and ſo the other part of the period exacts, the ſubſtance of the diligent, &c. the LXXII. there render it δόλιος, deceitfull, and the Chaldee that there reads נִבְרָא נְבִילָא is by their Interpreter rendred vir doloſus, a deceitfull man, though I ſuppoſe their נְבִילָא as our Latin nebulo, may ſignifie a ſlothfull man, as well as a knave. So v. 24. רְמִיָּה, the ſlothfull hand, that ſhall be tributary, is oppoſed to the

the hand of the diligent or sedulous; and though there again the LXXII. reade δολιου, deceitfull, yet the Latin which after them reads fraudulentus, fraudulent, v. 27. reads both there and here manus remissa, the slothfull or cowardly hand, parallel to which is our rendring of slack hand. So also Jer. 48. 10. cursed is he that doth work the work of the Lord רְמִיָּה, in negligence or sloth, i. e. negligently. The onely remaining difficulty is, what עֹשֶׂה here signifies; for although the verb עשה signifies to make, and so the rendring be obvious, the slothfull hand makes poor, or causeth poverty, yet there is another notion of that verb, all one with עָסָה, to depress, or oppress, so Zeph. 4. 19. עֹשֶׂה, we render it I will undo them that afflict thee, and in this the Chaldee and LXXII. and Syriack agree to understand it; the Chaldee, as was said, render the whole passage, poverty attenuates or depresses the (whether deceitfull or) slothfull man, and the LXXII. leaving the word רְמִיָּה unrendred, reade πενια ἀνδρα ταπεινοῖ, poverty humbleth a man, and so the Syriack also. And so this will be the most probable rendring, poverty depresseth the slothfull hand, but the hand of the sedulous enricheth.

c V. 6. Violence covereth the mouth of the wicked] The words in the Hebrew are ambiguous, פִּי רְשָׁעִים יְכַסֶּה חָמָס, for if פִּי be the nominative case it must then be rendred the mouth of the wicked shall hide or cover mischief or violence; if חָמָס be the nominative, then our English from the vulgar Latin hath duly rendred it; But the truth is, all other Ancient Interpreters have taken the former way, the Chaldee and Syriack have put it into words free from that ambiguity, בְּפוּמְהוֹן דִּרְשִׁיעֵי נְכַסֵּי חֲטוּפָא, in the mouth (בפומהון, say the Syriack, with the mouth) of the wicked, rapine, (חטופא, impiety, say the Syriack) is covered. And to this sense the LXXII. may well be rendred, στόμα ἀσεβῶν κεκαλυπται πόνῳ ἀωρῳ, the mouth of the wicked shall hide untimely grief, (reading στόμα in the nominative case, though v. 11. where the same passage is again found, they render it in the accusative, στόμα ἀσεβῶν κεκαλυπται ἀπωλειαν, destruction shall cover the mouth of the wicked.) So the Interlinear, os impiorum operiet injuriam, the mouth of the wicked shall cover injury; and the learned Castalio, impiorum os tegit inhumanitatem, the mouth of the wicked covers inhumanity. And to this rendring there is no reason why we should not adhere; the opposition betwixt this and the former part (which is the onely appearance of pretence for the other) being very commodious in this rendring, thus, blessings are upon the head of the just, (all men pour out their prayers to God for benedictions upon him, which accordingly, from God fall in abundance upon his head) but the mouth of the wicked (calumniators, cursers, contumelious persons) covereth חָמָס, violence, whether we take it in the active or passive sense; in the active 'tis evidently true (for the end of every calumniator is the wronging of others; that design of violence is covered or hid in his foul mouth) but that comes not so home to the opposition, unless we add to it the passive sense, all mischief and sorrow to the calumniator himself, his calumniating, speaking evil, or cursing of others brings sure mischief on himself, from God's vindicative justice, and that yields a proper sense of the LXXII. their rendring, the mouth of the impious shall cover or hide untimely sorrow, as a cause the effect, i. e. at last bring it upon them; and so saith Castalio, impii maledici sunt, adeoque infortunati, wicked men are evil-speakers, and therefore infortunate; which is expressly opposed to the benedictions that the just meet with in the former part. Onely the analogy betwixt them will enforce, that as in the latter part the mouth is expresst, and so the mouth of the wicked must denote calumny and incurious speaking, so the justice also in the former part must belong to the uprightness of the tongue peculiarly, and not be taken in the latitude (as else it would) for all kind of justice.

V. 7. Blessed] The Hebrew reads לִבְרָכָה, for blessing, and the Syriack agrees thereto, whose frequent accordance with the Chaldee makes it probable that they so reade also, though now our Copies have בִּרְכָתָא, benediction, without the preposition ל. It is onely to be remembred that ברך denotes blessing in the notion of praise, and then the LXXII. have most fitly rendred the passage, μνημη δικαίων μετ' ἐγκωμιων, the memory of the just is with praises or panegyricks, and so the Latin, cum laudibus, they are never mentioned or named without commendations: And as the childrens thriving in the world tends to the happiness of the parents, v. 1, &c. so will also the excellent reputation which they have, the praises which befall them, ἀλλ' οὐκ αἰδυνομενοις, saith Aristotle, though the dead parents discern it not, have no sense of it. d לִבְרָכָה

V. 8. Wise in heart] In this verse the Antithesis lies clear between wise and fool, heart and lips; the onely difficulty is whether heart and lips are to be annexed and read in construction with the nouns wise and fool, or with the verbs receive and fall, or be caught, (for so לָבַט signifies, Hos. 4. 14.) If the former, then the rendring is, wise in heart, and fool in lips; but if the latter, then it is, the wise in heart receive commandments, but the fool will fall, be caught or ruined with, or by his lips. To the latter way of rendring the Chaldee enclineth, reading the last words בְּשִׂפְוָתֵיהּ סָתָאֵד, shall be taken in his lips, by analogy to which, the former part must be rendred, לִבְּיהּ יְקַבֵּל, shall receive in his heart; so the Latin, sapiens corde præcepta recipit, stultus caditur labiis, the wise receives precepts with his heart, the fool is destroyed with his lips. But the words will very fitly bear the former, and so the Syriack understood it, who reade ܡܢ ܕܫܦܘܗܝ ܣܟܠ̈ܐ ܗܘ ܐܬܬܦܣ he whose lips are fooliſh is caught; In this uncertainty it is most reasonable so far to retain both rendrings, as to permit both to have their influence on the words, thus, he that hath a wise heart will receive precepts into that heart, and he that hath the lips of a fool will be ensnared and ruin'd by his lips; and this in the latter part seems to have been design'd by the LXXII. who reade ὁ δε ἀσυν- χοίλεσι σκολιάζων ὑπονοκλιθήσεται, but he that hath no cover to his lips, doing frowardly or perversely shall be supplanted, ensnared. The latter part of this verse is again repeated, v. 10. and there the opposition seems to require that we render it as here, he that winketh with his eye, by his eye causeth sorrow, but he that is a fool in his lips, by his lips shall be ensnared. But instead of that latter part, the LXXII. reade ὁ δε ἐλέγχων μετ παῤῥησίας εἰρηνοποιεῖ, but he that reproves with boldness causeth peace or safety. And herein the Syriack agrees with them, without any other colour of ground in the original than either that they had formerly read it here, and therefore preferred some variety, or that they understood the winking with the eyes of flattering, (as it is thought to signifie Ecclus 27. 22, 23.) and so to the mischief that comes by that, opposed the contrary benefit of free rebukes. But in that place the Antithesis requires that winking with the eye should signifie a secret gibing or laughing at, which he that is apt to doe, will also flatter flatter one to the face, which is all that is said in that place of Eccleſiaſticus, He that winketh with the eyes worketh evil—when thou art preſent, he will ſpeak ſweetly, and admire thy words, but at the laſt he will writh his mouth, and ſlander thy ſayings. Where 'tis evident, that winking with the eye, writhing the mouth, and ſlandering, are conjoyned as phraſes of the ſame kind, to expreſs ſcoffers and ſlanderers, ſecret, or more open; and ſo in all probability that will be the interpretation of the tenth verſe here, the winking with the eyes being the ſecret gibing, of which that with the tongue is more open, and an higher degree, that of ſlandering; In proportion wherewith the עַצָּבֶת, ſorrow muſt be underſtood of that which befalls himſelf, not that which he cauſeth to others, that ſo it may bear analogy with his being caught or enſnared, in the latter part.

f V. 12. All ſinners] For עַל כָּל פְּשָׁעִים, over all ſins, the LXXII. reade πάντας μὴ φιλονεικοῦντας, all that are not contentious, thus paraphraſtically limiting the univerſal propoſition, that love covers all but the contentious and perverſe; where it is manifeſt what they mean by covering, viz. (that which is oppoſite to ſtirring up, precedent) quieting, appeaſing, as ſtirring up fire from under the aſhes is the means to make it burn, and encreaſe into a flame, but covering it with aſhes is quite contrary, the means of appeaſing and allaying it. And indeed, if the perſons were here ſaid to be covered, the angry, the injurious, this might be thought to be the meaning of the word covereth, as when we are commanded to overcome the evil with good; or if inſtead of all ſins, wrath particularly had been mention'd, for then loves covering wrath had been equivalent to the ſoft word putteth away wrath, and in either notion it would have agreed competently with the former part of the verſe, hatred ſtirreth up ſtrifes, my hating or provoking another inflameth him, and ſo ſtirreth up, cauſeth contention, but my kindneſs, and charitable returns to his provocations qualifies him, and appeaſes wrath or ſtrife. But being here applied to ſins, and not to perſons, and again to all ſins, and not particularly to wrath or ſtrife, this cannot be the notion of covering, but rather that of hiding from ſight; and ſo the oppoſition is not to be ſet betwixt hiding and ſtirring up, but betwixt hiding all ſins and ſtirring up ſtrife. He that looks ſuſpiciouſly and narrowly upon every action of another, that weighs it rigidly, and without any allowance of ἀνθρωπίνα, will find matter of quarrel in every thing that is done, and thus hatred doth whom a man hates, he thus rigidly examins, or rather tortures all his words, and geſtures and actions; but charity or love is quite contrary, ſets the moſt favourable gloſs on all that another doth, is ſo far from finding faults where there are none, that when ſomewhat hath been done amiſs, it affords it a benign interpretation; and thus it is exactly all one with that part of the character of charity, 1 Cor. 13. 7. πάντα στέγει, (not bears, but) covers all things, (ſee Note h. on that Chapter.) And then covering thus interpreted, refers to that uſe of garments for covering, as when Sem and Japhet covered their Father's nakedneſs; or as when Conſtantine expreſſes his reſpect and kindneſs to Clergy-men, that if he ſhould diſcern any thing amiſs in them, he would cover it with his Robe; and to this moſt eminently belongs that of Pythagoras, ἡ μὲν ἄνοια τὴν ἀρρυθμίαν, ἡ δὲ εὐνοια τὴν ἀμετρίαν σκεπάζει, a garment hides crookedneſs, or diſproportion, of the Body, but good will, kindneſs, charity, hides ſin. This then being the undoubted meaning of this place, it were neceſſary to examine the two places of the New Teſtament, which ſeem to be taken from hence, Jam. 5. 20. and 1 Pet. 4. 8. and enquire whether this notion can belong to them. But a full account of that is already given, Jam. 5. Note i. All that I ſhall here adde, is, that there is yet another ſenſe of which theſe words are capable here, wherein though they come not home to the full importance of thoſe two places, (of obtaining God's pardon for a multitude of ſins) yet they approach nearer to them than in this which we have given, and ſtill conceive to be the fitteſt interpretation of this place, viz. that as hatred ſtirreth up ſtrifes, where one hates another, he that knows he is hated by him, is continually bent to act revenges, and ſo enters into contentions and quarrels with him on all and on no occaſions; ſo charity hides all offences, he that is known to be kind, whatſoever offences he commits, they are not imputed to him, his kindneſs ſatisfies, propitiates for all, and is accepted as if it did; And then improving this ſenſe ſo far, that it extend not to men onely but to God, and ſignifie obtaining his pardon for all ſins, it will then come to the ſenſe of the words in thoſe two places of S. James and S. Peter. The Syriack in this place have made a great change, reading ܘܡܟܣܝܢ ܕܠܐ ܐܚܫ ܚܡܠܐ, and confuſion ſhall cover all ſinners.

g V. 14. Deſtruction] מְחִתָּה, from חָתַת, proſtratus, contritus eſt, muſt here ſignifie breaking to pieces; The congruity whereof to the place will be diſcerned by conſidering the quality of fools diſcourſe, temerarious and precipitous, venting any thing giddily and haſtily, which may doe them never ſo much hurt and miſchief, and then to ſuch precipitation, contuſion and contrition, bruſing and breaking in pieces is conſequent. This the LXXII. have moſt fully expreſt, στόμα δὲ θερμοῦ ἐγγίζει συντριβῇ, but the mouth of the temerarious or precipitous approacheth to breaking to pieces, and ſo the Latin, contuſioni proximum eſt, is next to contuſion. The word מְחִתָּה is uſed again in the next verſe, and there by the oppoſition to the ſtrong or fortified city, wherein truſt is repoſed, it appears to ſignifie conſternation or dejection of ſpirit, which is another ſignification of חָתַת, to be caſt down, affrighted, in conſternation, Jer. L. 2. Iſa. 8. 9. and Jer. 1. 17. we render it be not diſmay'd, ſo Eccl. 12. 5. we reade fears in the way; And ſo the LXXII. here reteining συντριβὴ, contrition, the Latin yet reade pavor eorum, their fear; and thus the ſenſe follows currently, the riches of the rich are matter of confidence to them, the poverty of the poor is their dejection or terrour, that which ſo caſts them down that they have no courage or comfort to doe any thing,

Haud facile emergunt quorum virtutibus obſtat
Res anguſti domi.——

And in this ſenſe it is moſt reaſonable to take it alſo, v. 29. where it is oppoſed to מָעוֹז, ſtrength, or rather a fortified place, ὀχύρωμα, ſaith the LXXII. a ſtrong hold; And accordingly there alſo the Latin render it pavor, fear, as that word ſignifieth both the affection of fear oppoſed to fortitude, and the object of fear, deſtruction.

h He is in the way of life, &c.] The moſt literal rendring of this verſe may reaſonably be judged the beſt, אֹרַח לְחַיִּים שֹׁמֵר מוּסָר, the way to life is obſerving correction, or keeping correction, (the keeping or obſerving, and ſo making uſe of the good admonitions and counſel that is given us) is the way to life, וְעֹזֵב תּוֹכַחַת מַתְעֶה, and forſaking reproof cauſeth to

err. The LXXII. making מוסר the ſubject of each branch of the propoſition, have transformed it, Ὁδὸς ζωῆς εὐλόγου παιδεία, παιδεία δὲ ἀνεξελεγκτος πλατᾶται, inſtruction or diſcipline preſerves the ways of life, but diſcipline wanting reproof, errs. Inſtead of the former part, Symmachus reads τὸ ὁδῷ ζωὴν εὐλαβούμενον παιδείαν, the way of life is of them (the Latin reads cuſtodienti, to him) that keep diſcipline; Inſtead of the latter, Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion reade, ὃς ἐγκαταλιμπάνων ἐλέγχους πλανᾶται, but he that leaves reproof, errs. This makes it not improbable that this latter παιδεία in the LXXII. is by ſome Scribes miſtake ſet for πᾶς, for thus the ſenſe flows very currently, but the child that is without reproof, erreth.

i V. 18. He that hideth, &c.] All the ancient Interpreters agree in this plain rendring of this paſſage, מְכַסֶּה שִׂנְאָה שִׂפְתֵי שָׁקֶר, lying lips conceal hatred, ſo the Chaldee is evidently to be rendred (not as their Latin reads, Inſidiatur inimicus labiis mendacii, but) מְכַסִּין בְּעַל דְּבָבָא שִׂפְוָתָא דְשִׁקְרָא, lying lips conceal or hide over hatred, and ſo the Syriack, with this change onely, that for lips of falſity, or lying lips, they reade lips יְבֹשׁ of the wicked, or wicked lips, which aſſures us that in our reading of the LXXII. κρύπτουσιν ἐχθρὸν χείλη δίκαια, righteous lips hide enmity, it ſhould be אדיק, wicked, and ſo Symmachus reads ἄδικα, wicked lips, but Aquila and Theodotion ψεύδους, lips of a lie, i. e. lying lips, and ſo the vulgar, abſcondunt odium labia mendacia, lying lips hide hatred. And thus the ſecond part of the verſe fitly connects with it, as appears in the paraphraſe.

k V. 23. As a ſport] From שָׂחַק, to laugh, uſed ſometimes in a good ſenſe for being merry, Job 5. v. 22. (as in an ill for mocking and deriding, Pſ. 59. 9.) is the noun שְׂחוֹק, laughter, in a good ſenſe, all one with mirth and joy, Pſal 126. 2. (as well as in a bad, being taken for deriſion.) And ſo in all probability it is uſed here. כְּשְׂחוֹק, as mirth, i. e. as it is mirth to a fool עֲשׂוֹת זִמָּה, to doe miſchief. —— And then firſt the notion of ו in the latter part muſt be obſerved, not as a bare copulative [and] but as a note of an ἀντιπαίδοσιν or ſecond part of a ſimilitude [ſo] Thus v. 25. כַּעֲבוֹר, as the paſſing of a whirlwind, וְאֵין (we duly render) ſo the wicked is no more, and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack הֵיכְנָא ſo] Secondly to make the latter part of the verſe bear analogy with the former, the word mirth] muſt be again repeated there, viz. that wiſedom is שְׂחוֹק, mirth, לְאִישׁ תְּבוּנָה, to a man of underſtanding. Thus the Antitheſis is exact, for as to a fool in the former, is oppoſed a man of underſtanding, in the latter, ſo to doing miſchief in the former, is wiſedom, piety, practice of vertue, (eſchewing evil, doing good) in the latter; and then the כ and ו [as] and [ſo] being exactly anſwerable one to the other, the firſt word of the verſe [mirth] is common to them both, as doing miſchief is mirth to one, ſo is wiſedom to the other. The firſt part of the verſe the LXXII. (and other ancient Interpreters) competently render, ἐν γέλωτι ἄφρων πράσσει κακὰ, with or in laughter a fool doth evil; the latter they have not ſo fully interpreted, for want of reſuming שְׂחוֹק, mirth, ἵνα σοφία ἀνδρὶ πίλιν φρόνησιν, ſay they, but wiſedom begets prudence to a man.

l V. 29. The way of the Lord] In this verſe are ſeveral difficulties which deſerve to be taken notice of; Firſt what is meant by the way of the Lord, whether that which reſpects God or us, that wherein God walks, or that wherein we are appointed to walk, the former is the way of his providence, the latter of his commandments; In this place (as in moſt other) it ſeems to be determined to the latter, by the mention of the upright, who walk in this way of the Lord, and the workers of iniquity, which forſake that way. Secondly what is meant by מָעוֹז, which ſignifies either ſtrength or courage, or a fort, or ſtrong hold; Any of theſe three ſenſes it will well bear here, but eſpecially the ſecond, that of courage, or fortitude, if we will judge it by its oppoſition to מְחִתָּה, which that it ſignifies fear and conſternation, (as well as deſtruction or confuſion) hath been ſhewed Note g. Laſtly it is doubtfull whether in the ſecond part of the verſe the phraſe [the way of the Lord] be again to be repeated or no; for if it be, then the rendring muſt be (not [deſtruction ſhall be] but) fear to the workers of iniquity; and thus indeed the rendring is moſt literal, The way of the Lord is courage to the upright, but fear to the workers of iniquity; by the contrary tempers of men, it is of very diſtant and contrary effects, (like as when Chriſt is ſaid to be for the fall and riſing of many in Iſrael, and the Goſpel the ſavour of life to the σωζόμενοι, eſcapers, or penitent, and the ſavour of death to the ἀπολλύμενοι, the loſt or impenitent.) And as all the rendrings of the Ancients being literal, are capable of this ſenſe, ſo the learned Caſtalio hath particularly expreſt it, Et integris firmamento & maleficis detrimento eſt Jovæ inſtitutio, God's law or inſtitution is both a firmament to the upright, and a loſs to the evil-doers.

V. 5. The LXXII. have in this verſe much miſt the ſenſe, for אֹגֵר בַּקַּיִץ, he that gathereth in ſummer, they reade ῥυσθὶς ἀπὸ καύματος, hath been delivered or ſaved from the heat, taking אגר, to gather, in the notion of gathering what is deſigned to ſecure or ſave from miſchief, and that in a paſſive ſenſe, and then uſing ב according to the promiſcuous acception of prepoſitions for from. And ſo in the latter part of the verſe for נִרְדָּם, ſnorting or ſleeping] they reade ἀνεμόδουλος, blaſted by the wind, or ſtricken, partly from the notion of רדם for ſtupor, which they elſewhere render ὕπνωσις, ecſtaſie, partly to hold up the oppoſition betwixt the former and the latter part of the verſe, that as the wiſe is preſerved from the ſcorching of the Sun, ſo the fooliſh or wicked is blaſted by the wind; but eſpecially becauſe they that ſleep in the harveſt, abroad on the ground, as ſlothfull workers uſe to doe, are oft blaſted by ſome wind or vapour that comes out of the earth, and ſo much miſchiev'd. Accordingly their rendring of the whole verſe is, ῥυσθὶς ἀπὸ καύματος υἱὸς νοήμων, ἀνεμόδουλος δὲ ἐν ἀμήτῳ υἱὸς ἐξαίνους, A wiſe or knowing ſon is delivered from ſcorching, but a wicked ſon is blaſted by the wind in harveſt.

V. 13. The two branches of this verſe are by the LXXII. (and therein they are followed by the Syriack) compounded into one, Ὃς ἐκ χειλέων φέρει σοφίαν, ῥάβδῳ πλήσει ἀνδρὸς ἀκαρδίου, He that bringeth forth wiſedom out of his lips, ſmites with a rod the heartleſs man. Hereby they ſeem to point out what is meant by this rod, viz. no other but the wiſe and prudent diſcourſe of pious men, which is a reproof, and ſo metaphorically a chaſtiſement to the impious, for ſuch is the חֲסַר לֵב, which they fitly render ἀκάρδιος, one that wants an heart. Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, are more literal, Ἐν χείλεσι σώφρονος εὑρεθήσεται σοφία, καὶ ῥάβδος νώτῳ ὑστερουμένου καρδίας, In the lips of the wiſe wiſedom ſhall be found, and the rod on the back of him that wants an heart.

V. 21. For יִרְעוּ רַבִּים, ſhall feed or teach, (as when when Jer. L. 6. it is ſaid their paſtours, i. e. teachers have ſeduced them) they reade ὅσια ἐλάλει ὑψηλὰ, know high things, queſtionleſs miſtaking ד for ר, and ſo reading יֵדְעוּ, know. So Hoſ. 9. 2. for יַרְעֵם, feed them, they reade יֵדָעֵם, know them. In the latter part of the verſe, for בַּחֲסַר לֵב, by want of heart, they reade no more than ἐν ἐνδείᾳ, in want, the word καρδίας being omitted by ſome Scribe, or perhaps ἐνδεία being taken for folly by force of ἄφρονες, fools, foregoing.

V. 23. To εὐλογία κυρίου, the bleſſing of the Lord, they adde by way of paraphraſe ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν δικαίου, on the head of the juſt, and in the end, for עִמָּהּ, with it, they reade ἐν καρδίᾳ, in the heart.

V. 24. The LXXII. no way render the words which are plain, yet the ſenſe they expreſs paraphraſtically, ἐν ἀπωλείᾳ ἀσεβὴς περιφέρεται, (in the notion of ἐν frequent with them for εἰς) the wicked is hurried to deſtruction, which is exactly equivalent to his fear coming on him, deſtruction being that which he feared, and not the affection, but the object, being here and frequently in other places meant by fear. So in the ſecond part, ἡ τῶν ἐπιθυμία δικαίων δεκτὴ, the deſire of the juſt is acceptable, is all one with יִתֵּן, he ſhall give the deſire of the juſt, or his deſire ſhall be given him.

V. 25. For כַּעֲבֹר סוּפָה, as the whirlwind paſſeth, &c. they reade παραπορευομένου καταιγίδος, the whirlwind paſſing, the wicked vaniſheth, which is but another ſcheme to the ſame ſenſe. In the latter part of the verſe, for וְצַדִּיק יְסוֹד עוֹלָם, ſo the righteous is a foundation for ever,] they reade δίκαιος δὲ ἐκλίνας σώζεται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, but the righteous eſcaping is delivered for ever, no doubt reading יָסוֹר, the future of סוֹר, declinavit, receſſit, and underſtanding it of ſuch a declining or going out of the way of danger, as ſignifies deliverance, they fitly render it ἐκκλίνων σώζεται, he declining eſcapes, or eſcaping is delivered, wherein they recede but little from the ſenſe, the being a foundation for ever] being ſet to denote unmovedneſs, in oppoſition to the paſſing away of the whirlwind.

V. 26. For הָעָצֵל, the ſluggard, &c. they reade ἀδικήματα τοῖς χρωμένοις αὐτῷ, tranſgreſſion to them that uſe it, probably it ſhould be παραβάτας and αὐτῷ, the tranſgreſſour to them that employ him, and then it is no remote paraphraſe.

V. 28. For תּוֹחֶלֶת צַדִּיקִים, the hope of the righteous, &c. they reade ἐγκρονίζει δικαίοις εὐφροσύνη, gladneſs endures, continues to the righteous, from another notion of יָחַל, which as it ſignifies to hope, ſo 'tis alſo to ſtay, and wait, and that they thought to expreſs by ἐγκρονίζει, and to that purpoſe make gladneſs the ſubject inſtead of the predicate in the propoſition. But herein the reſt of the ancient Interpreters, all but the Arabick, diſſent from them.

V. 32. For יֹדְעוּן רָצוֹן, know what is acceptable] they reade ἀποστάζει χαρίτας, diſtill graces, borrowing the verb from v. 31. as fitter for the tongue, than knowing] ſeemed to be, and uſing χάριτας in the notion of רָצָה, for placatus, reconciliatus eſt, to denote prayers to appeaſe and reconcile whether God or Man.

AN

ADVENT SERMON

FOR

His moſt Sacred Majeſty.

THE Sermon of Peace and Charity which Your Majeſty was pleaſed to call for about twelve Weeks ſince, by which means it had the favour to become one of the earlieſt Addreſſes made to Your Majeſty after the recalling of thoſe Votes, hath now taken the confidence to appear more publick, that it may demonſtrate and teſtifie the reality of Your Majeſties inclinations to Peace, (which alone could render this trifle conſiderable to You) and the ſincere deſire of Your moſt private undiſguiſed retirements, to make the way back to Your Throne by none but Pacifick means, even then when others thought it their duty by the Sword to attempt it for you.

The other few Sermons added to the Volume have no errand but to attend this, that it may with a little more ſolemnity approach Your Sacred preſence, and enjoy that liberty which is denied to

Your Majeſties moſt obedient

and moſt devoted Subject and Servant

THE Christians Obligations TO PEACE and CHARITY.

The I. SERMON.

ISAIAH 2. 4.

They ſhall beat their Swords into Plough-ſhares, and their Spears into Pruning-hooks.

THE day is the Third of Advent, deſigned by the Church for the Celebration of the cloſer and nearer approach of the Majeſty of Heaven to this lowly ſinful Earth of ours; that εὐλογημένη ἐρχομένη βασιλεία, bleſſed coming Kingdom, as 'tis ſtyled Mark 11. 10. And the Text is a piece of an Advent Chapter, the very Contents beſpeak it ſo, Iſaiah propheſying the coming, i. e. Advent, of Chriſt's Kingdom. All the unhappineſs of it is, that this part of the Prophecy about transforming of Swords, ſeems not yet to be fulfilled in our ears; that after ſo many Centuries, Chriſt is not yet ſo effectually and throughly born amongſt us, as was here foretold; that thoſe glorious effects of his Incarnation are not yet come to their full date: i. e. in effect, that Chriſt is come to his birth, and with him all the well-natur'd charitable qualities, all the unity and peace and bliſs in the world, and through the contrivances of the Enemy-power, there is not liberty or ſtrength to bring forth; all the precious iſſues of Chriſtianity are reſiſted, and obſtructed, and ſtifled in the Womb; the temper of the pretending world being ſo ſtrangely diſtant from the temper of Chriſt, the prophecies of his coming having ſo little of the Sword in them, and the practice of Chriſtendom ſo nothing elſe. Bleſſed Lord! that we might once be able to reconcile theſe contrary φαινόμενα, that we might one day celebrate an Advent indeed, and that the completion of the Prophecy of this Text, might be an Ingredient in the Solemnity; that this of ours, might be one of thoſe Nations and People judged and rebuked, i. e. convinced and converted by the Incarnate Saviour: for then would theſe words of the Text be verifi'd of us, They ſhall beat their Swords, &c.

The words are the Character or Effect of Chriſt's Kingdom, of the ſtate and power of his Goſpel in mens hearts: and I ſhall view them, firſt, abſolutely, in the ſeveral parts or branches of this Character; and then relatively, as they are peculiarly verified of the ſtate of the Goſpel, or as they are a character of that.

In the Abſolute view you have, 1. The Swords and Spears on one ſide; 2. The Plough-ſhares and Pruning-hooks on the other: 3. The Paſſage or Motion of one of theſe into the other, by way of Beating.

In the Relative view we ſhall, 1. have occaſion to vindicate the truth of this Prophecy againſt the contrary appearances. 2. To ſhew you how and by what means, Chriſtianity undertakes to work this great work, to beat the Swords, &c.

I begin with the Abſolute view, and in that, with the moſt formidable part of the Proſpect, the Swords and Spears; ſharp, aſſaulting, piercing weapons, found out and forg'd by the paſſions and wits of men, to arm their rage, to ſatisfie their covetings and ambitions, to manage all the quarrels that the carnal or diabolical affections of men have commenc'd or inflam'd through the world. Theſe are the groſs Elements made uſe of by the Prophet, figuratively to expreſs th inſtruments of our Hoſtilities that lie more covertly in our hearts, theſe inviſible Swords and Spears, animoſities, uncharitable, unpeaceable humors, that Chriſt came to allay and temper, to transform and beat into other ſhapes. And to put off the Figure, and give you plain words inſtead of it; Three ſorts there are of theſe quarrels or Hoſtilities, which ſeem all to be comprehended in theſe words.

Firſt, though more improperly, our Hoſtilities againſt God, our rebellions and reſiſtances againſt his will, our contrary walkings to him, the throwing off that yoke of Moral or Chriſtian duties, breaking thoſe bands, caſting of thoſe cords, Pſal. 2. and that, either 1. In an univerſal diſlike of his Government, a direct nolumus hunc, that profeſt Atheiſm that begins to ſet up, to gather Diſciples and Proſelytes abroad in the world, that Chair of the Scorner, that diſclaims Religion as a puſillanimous thing, a ridiculous pedantick quality, that hath in their opinion dis-ſpirited and emaſculated the world: Or elſe, 2. by particular oppoſitions to his commands in the retail, ſinning over all the Precepts on either Mount, taking part with the Law of the Members againſt all the Empires of the Law of the Mind, and under a Christian profession doing as much despight unto Christ as he that hath shut him out of his mouth and brain also. And in relation to these Hostilities it is, that we Ministers are posted from Heaven like so many Heraulds at the news of a Battery, or approach of the Enemy, to demand a Parley, before men proceed any farther in their giantly θεομαχία, or fighting against God: and our Embassie is very submiss, as though God did beseech you by us, as Lot doth the Sodomites on their assault of the Angels, We pray you, Brethren, do not so wickedly; We pray you in Christ's stead that you will not proceed in your course, that you will be pacified and reconciled unto God. And sure these are formidable slaughtering-weapons, very bloudy threatning Enemies, that make God think fit to send out Embassies for Treaty, and not venture his Heaven to be stormed by them.

A second sort of Hostilities possibly here meant, are these against our selves, the fatallest and bloudiest in the world, the piercing, and wounding, and butchering our own poor Souls, deforming and infeebling them with our wasting habits of sin, exhausting the very principles of civil ingenuous Nature, leaving never a vital spark or seed of humanity behind, but violating, and grieving, and quenching all, a direct felonia de se, murthering and assassinating these divine creatures, which God had prepared to people Heaven, and casting them out to the noisom'st dunghills, employing them to the meanest offices in the world. Nay, Hostilities to the Flesh it self: those sins that undertake to serve the grosser part of us, to have special fidelities and kindnesses to the flesh in all their warrings against the Soul, are not yet so faithful in their performances, work oft the greatest malices to that very flesh, cast it sometimes into the fire, sometimes into the water, despoil it of all the honour, beauty, spirits, joys, and life it self, leave it in the pitiousest, disfigured, rifled, wasted flesh imaginable, and so have their malices and treacheries against that also. But the truth is, these are but the πρόπυγμαι, or σκιαμαχίαι, the prelusory lighter brandishings of these swords: The uncharitablenesses here especially designed are, in the third place, those that (as our material swords and spears) are ordinarily imployed against our Brethren, or fellow-Christians, either upon their Lives, or their Reputations, or their Souls.

1. On their Lives: when either our ambitions, or revenges, or, which is the worst of all, and the bloudiest assassinate (when 'tis set on it, when 'tis gotten into the Jesuite Chamber of meditation) our πικρὸς ζῆλος, bitter envying or zeal, when that, I say, like the bloud of the Mulberries to the Elephant, shall inflame us to a brutality, a thirst of our Brethrens bloud, turning the Christian into a Nimrod, a mighty Hunter before the Lord, giving the Church that new notion of Militant, in shedding as much of other mens bloud (and triumphing in that effusion) as in the Primitive times it poured out of its own veins, when the Heathen Persecutors called for it; when Christians shall design God Sacrifices, bloudy Cannibal Oblations, and, in that other stern sense of the Apostle's words, λογικὰς θυσίας, rational humane sacrifices, whole Herds and Hecatombs at once, and think to avert judgments, to work expiations, to perform supererogating services to God by that means.

2. On their Reputations: whether in the Language of the Slanderer and Reviler, whose words are spears and arrows, and his tongue a sharp sword, in the Psalmist's dialect, the preparative to that former practising on the Life, putting men into wild beasts Skins, that they may be worried and torn to pieces in their disguises; or whether yet in the higher strain of the censorious Anathematizer, that breaths out woes and damnations, passes that bloudy sentence upon all that walk not in his path toward Canaan; this spiritual assassinacy, this deepest die of bloud being most Satanically designed on Souls, and (because they cannot get those into their power) practising it in Effigie, slaughtering them here in this t'other Calvary, the place for the crucifying of Reputations, turning men (upon any, upon no occasion) out of the communion of their charity, when they cannot out of bliss, and no doubt rejecting many, whom the Angels entertain more hospitably.

Lastly, on mens Souls: whether by terrors or by invitations, by the sharp or by the soft weapon, working ruine and destruction on them. By the sharp, forcing them to violate their consciences in hope to get their bodies or estates off from the torture, (as the Englishman is observed, through impatience of any present pressure, to venture the vastest future danger that will pretend to ease or rescue him at the instant, and therefore, they say, the use of the Rack was superseded in this Nation.) And they that can be Instruments in this savage enterprise, that can thus operate under the great Abaddon, in this profession of assaulting and wounding of Souls, for which Christ was content to die, are sure some of the בני רמים the sons of blouds, in the plural, as the Hebrews call them. And so he also that is so skill'd at the soft weapon, that by the fair insinuating carriage, by the help of the winning address, the Syrene-mode or meen, can inspire poison, whisper in destruction to the Soul (as the Poetick Present that had secret Chains in it, fettering and inslaving of him that was pleased with it; ἥσθη τῷ δώρῳ, καὶ ἐδέθη, καὶ ὁ λύσων οὐκ ἦν, in the Orator, the delight brought shackles, the beauty bands along with it, but no man to loose him that was presently insnared by them (he that can tole on the tame, well-natur'd, easily seducible into all the luxury and the hell, the sin and the damnation imaginable, he is one of the fair-spoken sword-men that David speaks of, whose words are softer than butter, and yet are they very swords.

You have had a view of the Artillery in the Text, the interpretation of the hostile weapons, the swords and spears, the furniture of the Heathens Armory before Christ's coming: (Good God! that in their travel round about the world, they were not at length all transported hither, and, like the Teeth of old, sowed and sprung up a whole harvest of swords and spears, of animosities and uncharitablenesses in this our land.) I hasten to the more innocent tools, the weapons of the Husband-man's warfare against his enemies, barrenness and unprofitableness, the plough-shares and the pruning-hooks on the other side, my second particular. The signification of these Emblems or Hieroglyphicks you will soon discern, when you but consider them, first, in the general notion, wherein both of them agree, instruments of husbandry; and then in their several particular proprieties. In the first they both accord, to express unto us the spiritual industry and skill, the office and the craft of dressing and cultivating of Souls: we are God's Husbandry, his beloved Plantation, intrusted ministerially under him to our own, to our Brethrens diligence.

1. Every

1. Every man to take the care of his own field, his own Soul, to help it to all the dreſſing and improving, to water it with his tears, when 'tis a dry ſoil, drain it with action and buſineſs, yea and mix it with new mould, affiance and comfort in Chriſt, when it is too moiſt, (the diſſolving or weeping earth) and when 'tis too beggerly and lean, to inrich it with all the whole mine of fatneſs that lies treaſur'd up to that purpoſe in the Word of God, to ply it through each ſeaſon from the ſeed time of Repentance, (that ſowing in tears) to the harveſt in joy and cheatfulneſs, the bringing our ſheaves with us, theſe worthy meet fruits of that Repentance. This earth of-ours, I ſay, is thus to practiſe upon it ſelf; or when it can do nothing elſe, (the drieſt, parched, unregenerate Soul,) yet ſtill, with that, to cleave, and open, and gaſp toward Heaven, to be ready to receive and ſuck in thoſe ſhowres, thoſe influences which that is ready to afford us; and after all the planting and watering, to acknowledge all to be God's αὐξησοφία, his fructifying or giving of increaſe. And not only thus, every man to be his own Husband-man under God, but

2. Every man again to help in his Brother's field, to make his art and trade of husbandry as communicative and gainful as he can: not as the manner is of the covetous Worldling to incloſe his skills, for fear any man elſe ſhould be as proſperous as he; but to diffuſe our charity, and not only, as the Ancients did, write Books of Husbandry, (our ſpiritual Georgicks and Geoponicks) but go bodily, and labour in the Vineyards, by our aid and by our example encourage all the neighbourhood into this Trade of thriving, ſet to that glorious work of civilizing Deſarts, baniſhing Briars and Thorns (to which the Laps'd Adam was condemn'd) quite out of the Country, weed out all the Ferity and Barbarity out of mens minds, bring the whole Region from the neglected Waſte to the trim fruitful Incloſure, from the Wilderneſs to the Garden, and as far as 'tis poſſible to ſome degree of return towards Eden, towards Paradiſe again, I mean, towards the Innocence and Fertility of that. And if ever there was a time when the Province was large, (I would I could ſay, the Harveſt great) and need to pray to the Lord God of the Harveſt to ſend a whole Army of Labourers, not with their military, but their husbandly, Inſtruments, for the ἔργα φιλανθρωπίας, ἢ στρατηγίας, the grand charitable acts, which Cyrus in Xenophon preferr'd before the military, to dreſs a wild People, and plant ſome ſeeds (of Chriſtianity, ſhall I ſay? nay) of honeſt civil nature amongſt Chriſtians, to make men ingenuous Heathens, one pitch above Salvage or Cannibal, to give a little Europe-breed inſtead of a whole Africk of wilder Creatures, and ſo in ſome meaſure to take away Chriſt's reproach, which the moſt unchriſtian lives of the generality of Chriſtians have caſt upon him; this certainly were a ſeaſon for ſuch prayers in Chriſtendom, and all the Plough-ſhares and Pruning-hooks in a Country would be little enough for that purpoſe.

But then ſomewhat is here noted by the particular proprieties of the Plough-ſhares and the Pruning-hooks: The Plough-ſhares, they are for the breaking up our fallow grounds, wounding and tearing aſunder our firm faſt-hardned habits of ſins, that Quarry of Earth and Stone, with the fair green even ſurface over it, fetching up the root of the Weeds and Thorns, our corrupt Cuſtoms of Atheiſm and Profaneneſs, that grew ſo voluntarily and ſo faſt; nay, the very green-ſwart, as we call it, the more innocent, blameleſs face of unregenerate Morality, which, though it have no great hurt in it, muſt yet give place to this ſeed of Chriſt, furrowing and turning it up all, that there may be the bare earth, as it were the ſolum ſubactum, the broken, humble, contrite heart, ready for this new Sower, for the infuſions of Grace, which will never thrive if there be any thing left to encumber or reſiſt, to over-top or wraſtle with it. And ſo you have the Interpretation of Plough-ſhares here, the rending of the impenitent heart, the preparing it for grace, the humbling the proud ſinner, and fitting, and ſoftning, and emptying him for Chriſt.

Then for the Pruning-hooks, if that be the exact rendring of the Hebrew; you have then under that colour the dreſſing of God's plantations, the ſupervenient work of paring and cutting all Excreſcences in the regenerate Child of Heaven, (parallel to the waſhing of his feet, which were cleanſed already, in Chriſt's anſwer to St. Peter) lopping off the Suckers, the luxuriances that will ſtill return as long as we have that root and fomes of fleſh about us, and if they are ſuffered to grow too laviſhly, will ſoon ſuck away all the vital fructifying juice from the Branches, at leaſt exhauſt very much of that heavenly ſtore which would be husbanded at the beſt advantage, every dram more pretiouſly employed.

But if our Margent have made the better conjecture, (as many times it doth) and the Scithes, which you meet with there, carry away the importance of the Original from the Pruning-hooks, you have then, God's calling for his fruits in the time of harveſt, ſending his Mowers into the field, his ſtrict requiring and earneſt expecting the plentiful iſſues of all his care, the growths and fructifyings of his graces; and then, put all theſe together (as indeed the various readings may both ſtand good, or the Hook or Sickle, which may probably be the yet fitter rendring of the word, will ſupply the place both of Text and Margent, be accommodable to either, to both uſes) and then you have here the entire poſitive buſineſs of all Chriſtianity, ſometimes to break up, ſometimes to prune, ſometimes to prepare the fruits for God's barn, to begin, to advance, to perfect that great work of fruit-bearing, that only deſign of all God's methods and diſpenſations amongſt us, the kindly Vintage which he expects ſo paſſionately, Iſa. 5: after all his husbandry. And, O what an exprobration will it be to us, the Ecce labruſcas there, our nothing but wild Grapes, our ſour unſavoury fruits of unrighteouſneſs after all this dreſſing! And let that ſerve for the ſecond particular of the Abſolute view. There is only the third behind, The motion or paſſage from one of theſe to the other, from the Swords to the Plough-ſhares, from the Spears to the Sickles or Hooks, and that by way of beating, They ſhall beat, &c.

The ſame individual metal, which was even now a Sword, having ſuffered ſome change by the fire and anvil, comes out new forged in the other ſhape; the ſame affections that were even now maliciouſly acted by Satan, formed and whet at the Philiſtines forge, ὅπλα ἀδικίας, weapons of all the villany in the world, the Diſquieters of the honour and peace of Chriſtendom, the only boutefeux abroad, our paſſions and appetites, let them be but transformed by the Spirit of Chriſt, let the fire and hammer paſs on them and without being deſtroyed in that fire, they come out new moulded, inſtruments of righteouſneſs, zeal for the reforming our own lives, emulation for purity, and for fructifying; that Saul that was even now an Apoſtle or Meſſenger of the Jewiſh Conſiſtory to Damaſcus, and had then ſuch a heart full of Swords and Spears, was ſo furious a Blaſphemer of Chriſt, and Perſecutor of Chriſtians, may continue his metal ſtill, his title, and almoſt his name and office, and be the gallanter Apoſtle of Chriſt, the more abundant Labourer for ever after. Chriſtianity doth not mean ſuch ennity to Nature, ſuch ſcorn and contumely to our humane Souls, as to throw all away as droſs and refuſe, to mortifie any other members upon earth, but thoſe which ſignifie our ſins, fornication, uncleanneſs, envyings, ſeditions, &c. as for the Affections or Faculties themſelves, have they been never ſo profane and unhallowed, a breathing on them, or a conſecrating them anew, a putting them to purer and more honourable uſes for the future, will ſerve the turn; the Cenſers of Corah, with a little change, will become excellent plates for God's ſanctuary. Let that Love that even now was tranſported and laviſht out on the ſenſual object, be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, come out a pure ethereal love, faſtened on the beauty of holineſs, (that angelical purity, to be tranſcribed into thine and thy brethrens hearts;) and the more flaming this love is, the more gracious and more acceptable it is like to be. Let but the hoſtility that is now let looſe upon the perſons, the ſins, the perſonal affronts, nay perhaps the graces and vertues of other men, be retrencht and retired, and reflected on our own ſins; and then, let there be as much ſteel in the weapons, as much zeal in the revenges and indignations as ever. May but the ambitions and aſpirings of the Worldling (that like air, pent up in too cloſe a coop, works ſuch σεισμὸς and tempeſts, ſuch ſhaking palſie-fits in the regions about us) be faſtened, according to S. Paul's advice, on a new object, transformed into the διώκειν ἀγάπην, purſuing of charity, as of a prize in the Olympick games, into the φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, taking as much pains, ſtriving as emulouſly to contain himſelf and others in quiet, to reſtore a battered Kingdom to Peace again, as contentious men uſe to put the world into a combuſtion; and then, our Swords may become very edifying weapons, our contentions very excellent, profitable contentions, every man ſtriving to ſurpaſs and exceed the other, in meekneſs, patience, contented taking up the Croſs of Chriſt, (thoſe more than Olympick ἀγῶνες, to which the incorruptible crown is aſſigned) overcoming men in charity and wel-doing. Do but you enter into the ſchool of Chriſt, (the moſt boiſterous, raw, uncultivated you, that have leaſt of this ſacred temper about you) and that will be able to infuſe it: which brings me to my ſecond general, the relative aſpect of theſe words, as they are a character of the Goſpel-ſtate, of the kingdom of Chriſt, and ſo the fitter for an Advent Sermon.

And in that we are, 1. To conſider what truth there is in that prediction, to juſtifie and vindicate this prophecy againſt all the contrary appearances, They ſhall beat, &c. One Objection 'tis clear there is againſt the truth of this prophecy, (and 'twere more for the credit of Chriſtendom that there were an hundred others, ſo this might be ſuperſeded) The contrary practice of the generality of Chriſtians. Bleſſed Lord! where is this promiſe of Chriſt's coming, this conſequent of his birth, and kingdom among men? For ſince Swords came once into the world, ſince the ſweet of revenge and the advantage of ſpoiling others, was once taſted, ſince that bloudy iſſue once began to break out, what hath all our Chriſtianity done to ſtop or ſtanch it? 'Tis true, what Hiſtorians tells us, that at the time of Chriſt's birth there was a notable ceſſation of Arms over the whole world; and the ἀπογραφὴ, Luk. 2. 1. (not taxing, but) inrolling, that brought Chriſt's Parents up to Bethlehem, and ſo occaſioned his birth there, was an effect and immediate product of that Ceſſation: and 'twas a remarkable act of providence, that upon a former peace, and ſo command for that inrolling, in the ſame Auguſtus time, proclaim'd at Tarracone in Spain, as Sepulveda tells us, (which if it had ſucceeded, Chriſt in any likelihood had not been born in Bethlehem) there brake out ſome new broils, that deferred the peace and inrolling till this very point of time, when Chriſt was carried up in Mary's womb to obey the prediction of his Birth in Bethlehem. But ſure all this would be but a very imperfect completion of this other prophecy in my Text; this peace was ſoon at an end, and, beſides, was rather the midwife to bring Chriſt into the world, than Chriſt to bring this peace: And yet to ſee how ſome Obſervers have been willing to pitch upon this one paſſage of ſtory, the ſhutting of Janus Temple about the birth of Chriſt, (the Catholick peace in that part of the world at that point of time) as the main thing that was pointed at in this Verſe.

Their reaſon is clear, becauſe as for a long time before, ſo ſince that time, there was never any ſuch completion of it; Chriſt born in an Halcyon hour, had ſcarce ever any one afterwards whilſt he lived: and for his poſterity he makes the profeſſion, he came not to bring peace, but a ſword, that is, he foreſaw this would be the effect of his coming; Chriſtianity would breed new quarrels in the world; ſome men really hating one another upon that ſcore of difference in Religion, (and they ſay, no feuds are more deſperately implacable, no ſwords more inſatiably thirſty of bloud, than thoſe which Chriſt brought into the world) but moſt men making this the πρόφασις, the pretence and excuſe of all their bloudineſs. 'Twas Du Pleſſe's account to Languet, why he had not a mind to write the Story of the Civil wars of France, becauſe if he had ſaid truth, he muſt render new originals and cauſes of theſe Wars, hound that fox to a kennel which would not willingly be acknowledg'd, charge that on an emulation, or rivality of ſtate, which (like the Harlot that, coming freſh from her unclean imbraces, 'had wiped the mouth) came demurely, and ſolemnly, and ſuperciliouſly, out of the Church, the only ſanctuary to give impunity and reputation (apology at leaſt) to the blackeſt enterprizes; and betwixt the πρόφασις and the αἰτία, the true and the pretended cauſalities, the effect, God knows, is generally too ſad. Mahomet, that profeſt to propagate his Religion by the Sword, hath not brought ſuch ſtore of theſe bloudy weapons, ſo rich a full-ſtockt artillery into the world, hath not kept them ſo conſtantly imploy'd, ſo ſharp ſet, ſo riotous in their thirſts of bloud, as hath been obſervable in Chriſtendom. I am ſure that Cæſarean ſection, practiſing upon our own mothers, our own bowels, fellow-Chriſtians, fellow-Proteſtants, fellow-Profeſſors (ſhall I add fellow-Saints? but ſure, ſanctity, if it were ſincere, would turn theſe Swords into Plough-ſhares) was never ſo familiar among Turks or Savages; nay, as Eraſmus hath ſweetly obſerved, among the wildeſt beaſts in nature, (which are not beaſt enough to devour thoſe of their own kind,) as it is among Chriſtians

of this last Age almost in every part of the world. Only the bladder of Snakes in Epiphanius hath been our parallel: They were there but few hours together, but one of them had devoured all the rest; and when (to try the Experiment, how solitude and want of prey would discipline the devourer's appetite) he was shut up alone in the bladder, his vulturous stomach lets loose upon himself, and within few minutes more, one half of him devours the other: so many divided and subdivided enmities, and, when all others are wanting, such bloudy practisings upon our selves, that if it be true which Psellus saith, that the devils feast on the vapour that is exhaled from the bloud of men, sure the Christian devils, and of late the English, are the fattest of the whole herd, the richliest treated of any, since whole Tables were furnished for them of the bloud and flesh of their worshippers. And thus far I confess my self unable to vindicate this Prophecy in this sense of it, that so it should actually prove, that Christianity would really drive Swords out of the world: I should be glad to be secured by the Millenary, that ever there would come an age when this Prophecy would thus be completed; but more glad, if this Nation might have the happiness within some tolerable term to enter upon its millennium, that the (Pacem, Domine, in diebus nostris, Peace in our time, our age, O Lord,) were not such a desperate, non-licet form, and that for deliverance from battel and murther, as scandalous a piece of Litany, as that other from sudden death hath been deem'd among us.

I have sufficiently shewed you in what sense these words have no truth in them; 'tis time I proceed to shew you in what sense they have: and that will be either,

1. By telling you that this prophetick form is but a phrase to express the duty and obligation of Christians; They shall beat their swords into plough-shares, i. e. 'tis most certainly their duty to do so. Charity is the only precept, Peace the only depositum, that Christ took any care to leave among them: and then, be there never so many swords in Christian nations, yet 'twere more obediently and more Christianly done, if they were beaten into plough-shares. There is a thousand times more need of amending mens lives, than of taking them away; of reforming our selves, than of hating or killing our Brethren: one broken heart is a richer and more acceptable sacrifice to God than a whole pile of such bloudy offerings, such Mosaical consecrating our selves to God upon our Brethren. And then, as Clemens speaks of seals or rings, that those that have the impressions and sculptures (as of Idols so) of Bow or Sword, must not be worn by the disciple of Christ, the pacifick Christian; or as the Polonian, being asked concerning two Brethren that desired to be of his Congregation, (as being of a Trade which was suspected to be unlawful, the making of Images or Faces to put upon Guns or Ordnances) gave answer, that he knew no great danger in those Images; if there were any thing unchristian, 'twas sure in the Guns, which they were used to adorn: so certainly, that Christ that came to cast Idolatry and Heathenism out of the World, desired also to cast out that heathenish customе of wallowing in one anothers bloud, of hunting, and worrying, and devouring one another, and with the Christian faith to introduce the brotherly charity into his Church; this being the most strict and most frequently reiterated command of Christ, and that the importance of this Prophecy in the first place. Pædagog. lib. 3. cap. 11.

2. The truth of this Prophecy will be most clear, if you observe the [They] in the front, and the reflection of that, on the former part of the verse, Christ shall judge amongst nations, and rebuke many People: He shall set up his Kingdom in mens hearts, subdue and conquer them; that is the meaning of judging, (as the Administrators of the Jewish Nation, and they that subdued their enemies, were called Judges for some time:) and he shall mould them anew into an Evangelical temper; that is the interpretation of rebuking: And then [They] i. e. these subjects of this Kingdom of his, these malleable, tame, Evangelical new creatures, that are effectually changed by the Spirit and power of Christ's doctrine in their hearts, they that are his Disciples indeed, they shall beat their swords into those more edifying shapes, shall profess more Christianly Trades; and if they do not, be sure they are at the best, if not Anti-, yet Pseudo-Christians, either profest enemies, or false friends of Christ. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another: no other Character of difference to distinguish a Disciple of Christ from any man else, but the Ecce ut se invicem diligunt, Behold how they love, how they embrace, not how they pursue or slaughter, one another. And so there you have the difficulty cleared, how it comes to pass, that there is so little Charity among Christians; why? because there is so little Christianity among Christians, so much of the hypocritical guise, of the form of Christian piety, but so little, so nothing of the power of it discernable among us. Had but Christ the least real influence on our hearts, it would inflame and animate us with love; had we any of that salt within us, Mar. 9. 50. the only preservative from putrefaction and rottenness of spirit, it would be as the Naturalists observe of it, ἑνωτικὸν, unitive, and bring along what our Saviour hath joyned with it, the peace with others. 'Tis the propriety and peculiarity of the Gospel, where 'tis entertained, to impress this well-natured quality; and whereever 'tis not impress'd, 'twill not be censorious to affirm, in despite of all the glorious appearances to the contrary, that those men have received the Gospel, the name, the grace of Christ in vain: which will be demonstrated to you, if I proceed to my second or last particular, to shew you by what means Christianity undertakes to work this great work, to beat our swords into plough-shares, and our spears &c. And that is by three strokes, as it were, and impressions upon our Souls. 1. By inculcating a peculiar strain of Doctrines. 2. By prescribing a peculiar Spirit. 3. By setting before us a peculiar Example. Every of these very proper moral instruments to this end, though (God knows) the stubborn unmalleable weapons of our warfare have too-too often the honour of resisting and vanquishing them all.

For the first, his peculiar straint of Doctrines, they are of two sorts: either they are the direct contrary to these swords and spears, or else such by way of consequence and result. Directly contrary: such is that of not avenging our selves, the μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ, Matt. 5. not retributing of trouble or violence to the injurious, but leaving God and his Vicegerents to work all these necessary acts of revenge, or repaiment; such is that of loving, blessing, praying for enemies; and, let me tell you, not only our own, but (which is worth the considering) our God's enemies. For 1. such are all the curſers and perſecutors of Diſciples; the true Chriſtian's enemies there ſpoken of, they are all God's enemies alſo, as Saul's perſecuting of Chriſtians, was the perſecuting of Chriſt: There is no poſſible ſeparating the hatred of the Brethren from enmity to Chriſt. And therefore Polycarpus, an Apoſtolical perſon, and Biſhop, and Martyr, (one of the firſt Angels of Smyrna in the Revelation) commanding to pray for them that perſecute us, takes in not only the Heathen Powers and Princes, the greateſt enemies of God then living, but in plain words, the ἐχθροὺς σταυροῦ, the renouncers and enemies of the Croſs, i. e. certainly of Chriſt himſelf. 2. Such were the Samaritans, direct enemies of Chriſt, and yet ſuch 'twill not be permitted the Diſciples to curſe, Luke 9. 55. 3. Becauſe the commandment of mercifulneſs lying on us proportionably to God's pattern, (to be merciful as our Father in heaven is merciful) 'tis there ſaid, that he is merciful to the evil as well as to the unthankful, to thoſe that have ſinn'd againſt vertue in general, as well as againſt that particular of gratitude: and 'tis clear, God loves his enemies as well as ours, and out of that love gave his Son for thoſe that had ſinned againſt the firſt as well as the ſecond Table, and conſequently ſo are we obliged to do alſo. Laſtly, becauſe St. Paul's reaſon againſt avenging our ſelves is grounded on God's ſole prerogative of puniſhing Malefactors, Rom. 12. 19. As it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay it, ſaith the Lord. And this priviledge of God's ſure extends to the puniſhing of his own, as well as our enemies. Having named this, I need not mention any more plain Doctrines of direct contrariety to theſe hoſtile weapons. If God hath left us no kind of enemies to hate, neither our own, nor his, the firſt, the ordinary object of our animoſity and revenge, the ſecond, of our very piety and zeal; and ſo the furious and the pious ſword, the Jehu-zeal for the Lord of Hoſts, as well as that other for our ſelves, the ſlaughtering of Chriſt's or the Chriſtian's enemies, be quite excluded out of our Commiſſions; then ſure there is no excuſe for keeping ſo much profitable Metal in that unprofitable, cutting, piercing ſhape: there is far more uſe of thoſe materials in another form, in that of the plough-ſhare and pruning-hook; the work of Repentance being ſtill as neceſſary, as that other of uncharitableneſs is unchriſtian. But then this is not all that Chriſt hath done by way of pacifick Doctrines, ſome other Doctrines he hath as effectually contrary to ſwords and ſpears, though not ſo directly and viſibly, ſome mines more ſecretly to ſupplant this bloudy temper: Such are his teaching his Diſciples humility, and meekneſs, and patience, and contentedneſs with our own, four graces which, if once received into our hearts, are the breaking the bow, the knapping the ſpear aſunder, the rending up all unpeaceableneſs by the roots. What are the roots of ſtrife and contentions among men? or in St. James his ſtyle, From whence come wars and fightings among you? πολεμοὶ and μάχαι, of the greater and leſſer ſize, the piracies of the firſt or ſecond magnitude? are they not from the luſts that war and rage in your members? What be thoſe luſts? Why, the ſpawn of thoſe two great ſenſual principles, anger and deſire, ſometimes pride, ſometimes ſtomach, ſometimes impatience of injuries, and ſometimes and moſt eſpecially covetouſneſs, the deſiring to have ſomewhat which God had not made my lot; and nothing but hudling, and blending, and confuſion of proprieties, throwing the lots into the Helmet again, can give me hope of attaining it. All the irregular ſwords and ſpears in the world are in the hands of theſe luſts, both to forge and manage, and the Graces that Chriſt preſcribes, are ſent to drive theſe all out of the field. The humility that Chriſt preſcribes is directly contrary to that pride; the meekneſs or obedience to Superiors, ſo inculcated in the New Teſtament, is the mortifying that ſtomach; the patience, and taking up the Croſs, and denying my ſelf that helliſh piece of ſenſuality; that of revenge, διπαραστάσιται, is ſent out to duel with that impatience; and contentedneſs with whatever lot, with that of ravening and coveting. O let but the Beatitudes in the fifth of Matthew plant theſe bleſſed ſeeds in us, and our ſwords will preſently be out of faſhion, and within a while aſſaulted and eaten through with the tameſt Creatures, the ruſt that themſelves beget; your carnal Affections will lie uſeleſs by you, or elſe be undiſcernably transformed into calmer and more profitable ſhapes. And that is the firſt part of Chriſt's method in working this change, by a new ſtrain of Precepts or Doctrines.

His ſecond way is by a new kind of Spirit; whether by that we mean the Spirit of Chriſt, or the Spirit of the Goſpel.

1. The Spirit of Chriſt, taken almoſt in the Naturaliſts acception of the word [Spirit] for a kind of vital or animal ſpirit. For this flowing from Chriſt our Head, and paſſing freely through all the Members, unites us not only to him, but one to the other alſo in a vital fellow-membership, to which you know nothing is more contrary or deſtructive than the Sword, diviſion, or Separation: and this is the Argument in St. Paul for the ſtricteſt charity, not ſo much as to tell a falſity one to another, (which is ſure leſs than drawing of Swords, calling down fire from Heaven one upon another) becauſe, ſaith he, ye are members one of another; all members are united in one ſpirit. And then though ſome members are ſometimes corrupt and diſeaſed, and therefore offend and grieve the other members; nay, 2. though one member ſometimes work real injury to the other, the petulancy of the hand or tongue bring miſchief to the whole body; and 3. though the members generally differ in opinion one from the other, the Smell liking that which the Taſte utterly diſlikes: yet is neither one nor all of theſe ground ſufficient for any member to bear malice, revenge, any thing but love and tenderneſs of care and bowels towards the other, becauſe of the uniting ſpirit that paſſes through them, and gives them joys and ſorrows in ſympathy one with another, but never animoſities or indignations, underminings or betrayings one of the other.

But then 2. that which I chiefly mean by the new kind of Spirit, is the Spirit of the Goſpel. In the 9. of Luke there is a reference to this, (as to a conſideration that all diſciples of Chriſt are much concerned in, and from ignorance whereof, all our bloudy and fiery and thundering deſigns againſt our own or the enemies of Chriſt do proceed) οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου πνεύματός ἐστε ὑμεῖς, you know not, or, conſider not, what kind of ſpirit you are of. The Goſpel-ſpirit, it ſeems, was peculiarly qualified, a ſpirit of a ſpecial temper, nothing favourable to the propoſals of the Boanerges; and if you would know the kind of it, you ſhall have it, firſt Poſitively, then Negatively. Poſitively the Goſpel-ſpirit is (a Jewel, will you call it? or) an Aſteriſm made up of all thoſe Celeſtial Gems even now touch'd on, Poverty of ſpirit, mourning, meekneſs, purity of heart, hungring and thirſting after righteouſneſs, not after the Cannibal-feast of fellow-Christians blood; again, of mercifulneſs, peace-making, being perſecuted and reviled, (and πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, not a piece of Rabſhakeh's railing Rhetorick to be had in hell, which is not poured out on them, and indured chearfully by them in obedience to Chriſt.) Put all theſe together, and mix with them ſuch a proportion of Self-denial, and cheatful following of Chriſt whitherſoever he leads; and the quinteſſence, the Elixir that by the help of the Limbeck is fetch'd out of all theſe in union or refraction, is, in the Chymiſt's ſtyle, the Spirit of the Goſpel, the Spirit of Chriſtianity. If you will yet more perfectly underſtand it, you muſt then look on it Negatively, as 'tis in that place by Chriſt ſet oppoſite to the ſpirit of Elias. Elias his ſpirit you may diſcern by the five conſiderations or reſpects that his perſon is capable of.

1. Elias was under the Law.
2. Elias was a Prophet.
3. Elias was a Zelot, as the Author of the Book of Maccabees calls him and Phineas; and ſo he was peculiarly in that paſſage to which the Diſciples refer.
4. Elias called for judgments from heaven.
5. That judgment was particularly Fire.

And proportionably to theſe five, Elias his ſpirit was

A 1. Legal ſpirit. 2. A Prophetick ſpirit. 3. A Zelotick ſpirit. 4. A Curſing ſpirit. 5. A Fiery ſpirit. And by the oppoſition to each and all of theſe five, you will be able to make up the new-qualifi'd ſpirit, the Spirit of the Goſpel.

1. The Legal ſpirit is that which was obſervable in the time of the Law, eſpecially in order to the planting of the Iſraelites in Canaan, and rooting out of the Inhabitants; and that was a rough, bloudy, hating, eradicating ſpirit: and that Legal is certainly out-dated and aboliſhed now, and in its place the ſpirit of the Goſpel, a ſmooth, loving, planting ſpirit, quite contrary to that.

2. The Prophetick ſpirit was that which received immediate directions from heaven: I mean, not from the ſupernatural influences and motions of Grace, preventing or exciting, ſanctifying or aſſiſting in the heart of the regenerate man; but (as the ſpirit of ſanctification and the ſpirit of prophecy are very diſtant things, ſo) I ſay, from the extraordinary revelations of his will, by Urim and Thummim, by Viſion, by Dream, by coming of the Spirit, or of the word of the Lord upon them, or to them; θεοφορημένοις, acted and carried by God. And the Goſpel-ſpirit is that, which after the out-dating of Prophecies, pretends to no ſuch ſpecial revelations, to no other direction, or incitation, or impulſion of the Spirit, than that which lies viſible in the New Teſtament, (verbum vehiculum ſpiritûs, and διακονία πνεύματος, the Word is it that brings and adminiſters the Spirit unto us;) the Spirit that incites us to perform thoſe duties that the Word hath preſcribed us, (and if to any thing elſe contrary to that, hath then need of the exorciſt to bind or caſt out that ſpirit; the Spirit which, when it comes to be tried whether it be of God or no, pretends not, like Mahomet, to be a talking with God, whil'ſt he lies foaming in an Epileptick fit, but is content to be judged and diſcerned by the old plain Doctrines of the Goſpel; a regular, authorized, ordinary, ſober Spirit.

3. The Zelotick Spirit was a thing peculiar among the Jews, introduced and ſettled by the example of Phineas and Elias by way of precedent and ſtanding Law to that Nation, whereby 'twas lawful (when a man was taken in ſome notorious facts, ſpecifi'd by their Law, Idolatry, &c.) to run him through, to kill him in the place, without expecting any Legal proceſs againſt him. This was expreſly commanded by Moſes, Numb. 25. 5. Slay ye every one the men that are joyned to Baal-peor, and accordingly practiſed by Phineas upon incitation from God: and when 'twas done ſo by a Jew, in the caſes provided by the Jewiſh Law, and by divine impulſion, and the perſon aſſured that it was ſo, there was then no harm in it; but when that incitation from God was but pretended only, not true, when in any caſe but that preſcribed by the Law, then 'twas perfect butchery and villany even among thoſe Jews: and unleſs in thoſe few precedents of Phineas, and Elias, and the Maccabees, i. e. Zelots (for ſo the word Maccabee ſignifies in the Syriack) 'twill be hard to find either in Scripture or Joſephus (where there were whole multitudes of ſuch men) any one example of this practice juſtifiable even in a Jew. And in oppoſition to, and not compliance with that, is the Goſpel-ſpirit quite contrary to the heights of the Jewiſh practice, never ſheds bloud upon any but regular commiſſions, an obedient, orderly, temperate, cool Spirit.

4. The Curſing ſpirit, that may be of two ſorts: either in paſſing judgments on mens future ſpiritual eſtates, a cenſorious damning ſpirit, ſuch as hath been uſual in all kind of Hereticks almoſt that ever came into the Church; (nos ſpirituales, we the ſpiritual, and, in the King of China's ſtyle, filii cœli, ſons of heaven, and all others animales & pſychici, animal carnal men:) or 2. in wiſhing, praying, calling for curſes either on God's or our enemies. And you may know the Goſpel-ſpirit by the oppoſition to theſe, a hoping, charitable, merciful, deprecating, bleſſing Spirit.

Laſtly, the Fiery ſpirit is a vehement, violent, untractable, unreconcileable ſpirit, ſets all where ever it comes into a flame and combuſtion, and will never have peace with any thing which it can poſſibly conſume; nay farther, it infuſeth warmths and diſtempers and turbulencies into all that come within any reach of it, communicates and diffuſes its violencies to all others: And the Goſpel-ſpirit is direct antipodes to that, an allaying, quenching, quieting, cooling Spirit. And ſo you ſee this new Spirit, the Spirit of the Goſpel, of what a temper it is, in all theſe reſpects, a Spirit more fit than Lightning to melt the ſwords in our ſcabbards, to new forge theſe hoſtile weapons into thoſe that are more civil and profitable; and that was the ſecond courſe by which Chriſtianity was to work this metamorphoſis, to beat theſe ſwords, &c.

3. And laſtly, our Saviour hath contributed toward this great work, by the exemplarineſs of his own practice in this kind: Not only (in the firſt place) in refuſing to have the fire from heaven, that the Boanerges would have help'd him to, againſt the Samaritans (profeſt enemies of Chriſt, and of all that had any kind looks toward Jeruſalem; and beſides, notorious Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and yet pretenders to the only purity and antiquity, againſt all ſenſe and reaſon, and ſo moſt arrogant Hypocrites alſo: and yet all this, not enough to inflame Chriſt's Spirit into that of Elias's, or to change his temper into any thing of zeal or anger againſt theſe:) Nor only (in the ſecond place) place) in reprehending and traſhing of St. Peter's zeal, when it drew the ſword in his Maſter's defence againſt the high Prieſt's ſervants, and indeed againſt the very Crucifiers of Chriſt: Nor only (in the third place) in refuſing the aid even of Angels from Heaven (when they were ready upon his ſummons) againſt the Heathens that attach'd him: But fourthly, and above all, by that anſwer of his to Pilate, John 18. 36. If my Kingdom were of this world, then ſhould my ſervants fight, &c. (which was certainly part of that good confeſſion before Pilate mentioned with ſuch honour, 1 Tim. 6. 13.) inferring, that becauſe his Kingdom was not of this world, becauſe he was not a worldly or an earthly King, therefore his ſervants were not to fight for him againſt a legal power of Heathens, though 'twere but to ſave him from Crucifying. 'Tis clear, 'twas one of his Accuſers main hopes to find him in Judas Gaulonita's Doctrine, That 'twas unlawful for God's people (and ſo for him that undertook to be God's Son) to be ſubject to Idolaters, making advantage of Piety (as the Gnoſticks after did) toward their ſecular ends, the freeing themſelves from ſubjection in this world. But our Saviour every where diſclaims that Doctrine, both Matth. 22. 21. vindicating Caſar's Prerogative by his Coin, and in that good confeſſion to Pilate: From which 'tis demonſtrable, that what was not to be done in defence of Chriſt when he was in that danger and under that perſecution, is no more to be attempted in that caſe for Religion, for Chriſtianity it ſelf. I ſhall ſhut up this by leaving in your hands that moſt glorious lively Image of his whole Soul and Life, delivered to us in one Medal, that [Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you ſhall find reſt unto your Souls.] To which if you add the ſealing and the practiſing of this, in the giving up his Soul, laying down his Life, an Offering of Charity even for enemies, and yet farther, for thoſe enemies Souls; this one Amulet hung about your necks, one would think, were ſufficient to charm all the weapons of our warfare, that are ſo unmercifully carnal, to exorcize and conjure all the ſwords and ſpears out of the world, to work new transfigurations and metamorphoſes among us, to return the Bears and Vultures into their old humane ſhapes again, and proclaim an univerſal truce to all the military affections we carry about us, to our wraths, our covetings, our aſpirings, a Sabbath, a Jubilee of reſt and peace, like that which Jamblichus talks of in the Sphears, a καθολικὴ ἁρμονία, a catholick conſtant harmony and accord, a preſent pacification of all our inteſtine broils, and ſo a quiet and reſt unto our ſouls: and till this be done, till this Advent Prophecy be fulfilled in your ears, you muſt know, there is little of Chriſtianity among us, little of Evangelical graces or Evangelical Spirit, nothing but Legal at the beſt. That in God's good time there may be more, not in the brain or tongue, to elevate the one or adorn the other, but in the βάθος καρδίας, the depth and ſincerity of the heart, more of the work and power, the ſpirit and vital energy of the Goſpel, God of his infinite mercy grant us all, even for the ſake and through the operation of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, that wonderful Counſellor, that mighty God, that Father of this Evangelical ſtate, that Prince, and that God of peace; to whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt be aſcribed, as is moſt due, the honour, the glory, the power, praiſe, might, majeſty, and dominion, which through all ages of the world hath been given to him that ſitteth on the Throne, to the Holy Spirit, and to the Lamb for evermore. Amen.

THE

The II. SERMON.

MATTH. 11. 30.

My yoke is easie, and my burthen is light.

THat the Christian's Heaven should be acknowledged his only blissful state, and yet they which pant for bliss, never think fit to enquire after it; That Christ, the way to that heaven, should be truly styled by one Prophet, the desire of all Nations; and yet they that look on him, be affirm'd by another Prophet, to see nothing in him that they should desire him; That a rational creature should be made up of such contradictions, as to desire life most importunately, and yet as passionately to make love to death; to profess such kindness to immaterial joyes, and yet immerse and douz himself in carnal; to groan and languish for Salvation, i. e. an eternal state of purity, and yet to disclaim and flie it whensoever any impure delight is to be parted with; might have leave to exercise and pose a considering man, were there not one clear account to be given of this prodigy, one reason of this fury, the many evil reports that are brought up of the way to this good land, the prejudices, fatal prejudices infused into us, the vehement dislikes and quarrels to all Christian practice, that only passage to our only bliss. We have heard of an Angel with a flaming Sword at the gate of Paradise, which our poetick fears and fancies have transformed into a Serpent at the door of the Hesperides garden, (that Angel fallen, and turned into a Devil;) we have heard of the Cannibal Anakims in the confines of the promised Land, that devour all that travel toward that Region: and our cowardly, sluggish, aguish fancies have transplanted all these into Christendom, made them but emblems of Christ's duri sermones, the hard tasks, unmerciful burthens that he laies on his Disciples; yea and conjured up a many spirits and Fairies more, sad direful apparitions, and sent them out all a commanded Party to repel or to trash us, to intercept or incumber our passage toward Canaan, to pillage and despoil the Soul of all Christian practice, of all that's duty in Discipleship.

Three of these prejudices our Saviour seems to have foreseen and prevented in the words of this Text.

1. That there is no need of doing any thing in Discipleship; Christ came to free from yokes, to release from burthens, the Gospel's made all of promises, Obedience to precepts is a mere unnecessary: And for the preventing of that prejudice, you have here as a yoke and a burthen, so both of Christ's owning, ζυγὸς μου & φορτίον μου, my yoke, and my burthen.

A second prejudice of them that, being forc'd to confess the necessity of Christian obedience, do yet resolve it impossible to be perform'd, discerning the burthens in my Text, must have them unsupportable burthens, no hope, no possibility for us to move under them; and then studium cum spe senescit, their industry is as faint as their hope, Desperation stands them in as much stead as Libertinism did t'other, they are beholden to the weight of their burthens for a supersedeas for taking them up. And for the preventing of that prejudice, you have here this character of Christ's burthen, not only supportable, but light; my burthen is a light burthen.

A third prejudice there is yet behind, of those that having yielded the both necessity and possibility of Christian obedience, are yet possest of the unpleasingness and bitterness of it, like those in the Prophet, cry out [The burthen of the Lord, the burthen of the Lord,] the yoke, a joyless melancholick yoke, the burthen a galling pinching burthen; and to them hath our Saviour designed the χρηστὸν here, as the most significative epithet to express the nature of the Christian yoke. We have rendred it but imperfectly, my yoke is easie; it signifies more richly, my yoke is a benign yoke, all pleasure and profit made up in the word: Κύριος χρηστὸς, the Lord is gracious, 1 Pet. 2. 3. τὸ χρηστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Rom. 2. 4. signifies the bounty, we render it, the goodness of God, that which immediately before is, the riches of his bounty; and proportionably the ζυγὸς χρηστὸς, a gracious bountiful yoke, a mine, a treasure of bounty, a good, a joyous and a gainful yoke.

And he that is thus answered in all his objections, confuted in all his fears, and prejudices, and excuses for Libertinism, if he do not acknowledge the reasonableness of Christ's advice, [take my yoke upon you,] take it for its own sake, though it were not laid upon you by Christ, my necessary, my light, my gracious yoke; he that will not accept of some office in the house of so good a Master, I know not what kind of address to make to him, I must leave him to Pythagoras's Sponde's, that could cure a Mad man, ᾠδῇ ἐπανορθοῦν, rectifie the errours of his appetite first, and then his mind, first of his spleen, and then his brain, before any portion of this bread of life will be diet for him.

I have drawn you the lines which lie folded up in this Text: the filling each up with colours in the shortest manner I could devise, would prove a work of more time than is now my portion. The expedient I have resolved on is, to leap over the two former, and only fasten on my last particular, as that which includes and supposes the two former, as that which will bring its reward with it, invite and feed your patience, and in all probability obtain your belief, because there is never an interest, never a passion about you that it contradicts.

Your patience being thus armed with a sight of the guesses, but one stage, and that the smoothest you ever pass'd, I shall presume you ready to set out with me; and it is to consider that anticipation of the third prejudice, in the Epithet affixt to Christ's yoke, in the fulness of its significancy, ζυγὸς μου χρηστὸς, my yoke is a benign, a gracious, a pleasant, a good and a gainful yoke.

Yea, and that in this life, at the taking the yoke upon you; a present goodness in it here, though there were never a treasure of rewards, never a heaven after it: at least as the present paradise of a true Disciple is considered apart, abstracted from that future expectation, my yoke is a good yoke, is for the present; the [ἐστὶ, Is] hath an influence on the χρηστὸς, as well as on the ἐλαφρὸν, on the gainfulness of the yoke, as well as the supportableness of the burthen. And so you see the full of my scope, the utmoſt of my deſign, the preſent advantages of a Chriſtian courſe, the inſtant goodneſs of Chriſt's ſervice beyond all other callings and preferments in the world; a yoke, but that a good one, a yoke that ſhall never be repented of by him that bears it, whatever it be apprehended to coſt him at the taking up.

And 1. you may pleaſe to obſerve that a yoke hath nothing of hardſhip in it, 'tis ſmooth'd and fitted to the neck, rather to eaſe than preſs, rather to defend than gall; not as a weight or burthen, but only an inſtrument of advantage, to make the burthen that is to be undergone, more eaſie and ſupportable: and therefore our Saviour counts of it as that which a rational man would be content to take up of his own accord, if he knew the benefit of it, [Take my yoke upon you,] and be richly rewarded in the taking, and you ſhall find reſt unto your Soul. The entrance on Diſcipleſhip, making the New Vow, converting to God, is this taking Chriſt's yoke upon us, (as the performing the Vow, the practice of the ſeveral duties, is the moving under the burthen.) And, to prevent miſtakes, to foreſtal all poſſible objections, I ſhall acknowledge to you that there is ſome difficulty in that taking, though not in that yoke, τρηχὺς τὸ πρῶτον, ſome difficulty in the firſt ſetting out, in the breaking off from the former courſe, whatſoever it were; ſomewhat of fancy, ſomewhat of intereſts againſt it.

Of Fancy: To take leave of an old familiar, to carry out the whole body of ſin to its funeral, (that pompa mortis, ſo much more grievous than death it ſelf) to give up the earth to earth, corruption to corruption, with all the pompous ſolemnities attendent on an hearſe; this, I ſay, hath ſomewhat of ſadneſs in it, eſpecially to the inferior brutiſh part of the man, like the Perſian Commander in Herodotus, his fall is lamented by the Horſes and Oxen and Bœotians, all the Beſtial, rude herd of man joyning in the θρηνῳδία.

So beſides, there is ſomewhat of intereſts, ſome uneaſineſs again in the motion neceſſary to ſo vaſt a change, ſome injury to the old poſſeſſors, aliquid iniqui, ſomewhat of preſſure in the change it ſelf; ſome pain in ſpiritualizing of fleſh, racking it, fetching it from the lees, rarifying and attenuating the πνεῦμα παχυνόμενον ἀπὸ μοχθηρᾶς διαίτης, the ſpirit incraſſate by vicious diet, as Philoponus calls the habituate ſinner, of returning the groſs habit of ſin to a ſpareneſs and ſlenderneſs of ſtature, an exinanition of that carnal appetite which hath brought in all the groſſer joyes which hitherto we have fed on. And the truth is, this even with Saint Paul himſelf, goes for a myſterious piece, 1 Cor. 15. 51. Behold I ſhew you a myſtery, we ſhall all be changed: the change of the natural to a ſpiritual body, is a greater work than the riſing of the dead. No wonder then that the natural man generally is not ſo well ſatisfied with this. Saul is fain to be ſtruck down in the place; a kind of λειποψυχία or ſwooning fit, an expiration of the animal man, neceſſary to ſo great a change; as the LXXII. have caſt Adam not into a ſleep, (as the Hebrew Text) but into an ἔκστασις, a being hurried out of himſelf to make him capable of an helper. Thus when Chriſt was firſt born in Bethlehem, Herod the King was troubled and all Jeruſalem with him. Such great ſtupendious felicities are not brought forth without ſome pangs at birth, ſome unpleaſant throes at the delivery; the very earthly Canaan is not come to, but by paſſing through a proemial wilderneſs. Thus much by way of conceſſion of the ſome difficulty to the carnal man in taking up of Chriſt's yoke, the minute of the new creation. But that being ſuppoſed,

Let me now tell you, this is all that is of hardſhip in the Chriſtian's life, all the unacceptable even to fleſh and bloud, the inſtant of putting on the yoke, of entring into the traces, of harneſſing for the future race, ὠδῖνες θανάτου, as the Greek in the Acts reads it, the child-birth pangs of dying to ſin, of mortifying πάθη ἐπὶ γῆς, the affections that are ſo faſten'd on the earth, that, like a Plantagenus torn from its ſoil, they bleat and roar again; the concuſſion or fleſh-quake that follows the ſudden ſtop in the vehement courſe, the Vertigo that the forcible turn in the rapid motion begets, the ſmart that the paſſing through the purgative fire coſts us: and the fear of this one ſharp minute is that that betraies us to all the drudgery and torments in the world, that which makes us ſo ſhie of piety, ſo afraid of all ſpiritual conceptions. As you know that one terrour of dying, parting of ſuch ancient mates, makes ſome good men not over-willing to be with Chriſt, though they acknowledge it never ſo much a more valuable ſtate: Whereas could we but arme our ſelves for this one act of ſpiritual daring, the pain of aſcending the Mount Tabor, and being tranſfigured with Chriſt, we ſhould ſoon reſolve of the bonum eſt eſſe hic, it is good for us to be here, and ſet preſently to build us Tabernacles never to return to our old ſhapes or tents again. Could we but reſolve to ſet out on this voyage, incounter this one Giant, ſon of Anak, the breaking off from our old cuſtoms, there were then nothing but Canaan behind, that οὖθαρ ἀρούης, as once Homer called Greece, the pap of the earth, that fountain of milk and hive of hony, (all the Bees and Hornets driven out of it) a ſucceſſion of uninterrupted felicities ſtreaming through it. Could we but repel the fancy, or ſupport the pangs of one ſhort travail, in contemplation of the joy which the man-child will within a few minutes bring into the world with him, (χαρὰν δὲ ἀνθρώπου τέκῃ,) I am confident, Chriſt would be once more, not only προσδοκία ἐθνῶν in Jacob's prophecy, not only the expectation, but withal the joy, the ſenſuality of the very Gentiles, that which fleſh and bloud, man in every of his moſt inferiour capacities, the rational, the moral, yea and the carnal man would thirſt with more joy, taſt with more raviſhment, devour with leſs ſatiety, than ought which his preſent confections of luxury did ever yield him, and thence break out into the Virgin-Mother's Magnificat, a tranſportation of joy for the approach of the birth of ſo much bleſſedneſs; or into old Simeon's Nunc dimittis, deſire no more joy in this life, than that which infallibly attends the taking a Saviour into his arms, thoſe intimate embraces of Chriſt in the regenerate heart.

To make this more viſible and acknowledged in the retail than 'tis in the groſs, in the coyn than 'tis in the bullion, I ſhall require your patience but to theſe two heads of probation. One, by viewing ſeverally ſome of the chief duties of Chriſtianity. The other, by enumeration of the ſpecial good things which have ever been prized by mankind.

The firſt, I ſay, by ſurveying the duties of a Chriſtian, the tasks that are preſcribed him by Chriſt, the particulars of his yoke and burthen. Conſider them a while, and if they be not the object of all other mens envy, if his toyls be not demonſtrably the vaſteſt pleaſures, his exerciſes the moſt joyous divertiſements and higheſt rank of entertainments that any mortal hath arrived to, I ſhall be content with Caſſandra's fate, never to be credited in my affirmations.

For

For instance, Well-doing in general, in the first place, the conscience of any degree of having discharged any part of duty, [euge, bene serve] from the God within thee, what a ravishment is it to any the meanest undertaker? what an olio of all high tasts compounded together? Their very enemies could say it of the Athenians in ‖ Thucydides, That there was nothing that they could count feast or banquet, but the having done what they ought. And the * Persians, when they beheld the solemnity of the Grecian Olympick games, such courage and patience of the combatants, and no reward expected but an Olive-crown, expostulate with Mardonius, Why dost thou bring us to fight against those, who fight not for mony, but vertue? A conscience of having done well, serv'd in with a few leaves about it, was it seems the daintiest dish, and most animating emboldning reward in nature. And if a Christian cannot outvie those Heathens, if it be not in our breasts, as it is in the Translations of our Bibles [a merry heart, all one with a good conscience] and the attribute of that, a continual feast to thee as it was to Solomon, believe it, thy tast is mortified, thou art no competent judge of dainties. And that is one part, or indeed the summe, of all Christ's yoke, ἀγαθὴ συνείδησις ἐν πᾶσιν, in all things a good conscience.

* Herod. l. 8.

In the second place, not to lead you out of the most vulgar rode, that our discourse may be the more demonstrative, the Trinity of Theological vertues, Faith, Hope, and Charity, what are they, but so many elevations of the Soul above all that's mean and painful; so many steps of entrance into obedience and bliss, into discipleship and paradise together?

For Faith, 'tis S. Peter's expression, πιστεύοντες ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, believing you do exult for joy; Faith naturally hath that acquiescence and joy in it, and that a χαρὰ ἀνεκλάλητος καὶ δεδοξασμένη, an inexpressible and glorified joy, even in this life. Take it but in the meaner of its offices, as it is a trusting God with our temporal weal, a full submission not only to the will, but wisdom of God, a resolution that God can chuse for us better than we for our selves, that whatever he sends, his hottest or bittrest potion, is fit for our turns, and so absolutely better, and even to us (when we see 'tis his will) more eligible, more desireable than any thing we could have prayed for. That chearful valiant resignation of all into God's hands, with an old Eli's Dominus est, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good, what a blessed pill of rest is this unto the Soul? what a Sabbath from all that servile work, those horrid perjuries, those base submissions, that the covetous Mammonist or cowardly trembler drudges under? Though the earth shake, or the hills be carried into the midst of the Sea, he is the Cube indeed that Socrates pretended to be, he hath a basis that will not fail, his feet stand fast, he believeth in the Lord. He hath gotten a superiority of mind, that all this region of meteors cannot disquiet; he hath rifled all the Sects of the old Philosophers, robb'd each of them of his master-piece; the Sceptick of his ἀδιαφορία & ἀταραξία, indifference and untroubledness; the Stoick of his μὴ ποιῆν τραγῳδίας, he hath none of the tragical complaints how tragical soever his sufferings be; and Epicurus of his γαλήνη, tranquillity or calm of mind, to the acquiring of which all his philosophy was designed, a thing so hugely pleasurable, that he hath been taken for a carnal voluptuous swine ever since, upon no other merit but for seeking out those great composers of the Soul, so much beyond all other Sensuality. Those boasts, I say, and prides, those dreams and wishes of those Philosophers, are now the reality and acquisition of a Christian, an Epicurism which faith, and only faith, undertakes to furnish us with. A thing so deeply considerable, that I cannot but resolve all the differences of mens estates and fortunes, as well as Souls, their secular felicity and infelicity, as well as piety and impiety, to proceed from this one fountain opened by Christ to the House of David: No Prince more happy than the Peasant in the present advantages of this life, but as he hath more faith than he; the spring of our daily misery, as well as our sins, is the [Ὦ ὀλιγόπιστοι, O ye of little faith.]

1 Pet. 1. 8.

And so certainly for Hope, that second Christian Gemm, that Royal High Priest of ours that enters within the Veil, takes possession before-hand of all that's rich or secret, brings down all the Treasures of another world to be our daily portion in this, hope of Eternity, hope of Heaven, you will not wonder if I assure you; 'tis a far pleasanter Companion than the possession of all worldly preferments. You would be amazed to hear a Papist describe his Purgatory flames so scorching, and yet go chearfully out of this world into the midst of those flames: but he will satisfie your wonder when he tells you, that the expectation of the heavenly joys that those flames do confirm and ascertain to him, though after never so many hundred years * the precious hope that dwells there, and the assurance of a ‖ Title in Heaven, a portion in that glorious ἀπογραφὴ or inrolment, is richly sufficient to allay those flames to make those scorchings supportable. And then judge what a confluence of pleasures is this one grace supposed to be, which is resolved sufficient to sweeten and recommend a Tophet, to make torments desirable; like the kind gales and benign vapours under the Line that Menardus tells of, which make the Torrid'st Clime habitable; and the presence of that Fourth in Nebuchadnezzar's Fornace, which makes the Three Children sing in the midst of flames.

* Μὴν δ' ἀυτόθι ἀλωὴ.
‖ Τέκμωρ ἐσ Διὸς ἀυλὴν.
Ep. med.

As for Charity, that is certainly the μείζων τούτων, superiour to either Faith or Hope, for joy and pleasure, as well as use and excellency. Can there be any thing so ravishing as love, love of so for-ever-satisfying a beauty, that heroical improvement and elevation of Soul, the want of which is as great a punishment as 'tis a sin, as much of hell in the extinction of this flame as in the raging of that, in the chill, numm'd, as in the raving tormented spirit, as fatal a Lethargy from the one, as Fever from the other? If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha, saith St. Paul. Blessed Apostle! I cannot imagine thy Gospel-spirit could permit thee to deliver those words as a wish, or prayer for curses on any, even enemy of Christ; may not this form of speech be a Scheme of Apostolick Rhetorick? If any man love not the Lord Jesus, he is and shall be, for the very present he is the interpretation of those thundring sounds, anathema maranatha, a miserable accursed creature; the very not loving, the chilling of that blessed passion within his breast, is the saddest curse that the Devil could design his hated'st enemy.

Add unto this that other branch of Charity, that ray which Prometheus in the figure stole from heaven, to inspire and warm the world with, that inferiour elementary fire, love of our fellow-men, our fellow-Christians; and tell me if there be any thing so capable not only of the quàm bonum, but the quàm jucundum too, that hath so much of the pleasant as well as the vertuous in the composition. The ground of all pleasure is agreement and proportionableness to the temper and constitution of any thing; the reaſon, ſaith Boethius, that men love Muſick ſo well, is the anſwerableneſs of the Notes in that, to thoſe obſerved by nature in the fabrick of our bodies: And ſay we, is there any thing ſo agreeable and harmonical, ſo conſonant to our reaſonable nature, to the ingenuity of our kind, and conſequently, ſo univerſally delightful to all that have not put off Man in exchange for Panther and Tigre, as that which Chriſt hath left us our duty, yea, and our reward, the loving of the brethren, that language, that Song of love that we are to practiſe here, that we may chant it in heaven eternally? 'Tis ſaid to be a ſpeech of Chriſt's which the Nazaren Goſpel hath recorded, though our Bibles have not, (and it ſeems by St. John, all was not written which Chriſt ſpake to them) Nunquam lati ſitis niſi cum fratrem in charitate videritis; There is no ſpectacle of delight to a Chriſtian, nothing of value ſufficient for a Diſciple to rejoyce at, but to ſee his fellow-Diſciples embracing one another in love: And they ſay, Mahomet was ſuch an admirer of this quality, that he once reſolved to have inſerted a Precept of good-fellowſhip among his Laws, becauſe he thought he had obſerved (though moſt ridiculouſly miſtaken) that that which is indeed the bane, was a promoter of this Charity. I conceive I have the ſuffrage of all mankind, that Charity is a pleaſing grace; and of the wiſeſt and moſt pondering obſervers, that Friendſhip is * the only ſweet neighbour and companion of life, that which being drained from its baſer mixtures (which would otherwiſe cauſe ſatiety) becomes the prime ingredient in the glorified Saints, of whoſe ſtate we underſtand little, but that they are happy and love one another, and in that for ever happy, that they for ever love one another; charitas nunquam excidit, and ſo their bliſs nunquam excidit, neither. And then, behold and admire the goodneſs of this yoke; Chriſt's deſign even in this life to ſet up charity, friendſhip above all vertues, as high as it is above all felicities, to ſettle that for the prime Chriſtian duty, which hath moſt of preſent bleſſedneſs in it, to make that our burthen which is our bliſs, our yoke which is our boon; and withall to ſeparate it from all thoſe mixtures which would either imbitter or ſhorten, cool or ſatiate our love, the luſts and exceſſes and the prides that would make the moſt ingenuous delight either leſs ingenuous or leſs delightful; that love of my Brother's vertues, love of his Soul; love of the Nature that Chriſt aſſumed, and died for, and carried to Heaven with him; love of the Image of God in him, that moſt tranſporting, durable pleaſure. And all this will be abundantly ſufficient to make up a ſecond inſtance of the χρηστὸς ζυγὸς, the graciouſneſs and pleaſantneſs of this yoke.

* Ἥδιστον τῆς ἡμετέρας ζωῆς.

A Third ſhall be, by referring you to the moſt extemporary view of the commands of the Decalogue, which Chriſt came not to deſtroy, but to fill up and perfect. Temperance is the only Epicuriſm; Continence or Conjugal Chaſtity the only Superſedeas to that black flame, that is the Incontinent's daily Hell even in this life: But above all, that Precept of the Old, and Myſtery or Craft of the New Teſtament, [Thou ſhalt not covet] that of Contentment with whatſoever lot, the prohibition of * all deſire, which ſeemeth ſuch a galling reſtraint to the carnal man, with his ‖ bored tub of inſatiate deſire (as Jamblichus calls it) about him; but to him that hath taken this yoke upon him, is the gainfulleſt, not duty, but donative, not burthen, but purchaſe and preferment, that any mortal is capable of. The Philoſopher could reſolve it the way to help any man to whatever he wanted, detrahere cupiditatibus, to pare ſo much off from his deſires, as his deſires were larger than his fortune. To bring down his ambitions to his lot, would be as rich a prize as the compaſſing and acquiring all his ambitions. Contentment is (in earneſt) the Philoſopher's Stone, that makes Gold of any thing; the Pandora's Box, that hath all wealth and honour and pleaſure in its diſpoſing; makes the pooreſt Eremite the richeſt poſſeſſor; the moſt ſcorned abject, the moſt honourable perſon; the Recluſe, or the mortified Chriſtian, the moſt voluptuous liver in a Kingdom; every diminution that can come by the malice of men or devils, * a pleaſurable calamity; whilſt the largeſt poſſeſſions in nature without this one skill, [ἔμαθον ἢ μεμύημαι] this ſovereign piece of Alchymy, are ſtill the perfecteſt beggery imaginable. The Devil's whole Map or Landskip of all the Kingdoms and glory, if (as liberally offered, ſo) actually beſtowed, is not able to ſatisfie the luſts of one eye, much leſs to fill up the angles and vacuities of one heart without it. That one prudent inſtruction of [Quod ſis eſſe velis, nihilque malis] in one Poet, or [Permittes ipſis expendere numinibus] in another, or [Ἀλλ' ἔχε σιγῇ μῦθον, ἐπίτρεπτον δὲ θεοῖσι] in a third, [Stand ſtill and ſee the ſalvation of our God] is a far richer proviſion than all their more glittering fictions of Golden Apples, and Golden Showers, and Golden Fleeces, and Golden Rods, that could make ſuch ſudden metamorphoſes, yea, and of the χρύσεα δίκτυα, the Golden Nets, the Golden Ages can afford us. In heaven, ſaith Chriſt they neither eat nor drink, marry, nor are given in marriage, and yet are better ſatisfied and pleaſed than they below, that are fed in Mahomet's Dining-room, or lodged in his Seraglio: The not deſiring thoſe pleaſures of life is to them the ſame thing with advantage, that the enjoying them is to others, (as the Poet that begs two things of Mars, * Either valour for war, or peace that he may not need that valour, would be richly provided for, which ſoever was granted him.) And this is, in Chriſt's language, being ἰσάγγελοι, equal to the very Angels. It ſeems, 'tis the Angels ſpecial advantage above us men, that they deſire not the ταῦτα πάντα, the all theſe things, which the luggage of fleſh about us, makes to us ſo neceſſary; and no ſuch Crane, ſuch Engine to elevate our nature to this ἰσαγγελία, to this ſo Angelical a ſtate, as μὴ ἐπιθυμεῖν, this ſo liberal a Science of Contentment, which not only makes Romances creditable, finds mines in our Cloſets, under every Cuſhion we kneel on, rains down both the Indies into our Treaſury, ſatisfies all our needs, fills all our vacuities; but is withall the nobleſt act of wiſdom, of ſuperiority of mind, of proweſs, and conqueſt of our ſelves, that any Book but that of Life, any place but Heaven can give us ſtory of; and therefore ſure a ζυγὸς χρηστὸς, a yoke, a command of Chriſt, but that a benign and gainful yoke, in the third place.

* Θάρσος δὸς μάκαρ, εἰρήνην τε. Hom. hym. in Mart.

A fourth inſtance I cannot omit, though I ſuppoſe the moſt vulgar fancy hath prevented me in it, becauſe Ariſtotle hath a Note in his Rhetoricks, that ſome kind of Auditors are moſt wrought upon by ſuch; and that is from the Catalogue of the bleſſing Graces, in the Fifth of Matthew, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, the meek, &c. In the preſent, they are bleſſed, yea, and would be ſo, though there were never a Heaven of bleſſedneſs behind for them. Will you examine the truth of this in a few of them?

1. Poverty of Spirit: whether a preparation of ſpirit to be poor, and then 'tis bleſſed Contentment that juſt now we parted with; or whether it be Humility, bleſſed humility, and then, beſides the advantages it hath toward another life, grace to the humble, to the humble more grace, and at laſt, heaven to the humble, yea, and more heaven (as in the learned rules of Husbandry they are appointed * to plough, to sow, and to reap too all naked, humility, pourtraied by that nakedneſs being the only auſpicious poſture, the only catholick qualification for all ſeaſons,) beſides theſe advantages, I ſay, 'tis over and above, even in the eye of the world an amiable graceful quality, hath a preſent ſecular bleſſedneſs in it, a calm of Soul to it ſelf, a controlling lovelineſs in reſpect of others, and a world of conveniences attending it. 'Tis that wherein heaven and earth are met as Rivals: God himſelf a making court to it, With him will I dwell, and in the Oracle,----γάνυμαι τόσον ἔσσον Ὀλύμπῳ· there are two Reſidences, Palaces, Thrones for God, Heaven, and an humble Soul: and for men, a plain φίλτρον and θελκτήριον to them, an Enchantment or Charm of reſpect and love, whereever 'tis met with; whereas in the mean time Pride goes alone in ſtate, only with a train of menial ſcorns and curſes after it; 'tis a kind of excommunicating ſin, drives away confidents, counſellors, ſervants, graces, the very credit and reputation which it courts, all kind of company but devils and paraſites, that peſſimum genus inimicorum, that worſe kind of devil of the two. So true is that of Solomon, Prov. 16. 19. Better is it to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, than to divide the ſpoil with the proud: the compariſon there, is ſet as betwixt the lowly and proud, ſo betwixt the humble ſpirit and dividing the ſpoil; there is no need to mention any benefit of humility, the humble ſpirit, it ſeems, is reward enough to it ſelf, and all the proud man's prizes are not comparable to it in this life.

* Γυμνὸν σπείρειν, γυμνὸν τε βοᾶζειν, γυμνὸν δ' ἀμᾶσθαι. Heſ. l. 2.

So for Meekneſs, 'tis a lovely grace again, The ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, 1 Pet. 3. a more gallant embroidery, more enamouring dreſs, which hath more of the Agreeable in the look of it, than all the other helps of beauty can afford that Sex which is there ſpoken of: but eſpecially that notion of meekneſs that conſiſts in obedience to our lawful Superiours, which (beſide the many other conveniences of it, that thy days may be long in the land, &c. long life in a Canaan) is a moſt advantageous gainful duty, ſuch as, if it had applications made to it, would infallibly leave the Prince the only uneaſie perſon in the Kingdom, becauſe he only were aſſigned the task, the painful, thankleſs, yet neceſſary, task of commanding, and deprived of the obſequii gloria, that far more glorious, I will add and pleaſant, way of obeying. The glory of it is ſuch, as that Gerſon having diſcerned in the Angels two habitudes, one of * waiting upon God, the other in the ruling and managing of things below, reſolves, that if that Angel were to ſet himſelf out in a luſtre, to triumph in a Magnificat, it would be certainly in the Virgin Mary's ſtyle, humilitatem famuli, that he were a meek ſervant of God's, rather than a Prince of ſo many Myriads of ſubjects. And for pleaſure, I ſhall profeſs my ſenſe ſo far from doting on that popular Idol, Liberty, that I hardly think it poſſible for any kind of obedience to be more painful than an unreſtrained liberty: Were there not ſome bounds of Magiſtrate, of Laws, of Piety, of Reaſon in the heart, every man would have a Fool, they ſay, I add, a mad Tyrant, to his Maſter, that would multiply him more ſorrows than the briars and thorns did Adam, when he was freed from the bliſs at once and the reſtraint of Paradiſe, and was ſure greater ſlave in the Wilderneſs than he was in the Encloſure. Would but the Scripture permit me that kind of Idolatry, the binding my faith and obedience to any one viſible infallible Judge or Prince, were it the Pope, or the Mufti, or the Grand Tartar, might it be reconcileable with my Creed, it would be certainly with mine intereſts to get preſently into that poſture of obedience. I ſhould learn ſo much of the Barbarian Ambaſſadors in Appian, which came on purpoſe to the Romans to negotiate for leave to be their ſervants: 'Twould be my policy, if not my piety, and may now be my wiſh, though not my faith, that I might never have the trouble to deliberate, to diſpute, to doubt, to chuſe, (thoſe ſo many profitleſs uneaſineſſes) but only the favour to receive commands, and the meekneſs to obey them; ſo demonſtrably true is the μακάριοι οἱ πραεῖς, (the very meekneſs is their bleſſedneſs) and from thence this part of the gainfulneſs of this yoke.

* Mentémque profundam circumeunt, Boeth.

I will detain you but with one more of that Catalogue, that of Mercifulneſs, the pleaſureableſt burthen in the world; there's no ſuch kind of inward delight and ſenſuality, as it were. * Liberality is a kind of tickling to the Soul, 'tis hard to conceal the pleaſure of it, to keep it from boiling over, from running out at mouth in vain-glory. To make a poor man happy, and by a ſeaſonable alms to reprieve and reſcue him that was, as it were, appointed to death, is that God-like quality, as Pythagoras agrees with Chriſt, that kind of creative power, that of all things men are beſt pleaſed with; and therefore naturally they love thoſe better, as their creatures, whom they have thus obliged, than any their liberalleſt benefactors. This the good-natur'd Tyrant Phalaris, if his Image be truly drawn in his Epiſtles, took more joy in, than in all his other Greatneſs, deſign'd that Tyranny (that coſt him and others ſo dear) to no other end, than that it might yield him that one pleaſure, the power of obliging many and accordingly he wooes and beſeeches to be allowed this favour, nay quarrels and threatens his Bull to thoſe that would not afford him this joy, of pouring out his largeſſes upon them. This ſo delightful a piece of duty, ſo perfect voluptuouſneſs to any ingenuous man, is withal, let me tell you, be it never ſo incredible, the gainfulleſt trade, the thrivingeſt way of merchandiſe for the wealth of this world, that any Projector can direct you to. Give me leave for once to interpoſe in ſecular affairs thus far, as to aſſure you of that, that I will pawn my whatever is mine for the truth of it, (and for which I conceive I have ſo many plain promiſes in the Scripture, that 'twere infidelity (in me, I am ſure) to doubt of it) That the exerciſe of this duty of alms-giving was never the impoveriſhing of any Family, but conſtantly the enriching. Let it be tried, and I will once ſet up the Enſurers Office, that whatever goes out on that Voyage ſhall never miſs to come home with gain: there is no man that parteth with any thing for Chriſt's ſake, ſaith he, but he ſhall have an hundred-fold more in this life. Add but this χρήσιμον to the χρήσον, this of gain to that of delight, the policy to the even ſenſual raviſhment of it, and you will reſolve that Chriſt was a good Maſter; that if you had been call'd to counſel at that great Parliament, had had your Negative in that power of making Laws for Mankind, you would not have choſen a ſmoother and more agreeable yoke for your ſelves than this that Chriſt hath deſign'd for you.

* Ὃς μὲν γὰρ μέγα δώσῃ, καὶ ἐσθλὸν τὸ δώρῳ χαίρειν τέρπει. Heſ. l. 1.

I promiſed to make this as evident by another head of probation, the enumeration of the ſpecial goods that have ever been prized by Mankind; but that were a new Deep, and you have no ſtock of patience to hold out that Voyage. Among all that have ever pretended to that Title, I will ſuppoſe that of Honour hath gotten the Primogeniture, ſupplanted all other Pretenders, in an ingenuous Auditory; and therefore one word to that, and I ſhall think I have made good my undertaking.

Honour

Honour I conceive to be the Daughter of Heroick action, and ſpecially of Victory: And is there any ſuch ſweeping triumphant Conqueror in the world as the regenerate Chriſtian? νικᾷ κόσμον, he overcometh the world: overcomes himſelf, that Lion and that Bear that David combated with, his furious rageful Paſſions, Achelous in all his ſhapes; and is always in purſuit of that Victory, νικᾷ, ſtill in the preſent, he is always overcoming: overcomes enemies, * the injurious perſon, by not retributing of injuries, the very tyrant perſecutor, (whoſe adoration he hath, when he can get none of his mercy, whilſt t'other that is frighted out of his conſcience and integrity, is ſcorn'd and kick'd into hell by him) yea, and the Devil, that † πονηρὸν, the evil one, whom when the Chriſtian reſiſts, he conquers, (fugiet, he ſhall flie from thee;) yea, and overcomes, and reproaches, and triumphs over all the world beſides, practiſes thoſe duties upon Chriſt's commands, which neither Jew nor Heathen ever thought themſelves obliged to. Athenagoras can challenge all the Philoſophers and Law-givers of the world to equal Chriſt in one Precept, or Chriſtians in one practice of theirs, that of bleſſing of enemies; and no Goliah of Gath being able to anſwer his challenge, no uncircumciſed Philiſtine of confidence to meet him, (Μόνος ἀνὴρ σύλλογον ὅλον τροπῶν,) the Chriſtian is the only victor, he conquers the whole world about him, yea, and thoſe glittering Courtiers of the ſuperior world, outvies and conquers, Angels in that one dignity of ſuffering for Chriſt, and ſo becomes the renowned'ſt Champion under heaven.

* Πονηρὸν ἀμαθῆ.

To this I ſhould add again, if I had not ſaid ſo much of it already, and if 'twere not a baſer earthier conſideration, the profit and ſecular advantage, of which the Chriſtian life (let the inſenſate worldling think what he will) hath the peculiar only promiſe from him which hath the ſole diſpoſing of it. Some miſtakes there are in judging what worldly Proſperity is. Let it be reſcu'd from theſe miſtakes, as particularly from that of ſignifying a preſent few months viciſſitude of power and wealth, (ſo ſure to be paid (and confuted from deſerving that Title) by that of the Prophet, When thou ceaſeſt to ſpoil, thou ſhalt be ſpoiled;) let it ſignifie, as alone it doth truly ſignifie, that competency, not that ſuperfluity, which hath all the advantages, and none of the pains, of wealth in it; and no queſtion the doing our duty (though it be the preſent leaving of all for Chriſt's ſake) is that which doth not uſe to fail of the liberalleſt ſort of harveſt, the hundred-fold more in this life, i.e. all the true advantages of thoſe poſſeſſions, without that addition, which would be bare profitleſs incumbrance, and which, if it were added, would prove a moſt diſadvantageous diminution. I ſhall venture the brand and puniſhment that belongs to the moſt infamous Cheat, whenever any Diſciple of Chriſt ſhall think fit to call me his underminer or enemy for this doctrine, when he ſhall think fit to tell me really, that Honeſty is not the only Prudence, the ſureſt foundation and treaſure of worldly bliſs.

I have done with the particulars I promiſed: And now put all together, and you will never think the Preacher a Tyrant more, never pity the Melancholick, but envy the raviſhments of him that hath taken up this yoke (yea, though it have a Croſs annexed to it) to follow Chriſt; you will never put in for your part in Mahomet's Paradiſe, exchange your purer Goſpel for a groſſer Alcoran, having in this very yoke of Chriſt a ſatisfaction to all your longings, a richer harveſt of joys in the preſent poſſeſſion than all the falſe Prophets and falſe Chriſts could feign for their Clients in the lateſt reverſion. And having thus fortifi'd you, I ſhall now challenge the Rival Satan to come out to thee, to bring forth his pleas and pretenſions for thee, to interpoſe his exceptions, if he have any, why this hour ſhould not be the ſolemn Æra, the date of thy long farewel to the Kilns and Fleſh-pots of Ægypt; why this minute ſhould not be that of the bleſſed ſhrill Trumpet's ſound, that of proclaiming a Jubilee, a manumiſſion for thee (and all thy fellow captives) never to return to his Gallies again, who art offered ſo far a more gainful, more eaſie, more pleaſant, and more liberal Service. Satan, I am confident, dares not ſay, his wages are comparable to thoſe that here I have tendred thee from Chriſt: let him ſhew me in all his Kingdoms of the earth, in his Treaſury of gold, or Gyneceum of beauty, any thing fit to be a Rival with the Graces, not which the Poets feign, but, which the Sermon on the Mount preſcribes, (ingredient and conſtitutive of a Chriſtian) both for the gain and pleaſure, the commodity and the delight of them even to fleſh and blood, (when the one Bedlam-heat of youth, or Lethargick cuſtom of ſin is over) and I ſhall no longer pretend to get any Proſelyte out of his hands.

And if after all this, I muſt be content with the fate of other Sermons, to have play'd a vain-glorious prize, ἀέρα δέρων, wounding none but the air this whole hour together; if I muſt miſcarry in this ſo charitable undertaking, and may not be heard when I come but to comply with you in all your intereſts, to direct you through one Canaan to another, to lay you out a Paradiſe here for your rode to an eternal Heaven; I confeſs I am fallen upon a peeviſh auditory, a company of ſick phancies and creſt-faln ſouls: For whoſe cure,

I might yet farther ſet off all this, and improve it into little leſs than a Demonſtration, by the view of the contrary not only unpleaſant and unprofitable, but even painful, tormenting, trade of ſin; thoſe ſo many Limbo's in paſſage to the deeper hell; that Sodom of filth and burning, in the way to a Tophet of worms and flames. But I had rather fanſie you the Sheep in Ariſtotle which the green bough would lead, than the Goats in the ſame Philoſopher that the nettles muſt ſting; whom the cords of a Man might draw, than the whips of Scorpions drive into Paradiſe, into Canaan; being confident that I have at this time revealed ſuch pretious truths unto you, that he whom they do not melt, and charm, and win to enter into this ſo neceſſary, ſo fecible, ſo gainful a ſervice, Father Abraham's Divinity would prejudge and conclude againſt him, that neither will that man convert, though one ſhould riſe from the dead and preach unto him. If there be any here of this unhappy temper, the only reſerve I have to reſcue him is my prayer, that God would touch his heart, that he would ſay Ephphatha; that if there be any conſolation in Chriſt, any comfort of love, any vertue, any praiſe, any ſuch thing as Paradiſe here, or Heaven hereafter, we may every of us think of theſe things, and having entred into the bleſſed Family of this good Maſter, we may all ſerve him acceptably here, fight under his Banner, overcome by his conduct, and reign with him triumphantly hereafter.

Now to him which hath elected, created, redeemed, called, juſtified us, will conſummate us in his good time, will proſper this his Ordinance to that end, will lead us by his grace to his glory; To him, &c.

Ephraim's Complaint.

The III. SERMON.

JER. 31. 18.

I have ſurely heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf thus; Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed, as a Bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned.

THIS Text is a ſad Soliloquy of a provoking afflicted people. Ephraim tranſmigrantem, reads the Vulgar: and ſure מתנודד, which we read bemoaning, would be better rendred thus; The ten Tribes ſealed up in a black night, a fatal laſt Captivity.

To parallel our ſtate with Iſrael in the tranſmigrantem, is not my deſign, much leſs in the bemoaning; that's but a piece of unſeaſonable puſillanimity that our Engliſh hath impoſed upon the Text, and our Saviour hath inſpirited us into a more chearful guiſe in ſuffering, the χαίρετε καὶ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, rejoyce and be exceeding glad, the moſt bliſsful joyous condition of any.

The parallel, I fear, will prove too perfect in the words themſelves, which Ephraim then was over-heard to utter, and perhaps ſome infidel hearts may be a whiſpering now: and that I may prevent this parallel, I have pitcht upon theſe words, I have ſurely heard Ephraim, &c.

The ſenſe of Ephraim's μονῳδία, thus ſadly muttered, 'tis poſſible you may not articulately underſtand. I ſhall briefly be his Interpreter, by giving you a plain Paraphraſe of the Verſe;

I heard the ten Tribes, in a melancholick reflexion on their ſtate, thus whiſpering within themſelves; We have long been puniſhed by God, and no more wrought on by thoſe puniſhments than a wild unmanaged Bullock, i. e. not reformed or mended at all by this diſcipline, (the Targum hath cleared the rendring, ולא אלפנא We have not been taught, and the Septuagint's * [οὐκ ἐπαιδεύθην] hath done ſo too) but then, Turn thou me, return my captivity, reſtore us to our liberty and our Canaan again, and then no doubt we ſhall be turned, reformed and mortified by that change.

Having thus laid bare the words before you, you will preſently diſcern the ſum of them, A people unreformed under God's rod, petitioning to be releaſed from that ſmart, becauſe it did not mend them, pretending that Proſperity would work wonders on them.

And this you will diſſolve into theſe three ſpecials, each worth our ſtay and pondering;

1. God's judgment what courſe is fitteſt to reform ſinners; not the delicate, but the ſharp, that of ſmiting: Tu percuſſiſti, thou haſt ſmitten.

2. Man's judgment, or the ſinner's flattering perſwaſion of himſelf, quite contrary to God's; a conceit that Roſes are more wholeſom than Wormwood, that Proſperity will do it better, and a bribing God with a promiſe that it ſhall do it: Converte, & Convertar; thy ſmitings have done no good on me, Turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned.

3. The ſtating of this difficulty betwixt God and man, and in that, the falſeneſs of man's judgment, and the fallaciouſneſs of ſuch his promiſe: 1. In reſpect of God, who will never ſend them Proſperity, that Adverſity wrought no good on; and 2. of Proſperity it ſelf, which would never do that work on thoſe, if God ſhould ſend it, intimated in the Prophet's recounting and upbraiding this ſpeech of Ephraim, I have ſurely heard Ephraim, &c.

I begin firſt with the firſt, God's judgment what courſe is fitteſt to reform ſinners, not the delicate, but the ſharp, that of ſmiting.

And all the proof I pretend to have from this Text for this, is the percuſſiſti in the front. 'Tis clear, God had ſmitten Ephraim, and God's actions are a declaration of his judgment, his ſmiting a ſufficient aſſurance that nothing elſe is judged by God ſo likely to reform Ephraim, and that upon theſe two plain heads of probation.

1. That whatever is, whatever is come to paſs, is certainly God's will it ſhould be.

2. That what was thus God's will, was deſigned to ſome benign end, and in ſhort, to nothing in Ephraim but his reformation.

1. That whatever comes to paſs, is certainly God's will. Not ſtill his will ſo as to be matter of decree (ſave only of permiſſion) that thou ſhouldſt do it; and therefore even thoſe things that are moſt neceſſarily to come, ſhall be matter of the greateſt guilt and woe to thoſe by whom they come. Matt. 18.7. But his will, his over-ruling decretory will, that I ſhould ſuffer it; his hand and his counſel προορίζειν γενέσθαι, Act. 4.28. predetermining that to be done, which none but Herod and Pilate, Gentiles and Devil, againſt the expreſs will of God and his child Jeſus, were gathered together to do. All the ſin and furies, furies, guilt and damnation of hell may be in the ποιῶν the doing or executing God's will, (as, believe it, there is not a more formidable trade in the world than that of which Satan alone hath the Patent, and men do but intrench on hell, whensoever they exercise it; that of the lictor & carnifex, of being God's rods, God's executioners:) but then; all the mercy, and all wisdom, bounty and divinity, sometimes the redeeming of a world, in the γενέσθαι, the being done. Not the softest affliction or bloodiest tyranny had ever come into the world, had not God permitted, and for our sins decreed to permit the doors to be open for it. Not the lightest wound or deepest furrow on a poor Christian's shoulders, but hath characters of God's hand in it, superscribing him νόμισμα χριστῦ, in Ignatius's phrase, the coyn of Christ, a stamp of his impressing: and as the Painter had so interweaved his own face in Minerva's picture, that you could not behold one without discerning the other; so when the Image of Christ is impresst on us, I mean the image of the Crucified Saviour, the thorns on the head, the spitting on the face, the sponge of vinegar and gall at the mouth, and the one wound on the whole body; when the conformity to this Image of the Son, Rom. 8. is sealed upon us, that seal of the Tiphereth, or the Magnus Adam, (as the Caballists are wont to call it) I mean of the Archetypal sufferer Christ, is impress so hard, that it prints quite through the bottom of him, leaves the impression on the Malcuth, the bride, the house of Israel, the poor crucified Church here below; when, I say, that sad original is thus copied upon us, there is no avoiding the sight, no escaping the acknowledgment of that great Painter's face, that drew these parallel signatures both on Christ and us, or, in St. Paul's phrase, predestined us to be conformable to that Image of his Son, ἀνταναπληρῦν, Col. 1. by way of correspondence, or antitype, to fill up the remainders of his sufferings in our flesh, and as punctually elected us to this συνπάθειαν, this co-suffering for and after Christ, as to the συνδοξάζεσθαι we trust he hath, to the also being glorified with him.

* Accordingly S. Chryſoſtom's Greek Copy muſt be Corrected, and read thus, Ἐπαίδευσάς με κύριε, καὶ οὐκ ἐπαιδεύθην, ἀλλ' ἐγενόμην ὡς μοσχὸς ἀδάμαστος, Thou haſt inſtructed me Lord, and I was not inſtructed, but I became as an untaught, unmanag'd Oxe, or Heifer. Serm. eundem eſſe Senſ. Vet. & Nov. Teſtam.

These are the στίγματα Ἰησοῦ literally and exactly, the prints or brands of Christ, the works of his hands, as well as the transcripts of his sufferings: and as this may give us a perfect satisfaction in whatsoever the most smitten condition, a πᾶσαν χαρὰν, all joy when we are thus vouchsafed and dignified, especially if we shall have transcribed the active as well as passive part of his image, or if this suffering teach us to transcribe it; so will it be a first proof of the point in hand, a declaration of God's opinion by his prescriptions, that nothing is so fit for our turn as smiting. Καταξιούμενοι. Act. 5. 41.

But then this first proof will not perfectly come home to the conclusion, unless we improve and sharpen it with the second, that this smiting, as it already appears to be God's will, so 'tis by God designed to Ephraim's good, the greatest good for rebellious Ephraim, the bringing him to repentance, and that if any thing else could have tended so directly to that end, Ephraim had never been thus smitten. The foundation of this lies in the superlative love of God extended even to enemies, and that evidenc'd by his manner of prescribing that to us, with an ab exemplo, from the example of his own perfection, Mat. 5. 48. who, it seems by that argument, is a benefactor and blesser even of enemies, and whatever he sends to the most hostile Ephraim, it is method of deliberate charity, the bitter'st Recipe's design'd on purpose (neither by chance nor malice, those two heathen principles of Theology, τύχη & φθόνος δαίμων, but, I say, on purpose) from love and pondering, from judgment and from bowels, as that which, as long as there is any hope of recovery, will do it, if any thing, and therefore cannot in charity be withdrawn while there is hope; and when there is none, is then to be spared, not lavish'd out, like Galen's generous medicaments, that must not be dishonoured, or cast away on the desperate Patient, but preserv'd to do noble and signal cures on those that are capable and worthy of them.

Such are these caustick plaisters, preparatory to the incarnative, the knife and the launce that Hippoc. reckons among the μαλάγματων γένεα, the mollifying preparations that the Physician must always carry about with him. This is the new, and, as late Artists tell us, the truer notion of the Fever, not as of a disease, but an endeavour and strife of Nature to cure one; as when there is a thorn in the hand, or burthenous excrement in the body, nature heaves and plunges, puts it self into a passion and flame to thrust it out: and then to cure that Fever, to quench that flame, to allay or trash nature in that march, is to dis-arm the friend, and side with the adversary. And such, it seems, was the messenger of Satan to St. Paul, that medicinal thorn in the flesh, to prick the rising, and let out the putrid humour, that he might not be puff'd up and exalted above measure; and God would not be so unkind as to hearken to his importunity, in giving it leave to depart from him.

If you will further see the opinion and judgment of God in this matter, I shall mention but one evidence more of it, the notes of his constant practice through the whole Scripture.

The briars and thorns were immediately designed by God to the first sins, to repair the errours and crimes of Paradise.

Afterward, the Rod was the only engine by which Moses was to work all his miracles, on the rock, on the Ægyptians, on the more obdurate Israel; all the exchange and variety was only this, the Rod sometimes transformed into a Serpent, or else multiplied into an army of Frogs, and Flies, and Locusts, when an obdurate rebellious sinner, a Pharaoh, was to be softned: and, if you mark it, when upon the importunity of Moses God was perswaded to withdraw that rod, to intermix deliverances, these never wrought any good upon Pharaoh; when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, respite but for a minute, he hardned his heart, &c. Ex. 8. 15. an observation that made S. Basil resolve, that 'twas God's patience, or μακροθυμία, that hardned Pharaoh's heart, the removings of his plagues, intercalations of mercy: the taking off the water from the fire, and letting it cool again, that, as Aristot. saith, makes it freez so hard and so speedily. The Devil and the Magicians would have been better at the cure of an hard heart, than Moses and his prayers: they could only conjure up more blood and more frogs, but could not remove any; and that, it seems, was the most likely means to have kept him humbled. And therefore in the New Testament, 'tis the Apostles saving method in such great cures, to call in the Devil into consultation, to deliver men up unto Satan, as the last and surest remedy; the continued stripes and the no-respite, to give the impenitent to drink of the ἄκρατον κεκερασμένον, in the Apoc. that hath so posed the Interpreters, the unmixt mixt wine, the all myrrh but no water, the all manner of imbittering, heightning, but none of the allaying, cooling mixtures in it, and so still the portion of our crucified Master, i. e. by the way of this Text, all smitings and disciplining, real, corporeal inflictions of Satan, to the diseasing and destroying of the flesh; and, it seems, no popular Empirical means so probable for the ἵνα πνεῦμα σωθῇ, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord.

And

And then, my brethren, to bring down this first particular unto our selves, was there ever such a course of sour discipline, such a delivering up unto Satan, as this Nation of ours hath for some years been under? Were there ever such real buffetings? not like that in Saint Jerom's Dream, to convert the Ciceronian into a Christian, but as upon a waking Bedlam, a daily constant exercise of stripes; or like that on the possessed in the Gospel, the spirit taking us, and tearing us till we foam again, (and our base reviling and slandering one another is that foam.) O how many sad falling fits hath this poor demoniack been wrastling under, and unless an over-ruling mercy interpose, perhaps the bittrest part of the agony still to come, in the strugling of life to return again! Is not this the antitype of a smitten Ephraim? I speak not this particularly of those that have been the sufferers under this rod; believe it, the catalogue of the smitten is larger than so: You may mark it, that the Rod it self is smitten whensoever it smites, at every blow wounded and torn by way of re-passion.

And so the most distant atomes of this Kingdom are once united in this one sad notion of stripes and wounds, fit to become one common ἔξαρχος ὄρους, precentor in the first note of this sad anthem, the flagellasti me, thou hast smitten me. O that we could get but one word farther, join all in the ἀμοιβαῖον or counterpart, & flagellatus sum, in the real passive, and I was smitten!

This were but justice unto God, that hath taken all this pains with us, been at such an expence of culters with these stony fallow hearts of ours. You shall see how rhetorically he expostulates it, Amos 3. 4. Will a Lion roar in the forest to have no prey? shall my chidings and threats and thunderbolts (tearing your Ephod and your Altar, rending not the veil, but the Temple it self from the top to the bottom) be spent all to no purpose? Will a young Lion give forth his voice from his den that he may take nothing? (that is the best rendring of the place) Shall all this tragical scene designed and acted by God (all but our sin-parts in it) be but a beating of the air, or a scourging of the sea, unprofitably? no one sin in such a legion brought down or vanquish'd by all this storming?

Nay, shall we at once evacuate and reproach, frustrate and defame his methods? pronounce into all the world, that God hath lost his design for want of conduct? shall we set up for the Master-wits? get Proselytes away from heaven to Ephraim's heresie? preach back again to God's Rod? and tell him, that afflictions are very improper engines to make batteries on Souls? If so, then are we just the indomiti juvenci in this Text, so perfectly untamed after all this smiting. I wish we could say as true in that that follows, the [Turn thou us, and we shall be turned;] that the resolvedness not to benefit by stripes, were not so like the blasphemy against the holy Ghost; that when this hath failed, any other method might hope to prove successful. That Prosperity might do it, was Ephraim's fancy, though distant enough from God's: which brings me to my second particular, Man's judgment, or the sinners perswasion of himself, that Roses are more wholesome than Wormwood, that Prosperity will do it better, and a bribing God with a promise that it shall do it; Converte, & convertar, Turn, &c.

And this we shall not fully carry away with us, if we do not view it distinctly in three notions.

1. As 'twas a perswasion or act of belief in Ephraim, that so 'twould prove: Turn thou me, &c.
2. As a promise that it should be thus: Turn, and I will, &c.
3. As in truth it was, an excuse to get off the Rod, or to procrastinate the repentance: the present method of smiting may be superseded; Turn thou me, &c.

The first, an act of judgment in Ephraim. The second, of temporary resolution. The third, of artifice and design. In each of these, Ephraim may chance to prove our mirrour; 'twill be worth your patience that I shew you how. And

1. As it was a perswasion or act of judgment in Ephraim, that Prosperity was the way to make them better.

'Twas a truth of God's own pronouncing, that his thoughts are not like our thoughts, consented to by the Philosopher, οὔτε δέμας θνητοῖσιν ὁμοῖον οὔτε νόημα, saith Xenophanes, God hath no more of our fancies than of our shapes; heaven and earth are seldom of an opinion. 'Twill be most pertinent and visible in matters of his providence.

When God hath designed the cross, the constant post and stage in our gesses to Heaven, we must needs set up another œconomy, fansie it a kingdom of uncompounded felicities, croud all the Godly into one throne, and the ungodly into one footstool, bring Christ unto this Earth again, on a second more prudent errand, to have an age of reigning, not of suffering, among a world not of followers, but of fellow-kings, and so, in the Apostles judgement, inclose him in a kingdom of bastards, whom we are resolv'd (quite contrary to God's pronouncing) to be the only sons and Saints of the Millennium. To this end must Prophecies be precipitated, and what belongs to the future (perhaps long ago past) Conversion of the Jews, or our yet more future bliss, shall be all anticipated presently, the Cross condemn'd and banish'd out of the world, and none like to be of the Order of the new Disciples, but he that will cast off that unchristian luggage, and so not follow Christ. Can there be a greater contrariety unto Christ's judgement, a more perfect Antipodes to all that hath hitherto been Gospel, than that which by pulling out one pin in the scene, hath been thus shifted into its stead?

And as in the general, so in the particular too, [In what state soever I am, therewith to be contented] is not to be had, by Saint Paul's own confession, without a μύησις, a great deal of mysterious instruction, such as in the Eleusinia sacra cost the Client so many sighing patient years of attendance and purgation, before he could ascend to the τελεταὶ & ἐποπτεῖαι, the heights of Christian contentment: but especially to have any good opinion of Afflictions when they are actually on our shoulders, to be so tame as to think such a proportion of earth, with wormwood imbibed, can prove useful or medicinal to any.

Will not a brave golden showr of cordials dispel poysons, raise a collaps'd habit of Soul, infuse a new stock of spirits, more probably far than a course of steel or quicksilver? Would not an army of [illegible]-beams, that have light as well as warmth in them, subdue and thaw the most hardned heart in the whole quarry, dissolve the most icy crystal spirit, better than a stroke of Moses rod, or a crack of thunder?

Thus hard it is for flesh and bloud to believe that God can chuse best for us: Are not Abanah and Pharphar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Jordan? May not I wash there and be clean? Would not a little kind usage, a few fatherly kisses and embraces, an inheritance or portion given me in my hand, a fair demeans to keep hospitality upon, be more likely to work upon well-natur'd sinners, that do not love to be forced, will be as thankful as any man living, if they may be courteously treated, but with a froward handling cannot chuse but shew themselves unsavoury? This driving and forcing men to repentance is a violation of the Gospel-liberty, a kind of constraining and violencing of the spirit, if it be inslaved to these beggerly rudiments of stripes and terrors, and savours much of the spirit of Legal fear, that Hagar or mount Sinai that ingendreth unto bondage, quite contrary to the free-born Sion or Jerusalem-spirit, whereby we cry, Abba Father.

Farther yet, I have heard Ephraim a murmuring as well as a bemoaning; I am so incumbred with the pressures of a villanous world, such a hurry of passions, of indignation and impatience, of a tumultuous grief and shame, that I have neither heart, nor joy, nor leisure to mend any thing. Thus it follows, vers. 19. I am ashamed and confounded, because I bear the reproach of my youth; no possible reforming in such a state of confusion, such a kind of Tophet and hell as this.

And I heartily wish I did not speak to men that can think Ephraim in the right all this while, that with Jonas on the withering of the Gourd can justifie against God himself, that they do well to be angry even unto death, that can really perswade themselves that Afflictions are not for their turn, that they are as noxious to their Souls as to their bodies, that as Hippocrates resolved of the Scythians, that the νόσημαλα, if they came from God, (that all the curses and ill-turns that Heaven had to spare) would be confined to the poor, because their wants set them always a murmuring and a blaspheming of God; so, I say, I wish we had not some of that Atheist's conceit, that cannot tell how to imagine that stripes should bring forth any thing but clamours and execrations, more ferity, more sullen Atheisms, more bestiality to drown, Opiate potions to benum the sense of our calamities. And many of us do this out of pure judgment, that affluence is far the more probable way toward mending, that a Canaan were able to inspire Israelites, as the good soil in Plutarch was thought to infuse Poetry into the Oracle. And having experience to demonstrate the first part of Ephraim's speech, being no more wrought on by all God's smiting than the most untractable Steers, they go on with a presumption of the truth of the second, that Prosperity will do all that Adversity hath not done: Turn thou me, &c.

But then, 2. I told you there was a second notion of these words, as they are an act of promise and temporary resolution, that if God will but turn our captivity, we will infallibly amend.

And 'tis very possible at a distance for a man to think himself in earnest when he so promises. 'Twas Dio's observation of Nero's mother, (that profest her self content to be kill'd by her son, on condition he might be Emperor) That 'tis very ordinary at a distance to enter such obligations; we'l venture any the sowrest paiment from Satan after this life, so we may get but his Kingdom of the Earth, his Seraglio of Carnal felicities at the instant. The Hypocrite or false-hearted professor will make any bargains with God for the future, will not doubt but to be a Disciple of Christ, so he may but first go and bury his father, or, with Jephta's daughter, have a month or two to go up and down the mountains and bewail her virginity, she and her fellows: Be it the Cloister or the Altar, Chastity or Death it self, (as you know 'tis not resolved which 'twas that that Vow belong'd to) a little present felicity will be sufficient paiment for either of them; only when the date of the undertaken returning begins to commence, when the sowr part of the bargain comes to be performed, the Nero to kill as well as to reign, the Cloister to be actually entred, and with that the ἀμεταμέλητος μετάνοια, a vow never to return ad seculum again, then the Votary begins to understand himself better, finds it as improper to turn Penitentiary in a Palace as it was in a Prison, as irrational to be condemn'd to Tantalus as to Prometheus fate, to be abstemious in a river of delights as patient of fastening to a mountain of torments: and had he known it that he should thus have been taken at his word, have had his turning required as soon as his Captivity was turn'd, his mortification expected at the restoring of his peace, and with the festivity and rest, the holiness also and services of a Sabbath and Jubilee, he would have even courted his Rod, embraced his pleasanter Gyves or Dunghill, have continued a slave in Ægypt, rather than thus be circumcised in Canaan, have been bored through the ear by his old Master, rather than thus dignified with the Title of Free-man, and denied the Libertinism that belongs to it.

But the truth is, there is a third notion of these words, which will be a Supersedeas to that of a Promise; and that is, as this art of promising is only an excuse, or shift, or pretence, to get off the present smart of the rod, or the importunity of the Prophet, to escape the smiting or the being smitten, the cross or following of Christ.

Should the unmanaged Horse (instead of the Bullock in the Text) desire his Rider to put off his Spurs and Whip, and at once to ease him both of Bit and Saddle, and then promise to be the tractablest Beast in nature, but till then profess that all those Instruments of Discipline should never tame him, I beseech you, what would be thought of this Oration? would you certainly be perswaded that the Beast spake reason, that it was a serious design of a generous obedience, a gallantry of a voluntary unconstrained vertue? If so, you may believe the Beast within you, that makes the same proposal to God and you. In the mean time, 'twill not be amiss to resolve, that he that hath exceptions to God's methods, hath some other Master to whom he is more inclinable to retain; he that will not serve God for nought, that is all for the thriving Piety, the gainful Godliness, that must have his reward just as he is a doing the work, a payment in hand, even before he sets about the duty; will sure bring in little profit to God, be he fed never so high, very thin returns of good life for all his donatives. He that will not now mend under the rod, edifie by so many doleful Lectures as have been read us out of a Zachary's and a Jeremy's roll, that hath arrived to Theodoret's νῦν ἀνήκουστον, a mind that can reverberate judgments, and make them rebound in more provoking sins against the hand that sent them, [illegible] the Pharaoh, the anvil-temper; and, let him pretend, or promise, or flatter himself what he please, by holding out his white Flag for Treaty, he desired to be in case to maintain his Fort still against

againſt God; and 'tis not victualling and bribing, but ſtarving and ſtorming, muſt help to drive him out of it. Which brings me to the third and laſt particular,

The ſtating of this difficulty betwixt God and man, and in it the falſeneſs of man's judgment, and fallaciouſneſs of ſuch his promiſe, both in reſpect of God, who will never ſend them Proſperity that Adverſity wrought no good on, and of Proſperity it ſelf, which would never do the work of God ſhould ſend it.

For the firſt, in reſpect of God, who will never ſend them Proſperity that Adverſity wrought no good on: this you may judge of, not only by that great Rule of State in Heaven, of [God's reſiſting the proud] and [Surely God heareth not ſinners] compounded into one Goſpel-aphoriſm, [the incorrigible beggar can never have audience in heaven, nor returns from thence, ſave only of ſtones and thunder-bolts;] but eſpecially on that wiſe ground of divine œconomy on which all theſe ſtripes are ſent.

God's firſt method of calling us off from the world, is the ſoft and friendly, the [having therefore theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves,] a Heaven, a Paradiſe, and a Canaan, to confirm Angels, and bring men to bliſs, to draw with the cords of a Man, with the bands of love; and if that prevail, Afflictions are ſuperſeded, (and were it not that there is another ſpecial uſe of them, to illuſtrate our Chriſtian vertues, and improve our Crown, and withall to confute Satan when he accuſes us of unſincerity, the reformed Chriſtian ſhould never be thus exerciſed.) But when Proſperity will not work, when the calmer phyſick is digeſted into nouriſhment of the diſeaſe, then, and not till then, the vomit comes in on the reſerve, the tempeſt and deluge to drown thoſe Serpents that had ingendred and thriven in the ſhallow and ſtill waters, as to them that are ſick of perfumes, the noiſomeſt Smell is the only Cordial: and then, as Cuſanus obſerves, there is in God coincidentia contrariorum, this ſeverity is the only mercy, theſe wounds the only balſame, the hoſtile approach the moſt obliging charity: and as by the Heathen artifice in Hero's πνευματικὰ, as ſoon as ever the fire was kindled upon the Altar, the plummets fell, and the doors flew open, and the God appeared upon the Chair of State; ſo by this rarifying power of flames and judgments, the earthly obſtacles are oft removed, and the Deity ſet up and inthron'd in the heart; and then ſure 'twas good for that man that he was in trouble. And generally the rule is true in Gerſon, Omnes pœnæ non exterminantes ſunt medicinales, All mulcts that are not undoing (and our Law admits not of any but ſuch as are ſalvo contenemento) are a piece of charity and phyſick in the Judge. For this cauſe are many ſick and weak, nay, many fallen aſleep, (if we will believe the Apoſtle;) and all theſe judgings of the Lord, the only Antidotes againſt that fatal poyſon, the being condemn'd and ruin'd with the world.

And then, you will not blame the wit or piety of the old Heathens, (who deifi'd all their Benefactors) that they had Temples for ſuch Fevers as theſe, the friends that had ſo oblig'd them: I'm ſure St. Auguſtine makes it his wonder, that upon that ſcore they had not erected one Altar more, impietati hoſtium, to the impiety and rapine of their enemies, which was conſtantly (if they had but the grace to make uſe of it) ſo royal a Benefactor.

The ſovereign power of this Recipe being thus conſidered, you will give it leave to be the laſt in God's preſcribing, and the moſt depended on; and the Patient being not fit for the coſt or trouble of any farther experiments, when theſe have proved ſucceſsleſs, the greateſt mercy of the Phyſician is to leave him with theſe Cupping-glaſſes at the neck, that if there be ever a ſpark of vital ſpirit within, it may by this aſſiſtance diſcharge it ſelf of that poyſonous vapour, and yet poſſibly overcome and quit the danger: but if not, 'tis ſure too late to divert to any new courſe; the fetching out the Cordials will but enhance the Bill, and maintain the Lamp a little longer, will never beget a new ſtock of ſpirits or ſpring of life, when 'tis once ſo quite exhauſted: and therefore the concluſion is clear, and the Prophet Amos hath expreſt it by an apt reſemblance, Amos 3. 5. Shall one take up a ſnare from the earth, and take nothing at all? Shall God remove his judgments from a Nation, while the ſins are ſtill at the high-water? Infallibly he will not do it: If he do, 'tis a ſad preſage; his ſoft hand is but abſolute deſertion, the leaving to our ſelves is the giving us up to our bloudieſt enemies, that unſeaſonable heaven is the far worſe Tophet of the twain.

Let but the preſent Calamities work the cure on us, and then all the Canaans in the world are ready at hand to perfect it; the old peaceable, flouriſhing England, hid under that heap of thunder-bolts, is ready to be our Bath and Palæſtra once again, to refreſh and confirm what was thus acquired, and to beget a whole treaſure of health in us. But till then, Proſperity is quite beſide the purpoſe, a mere ignorant Empirick-preſcription, which hath nothing of purging or medicinal in it, ſhould it be adminiſtred, 'twould never reform or convert any. The demonſtrating of which, is the undertaking of the laſt minute of my laſt particular, that in reſpect of Proſperity it ſelf, which in this caſe will never do the work if God ſhould ſend it.

The Beaſt that is not tamed or humbled by the whip or goad, the rich paſture in all reaſon will never break or work on; the liberty of that field is a new temptation, and the plenty ſtrengthens for a ſturdier reſiſtance, and both liberty and plenty, reſpite and peace are apt to be miſtaken for a reward of the former ſtubbornneſſes, far from any reſtraint of them.

Will you ſee it exemplified in the moſt eminent ſtories of deliverances and proſperities that the Scripture takes notice of? that will enforce the concluſion à majori.

You have Lot of Sodom, and Noah of the old World, the remnant preſerved from that double deluge of fire and water, and as ſoon as they are landed in their fair Havens, the ſame Calm ſhipwrecks both, and their Proſperity is branded by holy Writ for the mother of their two beſtial ſins, Inceſt and Drunkenneſs.

Look back from thence into Eden, and there that happy at once and innocent pair are not by plenty ſecured from coveting; beauty, and ſweetneſs, and deſire of knowledge, the perfections and temptations of Paradiſe, are the ruine to Innocence it ſelf: and then, what do you think, the Swine would have done there, when the Lambs committed ſuch early riots? what an havock would an Army of Roiſters have made in that Garden, where Adam himſelf (if you will believe the Rabbins rendring of the Pſalmiſt לא ילין) abode not one night in that ſtate of bliſs and honour.

Paſs we from Paradiſe unto Heaven it ſelf, where there is neither eating nor drinking, marrying nor giving in marriage, and ſo no room for carnal ſins to do any thing but ſtarve in, yet even there was matter for the filthineſs of the ſpirit to feed on; the Angels can grow proud and ambitious there, ſtumble and fall in plain Heaven, adore and worſhip (and ſo damn) themſelves in the abſence of all other Idols. And therefore from theſe experiments 'twould be no boaſt or hyperbole to affirm, (and perhaps worth your pains to conſider it) that if a prophane impenitent ſhould (upon an impoſſible ſuppoſition) be ſo proſperous as to enter heaven it ſelf, it would be very far from reforming or converting him; ſuch a gratifying and rewarding of ſinners, would but confirm them in their courſe: as when an habituate demure adulterer, oppreſſor, or the like, gets confident of his Salvation, with theſe crimes unreformed about him, there is not an engine imaginable to fetch him off from his ſins, but by firſt robbing him of his aſſurance; he muſt be thrown out of his imaginary uſurp'd heaven, before he will be really capable of coming thither. 'Tis true, there will be there in thoſe ſacred Courts ſome good motives and attractives to Reformation, examples of all the contrary vertues, if he were malleable enough to be controll'd by ſuch; the Seraphims pure divine flames of love, to reproach and upbraid his prophane and unclean fires of luſt and rage; a quiet calm ſubordination of Saints and Angels under that great Theocracy, to ſhame that petulancy of his ἐγὼ, the irregularity of his rebel luſts againſt the τῆς εὐνομίας, the Monarchy of that divine beam within him, the Principalities and Powers, to make him bluſh and glow at theſe vile ſervilities and mean ſubmiſſions to the paultry ſins that he ſtands guilty of; a whole volume of patterns of all holineſs in every Saint, to reproach and libel his impurities: But when he hath in himſelf that one great example, that luſt and pride, the filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, can inherit life, (as ſuppoſe the impenitent in heaven, and he hath this example) he will then rather expect to be imitated himſelf, to gain Proſelytes to his delicate popular thriving hereſie, to ſet up a new faction or ſociety in heaven, all for proſperous Liberty, than conform to that old regular ſubordination, that Prelacy or Hierarchy of Arch-angels, and Cherubims, and Saints. In a word, we ſhould have, in ſuch a new ſuppoſed Platform, more hope to bring over and debauch Angels, (were they not confirm'd) than danger of being diſciplin'd or reform'd by them, even raiſe Lucifer's expectation, that he might return to his old Country again, at leaſt give him more ground for that hope, than Origen's charitable Hereſie could ever afford him. And all this, though impoſſible enough, yet far more probable than for unclean Atheiſts or Hypocrites, remaining ſuch, to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, and then begin to reform when they are entred.

That Divinity that firſt inſtates impenitents in pardon, and ſo in bliſs, and then will have them mend by way of gratitude, ſuppoſes a degree of piety and generoſity in thoſe impenitents, that nothing but a through Converſion can plant in them. He that having a falſe graceleſs debtor to deal withal, will firſt abſolutely cancel his Bond, and then expect that payment from Gratitude, which Law and Sergeants could not extort from him, ſhall be allowed to be of Ephraim's mind, that the Sun-beams may diſſolve that Stone, that the Hammer could not. The Platoniſts and the Papiſts have been a little more rational in ordering their fancies, placing their imaginary Purgatory in their way to Heaven, not at the journey's end: and, if you mark it, they are not Purgatory ſtreams, but flames, which they dream of; a Caldarium or Scalding-bath or Fornace, to fetch out and burn up droſs, not a flowry Elyſian field or Paradiſe, only to upbraid it.

I ſhall make challenge to your memories and experiences, Did you ever ſee any man flatter'd and gratified out of his ſins by the increaſe and amiableneſs of his temptations? And yet 'tis certain that Proſperity and Eaſe and Peace abound more with theſe than any other ſtate. Acrioribus ſtimulis animum explorant, in Tacit. and as he, felicitate corrumpimur; ſo, becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God, could David ſay, their uninterrupted felicities, firſt made Atheiſts of them: Is it likely that a few more hours of thoſe joys would return them Saints?

The Eremites indeed, in Theodoſius the younger's time, left their Solitude, and came to ſtudy Perfection in the King's Palace: But ſure 'twas becauſe they were (or elſe conceived themſelves to be) advanced and arrived already to a ſpiritual height, to a full pancratick habit, fit for combats and wraſtlings, and ſo came out to practiſe in theſe Agones, that is, not becauſe there were conceived to be leſs, but more temptations: And yet even for ſuch, I ſhould not be over-forward to commend the deſign. Without queſtion, the ſtill Privacy had been the more prudent courſe. For ſo Licetus, that tells us of ſome Lamps which under ground continued light for ſixteen hundred years, concludes his obſervation, that as ſoon as ever they were brought forth into open air, they went out immediately. And I need not tell you how many zealous burning or fair ſhining Votaries the world hath had, whoſe, impriſon'd, retir'd, cloyſter'd Piety hath done ſo too.

And do not think that 'tis an appetite to other mens poſſeſſions, or an inſidious praiſing of a loſt treaſure, that ſo they that have taken it up, may return it again; If I tell you that, which 'tis not, theſe times have taught me, that affluence and abundance of Riches, of Eaſe, of even Peace it ſelf, is generally no ſafe commodity; there is not one of a hundred but is leſs Chriſtian for it. Jeſhurun waxed fat, began to thrive in the fair paſture, and, it follows, he kicked preſently. And 'tis Ariſtotle's Maxim, πλοῦτος ὕβρεως τοῦ, Riches make men inſolent and intolerable. Nay we have mention of the πολλοὶ ἢ κόρον ἢ δυνάμενοι φέρειν, Eſther 16. 2. and of ferre fortunam in Horace. 'Tis a weight that many are not able to move under; the talents of gold are the ſaddeſt lading, ready to ſink old Charon's boat in Lucian. 'Tis, ſure, that very bunch in the Camel's back, that made it ſo hard for him to enter that ſtreight paſſage: And unleſs you have ſome confidence and ſome experience of your extraordinary gifts, or faculty of conquering the temptations of wealth and reſt, particularly of taking out the ſting and teeth that are peculiar to the Serpent, the exact skill of allaying this quick-ſilver, believe me, that piece of ancient advice would be no unſafe counſel to many of us, when Riches increaſe, inſtead of ſetting the heart on them, not ſo much as to lend them an ear, to be deaf to the knocks of Riches, when they are moſt importunate at the door. All the joys and high taſts that they can help you too, being not able to requite you for the damning ſin of one inſolence, one luxury, one impiety, nay for the pains that not only Petrarch, but Ariſtotle, the Heathen as well as Chriſtian Moraliſt, tells you it will coſt the rich or idle man to reſiſt thoſe temptations, much leſs to repair the wound of a waſted Conſcience, that the courting of wealth when 'tis ſhie or coy, the βούλεσθαι πλουτεῖν, the reſolving to become rich, or continue ſo, doth conſtantly coſt us.

This

This is the moſt perfect earneſt in the world: never was there Chriſtian of any extraordinary proficiency, but was reſolv'd of it as of a Principle, and therefore put it into his prayers, not only under the Petition againſt leading into temptation, but interpreted our daily bread to that ſenſe, ὁ τῇ ἐνδεεῖ βίῳ ἱκανὸς ἀρκεσθῆναι, that which is moſt agreeable to every of our conditions, neither poverty nor riches, with Solomon, but the panem dimidij noctis, that which is juſt even to the wants or cravings of a regular appetite; which is the only wholſom diet in the world.

And as this hath ſufficiently demonſtrated the Doctrine, ſo will it prove the moſt advantageous riſe for Uſe and Application, and the concluſion of the whole matter. And that is in the Prophet Micah's phraſe, to ſhew thee, O man, what is good: good to thee as thou art a Man, in all thy capacities, to put thee upon a project, give thee a patent and monopoly of the greateſt treaſure and riches of the world, a ſecret that the worldling hath not known; for had he known it, he would never have diſquieted the neighbourhood for ſuch a warm prize ſnatcht juſt out of the mint, ſuch a ſindging weight of gold that will ſo ſoon fire its paſſage, and flie from him again. And it is that treaſure of Chriſt, ſhall I ſay? nay, of Epicurus's Philoſophy, (as, for want of his own writings, the Greek Scholiaſts on Ariſtotle are fain to tell us.) In the one, the γαλήνὴ ἡ ἀτάραχον τῆς ψυχῆς κατάστημα, the calm, untroubled conſtitution of mind, that all the τὰ ἔξω, the preſent or poſſible tempeſts of this world (which are all extrinſecal, perfectly extrinſecal to a Chriſtian) have not had in their power to afflict or diſquiet, to put out of that magnanimous pace of equable conſtant piety: In the other, that, not effect or fruit of Faith, but Faith it ſelf, 1 John 5. 4. ἡ πίστις νίκη, Faith the victory and triumph over the world, uſing it as a tame conquer'd captive creature, contemning and defying it, and againſt all our tempters vindicating and maintaining that title of ours, which the blood of Chriſt help'd to purchaſe for us, that of ſuperiority and conqueſts over the world. Not only that of contentment with a little, a tame privative contentment, (which yet the Spaniard thinks fit to make rival with Jupiter, enough, when 'tis attain'd on earth, to get away all the love and value from heaven) but of preferring the conveniences and advantages of that little, (nay that admirably-valuable condition of the nothing at all) the quiet and dignity of being fed immediately from God's own hand, of being a ſpecial part of his ſolicitude, nay of rejoycing in tribulations, the glorifying and magnifying God in that behalf beyond all others, and ſo being as in a ſtate of aſcendency ſtill, (a yet more glorious condition) that of being under God's managery and diſcipline, a part not only of his retinue, but his, skill, a piece of his craft and workmanſhip, hewed and ſquared and carv'd by thoſe keen ſharp inſtruments of his, to become ſo many ἀγάλματα Θεοῦ, incarnate ſtatues of his divinity. And I beſeech you to tell me, is this a formidable condition? is not that of the proſperous Atheiſt far more formidable? tell me as men, as Chriſtians, and not only as cattel of the herd; look but upon it with thoſe eyes that hope one day to behold the face of God, (and he that hath this hope, muſt purifie himſelf) and pronounce, if there be any thing in the ſmitten Ephraim's fate, beſide Ephraim's ſins, that may diſcompoſe or terrifie a ſervant of ſuch a maſter, much leſs drive us into tempeſts and rages of fear, with oaths and curſes, and damning of our ſelves, that we know not that Chriſt that would lead us or bring us into this condition; a condition (look it never ſo ſadly) which (believe me, or believe your Saviour upon his Mount, his Pulpit, or but believe your own Souls, whenever you come to trie it) ſhall prove a Mine of comfort to you, even in this life, the true fountain from whence the old ἡδονικοὶ, the voluptuous or pleaſurable, drew but drops or lappings, but will yield the illuminate Chriſtian full ſtreams of all the real joy and Epicuriſm in the world.

Which as it ſhall be the ſum of my preſent Addreſs to you, ſo of my Prayers to God for ever for you, that he that knows beſt how to chuſe for us, will not ſuffer us to do it for our ſelves, will anſwer the neceſſities of our health, and not the importunities of our appetites, that he will take our Soul's part againſt our enemy Fleſh, and not our Bodies, our Eſtates, our Satans againſt our Souls; will teach us that patience and that joy, that tranquillity and that Serenity, that courage, and that Anthem of his three Martyr-children, that we may ſing alſo in the midſt of flames; denudate us of all, when that may fit us for our prizes; preſcribe us any the ſcorchingſt Fornace here, which ſhall prove moſt inſtrumental to our preſent Reformation and future bliſs, to our life of obedience here, and of glory hereafter: Which God of his infinite mercy grant us all, for his Son Jeſus Chriſt his ſake; To whom with the Father, &c.

John Baptiſt's Warning.

The IV. SERMON.

MATTH. 3. 2.

Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

TWO Difficulties there are in theſe few words; what is meant by the Kingdom of heaven, and what by Repentance; and then one plain matter of Practical Divinity that reſults from the union of them. The Difficulties muſt be explained, or elſe the Doctrine will not be come by: the Earth removed, ere the Ore be ſprang; the Veil be rent, and then the Oracle will appear.

The former, what is the importance of the Kingdom of heaven, as being more diſputable, I ſhall propoſe more civilly and tenderly and unconcernedly, as willing to give an Example of that meekneſs and that charity, that in matters of Opinion will keep a Chriſtian from noiſe or quarrel: but the latter being more practical, to which your eternal weal is more cloſely conſequent, (a little miſtake in Repentance, being like the loſing of a pin in a Watch, the Actions and Motions of the whole life, even the ſucceſs of every temporal enterprize or hope, depending on it) you muſt give me leave to be more dogmatical, to affirm confidently, and, if need be, contend and quarrel you out of ſuch errors. To begin with the firſt Difficulty.

The Kingdom of heaven in this place, I conceive to have a peculiar critical ſenſe, different from what belongs to it in many other places; and to ſignifie the deſtruction of the Jews, that remarkable vaſt παλιγγενεσία, or final ſubverſion of that Church and State, wherein the power, and ſo Kingdom, of Chriſt was moſt illuſtriouſly viſible againſt his perſecutors. And if you muſt have the reaſons of my conceit, I will give you a taſte to them.

First, The parallel uſe of the phraſe in ſome other places; not to trouble you with many. In the 21 Luke, where our Saviour having mentioned the beginnings of ſorrows, ἀρχὰς ὠδίνων, beginnings of their throes of travail, and proluſions of this ſo bloody day, (Jeruſalem encompaſt with Armies, and the Prodigies that ſhould be obſervable about that time, the ſigns in the Sun and Moon, &c. ver. 25. parallel to the relations in Hegiſippus and Joſephus, and predictions in Joel, The Sun ſhall be turn'd into darkneſs, and the Moon, &c.) he then concludes in the words of this Text, When ye ſee theſe things come to paſs, know yee that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

A ſecond Argument you may take from the Preacher, the Baptiſt, whoſe office it was to warn the Jews of this deſtruction, as you may ſee, Mal. 4. 5, 6. Behold, I will ſend you Eliah the Prophet, i. e. John Baptiſt a propheſying, before the coming of the great and dreadful Day of the Lord, and he ſhall turn the hearts of the Fathers, &c. directly the Sermon of Repentance, Converſion in my Text, leſt I come and ſmite the earth (הָאָרֶץ, i. e. in the Scripture phraſe, peculiarly the land of Judæa) with a curſe; the clear interpretation of this Kingdom.

A third Argument you may have from the conſequents in this Text, where the Baptiſt faith it over again to the Phariſees in other words, the μέλλουσα ὀργὴ, the wrath ready to come, and the axe laid to the root of the trees: and ſo it ſeems this Kingdom was a heavy, ſlaughtering, hewing Kingdom.

And ſo indeed the propriety of the word will bear, (which will ſerve for a fourth Argument) there being two notions of a Kingdom; the one as it ſignifies reigning, the other as executing judgment; the firſt ruling, the ſecond coercing or puniſhing; the firſt the golden ſceptre, the ſecond the iron rod; that διάκονος Θεοῦ, royal Officer of God, being ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν, Rom. 13. an avenger or executioner for puniſhment. And for the matter in hand the caſe is moſt clear, Chriſt was never ſo demonſtrably a King as in that royal act of revenge upon his Crucifiers, then was his ſtandard ſet up, his enſign diſplayed, the ſign of the Son of man appearing in Heaven; and they ſhall ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds of Heaven with power and great glory, Matt. 24. 30.

Once more, There is but one interpretation of this Kingdom of Heaven that can pretend againſt that which we have now given you, and that is, that it ſhould ſignifie the preaching of the Goſpel, which at John Baptiſt's Sermon was not yet preſent, but ἤγγικε, was at hand. But how could that be the thing meant, when Chriſt himſelf (who was this King, and his preaching this Kingdom) doth ſtill continue the ſame ſtyle? Matt. 4. 17. Jeſus began to preach and ſay, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand: the other Kingdom was already come in Jeſus preaching, but ſtill this Kingdom is to come, yet future, though 'twere at hand. Yea, and when the Apoſtles were ſent out a preaching, which ſure was the preſence of that Kingdom, the ſame ſtyle was ſtill continued by them, Luke 10. v. 9. ἤγγικεν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, the Kingdom of God is at hand upon you; and then immediately to give the interpretation of that Kingdom, they ſhake off the duſt againſt them, a direful ceremony, and it ſhall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that City, v. 12. the deſtruction that Sodom met with, was more ſupportable than this.

I will now flatter my ſelf, that I have given you ſome hints (and 'tis in kindneſs to my Auditory that I do no more) to acknowledge it not improbable, that the Kingdom of heaven may have a peculiar ſeparate notion in this and ſome other few places, from that which it ordinarily ſignifies, and ſo denote the fatal final day to the Jews; and that will give our Baptiſt a preacher of Repentance juſt as Jonas and Noah were, God's œconomy the ſame, and the ſtyle but little changed. [Repent, for within 120 years the world ſhall be drowned,] was the ſum of Noah's Sermon; [Repent, for within 40 daies Nineveh ſhall be deſtroyed,] was Jonah's Sermon; and [Repent, for the Kingdom of God is at hand;] within the compaſs of this generation ſhall Jeruſalem be deſtroyed, was the Baptiſt's, the Chriſt's, the Apoſtle's Sermon. And ſo I have done with my firſt difficulty. Gen. 6. 3.

The ſecond will not detain or importune you ſo long; what is here meant by Repent: 'tis in a word, the amending of our lives, that μετάνοια ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, Heb. 6. 1. repentance not for, but from, dead works, the giving over the ſins of the former life. The Verſicles before our Confeſſion in the front of our Liturgy have directed and authorized this interpretation, Amend your lives, &c. and all other Languages agree in this Divinity: μετάνοια in Greek, a change of mind; תשובה in Hebrew, returning or Converſion; Reſipiſcentia in Latin, a return to our wits again; and Reformation or amendment of lives, in Engliſh.

Having thus paſt through the rougher part of your task of patience, ſeen what is moſt probably meant by the approaching Kingdom of heaven, and what undoubtedly by Repentance, (the firſt of which hath brought home the Text very near the preſent condition of this Kingdom: bleſſed Lord, that the latter might bring us home Proſelytes unto the Text!) there is but one ſyllable left behind to exerciſe you, and that is the [For] betwixt this Kingdom and this Repentance; and the importance of it comprehends theſe two things. 1. That Repentance is the only proper Uſe of ſuch direful denunciations; 'Tis the only deſign of God's threats, to extort Repentance from us; the ſame Baptiſt that denounces the approach of the bloody ſlaughtering Kingdom, requires Repentance of his Auditory: Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand. 2. That Repentance is the only way of averting that that is now at hand, and will otherwiſe undoubtedly invade them: Repent, for it is at hand.

You ſee the double aſpect of the [μετανοῆτε, Repent:] one upon the [βασιλεία, the Kingdom;] the other upon the [ἤγγικε, it is at hand:] The double propriety of this Grace; firſt, as the Uſe of the Doctrine, ſecondly, as the means to avert the Judgment; to anſwer God's importunity, and to deprecate his wrath: a duty of juſtice to him, and of prudence to our ſelves: an Aphoriſm of Divinity and Policy too; they will both come ſeaſonably to our wants. We had need to make better uſe of the impendencie of God's Judgments, than, God knows, hitherto we have made; and we had need to find out ſome ſtronger Antidote, ſome more approv'd ἀλεξητήριον, than hitherto we have taken: the Baptiſt's [For] will be inſtrumental to you for each of them. I begin firſt with the firſt, That Repentance is the only proper Uſe of ſuch direful denunciations.

And that I muſt infer, through theſe two ſteps or degrees;

Firſt, That no other Uſe is ſufficient but Repentance; and then, That no Repentance is ſufficient, but the μετάνοια, the Change, which is here defined.

Firſt, No other Uſe ſufficient but Repentance.

To paſs by thoſe ſo frequent, but abominable, Uſes which are made of theſe preſent Calamities; In one, a ſupine ſtupidity, a conſtant wretchleſneſs, an intermitting all the duties of our Callings till the Times be better, and ſo making it impoſſible without a ſecond Miracle, that Peace ſhould prove Peace, i.e. bring Proſperity after it: In a ſecond, the relieving his melancholick thoughts with a cup of Lethe, a ſleeping pill of good-fellowſhip, calling to the Ocean to drown, when the Hills will not be ſo kind as to fall upon him; like Saul ſending to the Minſtrel, when the evil ſpirit came upon him; or like his ſecond addreſs, that to the Witch, (for ſuch is the cup wherein he divineth) to charm the Judgment that is ready to invade him: In a third, the multiplying of ſins as faſt as God multiplies Judgments, like the Elephants by the blood of the Mulberies in the Maccabees, the more inraged in our διωμαχίαι, our fightings againſt God, by the bloudineſs of the ſpectacle before us, advancing even to profaneneſs and Atheiſm; like the Emperour that, inſtead of reforming or trembling, would thunder back againſt Jupiter: all which I cannot compare better, than to the effect of the famous plague in Thucydides, that ſaith he, was peſtilential to their ſouls as well as bodies, made them ἀνιδέους & ἀγρίους, ſwept away civility and humanity as well as men, left nothing but ferity and ſavageneſs among them. To omit theſe, (which ſure are no ſufficient Uſe, none of that καιρῷ δουλεύειν, ſerving the time, which can be miſtaken for κυρίῳ, ſerving the Lord) many other Uſes there are, with which men are willing to content themſelves; many inferiour vulgar graces the Devil can allow us to be taught by theſe calamities, if by that means he may keep us off from this one grand neceſſary of Repentance. When the Whale approaches the Ship, 'tis the Mariner's ſtratagem to throw him out a Barrel or two to ſport with, to keep him from that nobler game he came for, the toſſing and drowning the Ship. When Xerxes was in danger in the tempeſt, Herodotus tells us of his Nobles, προσκυνήσαντας ἐπιπηδᾶν εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, they made their obeiſance and leapt over-board to ſave their Prince's life. And ſo when the Leviathan in the Text, a devouring denunciation makes towards us, that naturally delights in that charitable cruelty, the toſſing and drowning the ſinner-part of the man and ſtate, wounding the veſſel through the ribs, ſhipwrecking the affections, the luſts, the reigning ſin, the Heathen Prince, the Devil in it, (that grand important work, that joy of ſuch Angels or Meſſengers of Heaven, that (to them ſo delightful) game of Repentance) ſome lower meaner veſſels we have to caſt out to it, ſome inferiour contents to ſacrifice, ſome Nobles to leap over-board, ſome very vertues and graces we can have our great Pilot Satan's leave to retribute to theſe ſtorms, theſe denunciations, ſo the body of reigning ſin may be kept unſhipwreck'd, ſo that fatal work of Repentance may not be required of us.

One or two not inconſiderable Graces theſe Times may already have wrought in the moſt of us: In one man, perhaps, contempt of the World, having by our preſent miſeries learn'd ſo much of the contemptibleneſs of it, and by the world's contemning and affronting of us, had provocations to all returns of contumely and revenge on a villanous World; and he that upon ſuch unworthy

uſage, ſuch barbarous, reproachful, incenſing behaviour, can but hold up a ſlight quarrel with this petulant enemy, charge it with ſome unkindneſs, and in that pet break off that ſtrict League of friendſhip, vow never to love the unkind, treacherous, falſe World ſo well again, perſwades himſelf he hath made a moſt excellent ſanctified uſe of theſe Times. I confeſs I am glad to ſee ſuch quarrels, glad that any thing can allay that mad paſſion, that λιθομανία, as Iſidor calls it, that fury of love and doting on our earthern Gods, glad that they that have been ſo long tormented in their own Gallies, ſuo calculo damnati ad metalla, by their own tyrannical covetous minds condemn'd to that old Roman puniſhment, a digging and hewing in the Minerals for ever, are by the bounty of theſe ill Times, return'd from their thraldom, their captivity before their year of Jubilee, expell'd from theſe Gallies, baniſh'd out of this Inquiſition; glad, that the World's forſaking of us, can work any degree of cure on our fits of ſpleen, our hypochondriack paſſions to the World. 'Tis poſſible that the man thus diſpoſſeſt of his old Familiar, may at length have hoſpitable thoughts for ſome nobler gueſts, that the ill uſage from the Harlot may bring the Spouſe into favour again, that the ſenſe of the ill Maſter that we have drudg'd under ſo long, may make us ſeek out ſome more gainful ſervice; that the unproſperouſneſs of the arm of fleſh, the ſeveral failings of the Second cauſes which we have idolized ſo often, the many deluſions and ill ſucceſſes we meet with in the world, may make ſome forſake thoſe Atheiſtical colours, and bring in Proſelytes to Heaven; and ſo, this contempt of the World, may be a piece of procemial piety, an uſher or Baptiſt to repentance: but till it be thus improv'd and built upon, till this excellent piece of Philoſophy be, as Clemens ſaith of the Pagan School, τελειμίαν διὰ χριτῦ, baptized by that Baptiſt, chriſtianiz'd by the addition of Repentance, till the thorns that are now in the fleſh, enter to the pricking and wounding of the heart, to the letting out all worldly truſts and aiery hopes out of it, till he that is fallen out with this world and his Ægyptian Maſter there, come with him in the Goſpel unto Chriſt in queſt after the bleſſed heavenly Maſter, running, and kneeling, and asking, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do to get my portion in another World? and purſue Chriſt's directions to the utmoſt in that deſign; that contemner of the World muſt ſtill know, he hath not yet taken out the Baptiſt's Copy, not made ſuch uſe of the Doctrine of the Rod, as is expected from him, he is not yet advanced ſo far as to John's Baptiſm, to that [ὀν ὀλίγω χριτιανὸς] the ſo much as almoſt a Chriſtian, which the Baptiſt could have made him. O then let him go on to the perfection of the Text, not ſatisfie himſelf with that uſe of it.

In another, perhaps, the complexion of the Times have had a yet nobler influence, inſpired him with a perfect valour, an athletick habit of Soul, a contempt of Life it ſelf, brought him to a dreadleſs approach of that ſupreme terrour; and that not only the martial man, whoſe calling is to beard that Lion, but even the ſoft Courtier, who had imbibed no ſuch bold principles; 'tis now no news to hear Death kindly treated. We can think of Death as of a Preferment, of the Grave as one of the greateſt Dignities in the Church, and not only ἐπαινῦν, but μακαρίζειν, bleſs this enemy, (when we have not ſo much meekneſs or charity for any other) count them happieſt and bleſſedeſt that come earlieſt to it; each diſcontented Jonah hath his [Take, I beſeech thee, my life from me;] the whole Kingdom is become wilderneſs, a many prickly Juniper-trees ſcattered every where in that wilderneſs, and an Eliah ſate down under every one of thoſe Juniper-trees, [a ſighing out his requeſt for himſelf, that he may die; It is enough now, O Lord, take away my life:] and I ſee, this paſſeth with ſome for a ſpecial piety and mortification; which, let me tell you, conſidered aright, is an act of the ſulleneſt Atheiſm, a fellonious intent againſt themſelves, which becauſe (like Saul) they are too cowardly to execute with their own hands, God muſt ſupply the Armour-bearer's place, be call'd in to do it for them. But I am not ſo uncharitable to think that all our thoughts of kindneſs to death, are the congelation of ſuch black melancholick vapours; 'tis, I hope, in ſome an obedience to Plato's precept, the πειρᾶσθαι εὐσχημονῦν, the endeavouring to behave ones ſelf comely in whatever fortune, a Chriſtian ſubmiſſion to God's will in either of the δοῦοι πλόοι, which way ſoever the œconomy of providence diſpoſes us, even as far as to death it ſelf; no hatred or ſatiety of Life, but an indifference to either lot; the hating Life only as we are commanded to hate our Parents, not with an abſolute, but comparative hatred, (the denotation of the Hebrew שנא) only chuſing the reſt, preferring the dormitory, the being aſleep in Chriſt, in Paradiſe with Chriſt, rather than to be in thoſe uneaſie poſtures, laborious marches, that an Hell on earth provides for us. And then, I ſhall commend your righteous judgment; but yet ſtill, not flatter you that this is a ſufficient Uſe of this Baptiſt's Sermon, of the preſent impendency of God's puniſhments. Thou may'ſt not only be content, but wiſh to die and be with Chriſt, which is far better, more deſirable even to the carnal man, moſt gladly exchange the torments of a brittle life for the joys of an Eternity; and yet not have depoſited the luſts and baſeneſſes of this nauſeated life: the former is but an act of the Judicative faculty, a concluſion that ſuch premiſſes once conſidered cannot chuſe but extort from us; but the other is an act of the Will, which is not ſo eaſily brought to perform its duty, to mortifie the fleſh with the affections and luſts, the work of Repentance here required of us. And I beſeech you, let us not be too confident that we have performed our task, though we could reſolve to be content, nay, glad, to die with Chriſt, (for ſo you know, Peter could do, and deny and blaſpheme him after it) unleſs we have that ſecond Martyrdom, (that Cyprian, or ſome body in his diſguiſe, hath wrote a Book of) that vital Martyrdom of our exemplary, ſaintly, penitent lives to improve and conſummate t'other: and ſo ſtill, we are not got ſo far as Repentance; we require more ſtorms, more thunderbolts, more rouzing tempeſts, more preſſing calamities yet, to drive us thither.

A third ſort may have arrived to a third and greater degree of proficiency yet in the School of Judgments, to a reſolution and practice of Patience under God's hand, how heavy ſoever it prove; and yet, let me tell you, come ſhort of Repentance ſtill: for, I beſeech you obſerve, there is a double ſubmiſſion unto God, to his will, and to his wiſdom: that to his will reveal'd as well as ſecret;

reveal'd for the duties, ſecret for the ſufferings of this life; the firſt in an active, the ſecond in a paſſive obedience to Heaven. The ſubmitting to God's will in ſuffering what he lays upon us, (the utmoſt degree of Patience that the moſt of us attain to, and when we have done that, think our ſelves Champions and Martyrs of the firſt magnitude) is but a very moderate degree of Chriſtian fortitude, that which Chriſt needed not have aſcended to the Croſs to preach unto us; a man muſt be a kind of mad Atheiſt to come ſhort of that; for what is it but Atheiſm, to think it poſſible to reſiſt his will? and what but madneſs to attempt it? 'Tis that high Philoſophy of ſubmitting to his wiſdom, the acknowledging God the beſt chuſer for us, the ſtripes which he ſends, far fitter for our turns, than all the boons we pray for; his denying of our demands, the divineſt way of granting them, and, in a word, the reſolving that whatever is, is beſt, whatſoever he hath done, beſt to be done, whatſoever permitted, beſt to be permitted, (οὐχ ὁ γ' ἄνυδε διὸς τάδε γαίρειν, that very fury and madneſs of earth and hell, is a piece of God's œconomy) whatſoever is revealed to be his will by its coming to paſs among us, is (though the Actors in that Tragedy ſhall pay dearly for it, yet) better and more deſirable and eligible for us, than all friends and Patron-guardians in heaven and earth, yea, and our own Souls, could have contrived and choſen for us. The good Hezekiah's [Good is the word of the Lord which he hath ſpoken] when it denounced deſtruction to his whole family; old Nahum's גַּם זֹאת לְטוֹבָה. even this for good, to the heavieſt news that ever came, ſo oft repeated, that we find him in Elias Levita ſurnamed Gamzo, Even this, the firm adherence to the truth of that Apoſtolical Aphoriſm, that all things tend to good to them that love God, from tribulation through ſeven degrees to ſword or death it ſelf, and the forming all our lives by the plaſtick vertue of this one Article; this ſubmiſſion, I ſay, to his wiſdom, ſuperadded to that other to his will, and that attended with its natural conſequent, a rejoycing in tribulation, is the leſſon God's rod muſt teach us; yea and ſubmiſſion in actions as well as ſufferings, to his precepts as well as to his decrees, doing chearfully as well as patiently enduring his will; or elſe we are ſtill but punies in St. Paul's Academy, but triflers in the School of the Croſs of Chriſt.

Once more, Denunciations of God's wrath may ſet us a praying oftner than we were wont before, make us aſſiduous and importunate in that duty: The tempeſt in Jonah, may caſt the heathen Mariners upon their knees, crying every man unto his God; and yet for want of the clean hands to ſpread forth towards Heaven, of the new Soul to exhale and breath forth thoſe prayers, the livelieſt of thoſe flames, like all thoſe which our earthy fire brings forth, faint and extinguiſh long before they come to that Region of purity. 'Twas the blind man's Divinity, Now we know that God heareth not ſinners, a principle of blind Nature; and Hierocles a Philoſopher deſcants excellently upon it, The ſacrifice of ſuch unreformed fools is but πυρὸς τροφὴ, but a feaſt for the fire to prey on, their offerings to the Temple ἱεροσύλοις κειμήλια, a prize for the ſacrilegious to ſeize on; the wiſe man is the only Prieſt, the only friend of God, μόνος οἶδε εὔχεσθαι, the only man that knows how to pray, offering up himſelf for a ſacrifice, hewing his lower Soul into an Image, his upper into a Temple of his Deity.

I might ſhew you ſome more of theſe inferiour uſes, imperfect ſudden motions, that theſe judgments may have forced from us; and ſo ſtill like Chymicks in the purſuit of the Philoſopher's Stone, we meet with may handſome Experiments by the way, pleaſe our ſelves in our journey, though never attain to our journeys end. Theſe ſad Times, and this forced ſtudy and contemplation of God in his Judgments, may have caſt us upon ſome conſiderable Chriſtian vertues, and yet not advanced us within any ken of that great tranſcendent treaſure, to which all the ignis and the ſulphur, the fire and the brimſtone of his Judgments, that vaſt expence of thunder-bolts, to the emptying of his Armory, was deſign'd. Repentance is a higher pitch than any or all of theſe, and 'tis only Repentance is the proper Uſe of this ſad Doctrine; and not all kinds that paſs under that Title neither: and that muſt be ſhewed you in our next ſtage.

And firſt, the Repentance we ſpeak of, is not Sorrow, whether for miſery, or for ſin. For Miſery, that ſluce which lets out ſuch rivers of tears, which get away all the cuſtom from godly ſorrow or humiliation: Such ſorrow as this, is admirably deſcribed by God, Hoſ. 7. 14. and call'd aſſembling themſelves for corn, faſting and praying only upon the loſs and for the recovering of worldly plenty; and this, it ſeems, very reconcileable with all the impiety in the world, for it follows, [and they rebel againſt me.] Nor bare ſorrow for ſin neither, that which ſome men call Repentance; and by ſo doing, have fill'd Hell with none but Penitents; for I am confident there is not an unhappy creature there, which hath not both theſe parts of ſorrow, both for his miſery, and for his fall that betray'd him to it; had he not, Hell were not half ſo much hell as 'tis, two of the ſoreſt tormentors would be miſſing, the ſenſe of the flames, and the gnawing of the worm, the one extorting the tears, the other the gnaſhing of the teeth.

Nor, ſecondly, Humiliation alone, though that were a great rarity to be found among us: for though that might prevail to avert or defer ſecular calamities from a Kingdom, as it did from Ahab, (and therefore our Satan that accuſes this Nation day and night before God, will not allow us this common grace; after all our ſufferings, the whole Nation, God knows, is as unhumbled as ever) yet will not a bare humiliation under God's rod be accepted for a ſufficient return, when Repentance and change is call'd for.

No nor, thirdly, the ſudden paſſionate motions toward Reformation, the ſhooting up of the ſeed in the ſtony ground: many ſuch weak falſe conceptions there are in the world, and an ἄκμασις, or ſpeedy abortion, the common fate of them all; like the Goats in the Philoſopher, that give milk when they are ſtung, but never elſe: When he ſlew them they ſought him, and turned them early and enquired after God. Every one of these is but a poor imperfect paiment of that great arrear, that God's terrors and imminent Judgments are come, like the δεῦρο in the Gospel, to arrest us for it; and if we do not presently make our peace with our adversary, by rendring him that only royal tribute, the sincere, impartial, uniform obedience of our whole age to come, and counting the time past of our lives sufficient to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, give our selves up a living and voluntary sacrifice to Christ, first to be slain before him, then brought forth (like Antinous on Hanmer's Ἀλλ' ἤδη κεῖται, ἰδοὺ ἔκκειται τάφρῳ, there lies the sin, laid out a spotted Corps, this hath brought all the misery upon us) and then offered up upon his Altars so many devoted mortified new creatures, that have the addition of Fire to that of Air and Water in the mixture, the active, vital, as well as the sighing, weeping penitentiaries, (the imitation of the Sacrifices of old, χρυσοκόλλητα κέρατα, gold pour'd about the horns of the Sacrifice) not only the Ox or bestial part slain, but righteousness and mercy to the poor used as the Ceremonies of breaking off our sins, of saying that sacrifice, (as in the Primitive times, no Penitent was re-admitted to the Church, without προσφορὰν, or alms-deeds, and for him that was in the Church, there was yet no coming to the Sacrament, without an Offertory;) then still, after all this passionate variety, hath God's message not yet had audience from us, and till God may be heard by us, there is small hope that we shall ever be heard by God; for Repentance is not only the only Use of the denunciation, but withal the only preservative or phylactery, the only way of averting the Judgment which is now at hand, my last particular, Repent, for it is at hand.

And here I shall be able but only to draw you a Scheme of what I had design'd you, a rude draught of dead lines, and not venture to importune your patience with a ζωγράφησις, but only tell you that I had purposed,

1. To explain to you that mystery of Scripture, The distribution of God's Judgments into reversible and irreversible.

And 2. to give you the mark or character in Scripture discriminating the one from the other: the reversible under God's word only, the [Nineveh shall be destroyed] and yet Nineveh repents, and Nineveh is not destroyed. The irreversible under God's Oath also, Though these three men were in it, Noah, Daniel, and Job, as I live, saith the Lord, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, &c.

3. The commonness and frequency of the motion, of the προκοπὴ, or proficiency of one of these states into the other, the change that some addition of judgments, and years, and sins, and intercalary mercies, may make in God's decrees, their improvement into irreversible. Thus is it very possible, that upon the first breaking out of these Judgments upon this Land, the beginning of this rouzing Sermon, the fate and state of this Kingdom might be a reversible mutable state, like the Souls of men in Maximus Tyrius, ἀμφισβήσιμος καὶ ἐν μετεώρῳ, in a pendulous middle posture. But since the prodigious unkindly working of these medicinal inflictions, as of the bitter water in the trial of Jealousie, making the thigh to rot, and the belly to swell; since to all the sins that before we had borrowed from our Neighbours, we have added so many more from the Fiends and Furies, to the rifling and impoverishing, as it were, of Hell it self; since those Armies of high uncleannesses, of lies, of crafts, of multiplied oaths, a strange discordant grating harmony in the ears of God, of sacrilegious rapines and prophanations, of----- (I beseech you save me the pains of confessing them for you) that sin might be exceeding sinful, and destruction exceeding destructive; and (after some intermission of Judgments, but none of provocations) since a Dove-like embleme of peace hath been hovering over our heads, but not permitted to rest upon us, disclaim'd and driven out of our Region as a Vulture or Scriech-owl, the most ominous hated enemy; since the concurrence of all these, I say, 'tis also as possible we may be now improv'd and advanc'd to our full measure.

But then 4. I should have shew'd you also the indiscerniblenes (to the eye of man) of the difference of these distant states, till God by his promulgate Sentence have made the separation; (we have not such skill in Palmestry, as to interpret the lines and strokes in God's hand, which hath been long upon us; nor in Symptoms, as to judge whether ὀλέθριον χάρτα λίαν, whether it be infallibly mortal or no) and from thence the possibility yet, that it may not be too late for us to return and live, to set God a Copy of repenting. But then,

5. Till this be done, every minute we breathe, we suck our poison, we run upon all the Spears and Cannons in the World; nay, if God should hear us before we have answered him, if Mercy should interpose, before Repentance, and Reformation make us capable of it, that very Mercy were to be deprecated as the greatest Judgment in the world, a kind of Hell of desertion, a [why should ye be smitten any more?) a not vouchsafing us the medicinal stripes, a deliveriug us up to our selves as to the fatallest revengefullest enemies, the most mercilesse, bloodiest executioners. God may spare us in wrath, relieve us in fury, give us a treacherous settlement, a palliate peace, (the saddest presage and fore-runner imaginable;) and such it is sure to be, if the surface of the flesh be healed, before the βάθος καρδίας, the depth of the wound in the heart, be search'd and mollified, if God repent before we repent: and against such mercies we have more reason to pray, than against all the πύρωσις and intestine flames, all the Tophets, and Purgatories, and Hells, that the fury of men or devils can kindle within our coasts. The same motive that made St. Basil call for his Fever again, to wit, if the recovering of his Health were the re-flourishing of his Pride, may move us to pray for the continuance of this State-fever, till our impeniimpenitent hearts be humbled. I will make you my Confessors; till this Kingdom be really and visibly the better for stripes, I cannot without some regrets, some fears of uncharitableness, pray absolutely for peace for it. Lord, purge us, Lord, cleanse us with thy sharp infusions, cure and heal our Souls with the Corrosives of thine; and though thou mayest spare that charge, spare not thy Rod and thine Oil in the use of them: but till then, Domine, Domine indulgentiam hanc, Lord, we crave not of thy indulgence; we are undone, if thou be too merciful, we tremble to think of our condition, if thou should'st give over thy Cure too early, if thou should'st tear off our plaisters and our flesh together, restore our flourishing, before thou hast humbled and chang'd our Souls.

I have done with my last particular also.

Please you now but to spell these Elements together, the sad threats of a direful Kingdom, the but one word between us and that, only Repentance, to sanctifie it to us, and avert it from us, the Baptist miraculously born to preach it to them, and the same Voice now crying in the Wilderness to this Nation, in the midst of a whole Africk of Monsters, a Desart of wilder men: and if this Raven sent out of the Ark, the place of God's rest in Heaven, thus long hovering over this Earth of ours (going to and fro only on this errand, to see whether the waters be dried up from off the Earth, whether the Deluge of sin be abated) may not yet be allowed some rest for the sole of her foot; if at the heels of that, the Dove-like Spirit moving once more upon the Waters, may not find one Olive-leaf among us to carry back, in token that we are content to hear of Peace, to be friends with God; if having Moses and so many Prophets, the rod of the one so long on our shoulders, and the Thunder of the other in our ears, we cannot yet be brought this day to hear this voice, this φωνὴ κράζουσα, this clamorous importunate voice, Repent, or perish irreversibly; I must then divert with that other Prophet, with an [O altar, altar, hear the word of the Lord.] because Jeroboam's heart was harder than that, with an [O earth, earth, earth,] with a [Hear O heaven, and hearken, O earth,] flie to the deafest creatures in the world, because I can have no better Auditors. In this case, Preaching is the most uncharitable thing, apt only to improve our ruine, like breath when it meets with fire, only to increase our flames: there is nothing left tolerably seasonable but our Prayers, that our hearts, being the only whole Creatures in the Kingdom, may at last be broken also; that by his powerful, controlling, convincing Spirit, the proud Atheistical spirit that reigns among us, may at last be humbled to the dust; that in the ruine of the Kingdom of Satan, his pride, his sorceries, his rebellions, may be erected the humble heavenly Kingdom of our Christ, that meekness, that lowliness, that purity, that mercifulness, that peaceableness, that power of the Gospel-spirit, that we may be a Nation of Christians first, and then of Saints; that having taken up the close of the Angels Anthem, Good will towards men, we may pass through peace on earth, and ascend to that Glory to God on high, and with all that Celestial Quire ascribe to him the Glory, the Honour, the Power, the Praise, &c.

God is the God of Bethel.

The V. SERMON.

GEN. 31. beginning of ver. 13.
I am the God of Bethel.

THE ſtory of God's appearing to Jacob at Luz, Gen. 28. is ſo known a paſſage, ſo remarkable even to children by that memorative topick, the Ladder and the Angels, that I ſhall not need aſſiſt your memories, but only tell you that that paſſage at large, that viſion and the conſequents of it, from the 12 ver. of the 28. to the end of the Chap. is the particular foundation of the words of this Text, and the riſe which I am obliged to take in the handling of them. That hard pillow which the benighted Jacob had choſen for himſelf in Luz, (and became ſo memorable to him by the viſion afforded him there) he anointed and conſecrated, as it were, named it anew, on that occaſion, into Bethel, the houſe or reſidence of God, conſecrated it into a Temple, ſolemnized that Conſecration, endow'd that Temple with a vow and reſolution of all the Minchahs and Nedabahs, acts of obedience and free-will-offerings, duty and piety imaginable; and the whole buſineſs was ſo pleaſurable and acceptable to God, God's appearing to him, and his returns to God, that in the words of my Text (twenty years after that paſſage) God puts him in mind of what there paſs'd and deſires to be no otherwiſe acknowledg'd by him than as he there appeared and revealed himſelf, I am the God of Bethel, &c.

For the clear underſtanding of which, it will be neceſſary to recollect the chief remarkable paſſages that are recorded in that ſtory, and ſeem to be principally refer'd to here; and then I ſhall be able to give you the ſurvey and the full dimenſions of Bethel, the adequate importance of this Text.

And the paſſages are more generally but three.

1. God's ſignal promiſes of mercy and bounty to Jacob, emblematically reſembled by the Ladder from Earth to Heaven, God ſtanding on the top of that, and the Angels buſie on their attendance, aſcending and deſcending on it; and then in plain words the embleme interpreted, the hieroglyphick explained, v. 13, 14, 15. I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Iſaac: the land whereon thou lieſt, to thee will I give it, &c. And thy ſeed ſhall be as the duſt of the earth, &c. And behold (there is the ſignal Promiſe I told you of, that belongs to every Pilgrim Patriarch, every toſs'd itinerant ſervant and favourite of Heaven, that carries the ſimplicity and piety of Jacob along with him, though he be for the preſent, in that other title of his, the poor Syrian ready to periſh) behold I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goeſt, and will bring thee again into this Land: for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have ſpoken to thee of.

The ſecond paſſage is, Jacob's conſecrating of this place of God's appearance, anointing the Pillar, and naming it Bethel, in the 18 and 19. verſes.

The third and laſt is, Jacob's vow unto God on condition of that his bleſſing him, ver. 20. And Jacob vowed a vow, ſaying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, ſo that I come to my Father's houſe in peace, then ſhall the Lord be my God, and this ſtone which I have ſet for a pillar ſhall be God's houſe, and of all that thou ſhalt give me, I will ſurely give the tenth unto thee.

Theſe are the three principal paſſages in that ſtory; and in relation to each of theſe, I am now obliged to handle the words, and conſequently to divide them, not into parts, but conſiderations, and ſo look on them as they ſtand.

Firſt, in relation to God's promiſe there made; and ſo firſt, God is the God of Bethel.

Secondly, in relation to this dreadful, this conſecrated Place, as Bethel ſignifies the reſidence, the houſe of God; and ſo ſecondly, God is the God of Bethel.

Thirdly, in relation to Jacob's vow there made; and ſo thirdly and eſpecially and moſt eminently God is the God of Bethel, as it follows in the verſe, I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointed'ſt a pillar, and vowed'ſt a vow unto me.

I begin firſt with the firſt of theſe, The relation of the words to God's appearing, and making promiſe to Jacob; ſo Ego Deus Bethelis, God is the God of Bethel.

And in that firſt view you will have tender of three ſeverals: I will give you them as they riſe.

1. That God takes a great deal of delight in making, and recounting of promiſes made to his Children: the free omnipotent Donour of all the treaſures of the world, is better pleaſed to behold himſelf our Debtor than our Prince, triumphs more in his punctual fidelity, than his ſuperabundant mercy towards us; he that loves us paſſionately, that once put himſelf into a dropping ſweat in a mere agony of love, pour'd out his heart blood in that paſſion, that delights to do us good, joying more in diſpenſing favours and obligations, than any man living in receiving them, doth yet more affectionately rejoyce and triumph in ſeeing himſelf engaged and obliged to us, in being faithful and juſt, (which relates to his performing his engagements, that which by promiſe he he hath bound himself to do, and so becomes his righteousness, and his payment of dues) then in the honour of being unlimitedly free to pour out acts of all mercy and unexpected bounty, matters of absolute choice whether he will do them or no. In the very story of which this Text is a part, God certainly might have snatched Jacob by what means he pleased, conducted him home to his Country upon that one score of his free mercy, (as well as he may bring his chosen to Heaven merely by acts of free Grace) but you see, he chuses to do it on that other style, as he is the God of Bethel, that ever since the mutual compact betwixt him and Jacob there, hath stood obliged to this poor Syrian, and must deny himself if he be not constant to Jacob. Thus Deut. 7. 9. The Lord thy God he is God: and the only attribute that there he proclaims him in, is that of the faithful God; the faithful, and that further insisted on, which keepeth Covenant and Mercy; first Covenant, and then Mercy: and so Isa. 49. 7. Because of the Lord that is faithful. And how many times is this style repeated in the New Testament, God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above what you are able; and, God is faithful, which will not forget your labour of love, &c. is as exact and punctual in performing Covenants, as strictly accurate in fulfilling of bargains, as the most covetous griping Merchant on earth would require his Chapman to be? And the reason or design of this method of Heaven, the aim of this œconomy, is presently discernible also.

First, to regulate and moderate the expectations and hopes of men, which are apt to be very sanguine and very precipitous, hoping proportionably to God's power, i. e. infinitely, unlimitedly, whatsoever our carnal hearts can aspire to, to have sins pardon'd before they are mortified, to see God without any kind of purifying. Whereas this God of Bethel, that will be look'd upon only as such, must be required to do no more than he hath promised to do; our hopes must be terminated in his revelations of his will, not whatever he may do by his infinite free Power, and Grace, but what he in wisdom hath thought good to promise, as the Rector of the Universe, not as an absolute irrespective Donor; and that is so far from a confinement or restraint, that it is a mighty inhancement of the mercy. His promises being generally conditional promises, and so exacting all manner of sincere honest endeavours towards cleansing, reach out to us, together with the mercy offer'd, an ingagement of that purity and that sanctity, which, if it may be wrought in our hearts, is far the greater blessing of the two, hath more of divine and heavenly treasure in it, than the rescuing out of a fullen Laban's clutches: and so, as 'tis observed of Pomponius Atticus, that by lending to the poor, and requiring payment again of the loan at the day appointed, he did more good than if he had absolutely and freely given, taught them Justice and industry, as well as reliev'd their wants, (and the two former the far richer Donatives;) so God by this course of promises, conditional promises, conditional liberality, gives us duty and piety also into the bargain, all manner of obligations to it; and so is a through Paraclet, an exharter and comforter both, puts Jacob in mind of his vow'd necessary obedience, by the mention of the promises made in Bethel: and that is one prime aim of this method, of God's magnifying himself in this relation.

A second (benefit at least to us, and consequently) aim in God there is, to teach us by this copy, discipline us by this example, that we take care to allow God our proportionable returns, to be as just with God, as punctually faithful in all our promises to him, as forward to put God in mind of what we have obliged our selves to perform to him, as he by proclaiming himself here the God of the Promises in Bethel, and in so many other places, the God of Abraham, i. e. that God that made so many promises to Abraham, (in which all the people of the world are concern'd) hath done unto us. This were an admirable lesson from hence to be transcribed into our hearts, to have our frequent set (weekly or monthly) audits with God, to tell him freely how much we are in his debt: not only to recount those desperate arrears, the sins committed for which we come now for pardon, but especially the obligations enter'd, which we might set our selves bodily to perform, most freely and chearfully commemorating before him, not only the θεῖαι παραγγελίαι & ἱεροὶ νόμοι, the Divine admonitions and holy laws, whisper'd inarticulately in our hearts, which the heathen Porphyry tells of, the obligations that lie upon us as men and creatures, and must be discharg'd by us, if ever we aspire to the dignity of Christians or Saints, πρῶτον δεῖ ἄνθρωπον εἶναι, εἶτα θεόν, we must approve our selves Men first, and then Christians, live a reasonable, before we are ever capable of the Angelical life, (first, that which is natural, and after that which is spiritual;) but also the promises and engagements of an higher indenture, those of the Christian, either that one standing obligation entred at the Font, which must be resolv'd to have a close influence upon every minute of the Age after, or moreover all the many penitential resolutions, all the occasional quarrels against sin, the indignations and vow'd revenges on those boutefeux that have so disturb'd our peace with Heaven. Would we but spend our time in this recounting and discharging of promises and obligations, pay God his plain dues of obedience, that which we are most strictly bound to by the law of Christ, and for which our hands are so many times producible against us, we should not need much to take up our thoughts with the pride or confidence of our free-will oblations, the boasts of our charities and alms toward Heaven: he that would but consider that to be faithful (as in God toward men, so in man toward God) signifies not so much to believe the promises of others, as to perform our own, that the Faith by which the just do live, consists in the paying of our vows to Christ, as well as depending on his blood or promise for Salvation, would endeavour to recover Christianity and Faith to a better reputation in the world than now ordinarily seems to belong to it, would live more justly and more Christianly than he doth. And let that serve for the first part of your prospect, the first observable in the first view.

The second thing from this Title of God's, as it refers to his promises of mercy to Jacob, made in Bethel, and repeated now at his departure from Laban, is this, That God would have us consider the blessings we enjoy, and observe particularly how and whence they descend to us. This is the direct end of this vision to Jacob, ver. 11, 12. Lift up now thy eyes, and see, All the rams, &c. The thriving of that stratagem of Jacob's, the invention of the peeled rods, whereby he was grown so rich, Chap. 30. in despite of Laban's malice, God will have ponderingly considered, and imputed as an act of his special interposition or providence, partly in justice, that the covetous Laban should not too much oppress him,

[I have seen all that Laban doth unto thee] partly to make good his promise at Bethel, made then, and now most particularly perform'd, I am the God of Bethel. And, believe it there is not a duty more necessary, and yet more negligently perform'd, more fruitful, and nutritive of piety, and yet more wretchlesly despised and intermitted, than this; this of observing this Ladder from Heaven to earth, of beholding all the good things that we lawfully enjoy, descending in an Angel's hand, and that fill'd (as the pitcher out of the well, or as Aaron's Son's hands from his Father at the entering on the high Priest's office) from the hand of God standing on the top of the Ladder. He that would thus critically examine his estate upon interrogatories, put every part of it upon the rack and torture, to confess without any disguise from whence it came, whether down the ladder from Heaven, or up out of the deep, (for there, it seems by the Poets, Plutus or Riches hath a residence also) by what means it was convey'd, by whose directions it travell'd into that coast, and what the end of its coming is, and so learn the genealogy, as it were, of all his wealth, would certainly acknowledge that he were fall'n upon a most profitable enquiry. For beside that he would find out all the ill-gotten treasure, (that Gold of Tholouse, that is so sure to help melt all the rest, that which is gotten by sacriledge, by oppression, by extortion, and so take timely advice to purge his lawful inheritance from such noisome, unwholsome acquisitions, and thrive the better for ever after the taking so necessary a purgation) he will, I say, over and above, see the original of all his wealth, all that is worthy to be called such, either immediately or mediately from God: immediately, without any cooperation of ours, as that which is left us by inheritance from honest Parents, (our fortunes and our Christianity together;) mediately, as that which our lawful labour, our planting and watering, hath brought down upon us, wholly from God's καρποφορία or αὐξησία, his prospering or giving of increase. And when we have once thus discern'd the peculiarity of our tenure, only that of allodium, not from any, ἀλλ' ἢ ἀπὸ Διὸς, but from God, (as the Lawyers have derived that word) all that we have held in capite from Heaven; As this will be the sweetning of our wealth to us, give it a flavor or an high taste, whensoever we feed on it, more joy in one well-gotten morsel (the festival of a good Conscience) than all the τραπεζαι or μερίδες, the portions fetcht from the bloudy polluted Heathen idol-Altars ever would afford us; so will it inflame our Souls toward so Royal a benefactor, teach us Piety from our fields and coffers, (as even Aristotle can talk of his εὐτυχία φιλόθεος, that rich men will love God, if for nothing else, yet because he hath done them good turns; and Hippocrates, that though the poor did generally murmure and complain, yet the wealthy would be offering sacrifice) yea and inspire our whole lives with an active vital gratitude, by the use of this wealth to demonstrate and acknowledge whence we have received it, by refunding and imploying it not on our own wayes, our own humours, our own vanities, but as that which God hath convey'd into our hands as into an Ecclesiastick treasury or Corban, a store-house of God's, whence all his poor family is to be victual'd; that which God pours out of Heaven into our hands, being as particularly markt out for charitable, pious, i. e. heavenly uses, as that which by the bounty of men is intrusted to us particularly for those ends, and every rich man as directly and properly a Steward of God's, to feed his household when they want it, and as strictly responsible for this Stewardship, as ever the ἀντιλήπτεις & κυβερνήσεις were, the auxiliary Governments, the Deacons in the ancient Church, ordain'd by the Apostles for that charitable Ministery. You remember the πτωχοδοκεῖον, the poor man's tithing among the Jews every third year, and till that was paid in Deut. 26. 12. and given to the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat within thy gates and be filled, their estates are to be counted profane and unhallowed, no looking for a blessing from God's holy habitation verse 15. He that sacrifices all to his own desires, be they in the eye of the world never so blameless and justifiable, to his own belly, his own back, nay his own bowels, (as his own good nature and not Christian charity suggests to him) he that hath not a month Abib, a green stalk, a first-fruits for Heaven, an effusion of bounty, to consecrate and bless all that is kept for his own necessities, is either very unkind or very imprudent; either sees not from whence he hath receiv'd, and that is Atheistical stupidity; or else never thinks of securing his tenure by the payment of his homage, of making so much as acknowledgment to this God, whose providence hath so wholly enrich'd him, the God of this Bethel in the Text, and that is the unthriftiest piece of ingratitude, the wildest and most irrational ill-husbandry in the world.

The third and last observable in the first view, in order to the promises of Bethel, is this, that our prayers and humble dependence on God, is the means required to actuate God's promises, to bring down his blessings upon us. In Bethel there were ascending Angels, parallel to which must be those two Ambassadours or Nuncio's (i. e. Angels) of every honest Christian heart, before any messages from God, any descending Angels are to be expected thence; and as it was then typified there, so God ever loves and appoints to have it still, I am the God of Bethel: and therefore whatever we want of either outward or inward accomplishments, secular or spiritual good successes, prosperities of Kingdoms or of Souls, would we but look critically into our selves, we should go near to find imputable to the want in us of one or both these ascending Angels; either that the things we would have, we dare not justifie the asking or expecting them from God, because they are such only as we desire to spend on our lusts, and then we have not, because we ask amiss; or else we are so over-hasty in pursuit of them, that we utterly forget the dependance and waiting upon God, the [Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord.] If he be not ready with his Auxiliaries on our first call, deliverance shall come in some other way; the Witch must prevent and supply the Samuel's place, the first creature that will look a little kindly upon us, shall get away all the applications from Heaven, (as in some Countries, whatsoever they chanced to see first every morning, they solemnly worshipp'd all the day after;) the most aiery appearances of relief from the improbablest Coast, shall be able to attract our hopes and trusts, and unbottom us utterly from God, as Socrates is brought in by the Comedian with his [Ὦ δεσπότ' ἀήρ,] a making his addresses to the air or clouds, when he had turn'd out all other worships out of his heart. The thing that makes a worldling such a piteous creature, such a Meteor in Christ's, such an unstable wave of the Sea in St. James's style, tos'd perpetually betwixt ebbs and floats of hopes, (even without the association of any wind to drive him) while the only poor, patient, waiting

Christian,

Christian, that hath sent out his good genius on his message up the Ladder, and waits contentedly and calmly for his return again, is the only fix'd Star in this lower Firmament, his feet stand fast, be the pavement never so slippery, he believeth in the Lord. That Orpheus that in his life-time had made his applications to as many gods as there be days in the year, (and thence perhaps it was that Mexico had so many Temples) grew wiser by more observation, and left in his Will to his sons, that there was but one. 'Twere well if we might do so too, profit by his experience, devest our selves of all our many poetick dependances betimes, and roll our selves wholly upon God; 'twere the only probable thriving policy in the world.

I have detained you too long in the first Isle of this Bethel, that which gives you a view of God's promises there made: I hasten to the second, the atrium interius, to consider God in relation to this dreadful, this consecrated place, as Bethel literally signifies Beth-El, the House, the Temple of God; and so God hath a peculiarity of respect to that, I am the God of Bethel, in the second sense, i. e. the God of God's house.

And here were a copious Theme indeed, should we take a view of the material Bethel, and in it observe,

1. The voluntary institution and dedication of Temples, even before the Law was given to the Jews, (as after it the Encænia or Feast of dedication, being of a more humane original, instituted (as the Feast of Purim, and the Fast of the fifth and seventh month in Zachary) by the Jews themselves, 1 Mac. 4. and not by God's immediate appointment, was yet celebrated, and consequently approved by Christ in the 10. of John;) and after the Jewish Law was laid asleep, yet the building and setting apart of Synagogues, and Oratories, and Upper-rooms; and since Basilica and Κυριακαὶ, (the parallels of the Bethel here) the Palaces of the great King and Lord, appropriate to his publick worship, whenever Persecution did not drive it thence.

2. The vow'd dedication and paiment of Tithes toward the endowing of Bethel; before there was any such thing as Judaism in the world, which therefore 'twere strange that God's subsequent command to the Jews his own people, should make unlawful to a Christian, which otherwise, had he not commanded it, must have been as commendable now, as it was in Jacob.

These, I say, with divers others, are the so many Branches of this second Consideration of these words, of the relation of God to Bethel: But I have not that unkindness to my Auditory as to pursue them with such a shole of unseasonable subjects.

There is another Bethel, the flesh of man, wherein God himself was pleased to inhabit, once, saith St. John, to pitch his Tent or Tabernacle there, to consecrate it into a very Temple; our bodies are the Temples of that holy Ghost, by which Christ was so long ago conceived among us: and thence it is that his eyes and his heart are set so particularly upon this flesh of ours, to cleanse, and to drain, and to spiritualize it, to expostulate with us whenever we put it to any common profane uses, as if we violated and ravished Christ himself, and forcibly joyned him to an Harlot, and at last (if it prove capable of such dignity) to array it in all holiness and glory, to cloath it upon with beauty and with bliss immortal: And so God is the God of this Bethel also.

Beside this, there is yet one more invisible House of God wherein he delights to be inthron'd, and, by God's own confession, Isa. 66. more than either in the Temple of his own building, or the Heaven of his own exalting, even the poor contemptible [this man] for whom no body else hath any kind looks; He that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at his word: this is that lovely dress that is so ravishing in God's eyes, that sets out every Cottage into a Temple, the poorest Peasant into the consecrated delight of Christ, the most abject stones in Luz (once anointed with this grace) into an awful royal Bethel, the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price, πολυτελὲς. God is content to be at a great deal of charge in the purchase of it, to pardon the absence of a great many other excellencies, which may possibly exalt us above measure, so he may acquire but this one desired, beloved meekness instead of all. Let us but possess our selves of this one Jewel, the [meek] in opposition to the proud, the [quiet] in opposition to the tragical or turbulent, murmuring, impatient, Atheistical spirit, and the God of Bethel hath a peculiar propriety to us: he that owns and defends his Temples, that is the refuge of the very Sanctuary it self, and never, but for the pride and insolencies and provocations of his Church, suffers the Philistins to seise on the Ark of his glory, will be a refuge and sanctuary to us; the Angels at Bethel shall become thy guardians, the Cherubim-wings thy over-shadowing, until this tempest, this tyranny be over-past.

I have done with the second view also, as the Bethel here, is the dreadful House of God; though it be not the dread of it that hath made our stay so short there, but only my desire to hasten to my last, as my principally-design'd particular, as Bethel refers to Jacob's vow there made, as it follows in the verse, Where thou vowedst a vow unto me; and God hath a most particular respect and relation to such vows, and so in the chief, though last, place, Ego Deus Bethelis, I am the God of Bethel.

A Vow is a holy Resolution, and somewhat more: The matter of both is the same, a piece of holy valour or courage, entring under God's colours into a constant defiance of all the temptations and affrightments, invitations and terrours in nature: only the bare Resolution hath not the formality of a Vow in it, is not made so immediately and directly to God, with such a particular invocation of him as is required to the formality of a Vow. Yet will not this difference be so great, but that in all reason the good Resolution ought to be allow'd its title of pretension to God's owning, (as he is the God of Bethel) as well as the Vow, i. e. the material as well as the formal Vow; God is a God of all such of either kind. I shall consider them undistinctly: Whether Resolutions or Vows, they are of two sorts; either the general necessary vow or resolution, that God shall be our God, as in the 21. verse of that 28. chapter, And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, &c. then shall the Lord be my God; a vow'd resolution of universal obedience unto God: or whether the matter of it be particularly qualifi'd and restrained to free-will-offerings, things that he was not otherwise bound absolutely to have done, but yet were very fit matter of resolution and vow, especially in such case as this, If God will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat,

eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then this Stone shall be God's House, and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give a tenth unto thee; a free-will-liberality this, the business of this Vow.

We shall look upon these two separately; and, first, on the former kind of them, and shew you how God is the God of such, the near respect and close relation he beareth to them, and that most eminently expresst in three particulars. 1. In approving and applauding the making of them. 2. In prospering them when they are made. 3. In looking after them as his own property and goods, most severely requiring the payment, the performance of them.

For the first sort then, the general necessary resolution or vow that God shall be our God, the solemn ceremonious entring our selves into his family, the giving up our ears to this new Master to be open'd, in the Psalmist's, bored, in Moses phrase, to part from the benefit of all Sabbatical years or Jubilees, to disclaim all desire of manumission, and to become his vow'd servants for ever; this is that great duty of Repentance, or Conversion, or New-birth, that is the sum of all Christianity, that spiritual Proselytism, to which the Jew was wont to be wash'd, as the Christian is baptized, and both to take upon them new names, new kindreds and relations, as if they had entred into the mother's womb again, and come out in new Families, new Countries, born neither of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, i. e. none of the principles of this world, στοιχεῖα κόσμου τούτου, the natural, the carnal, nay, nor the moral virtuous philosophical elements, but of God, of a supernatural, heavenly origination.

In a word, the cordial renouncing of all the impure, scandalous doubtful ways that either our selves or any of the vicious company about us (the Lacedemonian servants that God hath permitted to be drunk and bestial before us, to practise all villanies in our presence, that we might detest and abominate them the more) have at any time formerly been guilty of: such was Job's covenant with the eye, that that should not run its riotous courses over the beauties or wealth of others; such the covenant with the tongue, to break it off its customary oaths and loose language.

It were infinite to number up the several branches of these so necessary resolutions: That this God of Bethel is the God of such, is the thing that we are obliged to demonstrate. And 1. in respect of God's approbation of such resolutions as these. There is no such snare or artifice of taking and obliging God to us, as our dedicating and consecrating our selves to God. If Solomon consecrate a Temple to God, God binds himself to be present there, to hear and hearken, and answer what prayers or supplications soever any sinner shall make toward that Temple. And sure the same privilege belongs to the animate as well as dead Temple, to the Temple of flesh as well as of stone, to the anointed Pillar at Luz, when that turns Bethel, I mean, to the stony heart of man, when by the unction of the Spirit that is mollifi'd and fitted and squared, vow'd and consecrated into an habitation for God, when out of these stones, a child of Abraham, the faithful resolv'd new creature, is raised up. No such good news to Heaven as this; not only approbation, but joy in heaven over one such convert Prodigal: the musick that Pythagoras talks of in the Orbs, was that of the Minstrels which our Saviour mentions at the return of that Prodigal, to solemnize the Euge's, the passionate welcomes of Heaven pour'd out on Penitents.

And if you please, I can do more than the Pythagorean would pretend to, make you auditors of one of those Aires. No sooner doth the poor penitent Votary begin to God in the Psalmist's Note, [Then said I, Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God,] (and let me tell you, could you hear those words in the language that David sang them, there were without a Figure, Rhythm and Harmony, Numbers and Musick in them) but you may presently hear God himself answering in the ἀμοιβαῖον or counter-part, echoing back a Venite, one in Isa. 55. 1. Ho every one that thirsteth, come, &c. another in the Gospel, Christ taking up his part in the Consort, Come unto me all ye, &c. yea, and to make up the Anthem complete, the Third Person comes in also, Revel. 1. 17. The Spirit saith, Come; and after that, all the inferiour Orbs are call'd in to bear their part in the Chorus, The Bride saith, Come: and let him that heareth say, Come, and let him that is a-thirst, Come: and Quicunque vult is the Title of the Hymn that they all joyn in, Whosoever will thus come, (let him be sure of the hospitable reception) Let him take the water of life freely. One signal evidence we have of God's special approbation of such Vows, in Abraham's circumcising himself and posterity: that, you know, was the solemnity of his coming to God, the ceremony of his Proselytism, the Sacrament and Seal of his resolute vow'd obedience unto God, of his renouncing that ἀθέμιτον εἰδωλολατρείαν, those abominable Gentile impurities, the περισσεία κακίας, the unnatural excrescencies of lust, which the rest of his idolatrous Countrey-men had long been guilty of, and which brought that fire and brimstone from heaven before his eyes upon some of them. Abraham it seems resolv'd and vow'd against those heathen abominations, covenanted with God a life of Purity, and to that end a going out of that polluted Country; then seal'd this Covenant to God, (as the custom of the Eastern Nations was in leagues and bargains) seal'd it with blood: and see what an obligation this proves to God, not only to call him and account him a friend of God, to style himself by him, as he doth here by Bethel, I am the God of Abraham, through the whole Book of God; but the obligation goes higher upon God, it prevails so far that he comes down himself, and assumes flesh on purpose to seal back the counterpart of that indenture to Abraham in blood also, and in that, that he is his shield, and an exceeding great reward to all that shall but resemble him to the end of the world, in that faithful coming, that vow'd resolution of obedience to his commands. The short of it is, these resolutions and vows, if they be sincere, not the light transient gleam, the sighs only that we are so ill, or wishes that we were better, but the voluntas firma & rata, the ratified, radicated, firm purpose of new life, even before it grow to that perfection as to bring forth the καρποὺς ἀξίους, the worthy, meet, proportionable fruits of such change, are instantly accepted and rewarded by God, with pardon of sin and justification: and so God is the God of Bethel, hath a particular respect to these vows and resolutions at the very making of them; and that was the first thing.

And so again, secondly, for the prospering them when they are made. He that gives himself up to God, becomes by that act his Pupil, his Client, part of his charge and Family, an Orphan laid at his gates, that he is bound to provide for, engaged by that application (if once accepted) to be his Patron-

Patron-guardian; as among the Romans, he that answers to the κηδεμονικὸν, to the Clients calling him Father, is supposed to adopt, undertakes the protection of the Haredipeta, obliges himself to the office and real duty of a Father. And Remember the story of the Campanians, that could not get any aid from the Romans against a puissant enemy; they solemnly came and deliver'd themselves up into the Romans hands by way of surrender, that by that policy they might oblige the Romans to defend them, and espouse their cause, with a si nostra tueri non vultis, at vestra defendetis, if you will not lend us your help, preserve our region, yet now we are your own, you are obliged to do it, quicquid passuri sumus, deditirii vestri patientur, whatsoever from henceforth we suffer, it will be suffer'd by your Clients and Subjects: and so certainly the resigning our selves up into God's hands, the penitent sober resolution of [The Lord shall be my Lord,] giving our selves up not as Confederates, but Subjects, to be ruled as well as to be aided by him, no such way in the world as that, to engage God's protecting and prospering hand, to extort his care and watchfulness over us. He that comes out but resolutely into the field to fight God's battels against the common Enemy, God and the Angels of Heaven are ready to furnish and fortifie that man. Resolution it self, courage but upon its own score, is able to break through most difficulties, and the want of that, is the betraying of most Souls that come into Satan's power: But then over and above, the prospering influence of Heaven that is still ready to assist such Champions, the χειραία χεὶρ, which the LXX II. puts in into the last verse of the 17. of Exod. the secret invisible hand, by which God will assist the cordial Joshua, and have war against Amalek for ever, fight with him, as long as Joshua fights, the co-operation of the spirit of God with all that set resolutely about such enterprises of valour, his συνεργῶν to our ἐργάζῃ, this is a sure fountain of relief and assistance to such resolutions. Do but try God and your own Souls in this particular, for the vanquishing of any sin that your nature and temper is most inclin'd to. Take but the method of this Text; Come into God's presence, resolve sadly and advisedly in that Bethel, never to yield to that sin again; resolve not only on the end, but the means also that are proper to lead thither; foresee and vow the same resistance to the pleasant bait, that to the barbed hook under it, to the fair temptation, that to the horrid sin it self: and then those weapons that may be useful for the resistance, the fasting and the watching (that are proper to the exorcising that kind of devil) be sure to carry out into the field with thee; and in every motion of the battel let the Moses as well as the Joshuah's hands be held up, the sword of the Lord with that of Gideon, implore and importune that help of God's which hath given thee to will, to resolve, that he will continue his interposition, and give thee to do also, that having begun the good work in thee, he will not lose the pledge, but go on also to perfect it: And whenever thou art next tempted to that sin, recal and remember this resolution of thine, bid that very remembrance of thine stand by on thy guard, and, if you please, by that token that this day I advised you to do so; and withal consider the temptation, that it is an expreß come just from Satan, that sworn enemy of Souls, against which in God's presence the first time thou ever cam'st into the Church, thou didst thus vow and profess open defiance and hostility, that this disguised Fiend shakes a chain in Hell, be his address to thee never so formal, and is now come on purpose to supplant or surprise thy constancy, to see whether thou considerest thy reputation with God or no, whether thou makest scruple of breaking vows and resolutions: and then, in stead of treating with that sin, cry out to God to defend thee against it, either to give strength, or remove the temptation; and deal honestly and sincerely with thine own Soul, betray not those helps that God thus gives thee in this exigence: and then come and tell me how it hath prov'd with thee. In the mean time, till thou hast made this experiment, be not too querulous of thine own weakness or the irresistableness of sin. Believe it, a few such sober trials and practisings upon anger, lust, and the like, and the benefit that would infallibly redound from thence, might bring the ancient Church-order of Episcopal Confirmation into fashion and credit again; which had it but its due ingredients and advantages restored to it, (every single Christian, come to years of knowledge and temptations, in the presence of God and Angels and fellow-Christians repeating that Vow in his own name which was made by his Proxies at the Font, and the blessings of Heaven powerfully called down by those who have a title to the promise of being thus heard) as it would by the way fully satisfie all the pretensions and arguments of the Anabaptist, so would it also be a more probable effectual restraint for sin, than those which have so solemnly decried, or but formally practised, that institution, have taken care to afford us in its stead.

But then, 3. God is a God of resolutions, to exact performance of them. The paultring trifler in this kind hath all the vengeance of the God of Bethel belonging to him, all that pertains to the sacrilegious profaner of that Temple which himself had consecrated, the censure and reward not only of the impious, but the fools; Eccles. 5. 3. When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay; God hath no pleasure in fools: and Prov. 20. 25. It is a snare to a man to devour that which is holy, to profane that heart which is once consecrated to God, and after vows to make enquiry. To doubt of the performing, faulter in the execution of what is thus solemnly resolv'd in God's service, is the fetching the sacrifice from the Altar, and is sure to bring the coal of fire along with it, the perfectest treachery to a Soul that any sacrilegious enterprise can design it. And yet God knows how many such fools there be in the world, that solemnly resolve themselves to his service, come to the Font to make, to the Table of the Lord to repeat these Vows, and all their lives after do but busie themselves to wipe off the water of one, vomit up, disgorge the other; bequeath themselves to Heaven in the presence of Angels, and then repent of the fact, and labour all their lives long to retrive and recover themselves back again: and the Apostle hath given those men their doom, It had been sure better for them not to have known the way of righteousneß, never to have raised an expectation in Heaven that they meant any kindness to it, than thus to cheapen it, and not come to the price of a little perseverance and constancy to go through the purchace. Had they never undertaken God's business, never put in for the title of Friends and Votaries, with a Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest, they had not been perjur'd, though they had been profane: but now the affront is superadded to the crime, the contumely to the impiety, and all the ſpiritual deſertion, with-holding, and with-drawing of grace, and conſequently the ἀδυναμίαν ἀνακαινίζεως the impoſſibility for ſuch to renew or recover themſelves, without ſome prodigy of new bounty from Heaven, (which provokers have little grounds to expect) is directly become their portion.

I have dwelt too long on the Portal to Bethel, the general neceſſary Reſolutions or Vows that are precurſory to thoſe other particularly qualified; I muſt in the laſt place be ſo juſt to the Text and Auditory, as to reſerve a few minutes for thoſe Vows of building and endowing a Houſe for God, which was but a free-will-offering in Jacob, deſign'd by him as a return of acknowledgment for God's care over him, if he ſhall bring him again to his father's houſe in peace: and ſo God hath a peculiar reſpect to ſuch Vows beyond all others, and in that relation, in the laſt place, Ego Deus Bethelis, I am the God of Bethel.

He that hath a long and a doubtful journey before him, a voyage of uncertainty and danger, and conſiders how little he hath of his own to contribute towards his convoy, how nothing but the benign gale from Heaven to waft him ſafely thither, (and ſuch certainly is the condition of ſome of us here at this time) may well be allowed to call in and conſult at Bethel, take directions from old Jacob here, how to ſet out and begin his journey; and that is with vowing a Vow unto the Lord. This, I confeſs, was the main of my errand, which hath been thus prepared for and prefac'd unto you all this while: and there is not a more prudent at once and Chriſtian courſe, that hath more of piety and ſtratagem in it, not a more agreeable, ſeaſonable, proper uſe of the preſent diſtreſs, and an engagement on God to deliver us out of it, than thus to take our ſelves now in the pliable ſeaſon, and indent ſome acts of voluntary piety with Heaven, moſt certainly and ſolemnly to be paid him hereafter, whenever God ſhall ſo be with us as to return us home in peace, to reſtore us thoſe halcyon days after which we are all ſo impatiently gaſping. I ſay not with Jacob literally to build Houſes for God, material Bethels; (to deſign ſuch ſtately Structures in an Age of deſtroying, were but a Romance-project for any of us; nay, bleſſed be God, we need not a Solomon to erect, or Zorobabel to reſtore; a Prop to preſerve from falling will yet ſerve the turn:) but from this bleſſed Copy every emulous, though weak, hand to tranſcribe ſomewhat at the diſtance and in proportion to ſtrength: One to undertake the building one room of ſuch an houſe, a private προσευχὴ or oratory for God; I mean, to vow unto God the ſo many daily cloſe retirements, by confeſſion of ſins and deliverances, to acknowledge in proſtration of Soul (if not of body alſo, to bear it company) the provocations that have whet God's glittering ſword againſt us, (every man the plague of his own heart, the ἰμὸν ἔγκλημα, in the ſtyle of the ancient Liturgies, my fault, my exceeding great fault) and the fatherly goodneſs that ſhall have ſheath'd it again; and never to give over thoſe conſtant returns of devotion (with Daniel, three? nay,) with David, ſeven times a day, to keep ſome poor kind of proportion with ſuch a deliverance: Another, to vow the building a Porch of ſuch an houſe, when God ſhall furniſh him with materials, where the poor may have but a dining place ſometimes; I mean, not the looſe formal ſcattering of the crums of the table among them, but ſequeſtring a ſet, and that a liberal, part of all the revenue that God ſhall ever beſtow, or now reſcue out of the devourer's hand, and provide or preſerve for us, that God in his poor members may have a firſt-fruits, a twentieth, a tenth, a fifth of all; every man out of the good treaſure of his heart, not in obedience to any preſcript quotum, (I ſhall be ſorry to wrong any man ſo much, as ſo to change it from being his perfect free-will-offering) but as out of a heart attracted by Heaven, a liberal, chearful, heaven-like effuſion; the conſtancy and equability of which, yea, and the performing it upon vow or promiſe, will yet be no blemiſh to it, or make it leſs like that of Heaven, of Divinity it ſelf. But among all the Epitome's of this Bethel, the domicilia, little (tents rather than) houſes of God, which we are thus to conſecrate and vow unto him, here was one at Bethel that would never be wanting, never left out in our thriving'ſt ſparing'ſt vows, I mean that pure cryſtal breaſt of Jacob's that God ſo delighted to dwell in, (as he was by the Poet ſuppoſed to do in poor Pyramus's cottage) that plain, honeſt, well-natur'd, undiſguiſed heart both toward men and God, emblematically expreſs'd by thoſe ſmooth hands of Jacob, the fair open Campania of even, clear, unintricated deſigns, far from the Groves and Meanders, the dark depths, the intrigues, the dexterities and ſubtilties and falſeneſſes of the Merchant-worldling. Might but this Judgment that hath prey'd and gnaw'd ſo long upon the bowels of the Kingdom, but pare the heart of the Engliſhman into ſuch a plain equable figure, leave never an angle or involution in it, make us but thoſe direct-dealing honeſt fools that we are reproach'd to be, (but God knows are not guilty of that gracious Jacob-like quality;) might it but have that benign influence upon us here preſent; might it return us home with this one vow in every of our mouths and hearts, to be for the reſt of our lives the Engliſh Nathanaels, the true Iſraelites, in whom there is no guile; might but this laſt minute of my hour make this one impreſſion, I ſhall not hope on a rude multitude, but I ſay on my preſent Auditory, to be content to live and die with down-right honeſt Jacob, thrive or periſh on clear direct Iſraelitiſh principles, (which will, I doubt not, one day have the turn of thriving in this world, when every thing elſe hath the reproach of imprudent and improſperous, as well as unchriſtian, the Dove advanced, when the Serpent is a licking the duſt) and with Druſus in Paterculus, inſtead of the Artificer that would provide for the deep privacy, (that ſævi animi indicium in the Orator) ſend for him that could deſign the diaphanous houſe, wherein there might be all evidence, every man thought fit to behold that, without an optick or perſpective, which will never be diſguiſed or concealed from the eye of Heaven; might we by the help of a faſt Vow now ſtricken, and, with the bleſſing of God, practiſed every hour of our lives after, come home to our Father's houſe, old honeſt Jacob's plain Tent, with peace and ſimplicity, cleanneſs, uncompoundedneſs of ſpirit, (a quality that would be able to commend and improve, Chriſtianize and bleſs that peace to us, and make it like that of God, a true and durable one;) I ſhould then with all chearfulneſs diſmiſs you with old Jacob, into the hands of this God of Bethel, the God of Abraham and of Iſaac and of Jacob, that own'd and bleſſed the ſimplicity and fidelity, the plainneſs and the truſtineſs of thoſe three Patriarchs, before all the glorious wiſdom and politicks of the world: Whoſe ſincerity and whoſe reward, whoſe uprightneſs and acceptation, integrity and crown, God of his infinite mercy grant us all; To whom, with the Son, &c.

THE

THE Neceſſity of the CHRISTIAN's Cleanſing.

The VI. SERMON.

2 COR. VII. 1.

Having therefore theſe promiſes (dearly Beloved) let us cleanſe our ſelves.

THERE is not, I conceive, any piece of Divinity more unluckily miſtaken, more inconveniently corrupted and debauch'd by the paſſions and luſts of men, made more inſtrumental to their fouleſt purpoſes, than that of the Promiſes of Chriſt; whether by giving them the incloſure and monopoly of our Faith, (the Commands of Chriſt and the threats of Chriſt, which have as much right to be believed as they, his Kingly and Prophetick Office, to which he was as particularly anointed as to that of our Prieſt, being for the moſt part ſet aſide as unneceſſary, and by many ſteps and degrees at laſt not only left quite out of our Faith, but withal fall'n under our envy, become matter of quarrel againſt any that ſhall endeavour to obtrude them not only ſo impertinently, but ſo dangerouſly, either on our Goſpel or on our Practice:) or whether again by perſwading our ſelves and others that the Promiſes of Chriſt are particular and abſolute, confined to ſome few, and to thoſe howſoever they be qualified; when the whole harmony and contexture of Chriſtian doctrine proclaims directly the contrary, that they are general and conditional, a Picture that looks every man in the face that comes into the room, but cannot be imagined to eye any man elſe, unreſtrained to all ſo they ſhall perform the condition, and an [ἀποθήκας ταμιεῖα] thoſe diffuſive ſtore-houſes ſeal'd up againſt all who do not perform it.

Shall we therefore have the patience, and the juſtice, and the piety, a while to reſiſt theſe ſtrong prejudices, to reſcue this ſacred Theme from ſuch miſpriſions, to ſet up the Promiſes of Chriſt in ſuch a poſture as may have the ſafeſt and kindeſt influence, the benigneſt and moſt auſpicious aſpect upon our lives, not to ſwell and puff up our fancies any longer, with an opinion, that we are the ſpecial Favorites to whom thoſe Promiſes are unconditionally conſign'd, but to engage and oblige our ſouls to that univerſal cleanſing that may really inſtate us in thoſe Promiſes, either of deliverance here, or ſalvation eternally; that may, like the Angel to St. Peter in Priſon, even to God himſelf, ſhake off thoſe gyves and manacles which have even incumbred his Omnipotence, made it impoſſible for him to make good his Promiſes, temporal or ſpiritual, to ſuch unclean uncapables as we? To this purpoſe there is one ſhort word in the Text which hath a mighty importance in it, the [ταύτας] the [theſe] anext to the Promiſes. What's the interpretation of that you muſt enquire of the cloſe of the former chapter; and that will tell you, that upon coming out from the pollutions and villanies of an impure profane Heathen world, (and ſuch is our unregenerate eſtate, I would I could not ſay, ſuch is the condition of many of us that moſt depend on God's promiſes) on our going out of this tainted Region, our ſtrict ſeparation from all the provoking ſins of it, all the mercies of Heaven and (which ſome have a greater guſt and appetite to) of earth alſo, are become our portion, a moſt liberal hoſpitable reception; I will receive you, and I will be a Father to all ſuch Proſelyte gueſts, and you ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty: as if his Almightineſs, which is here pawn'd for the diſcharge of theſe promiſes, could not bring them down upon us, unleſs by this coming out of Sodom (to which this Angelical exhortation was ſent to rouze us) we ſhould render our ſelves capable of them.

In a word, the Promiſes here, as all other in the Goſpel, are not abſolute, but conditional Promiſes, on condition of cleanſing from all impurity, and not otherwiſe; and if there be in the whole world an engagement to cleanſing, an obligation to the practice of the moſt defamed purity that a profane Age can ſcoff or rail at, this certainly may be allow'd to paſs for it. Having therefore, &c.

The words are an Exhortation to cleanſing, and in them you may pleaſe to obſerve theſe three particulars:

1. The Ground.
2. The Addreſs.
3. The Exhortation it ſelf.

The Ground the fitteſt in the world for this turn when you ſhall conſider it throughly; ἐπαγγελίας ταύτας, theſe Promiſes.

The Addreſs, adding ſomewhat of ſweetneſs to that of rational advice, [Having theſe Promiſes, dearly beloved.]

And the Exhortation it ſelf, in the remainder of the words at large in the whole verſe. We ſhall content our ſelves with the contraction of it, καθαρίζωμεν ἑαυτούς, let us cleanſe our ſelves.

I begin with the firſt, The ground or foundation of the Apoſtle's exhortatory to cleanſing, ἐπαγγελίας ταύτας, theſe promiſes.

1. Promiſes.
2. And particularly, conditional Promiſes.

And yet 3*ly*, more particularly, the conditional Promiſes of this Text, the [theſe Promiſes] as they are ſet down in the end of the former Chapter, are the moſt competent, moſt ingaging, effectual arguments or impellents to ſet any Chriſtian upon the work of Chriſtian practice, that eſpecially of impartial univerſal cleanſing.

'Twill be beſt demonſtrated if we take them aſunder, and view them in the ſeveral gradations.

1. Promiſes are a very competent argument to that purpoſe, a bait to the moſt generous paſſion about us, our emulation or ambition, drawing us with the cords of a Man, the moſt rational maſculine allectives, I ſhall add, (to an ingenuous Chriſtian man, as that ſignifies neither Saint in Heaven, nor Beaſt on Earth, but that middle imperfect ſtate of a Chriſtian here) the moſt agreeable proper argument imaginable to ſet us a cleanſing.

Two other arguments there are, both very conſiderable, I confeſs.

1. The Love (in the Moraliſt of Vertue, but in the Chriſtian) of God himſelf; and that Love, if it be gotten into our hearts, will be very effectual toward this end; the love of God conſtrains us, ſaith the Apoſtle.

2. The Fear of thoſe threats, thoſe formidable denunciations which the Goſpel thunders out againſt all unmortified carnal men, that horrid repreſentation of our even Chriſtians God, as he is ſtill under the Goſpel, (to all unreform'd, obdurate ſinners) a conſuming fire; and conſequently, what a direful thing it is to fall into the hands of that living God: and knowing theſe terrors of the Lord we perſwade men, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle. There is ſome rouzing oratory, ſome awakening rhetorick and eloquence in this alſo. And let me tell you, though it be but by the way, that I am not altogether of their opinion, that think theſe terrors of the Lord, are not fit arguments to work on regenerate men; that fear is too ſlaviſh a thing to remain in a Child of light, a Chriſtian. I confeſs my ſelf ſufficiently perſwaded that our Apoſtle made choice of no arguments, but ſuch as were fit to be made uſe of by Chriſtians, and thoſe terrors are more than once his choſen arguments, even to thoſe that had received the Kingdom that cannot be moved, Heb. 12. 28. and are exhorted χάριν ἔχειν, to have grace, to make uſe of that precious talent received, (which ſuppoſes a gracious perſon) or poſſibly χάριν ἔχειν, to be thankful to this munificent Donour for this ineſtimable gift, yea, and this duty raiſed to the higheſt pitch that a Chriſtian is capable of, to ſerving God εὐαρέστως, whether that refer to the perſons, and ſignifie ſerving with all chearfulneſs and alacrity and well-pleaſedneſs, or to God, as we render it, ſerving him acceptably with reverence and godly fear; you have ſtill in this Apoſtle theſe terrors immediately annex'd to inforce this duty, for our God is a conſuming fire. And ſo again you cannot but remember the advice of working, and working out ſalvation, and emphatically our own ſalvation, with fear and trembling; not only with love and faith, but peculiarly fear and trembling, this trembling fit enough to accompany the Saint to Heaven gates, to Salvation it ſelf: and therefore the ἀφόβως, without fear, in the 1. of Luke, which we ordinarily joyn with the λατρεύειν, as if we were thereby obliged to ſerve him without fear, is in ancient Copies and Editions joyn'd with the ῥυσθέντας, that we being delivered without fear, (i. e. without danger) might ſerve him in holineſs, &c. And ſo I think 'tis a little clear, that the fear which is ſo caſt out by perfect love, that, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 John 4. 18. there is no fear in love, is not the fear of God's wrath, but of temporal dangers and perſecutions: For ſo that love to Chriſt, if it be perfect, ſuch as Chriſt's was to us, Chap. 3. 16. (and is referred to again, Chap. 4. 17. that as he is, ſo we ſhould be in this world) will make us content to adventure any thing for the beloved, even death it ſelf, the moſt hugely vaſt formidable, (as 'tis there, τὰς ψυχὰς τιθέναι, to lay down our lives for Chriſt;) but ſure not the diſpleaſing of God, and torments of Hell; that were too prodigal an Alms, too wild a Romance valour, would have too much of the modern point of honour for St. John to preſcribe, and ſo certainly is but miſ-applied to this buſineſs. And ſo ſtill I cannot but think it wiſdom and ſober piety in him that ſaid, He would not leave his part in Hell (the benefit which he had from theſe terrors) for all the goods of this world; knowing how uſeful the fleſh of the Viper was to cure his poiſon, the torments to check the temptations, the apprehenſion of the Calenture that attended to reſtrain from the pleaſant but forbidden fruits, that were always a ſoliciting his ſenſes: and ſhe that ran about the City (that Novarnius tells us of) with the brand of fire in one hand, and a bottle of water in the other, and ſaid, Her buſineß was to ſet Heaven on fire with the one, and quench Hell-flames with the other, that there might be neither of them left, only pure love to God to move or incite her piety, had certainly a little of the flatus thus to drive her, her ſpleen was ſomewhat ſwoln, or diſtemper'd, or, if one may gueſs by her appearing in the ſtreet, ſhe was a little too wild and aereal in her piety. But this by the way, as a conceſſion that there is (not only Love, but) Fear alſo that may ſet men a cleanſing, as well as the Promiſes in the Text; the denuntiation of Puniſhments is as conſiderable an act of Chriſt's Kingly office, whereby he is to rule in our hearts by faith, as that of propoſing Rewards, that other act of Regality, Rom. 13. And the truth is, all's little enough to impreſs the duty: and happy is he that hath this threefold cord, this threefold obligation, paternal, and both kinds of regal, each actually in force upon his Soul; and eternally happy, if either or all may effectually perform the work on him.

But then ſtill, if we obſerve diſtinguiſhingly, and exactly apply and proportion the arguments to the imperfect Chriſtian ſtate, you ſhall find that Promiſes are the moſt proper, congruous, agreeable argument, moſt apt and hopeful to do the deed, to have the impreſſion upon the heart.

Fear is an argument, but to an ingenuous nature not altogether ſo appropriate.

Hope, the relative to Promiſes, is more generous than that, more noble, more worthy of the Chriſtian's breaſt, a perſon of ſo royal an extraction.

On the other ſide, the Love of God, (for his own ſake) Love of his attributes and excellencies, that admirable, dazling, amazing beauty of his Divine Eſſence, O! 'tis a warming grace, infinitely melting and raviſhing to thoſe that have their hearts truly poſſeſs'd with it.

But

But is not this, again, a little above the proportion of the imperfect, inchoate, very moderate ſtate of the Chriſtian in this life? is it not a little more proportionable to that of the future viſion? The Chriſtian, you know, here is made up of two Contraries, the fleſh and ſpirit, ἐν συναμφοῖν, combind'd and yok'd together; and as the Fear may be too degenerous for the ſpirit, ſo the Love of ſo tranſcendent a ſpiritual object, will be far too elevated and generous for the fleſh, 'tis not capable of ſo pure, Angelical a gueſt.

This of Hope is of a middle temper, and ſo a little more congruous and apportion'd to the middle ſtate, more ingenuous than Fear, and not ſo elevated as Love. Let Hell be ſet open wide upon us on one ſide, and it is apt to ſwallow us up with horrour and deſpair, and ſo that Fear may miſcarry and ruin us: Let the tranſcendent Excellencies of God be let looſe on us on the other ſide, and they ſwallow us up again in ecſtaſie and amazement. When our Saviour comes into Peter's Ship, clothed but with one ray of this infinite beauty, (the gracious miracle of the fiſh) poor creature! he falls down at Jeſus's feet with a [depart from me, for I am a ſinful man:] and the Text gives the reaſon, For he was aſtoniſhed at ſuch a preſence of his. And you know what Moſes thought of ſeeing God's face, ut videam & vivam! he ſhould be never able to out-live it. And as the beholding and the preſence, ſo the high pitch of Love let in by that beholding, faſten'd on the divine luſtre, 'tis moſt-what too high for our earthly ſtate, even for the regenerate Chriſtian in this life. The beholding him in the reflexion and the dark beholding is that which in the Apoſtles judgment is the richeſt portion we can aſpire to in this life; and that is the beholding him in his graces and in his promiſes, as Hope is but a glimpſe of Viſion: and thus we chearfully, and with delight to our very fleſh, expect that glory which ſhall be reveal'd; not which is revealed already, or if it were, would burn up and calcine this fleſh of ours, turn the natural into a ſpiritual body, could not conſiſt with ſuch temper'd or conſtituted Tabernacles as now we carry about with us. And let that ſerve for the clearing the firſt ſtep in the gradation, that Promiſes are a fit and proper argument to work upon our preſent ſtate, to ſet us a purifying.

And, O that this might be our uſe of Promiſes! no flattering our ſelves into Hell with a claim of Heaven, but as a crane or engine to raiſe us from the depth, fetch us from the lees of ſin, and, like the Sun-beams on this earth of ours, to attract and force us up toward its region of purity; that as the Philoſopher in Eunapius was taller in his ſtudy, in time of ſpeculation, than at any other time, ſo this meditation and ſtudy of this part of the Book of life, the Promiſes of Chriſt, might be able to raiſe us above our ordinary pitch or ſtature, to rarifie, and ſo to cleanſe. Having therefore theſe Promiſes, let, &c.

2. Of all Promiſes the conditional are fitteſt for this turn, to oblige and engage us to purifying. 'Tis the property of conditional Promiſes, never to belong to any but thoſe that perform the condition. That which Chriſt requires of us in the great Indenture between him and us, as the homage to be perform'd to him on our part, be it never ſo ſlight and inconſiderable, never ſo deſpicable a pepper-corn, ſo pitifully unproportionable to the great rent he might require, or to the infinite treaſure of glory that he ſo makes over to us, that mite of obedience, of faith, of love, of purity, is yet moſt ſtrictly required by Chriſt, even now (under the ἐπιείκεια of the Goſpel) to be performed to him. The mercy and the pardon and the huge moderation of that Court, though it hath mollified the ſtrict Law into never ſo much Chancery, will not proceed further, and mollifie obedience into libertiniſm: It hath treaſures of mercy for thoſe who have not obeyed the Law in the ſtrictneſs of perfect un-ſinning obedience; the Evangelical righteouſneſs ſhall ſerve turn where the Legal is not to be had: but then ſtill there muſt be honeſt punctual payment of the Evangelical; and without that, the Goſpel is ſo far from being Goſpel, meſſage of mercy, embaſſie of Promiſes, that it is but an enhancement and accumulation of much ſorer puniſhments on them that have ſinn'd againſt that, that have not obeyed the Goſpel of Chriſt. Our Saviour hath brought down the market, provided as eaſie bargains of bliſs for us as could be imagin'd; but this being granted, you muſt not now fancie another farther ſecond Saviour, that muſt rid you of theſe eaſie gainful tasks, which the firſt in meer kindneſs and benignity to you, hath required of you.

Be Heaven and the viſion of God never ſo cheap a purchaſe, yet the νόμος πίστεως, the Law of Faith, of Goſpel, is as that of the Medes and Perſians, that no unclean thing ſhall enter therein; and that without holineſs (ἁγιασμὸς, all one with the καθαρισμὸς in the Text) without that ſincere, though never ſo imperfect, ſanctification, without cleanſing, mortifying here, no man ſhall ever ſee the Lord. Should any boiſterous, unclean, unqualified invader, βιάζειν ὕραν, break in on thoſe ſacred manſions, commit ſuch riots, ſuch burglary upon Heaven. Heaven muſt be unconſecrated by ſuch violence, ceaſe to be the Palace of God, a place of purity, or of bliſs. And if this be not an argument fit to impreſs this duty, the neceſſity, but withal the eaſe, of the performance, the no Heaven without it hereafter, and yet the no grievance by it here, if this be not an obligation to cleanſing, I know not what may be counted ſuch. He that hath taken down all the Promiſes of the Goſpel, as abſolute, unconditionate Promiſes, that ſees his name written indeleble in the Book of life, I know not through what tube or perſpective, and reſolves that all the provocations and ſacriledges and rebellions againſt Heaven, ſhall never be able to reſiſt his Nativity, to diſturb his horoſcope, to reverſe his fatal deſtin'd bliſs, may well be excuſed, if he be not over-haſty to cleanſe or purifie.

'Tis an act of the moſt admirable power of the divine reſtraining, or preventing grace, that ſome men that do thus believe this doctrine of unconditional Promiſes, are yet reſtrain'd from making this ſo natural uſe of it, from running into all the riots in the world.

And certainly, 'tis as irrefragable a convincing teſtimony of man's free will to evil, even after his Reaſon and the Spirit of God have offer'd him never ſo many arguments to the contrary, that many men which believe the conditionate Promiſes, do not yet ſet reſolutely a cleanſing, the obligation hereto from Reaſon being ſo direct and concluſive, that all the Devils in Hell cannot anſwer the force of it. Only our ſtupid, undiſciplin'd, abſurd, illogical hearts have the skill to avoid it, running headlong and wilfully after the old impurities, even then when they are moſt fully without all dubibitancy reſolv'd, that all the joys of Heaven are forfeited by this choice.

I have done with the ſecond ſtep in my gradation, the ſpecial convincing energy of the conditional promiſes to enforce cleanſing.

Come

Come we now to the third and laſt ſtep in the gradation, the particularity of the [theſe conditional promiſes] in this Text, Promiſes of God's receiving us upon our ſeparating, his being our Father, and we His Sons and Daughters, upon our coming out, &c. in the end of the former chapter.

God will not receive any uncleanſed, polluted ſinner, will not be a Father to any, be he never ſo importunate or confident in his κράζειν ἀββᾶ, will not own him to any degree of Sonſhip that doth not bodily ſet a purifying.

'Twas a virulent objection and accuſation of the Heathen Celſus againſt Chriſt, that he called all Sinners to come unto him, Publicans, Harlots, all, and had an hoſpitable reception for ſuch; from whence his ignorance and malice was willing to conclude Chriſt's Church to be a Sanctuary for ſuch uncleanneſſes, a kind of Romulus's Aſylum, to be filled only with thoſe Inhabitants which all other Religions had loath'd and vomited out. And 'twas Zoſimus's deſcant upon Conſtantine, that he turn'd Chriſtian, becauſe he had committed thoſe crimes for which no other Religion would admit expiation. But Origen in his admirable Writings againſt that Heathen's objections makes a diſtinction of Invitations; There is, ſaith he, the invitation of the Thief, and the invitation of the Phyſician: of the Thief, to get as many Companions; of the Phyſician, as many Patients as he can: the firſt to debauch the innocent, the ſecond to recall the laps'd, to cure the diſeaſed; the former to continue and confirm them in their former impure courſes, the latter to purge out and to reform all their impurities. And the latter only was the interpretation and deſign of Chriſt's call, [that of ſinners to repentance] the very language in this Text, the Come out and be ye ſeparate, and touch not the unclean thing. And ſo Chriſtianity in Zoſimus's ſtyle, but another ſenſe than what he deſign'd it, is δόξα πάσης ἁμαρτάδος ἀναιρετικὴ, the ſtrongeſt purgative in the world, the Angel a haſtening and leading out of Sodom with an eſcape, fly for thy life, neither ſtay thou in all the plains; and then, and not till then, κἀγὼ ἰσοδόξομαι ὑμᾶς, and I will receive you.

And ſo ſtill the peculiarity of theſe promiſes, theſe of our being ſons, or our being received, hath a moſt perſwaſive quickening force toward the duty of purifying. Will any man be content to be that abject from God, that loathed, refuſe, reprobated creature, ſuch an one that all the prayers of all the Saints on earth, interceſſions and ſuffrages of Martyrs and Angels in heaven, yea, the very gaping wounds and vocal bloud of Chriſt upon the Croſs, I ſhall add, the minutely advocation and interceſſion of that glorified Saviour at the right hand of his Father, cannot help to any tolerable reception at God's hands? Can you have fortifi'd your ſelf ſufficiently againſt that direful voice of the Go ye Curſed into everlaſting fire; and not only not God, but not the ſo-much-as mountains or hills willing or able to receive you into any tolerable degree of mercy, not one Lazarus with one drop to cool the tip of a flaming tongue, but only the gaping inſatiable pit, that irreverſible abyſs of pollutions and of horror, that region of curſings and torments, of ſin and flames, the only hoſpital to receive thee? If thou canſt think comfortably of this condition, be well pleaſed to venture all this for the inlarging of thy carnal fruitions one minute longer, and withall diſclaim the whole birthright of thy Chriſtendom, the dignity and inheritance of ſons and daughters of the Lord Almighty; if thou doſt not repent of thy long, tedious, prodigal march into the Ægyptian far Country only to accompany with Swine, and be fed with their κεράτια, to which the advantages of ſin are compared, (that wooden, unhealthy fruit of the Carobe, or arbor Ceratonia, as Dioſcordies and Pliny deſcribe that which we render huſks in the Goſpel ;) if, I ſay, we can upon deliberation prefer this ſtarving and pining in the Herd, before feaſting and being embraced in the Father's houſe, this portion of Swine before that of Sons, we have then a ſufficient fortification againſt this argument in this Text, a ſerious ſuperſedeas for purifying: but upon no cheaper condition than this, can it be ſued out; you muſt give your ſelves up to the certain fire and brimſtone of Sodom, if you will ſtill continue in the impurities and burnings of Sodom; not the leaſt gleam of hopes upon any terms but thoſe of purifying; Whoſoever hath this hope on him, the this, that is, the conditional hope of ſeeing there, or here of being received by God, if it be ἐλπὶς ἐπ' αὐτῷ, hope on God, he purifies himſelf, ſaith St. John. If he do not purifie, 'tis either,

1. Not ſo much as ἐλπὶς, abſolute throwing off, diſclaiming all hope, perfect fury and deſpair; or, if he have any hopeful thought about him, 'tis

2. None of the ἐλπὶς ἄυτη, none of the rationable, grounded, conditional, but a flattering, fallacious, foundationleſs, becauſe unconditionate, hope, which the bigger it ſwells the more dangerous it proves; an Apoſteme or Tympany of hope, made up either of air or putrid humor: and then ᾗ πλέον ἐλπίζουσι, ταύτῃ μᾶλλον κακῶς ἔχουσι, like the conſumptive Patient, the more he hopes the farther he is gone, the more deeply deſperate is his condition.

Or, 3. no ἐλπὶς ἐπ' αὐτῷ, hope on him, on God: 'Tis a dependance on ſome fatal chain, (ſome Necromantick trick, of believing thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thou ſhalt be ſaved) nay, on Satan himſelf, ſome reſponſe from his Oracle, that ἐγκαθείμυθος, that wizard fleſh within us, that hath thus bewitch'd us to its falſe pleaſures firſt, and then its fallacious hopes, the fatall'ſt, horrid'ſt condition in the world: you may excuſe the Preacher and the Apoſtle, if it carry them both into a kind of πάθος, an out-cry of love, and pity, and deſire, to prevent this unremediable ruine to which thou art poſting, to catch thee when thou art nodding thus dangerouſly, with a moſt affectionate, compaſſionate compellation of a [dearly beloved] let us cleanſe. Which brings me to the ſecond General, the Addreſs, adding ſomewhat of earneſtneſs and ſomewhat of ſweetneſs to the Exhortation, Having therefore theſe Promiſes, dearly beloved.

The Exhortation to purifying, reforming, mortifying of ſins, is an effect and expreſſion of the greateſt kindneſs, ſincereſt love, and tendereſt affection imaginable. You ſhall ſee this exemplified by the moſt earneſt Lover that ever was in the world. Will you believe the holy Ghoſt? Greater love than this hath no man ſhewed, than to lay down his life for his friend. Now our Saviour you know, laid down his life (ſomewhat more than the life of a mere man, the life of the θεάνθρωπος, that divine celeſtial Perſon) on purpoſe to fetch back this divine, but ſcorn'd, Purity into the world again: He gave himſelf for us, ſaith St. Paul, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, Tit. 2. laid down his life for that only prize to which which the Apoſtle here exhorts, this of purifying. You ſhall ſee it again, Act. 3. ult. God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs us, in turning every one from his iniquities: This turning from iniquities, the purifying in the Text, was the prime end and deſign of Chriſt's coming into the world, of all his glorious Offices, and the exerciſes of them, and that the moſt bleſſed work of mercy that could ever be meant to polluted Souls; this turning is there the interpretation of his bleſſing of us, [to bleſs us in turning, &c.] 'Twere ſuperfluous farther to aſſiſt this truth, in ſhewing you what an act of benefaction and mercy, of charity and real bleſſing it is, to contribute in any the ſmalleſt manner to the mortifying of any ſin in any: 'tis the reſcuing him from the moſt noiſome, miſerable, putrefied, piteous condition in the world. The plagues of Ægypt, the Frogs, and Flies, and Lice, and Locuſts of Ægypt, and the Murren, and Death of the firſt-born, were but the imperfect emblems of theſe unclean hated Vermin in the Soul, that devour all the fruit and corn of the land, all the Chriſtian vertues and graces, deſpoil and depopulate all that is precious or valuable in it; and then what proud Pharaoh would not fall on his knees to Moſes, to make uſe of his power with Heaven, to deliver him from ſuch plagues as theſe?

And yet to ſee how quite contrary 'tis order'd in the world: God is fain to ſend ſuppliants to us, that we will but be content to part with an impurity, that we will but endure ſo huge a bleſſedneſs. You know we are Embaſſadors for Chriſt, and what's the nature of an Embaſſage? why, ſetting up this impure unmortifi'd ſinner in a throne, (to have an Embaſſie addreſs'd to him, is an argument of a Prince) and not only men, but God himſelf, as it were, proſtrate before his foot-ſtool, the King of Heaven to this proud reigning ſinner on earth, to beſeech him but to part with theſe weapons of his hoſtility againſt God, theſe provoking impurities; as though God did beſeech you by us, (God himſelf becomes the ſuppliant, and then we Miniſters may very well be content with the imployment) we pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, be ye reconciled unto God. Thus through the whole Book of Canticles, is the beloved Husband of his Church moſt paſſionately a wooing her to this duty, to this opening to him, giving him an admiſſion, all upon this ſcore, that he might come in to bleſs and purifie; and O what Rhetorick is beſtowed on her! far beyond the [dearly beloved] in this Text, Open to me, my love, my dove, my undefiled, my fair one: he calls her fair and undefiled on purpoſe that he may make her ſuch: and O that we had but that Saviour-like paſſion, that bleſſing kindneſs to our own poor periſhing Souls, ſome of thoſe bowels of love to our own bowels! That we have not, is the greateſt defect of ſelf-love, the moſt contrary ſin againſt our grand fundamental principle, that of Self-preſervation, (which can combine with the devil for the undermining and ruining and ſubverting of whole Kingdoms, on that one commanding deſign of getting off the croſs from off our one ſhoulders, on whomſoever it be laid, but cannot think fit to aſſiſt Heaven in purging out one refuſe impurity out of the Soul.) Yet ſhall I not on ſuch diſcouragements give it over as a forlorn impoſſible hope, but proceed one Stage farther on this errand, to the laſt General, the Exhortation it ſelf, καθαρίζωμεν ἑαυτὸς, &c. Let us cleanſe our ſelves: 1. Cleanſe, 2. our ſelves, 3. us our ſelves: the verb is active, the pronoun reciprocal, and the verb and pronoun both plural. And ſo, beſide the duty it ſelf of cleanſing, two Circumſtances of this duty we muſt learn from hence; namely, 2. That it is the Chriſtian's task upon himſelf, this of purifying: then, 3. That it ought to be the common united deſign of all Chriſtians, the Apoſtle and people together, to aſſiſt one another in this work, this of purifying.

For the firſt, the duty it ſelf, καθαρίζωμεν, cleanſe. This is not the actual acquiring, but the motion and proficiency and tendency toward Purity.

And ſo there again you have two things:

1. What this Purity is;
2. What this motion toward Purity.

The Purity is of two ſorts; the firſt oppoſed to filth, the ſecond to mixture: as the Wine is pure, both when 'tis fetch'd off from the lees and dregs, and when 'tis not mingled with water. In the firſt notion, the purifying here, is the purging out of carnality; in the ſecond, of hypocriſie: the firſt is the clean heart in David; the ſecond, the right or ſincere, ſingle or ſimple ſpirit: the firſt, from the filthineſs of the fleſh; the ſecond, of the ſpirit: and you will never be proſperous Alchymiſts, never get the Philoſopher's ſtone, never acquire the grand Chriſtian hope, if you miſcarry in either of theſe.

The firſt kind of Purity again, that of the fleſh, is two-fold, proportionable to the two fountains and ſources of carnality, ἐπιθυμία and θυμὸς, luſt and rage, that κακίστη συνωρὶς, infernal pair, that hath ſo undermined the peace of Souls and Kingdoms.

Luſt, the common parent both to all fleſhly and all worldly deſire, to the luſt of the fleſh and the luſt of the eye: the luſt of the fleſh again, either the warm, or the moiſt carnality, the burnings of the incontinent, or the thirſts of the luxurious; that deluge of fire and water, that had and ſhall have the honour to divide betwixt them the firſt and ſecond ruine of the world. And for the luſt of the eye, that cold drie piece of ſenſuality, that ſtrange kind of Epicuriſm, that mad raving paſſion after Stones and Minerals, the deifying of that forlorn Element, which, ſaith Ariſtotle, μόνη κρίσιν οὐκ ἔσχηκε, could never get any Advocate to plead for it, that which ſtruck Moſes into ſuch a paſſion, Theſe people have committed a great ſin, have made them gods of gold; This love of the world and things of the world, extravagant deſire, hot purſuit of ſuch cold embraces, (like the Embalmers in Herodotus, that had flames toward the chill'd earth, the Carkaſſes before them) this drie juiceleſs ſin, is yet able to pollute and defame the Soul, as earth, you know, is as apt to foul and ſully as any thing; covetouſneſs is as irreconcilable with purity, as incontinence and intemperance, and all with the ἐπαγγελίας ταύτας, the theſe Promiſes in the Text.

So, in the ſecond place, for that of Rage, 'tis a fruitful teeming mother, which contains all the more ſublimate kinds of carnality, pride, and ambition, and all the generation of thoſe vipers, Gal. 5. 20. Hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, ſtrife, ſeditions, hereſies, envyings, murthers, and the like, all prime works of the fleſh, verſe 19. though ſomewhat more volatile and aerial, i. e. have more of Satan and Lucifer in them than the other. Even he that but ſides in Religion, that makes that band of all charity and humility, an engine of faction or pride, that ſaith, I am of Paul, &c. is he not carnal? 1 Cor. 3. 4. the moſt undoubted carnality in the world. A multitude of ſins there are under this one head, able to beſpot a Man, a Nation, into a Leopard; and thoſe ſpots are far from being the ſpots of ſons, reconcilable with the promiſes of this Text. But above all, one that pollutes in grain, that crimſon die, the guilt of Bloud, in which thoſe Souls that are roll'd (as every malicious, unpeaceable ſpirit certainly is, though he never had the courage to ſhed any) look ſo direful in God's ſight, that in compariſon with them, the mire and mud of the baſeſt Swine may paſs for a tolerable beauty; the bloud of men, ſaith Pſellus, yielding a fume or nidour that the Devils (and ſure none, but of their complexion and diet) are fed and fatten'd with: and Maimonides to the ſame purpoſe, that 'tis the food of Devils; that he that can feed on it, is a gueſt עכו"ם שלחן השרים at the table of Devils, and literally guilty of that which St. Paul mentions ſo ſadly, 1 Cor. 10. 20. I would not that ye ſhould have fellowſhip with Devils, partake of that Cyclops feaſt prepar'd, like Hell, peculiarly for the Devil and his Angels, (thoſe great Abaddons and Apollyons) and cannot without injury and riot be ſnatch'd out of his hands, be ſwill'd and wallowed in by us; thoſe θυέστεια δεῖπνα, (that were ſo ſcandalouſly charg'd on the Primitive Chriſtians, and coſt Juſtin Martyr and Athenagoras ſuch Apologies) their feaſting on one another's fleſh: which charge ſhould it be now reſumed and brought in by Turks or Indians againſt us Proteſtants, (as they ſay it is, but certainly will be, when it is told in Gath and Askalon) Good God! what ſhould we do for an Apologiſt?

Come we then in the laſt place to the laſt degree of Purity, that which excludes Hypocriſie or mixture, the ſin which hath ſo died this Nation, given it an heir-apparency to all the Phariſees woes. Not only that Notion of Hypocriſie which in our ordinary ſpeech hath ingroſs'd the title, the vain-glorious publiſhing all our own acts of piety: O! that is but a puny degree of this ſin; I know not whether I ſhould not do well to give it ſome good words in compariſon to its contrary, the deſiring to appear more impure, more impious than we are, (that groſs, confident, bold-fac'd devil, the far more dangerous of the two:) But, I ſay, the other more ſecret nice hypocriſie, the falſeneſs to God, taking in rivals into the heart, the partial, halting, mutilate obedience, that which keeps a reſerve for Satan, for Mammon, for my ſelf, when all ſhould be given up to God; but above all, that yet profounder piece, the Ægyptian Temple, a moſt glorious Fabrick moſt pitiouſly inhabited, nothing but Cats and Crocodiles within in ſtead of Gods; that of the painted Sepulchre, the noiſome, poyſonous ſecrecie under the loveliеſt diſguiſe, the Vault or Charnel-houſe of rottenneſs, of all the impurity in the world, (the deep-digg'd Golgotha and Aceldama) under the faireſt and moſt inviting inſcription; that Hiſtrionical piece of the Beaſts Tragedy, the couchaut, but ravening, Wolves under the Sheep's cloathing, the God brought in for the baſeſt ſervices, the impureſt contrivances in the world, and never pretended to, or thought on, till we had thoſe vile imployments for him: And this you will acknowledge ſufficiently inconſiſtent with the purifying in this Text, and ſo with the [theſe Promiſes.]

Having given you the ſeverals of this Purity by the contrary branches of the Impurity, we come now to the [καθαρίζειν,] the notion of cleanſing or purifying, that is here ſo vehemently required of us: And that is not the having acquired this purity, having attained any perfection of this ſtate in either kind; but only the being on the way, the conſtant motion and growth, a ſetting out, and progreſs and proficiency in it, a daily purging and rinſing of the Soul, that good innocent kind of ἡμεροβαπτισμός, that pardonable Phariſaiſm of aſſiduous waſhings; a daily ſlaughtering of the great defilers one after another, one day of execution for Luſt, another for Rage; one for the impurities of the Tongue, the oathes, the lies, the profanations, the blaſphemies, the noiſome unſavoury diſcourſes, (Bleſſed Lord, that this might but be the day of demoliſhing that Babel of ſtrange heathen languages, the leaſt degree of which is intolerable among Chriſtians!) another for the impurities of the Eye, and a whole Ocean of purgations little enough for that; but above all, an every-day care for the drying up the great fountain of Leproſie in the Heart. In a word, a firm ratifi'd reſolution of mortifying and crucifying, a devoting and conſecrating all, and making as much ſpeed with them as we can. To that end, though the perfect Purity be not acquired, yet muſt theſe three eſſaies be made toward it, theſe three degrees of aſcent and proficiency obſerv'd:

1. Barring up the inlets, obſtructing the avenues againſt all future breakings in of the great polluters, the reſiſting all freſh temptations, (by the remembrance how dear they have formerly coſt our Souls, what flouds of tears, if we have done our duty, what a whole ſhop of purgatives to get out one ſpot ſo contracted) but eſpecially, ſtopping the recurrence of the old profane polluted habits, that ὡς ἐπὶ βόρβορον, the cleanſed ſwine returned to her old beloved wallowing again.

2. Our daily, minutely recourſe to that digitus Dei, finger of God, which alone, ſay the Jews, can cleanſe Lepers, with a Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make us clean; thou canſt prepare new Jordans of Grace beyond all our Rivers of Damaſcus, new banks, new treaſures of Purity.

And then, 3. taking the ſeaſonable advice of the Syrian ſervants, going down and waſhing in that Jordan, acting upon our ſelves by the power of this grace, thus fitly co-operating with God to the utmoſt of our derivative ſtrength; not lying like Creeples on the bank when we have a Bethesda before us, which yet will cleanſe none but thoſe that go into it. And that brings me to the former of the two circumſtances (belonging to this duty) denoted by the ἑαυτοὺς, cleanſe our ſelves, That it is the Chriſtian's task upon himſelf, this of purifying; καθαρίζωμεν ἑαυτοὺς, let us cleanſe our ſelves.

'Tis the prerogative of the grace of Chriſt, that he that is vouchſafed his portion of that, is thereby thus enabled to mortifie ſin, and advance toward purity; and it is the duty of all that are thus vouchſafed and dignified, to make uſe of that ſtrength to that end, to purifie themſelves. For as Aquinas obſerves out of Ariſtotle, that thoſe things are poſſible for us, which are poſſible by our friends, ſo what we are enabled to do by the grace of Chriſt, we are able to do. He that is born of God, is born an Athleta and Victor, the whole world is but a Pygmy before him: this is the privilege of that high deſcent, that be he the impoteneſt creature in the world, conſidered in his natural, carnal, or moral principles, either as born of bloud, or of the will of the flesh, or of the will of man, he hath yet an acquisition of a kind of omnipotence, from the derived communicated strength of Christ, as he is born of God; ἰσχύω πάντα, he can do all things through Christ that strengthens him. God by his preventing and subsequent grace, works in the Christian to will and to do merely of his good pleasure of bounty; and then the exhortation belongs to that Christian, to work, and work out his own Salvation.

And were but the care and pains employed in the using and improving those Talents which God hath given us, and calling to Heaven for supplies, which is mis-spent and paultred away in pleading our impotencies, and disabilities, and wants of grace, (that is, in accusing, in the old Heathen style, God's illiberal dealing with his children, charging Heaven with all our failings) we might certainly reap better fruit of our time, be fairer proficients in this art of purging; and in the mean may spend our spirits most profitably in calling and hastening one another to this so possible, and withal so necessary, task: and that is the last particular, That it ought to be the united design of all Christians, the Apostle and people together, to aid and assist one another in this work of purifying, by entreaties, by exhortations, by all the engagements of love and duty; καθαρίζωμεν ἑαυτούς, Let us cleanse our selves.

The work, 'tis acknowledg'd, though possible to be gone through with, in such a measure as shall be sure of acceptance, is yet of some more than ordinary difficulty. How long hath this poor Nation been about it? so many years in the Refiners fire, in God's fornace for purifying, worn out and rent to pieces under the Fuller's sope; and yet (God knows) as full of dross and spots as ever, the poor Leper-kingdom thrust out of the camp, (the Temple) banish'd from the old priviledges of the Israelite, the Oracle and the service of God, God spitting in the face of it, in Moses's style, (a kind of excommunicate state;) all, on that charitable purpose, that it might be ashamed and apply it self to the Priest, to God for his purgatives; I shall add, look'd upon, pray'd over by that Priest so many years together; and that cure still as far from being perfected as ever, the leprosie spreading in the skin, the sins multiplying under the Priests inspection, under God's rod; at the end of a seven years rinsing (not with sope, but nitre) a thousand times more odious spots, more provoking sins, more hellish impurities, than before. I remember what poor Porphyry was fain to do in pursuit of purgatives, the same that Saul after the commission of his sin that rent the Kingdom from him, betake himself εἰς θεωρίαν καὶ γοητείαν, to magick and conjuring, make friends to the Devil to help purifie him. O that we, having met with luckier prescriptions, (recipe's from Heaven, that would be sure to prove successful) would not betray all, for want of applying them, that while it is called to day, while a poor spotted Kingdom lies a gasping, the benefit of the last plunge, the φύσεως ἴντραὶ, might not be quite let slip, that this of purifying, the only true expedient yet untried (whilst all others are experimented to be but mere Empirical state-mountebankery) might at length be thought on, prosecuted with some vigour, every man entring into the retirement of his own breast, there to search and view the spotted patient, the plague, the leprosie of his own heart! and again, every man making his arts of cure as communicative and diffusive, as charitable and Catholick as he can, that as David was ravish'd with joy, when they said unto him, Let us go into the house of the Lord, (that pleasant news and spectacle, a conspiration for Piety) so we for that only errand that sends us all to that house, the beginning and advancing of Purity; every man like an Israelite in his flight from Ægypt, not only going out in haste, (a passeover toward purity) but also despoiling his Ægyptian neighbours, robbing one of his lusts, another of his detractions, one of his Atheistical oaths, another of his swinish excesses, one of his Infidel tremblings and baseneſſes, another of his covetings and ambitions, his jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiments, his most valued precious sins, (the curses with which he hath cloathed himself as with a garment, and which would one day, if they were not snatch'd from him, come like scalding water into his bowels, and oyl into his bones) and so yet, if it be possible, come out a troop, a legion of naked Wrastlers, a whole shole of candidates toward Purity. Till somewhat be done this way, more than hitherto hath been done, Peace may hover over our heads, express its willingness to light upon us; but, ad candida tecta columbæ, that dove will not enter or dwell where Purity hath not prepared for her: or if she should so unlearn her own humour, 'twere danger she would turn Vultur, that most desirable blessing prove our fatal'st curse, leave us in and to a state of all impurities, to deprecate and curse those mercies that had betrayed us to such irreversible miseries. Lord, purge, Lord, cleanse us; do thou break those vessels of ours that will not be purified; cast us again into what fornace thou pleasest, that we may at length leave our dross, our filth behind us: and having used thine own methods toward this end, and purged our eyes to see that it is thou that hast thought this necessary for us, that hast of very mercy, very fidelity thus caused us to be troubled, work in us that purity here, which may make us capable of that vision, that peace, that fulness of sanctity and glory hereafter: Which God of his infinite abyss of Purity grant us all; To whom, with the Son, that Image of his Father's Purity, and the holy, sanctifying, purifying Spirit, &c.

Christ and Barabbas.

THE SEVENTH,
Being a Lent SERMON at Oxford, A.D. 1643.

JOHN 18. 40.

Not this Man, but Barabbas.

THIS passage of Story not unagreeable to the time (every day of Lent being a παραστευὴ to the Passion-week) hath much of the present humour of the World in it, whether we consider it as an act of Censure, or as an act of Choice: both these it is here in the Jews.

1. An Act of popular Censure, i. e. most perfect injustice, very favourable to the Robber, and very severe to Christ; Barabbas may be releas'd, the vilest wretch in the world, one that was attach'd for robbery, and for insurrection, may become the peoples Favourite, be pitied and pleaded for, and absolutely pardon'd: dat veniam corvis, the blackest Devils in Hell shall pass without any of our malice, our indignation, our animosities; but an innocent Christ, or any of his making, one that comes from Heaven to us, upon errands of holiness, of reformation, that by authority of his doctrine and example would put vice out of countenance, discover our follies, or reproach our madnesses, and in the Wisemans phrase, upbraid our ways, and reprove our thoughts, he that hath no sins to qualifie him for our acquaintance, no oaths, no ribaldry to make him good company, none of the compliances or vices of the times to commend him to our friendship, at least to our pardon, none of that new kind of popularity of being as debauch'd and professly vitious as other men, shall be supected, and feared, and hated, the most odious, unpardonable, unsufferable neighbour, grievous unto us even to behold, Wisd. 2. 15. Innocence is become the most uncomely degenerous quality, vertue the most envious, censorious thing; the not being so near Hell as other men, the most ridiculous scrupulosity, and folly in the world. And the misery of it is, there is no discoursing, no reasoning this humour out of us, they had cried once before, and the crossing doth but more enflame them; the charm, that should have exorciz'd, doth but enrage the evil spirit, Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas.

But besides this, I told you, these words might be taken in another notion, and under that it is, that we are resolved to handle them, as an act of the Jews choice, of their absolute inconditionate decree, their loving of Barabbas, and hating of Jesus, not before they had done either good or evil, but after one had done all the evil, t'other all the good imaginable; then hating the Jacob, and loving the Esau; electing the Robber, and rejecting the Saviour; the Barabbas becomes a Barabbas indeed, according to the origination of the name, a son of a father, a beloved son in whom they are well pleased, a chosen vessel of their honour, and Christ the only refuse vessel of dishonour, the only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiless reprobate in the mass: Non hunc, sed Barabbam, Not this man, &c.

In the words under the notion of the Choice, you may please to take notice of these severals:

1. A Competition precedaneous to this Choice, presumed here, but express'd in St. Matt. τίνα θέλετε ἀπὸ τῶν δύο, which of the two will ye, &c.
2. The Competitors, Barabbas and Christ.
3. The choice it self, not only preferring one before t'other, non hunc, sed, but 1. absolutely rejecting of one, non hunc, not this man; and then by way of necessary refuge pitching upon t'other, Non hunc sed Barabbam, Not this man, but Barabbas.

And of these in this order.

And First, of the first, That there is a Competition, before what the Competitors are, or what the Choice.

1. I say that there is a Competition, a canvass, or plying, before we come to choose any thing; This is a truth most constantly observable, in all which we are most concern'd in, in that transcendent interest, the business of our souls. Were there but one object represented to the faculty, one Christ, one holiness, one salvation, the receiving him would be any thing rather than Choice; Chance it might be, or Necessity it might be; Chance it might be, that such a thing had the luck to come first, to prepossess and forestal us, to get our favour when there was no body else to sue for it; and indeed, he that should be godly, or Christian on such a felicity as this, through ignorance only, or non-representation of the contrary, he that should give his voice unto Christ, because there was no body else to canvass for it, that if Mahomet had plied him first, would have had as much faith for the Alchoran, as he hath now for the Bible, been as zealous for a carnal, sensual, as now for a pure a pure ſpiritual Paradiſe; he that if he had been born of Heathen Parents, or put out to nurſe to an Indian, would have ſuck'd in as much of Gentiliſm, as by this civil Engliſh education he hath attain'd to of the true Religion, that hath no ſupersedeas, no fortification againſt worſhipping of Sun and Moon, poſting from one Heathen Shrine (as now from one Sermon) to another, but only that Chriſtianity beſpake him earlieſt, that Idolatry was not at leiſure to crave his favour, when Proteſtancy got it; is I confeſs, a Chriſtian, he may thank his Stars for it, Planetarius Sanctus, a Saint, but ſuch an one as a Jew would have been, might he have been a Changling ſtollen into that cradle, or the moſt barbarous China-Infidel, had he had (as he of old, fortunam Cæſaris, ſo) fortunam Chriſtiani, the Chriſtians fortune to have tutor'd him: And ſo for vertue and ſinleſſneſs alſo, he in whom 'tis not conſcience, but baſhfulneſs, and ignorance of vice, that abſtains only from uncreditable or unfaſhionable, from branded or diſuſed ſins, ſwears not, only becauſe he hath not learnt the art of it, hath not yet gotten into the Court, or into the Army, the ſchools where that skill is taught, the ſhops where thoſe reverſt thunderbolts, ſo tempeſtuouſly ſhot againſt Heaven, are forg'd, he that is no Drunkard, no Adulterer, no Malicious perſon, only quia nemo, becauſe he hath no company to debauch, no ſtrength to maintain, no injury to provoke the uncommitted ſin; is all this while but a child of Fate, born under a benign Aſpect, more lucky, but not more innocent, more fortunate, but not more vertuous than other men.

Again, if there were no Competition, as it might be Chance, ſo it might be Neceſſity too; Thou art fain to be vertuous, becauſe thou canſt be nothing elſe, goodneſs muſt go for thy refuge, but not thy choice, were there no rival ſin, no competitor luſt to pretend for thee.

'Tis therefore not only an act of wiſdom, but of goodneſs too, obſervable in Gods wonderful diſpenſation of things under the Goſpel, to leave the Chriſtian, ἐν μεθορίῳ, in the confines of two moſt diſtant people, improveable into good, and capable of evil; like Eraſmus's Picture at Rome, or that vulgar Lie of Mahomet's Tomb at Aleppo betwixt two Load-ſtones, ἀμφιβόητον δεῦρο καὶ δαιμόνων, as Syneſius calls it, a ſtake between God on one ſide, and all the Devils in Hell on t'other, made up of a Canaanite and an Iſraelite, a law in the members, as well as a law in the mind, or as * Antoninus πάντοθεν ἐν μορίοις, perſwaſions in the members, many Topicks of Rhetorick, many ſtrong Allectives to evil in the lower carnal part of the man, as well as invitations and obligations to good in the upper and ſpiritual. Thus did God think fit to diſpoſe it, even in Paradiſe it ſelf, the fleſh tempted with carnal objects, even before the firſt ſin had diſordered that fleſh; A Palate for the ſweetneſs of the Apple to pleaſe, and an eye for the beauty to invite, as well as an upper Maſculine faculty, a Reaſon for commands to awe, and threats to deter; yea, and it ſeems in Heaven it ſelf, and the Angels there, where is no fleſh and blood, that officina cupidinum, ſhop or workhouſe of deſires, yet even there, is an inlet for Ambition, though not for luſt, a liableneſs to the filthineſs of the ſpirit, though not of the fleſh, or elſe Lucifer had ſtill ſtood Favourite, could never have forfeited that ſtate of bliſs. And ſo 'tis ever ſince in this inferiour Orb of ours, Behold! I ſet before thee life and death, bleſſing and curſing, on one ſide all the joys of Heaven to raviſh and enrap thee, the mercies of Chriſt to draw thee with the cords of a man, with the bands of love, to force and violence thy love by loving thee firſt, by ſetting thee a copy of that heavenly paſſion to tranſcribe, but then withal death in the other ſcale, death which it ſeems hath ſomething amiable in it too, it would not be ſo courted elſe, a πορφύρα τῆς σκότους, as Macarius ſtyles it, a gallantry of Hell, a purple garment of darkneſs, that ſuch ſholes of men, and I tremble to think and ſay, ſo large a quantity of baptized Chriſtians are ſo ambitious of, ſell all that's comfortable and valuable in this life, to purchaſe it: And were there not both theſe ſet before us by God, life on one ſide, and death on t'other, bleſſing on one ſide, and curſing on t'other, a double canvaſs for thy ſoul, a rivalry, a competition, and ſomewhat on both ſides amiable to ſomewhat in thee, life to the immortal, death to the periſhing part of thee, bleſſing to the rational, divine, curſing to the bedlam brutiſh part of thee, the man of God could not go on, as he doth in that place, Deut. 30. 19. therefore chuſe life, that thou and thy ſons may live. Were there but one in our reach, 'twere neceſſity ſtill, and not choice, and that moſt abſolutely deſtructive of all judgment to come; Hell might be our Fate, but not our Wages, our Deſtiny, but not our Reward, and Heaven any thing more truly than a Crown of righteouſneſs.

* πρὸς ἑαυτ.

A Piece of the Philoſopher there hath been a long while in the world, that hath had a great ſtroke in debauching the Divine, that the Underſtanding doth neceſſarily and irreſiſtibly move the Will, that whatever hath once paſſed the judicium practicum, got not only the aſſent of the Judgment that 'tis true, but the allowance alſo that 'tis good and fit to be choſen, cannot chuſe but be deſired and proſecuted by the Will: from whence the Divine ſubſumes, that where Faith is once entered, though that but a Speculative (I wiſh it were not ſometimes but a Phantaſtical) Faith, there Works muſt and will infallibly follow. I confeſs it were admirable news if this were true, if all that knew theſe things were ſure to do them, if there were no ſuch thing poſſible as Sin againſt Light, Sin againſt Goſpel, Sin againſt Conſcience; if the lives of Believers could not prove Infidel, the actions of thoſe that acknowledge God, that make no doubt of the truth of Chriſtianity, could not avoid or eſcape being Godlike and Chriſtian, if 'twere but a flaſh of S. Auguſtin's wit, that the wicked Infidel believes contrary to Faith, the wicked Believer lives contrary to it: There were then but one care left a Chriſtian, to be catechiz'd aright, which the Solifidian calls Faith; or to be confident of his own Election, which the Fiduciary calls Faith; and then Quis ſeparabit? any thing elſe will be wrought in me by Chriſt, or that any thing elſe will be unneceſſary to be wrought. Inſtead of this Pagan Principle that ties up all in the chains of inevitable Fate, if it be examin'd, give me leave to mention to you one Aphoriſm of Chriſtian Philoſophy, which is but the interpretation of the competition that now I ſpeak of; that the Will is no more neceſſitated to obey the ſuggeſtions of Reaſon, than of the Senſual Appetite, of the upper than the lower Soul, that 'tis an indifferent middle Faculty, able to chuſe the evil and refuſe the good, or (to ſatisfie the Philoſophers importunity, which reſolves it impoſſible to chuſe the evil, unleſs under the appearance of good, you may take it in a clearer notion) able to chuſe the pleaſant and refuſe the honeſt, to chuſe the ſenſual carnal, and refuſe the intellectual ſpiritual good. And that you may ſee the ground of this, obſerve that the whole Man is made up of three parts, Spirit, Soul and Body.

1. The Body or Fleſh luſting againſt the Spirit. And 2. the Spirit again luſting againſt the Fleſh. Thoſe two Extremes perfectly contrary one to the other in their appetites, and therefore called by the Ancients ἄῤῥεν, and θῆλυ, one the Maſculine, t'other the Feminine part, one the Monarch in the Soul, t'other the ὁ δῆμος, or Commonalty; one the παιδαγωγὸς, the Maſter, t'other the παιδίον, or Child; one the Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν, the voice and image of God in us, t'other the θηρία, the beſtial part; one the Man, t'other the τετράποδα, the four-footed creatures in us. And theſe are contrary the one to the other, ſo that you cannot do, or, as the Greek, ἵνα μὴ ποιῆτε, ſo that you do not, this is a conſequent of that Contrariety, you do not the thing that you would; i. e. perhaps perfectly, purely without ſome tack or mixture; however I am ſure, not quietly, ſtilly, without ſome oppoſition of the other. And then comes in in the third place, ψυχὴ, the Soul, the Elective Faculty, i. e. the Will betwixt them, courted and ſollicited by both, as that which hath the determining caſting voice; if the beaſt can carry it, if the ſenſual ſuggeſtions get the conſent of the Will; obtain the embrace, have its carnal propoſals yielded to; then in the Apoſtles phraſe luſt conceives, and within a while proceeds from conſent to act, bringeth forth ſin; but when the Spirit prevails, when the Reaſon, the Conſcience, the God within the, is allowed to be heard, when that chaſte, ſober, matronly Spouſe gets the embraces, the conſent of the Will; then the Spirit conceives, and from thence ſpring all the καρποὶ πνεύματος, which the Scripture ſpeaks of, the fruits and productions of the Spirit. You ſee now the competition, the conſtant importunities and ſollicitations, the rivalry for thy ſoul, not an action of moment or importance in thy life, but the houſe is divided about it, the ſpirit for one way, and the fleſh for another, and that that prevails, i. e. gets the Will of its ſide, denominates the action, and the action frequently and indulgently reiterated, denominates thee either fleſh or ſpirit, either captive to the law of ſin, or obedient to the commands and dictates of Chriſt, a carnal ſinner, or a ſpiritual diſciple.

And then my brethren, by way of Uſe;

1. You ſee the anſwer to that hard probleme, what is the reaſon and ground of the infiniteneſs of thoſe puniſhments that await ſinners in another world: Here you have the oyl that maintains that accurſed Veſtal fire, ſo much beyond Tulliola's or Pallas's Lamp in Licetus, burning ſo many Ages under ground and not conſumed; I mean, this competition in this Text (the τίνα θέλετε ἐκ τῶν δύο, which of the two infinites will you) and that other we mention'd of life and death, bleſſing and curſing, ſet before us by God, the leaving to our option whether of the two infinites we will have; This, and nothing but this, hath made it moſt perfectly reaſonable, that Deſpiſers ſhould periſh eternally, that he that will contemn immortal life, that ἐν χερσὶν ἀϊδίαν, as Clemens St. Pauls contemporary calls it, that eternity put into our hands by Chriſt, and make his deliberate covenant with death, that his immortal part may die eternally, ſhould be thought worthy, as the Book of Wiſd. hath it, to take his portion or part with it. And then,

2. O how much the more care, and caution, and vigilance will it require at our hands, to keep guard over that one faculty, that ſpring of life and death, that fountain of ſweet and poyſonous water, that of chuſing or rejecting, willing or nilling; never to diſpenſe thoſe favours looſly or prodigally, never to deny them raſhly or unadviſedly, but upon all the mature deliberation in the world! Keep thy heart with all diligence, the heart this principle of action, keep it above all keeping, for out of it are the iſſues of life, Prov. 4. 23. That when I would do good, evil is preſent with me, temptations of the carnal appetite to the contrary, it matters little, ſo I hold off my conſent, reſiſt their importunity; and that all the Devils in Hell are a whiſpering blaſphemy within me, it matters as little, ſo I reject the ſuggeſtions; Reſiſt, and he ſhall flie; that he is looſe to tempt, this is my infelicity perhaps, but not my guilt, I and that miſhap improved into a bleſſing, ἰδόντα σκόλοψ, this tempter a kind of donative of Heaven, to buſie my patience, and exerciſe my vigilance, to ſet out my Chriſtian valour, to make me capable of the victory firſt, and then the crown; the nations left to prove Iſrael, Jud. 3. 1. yea and to teach them war, verſe 2. at leaſt ſuch as before knew nothing thereof. Only be ſure that thoſe Nations get not the upper hand; to that purpoſe, that they be not pamper'd and fed too high, till they grow petulant and unruly, that this jumentum hominis, as St. Jerom calls it, this Aſs, or beaſt-part of the man, prove not the Rider's Maſter: this is the greateſt danger firſt, and then reproach in the world, which you will more diſcern if you proceed from the competition to the Competitors, and conſider who they are, in us ſpirit and fleſh, God and Devil, as in the Jews Barabbas and Chriſt, my ſecond particular.

'Tis none of the leaſt of God's mercies among his diſpenſations of providence, that the competition falls to be betwixt ſuch perſons ſo acknowledgedly diſtant, and hugely contrary, a Chriſt and a Barabbas, the one ſo pretious, and the other ſo vile, the Prince of Peace, and the Author of an Inſurrection, a σωτὴρ and an ἀπολλύων, a Saviour and a Deſtroyer; had it been betwixt a Chriſt and a Nicodemus, a Carpenters Son, and a Rabbi or Ruler in Iſrael, the choice might have been more difficult, or the miſtake more pardonable; But ſo God loved the world, ſuch were the riches of his goodneſs to an infatuated rebellious people, he ſets before them a beautiful Chriſt, and an odious foyl to make him more beautiful, to make it impoſſible for them to be ſo mad, as to refuſe and finally to reject Chriſt, that was on ſuch grounds, and in ſuch company a ſuing and importuning for their favour; none but a Barabbas to pretend againſt him, that that notion had of him, might ſerve inſtead of the fiſhes gall to recover the blind Tobits ſight, help the blindeſt natural man to diſcern ſomewhat tolerable, if not deſirable in the Chriſt, that in ſo poor a choice, an undervalued, prejudg'd, ſcandalous Jeſus might have leave to be conſidered, and owe a preferment alienis vitiis to the faults faults of the other, though not virtutibus ſuis to any thing amiable or eſteemable in himſelf. The ſame œconomy you may generally obſerve even from the firſt of Paradiſe to this day; When our firſt Parents were the prize, the Competitors were of ſomewhat a diſtant making, God and the Serpent, not the King of Heaven and one of his chief Courtiers, God and an Archangel of light, but God and a damned Spirit, a black Prince, and he but in very homely diſguiſe, but of a Serpent, which though he were then a τετράποδα, as Cedrenus out of ſome of the Antients will have it, ſomewhat a taller and goodlier creature, than now the Serpent is, that his Legs be cut off, yet the Text ſaith, a beaſt for all that, I and that beaſt branded for craft, infamous for the ſubtileſt creature, and ſo not likely to prove the moſt honeſt and ſolicitous of their good; and this cunning Pytho had made friends to ſpeak, contrary to his kind, there was ſure ſome ſorcery in that; and all this, one would think, was enough to have added authority to God by ſuch a prejudg'd Competitor. And juſt ſo was it to the Iſraelites at their coming out of Ægypt, God and a cruel Pharaoh, a Deliverer and a Tyrant, one to have them Slaves in Ægypt, t'other to have them Princes in Canaan; a ſufficient inequality betwixt the Pretenders, that it might be impoſſible for any to prefer the Onions and the Garlick, before the Manna and the Kingdom. After, 'twas betwixt God and a golden Calf, a Calf ſtill, no very honourable creature, though 'twere of gold: and anon, betwixt God and a brazen Serpent, Serpent and brazen too, neither form, nor metal to commend it; and all along through the heathen world, the competition was yet more unequal, betwixt the God of Heaven, and Wood and Stone of the Earth, the moſt glorious Creator, and vileſt Creature, nay the piece of Wood, as the Prophet ſets it, that was not fit for any uſe, not ſo much as to be burnt, the very refuſe of the refuſe, is the thing the Idol was made of, and none but that Idol thought fit to be a Competitor with God for the adoration. If you look back to Judæa again, at the time of the great competition for the hearts of Iſrael betwixt Rehoboam and Jeroboam, it was ſtill of the ſame making, betwixt a Kings ſon, and a Servant, a right Heir and a cunning Seducer, a kind of Serpent again; yes, and betwixt the glorious Temple of Jeruſalem on one ſide, and the upſtart Dan and Bethel on t'other; the high Prieſt on one ſide, and the baſeſt of the People on the other, betwixt the Calves at that Dan, and the Cherubims at that Jeruſalem; and ſo ſtill there was advantage enough, one would think, on Gods ſide, againſt ſuch Competitors. And if we look now abroad into the moſt idoliz'd adored Diana's, the ſins that get all the cuſtom away from Chriſt, the only rivals with him for our ſouls, we ſhall find them but little advanc'd above that old pitch, little lovelier than the Serpent, juſt ſuch are our crafts, our unſanctified counſels, our wily artifices, that have nothing but Serpent in their compoſition; little honourabler than the Calf, juſt ſuch are our Gods of gold, which I cannot mention, but in Moſes paſſion, O theſe people have committed a great ſin, have made them Gods of gold! all piety transform'd and contracted into the worſhip of that one ſhrine, our gain the only godlineſs we can hear of: and then a multitude more, of a yet viler making, fit only for a competition with that knotty refuſe piece of wood of which the Idol was made: the more ſhame, they ſhould outvie a moſt glorious God, a Chriſt, that if he had nothing in his life amiable, yet hath died for us, and ſo hath dearly purchas'd a title to our love, yea and a bleſſed Spirit, come down on purpoſe to ſublime our judicative faculty; to convince the world of the unreaſonableneſs of ſin; yea, and a poor thirſty panting ſoul (which hath ſome reaſon to expect kindneſs from us) a heaven and an immortal bliſs.

Conſider but a few of that glittering train of reigning ſins in this our Land, in this my Auditory, and be aſtoniſhed, O Earth, that they ſhould ever be received in competition with Chriſt. The oaths, that all the importunity of our weekly Sermons turn'd into Satyrs againſt that ſin, cannot either ſteal or beg from us, what gain or profit do they afford us? which of our ſenſes do they entertain, which of our faculties do they court? an empty, profitleſs, temptationleſs ſin, ſenſuality only to the devil-part in us, fumed out of hell into our mouths in a kind of hypochondriacal fit, an affront to that ſtrict command of Chriſt, his ego autem to his Diſciples, but I ſay unto you, Chriſtians, ſwear not at all: the beſt quality that it can pretend to, is that that Hieracles of old mentions with indignation, πρὸς ἀναπλήρωσιν λόγου, to fill up the vacuities of the ſpeech, to expreſs and man a rage, i. e. to act a mad man the more perfectly. And of him that hath in his time ſworn over all the hairs of his head, I would ſtill ask but this one queſtion, τίνα τότε καρπὸν, what fruit had he then of this ſin, (then, when it was full in his mouth, a ſwelling his cheeks) whereof he is now aſhamed, cannot chuſe but bluſh, his ears glow, or be in ſome pain till I have done ſpeaking of it: and yet beyond this, the end of thoſe things is death, a ſeveral fiend in hell moſt ſadly to come, the paiment of every of thoſe gainleſs oaths. It were but a ψυχρὸν, or cold addreſs to this kind of ſinner, to beſpeak in that of expoſtulating ſtile; what advantageth it, to gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? 'twere more to his purpoſe to demand, what advantageth it him to gain not one atome, or moſt diminutive part of the world, not the leaſt acquiſition of any thing deſirable even to the carnal man, ſatisfactory to any part of his appetite, ſave that in a manner Platonick, deſigneleſs love of ſinning, and ruining his own ſoul, and yet to do that as ſure, as if he had Satans totum hoc, his whole Exchequer of wealth and honour in exchange for it? I ſhall rather add, what ſhall that man give in exchange for his ſoul to get it back again, which he hath parted with ſo cheap without any barter, ſold it for nought and taken no mony for it, in the Pſalmiſts phraſe, and now cannot redeem it with all his patrimony? 'Twould grieve one, I confeſs, that did but weigh this ſin in this ballance, and obſerve the Tekel in the wall over againſt it, how light and kexy and impertinent a ſin this is, to hear that any body ſhould be damn'd for it in another world, part with ſuch treaſures for ſuch trifles, make ſuch African voyages, carry out the ſubſtantial commodities of a good land, and return with a fraight of toies or monſters, pay ſo hugely dear for ſuch perfect nothings; and yet 'twould grieve one more, that this ſin ſhould glitter in a Proteſtant Court, become part of the gallantry and civility of the place, I and defame and curſe our Armies, that the improſperouſneſs, ruin, perhaps παραλυσία, of a whole Kingdom ſhould be imputable to one ſuch ſin, and all our prayers to Heaven for you, be outſounded and drown'd with that moſt contrary eloquence. 'Twere the juſteſt thing in the world, that he, that upon my preſent inſtance, (this more than δευτέρα νουθεσία, ſecond admonition) will not now vow to part for ever with this one ſin, ſo threatful to his Soveraign, his Country, his own Soul, to the hoſts gone forth againſt the enemy, to all that is or ſhould be pretious to him, and ſo abſolutely gainleſs to himſelf in his vileſt capacity, even as a ſenſual brute, ſhould never be admitted within theſe doors again, never be preach'd to more, never be conſider'd as a Chriſtian ſo much as in profeſſion, that will part with his true Chriſt or Jeſus, rather than with the Names of them to blaſpheme by; That he ſhould be delivered up to Satan, as the primitive Offenders were, βασανίζεσθαι, to be corporally tormented by him, εἰς ὄλεθρον σαρκὸς, to the tearing that foul tongue, that noiſome piece of fleſh out of his mouth, that by that means at leaſt, παιδευθῶ μὴ βλασφημεῖν, he may be diſciplin'd or taught not to blaſpheme.

Will you look into another ſin (a time of humiliation may be an excuſe for the digreſſion) that of uncleanneſs, whether of the eye, the libidinous look, that men are ſo hardly perſwaded to believe to be a ſin, (i. e. in effect, that Chriſt forbad any thing under that phraſe of looking on a Woman to luſt) or whether that of the tongue that oris ſtuprum, unſavoury diſcourſe, rotten, putrid, noiſome converſation, which makes it ſo abſurd for that man ever to pray, (to bleſs God in the Church, with that part that was ſo polluted in the Chamber) or whether the groſſer ſin, the making the members of Chriſt members of a Harlot, (meant by the Apoſtle as an huge expreſſion, members of a Swine, a Toad, had been nothing to it) what is this, but a Barabbas ſtill, a Robber in competition with Chriſt for that body, which is, ſaith the Apoſtle, for the Lord, and not for fornication, 1 Cor. 6. 13. A vile infamous crime, that ſtaies not, for the moſt part, for its hell, its puniſhment in another world, meets with its Limbo, its Tophet here, torments and curſes enough in this life, if they might have leave to be conſider'd.

'Tis worth obſerving in the New Teſtament, that the Name of Idolatry, not often mention'd there, doth moſt times very probably denote this ſin of uncleanneſs or carnality; the obſervation might be made good at large, if 'twere now ſeaſonable; and I would to God my auditory would be perſwaded, thus to keep themſelves from Idols, to flie from this kind of Idolatry, that mens natures have a thouſand times more temptations to, than that other ſin that bears the envy of all our miſery, the Idolatry that the ſacrilegious ſo declaim at: believe me, there is not a ſin more incompetible with the Goſpel-mercy, a more unreconcileable rival of all godlineſs, a greater waſter of conſcience, griever and quencher of the Spirit, a more perfect piece of Atheiſm, and Heatheniſm, be it the faireſt outſide Chriſtian; nor withall, a greater blaſting and curſe to a Nation, an Army, a Garriſon town, than the permiſſion of this one ſin, the voice of it crying to Heaven, as loud as Sodom, for fire from Heaven, for judgment upon the place. Remember the fierce judgment in Shittim, Numb. 25. upon the peoples joyning to Baal Peor, that filthy heatheniſh Idol, expounded ver. 1. by committing whoredom with the daughters of Moab; the heads of the people, remember that, the heads of the people, the principal men in Iſrael, either becauſe they were moſt guilty, or becauſe the matter required ſuch an expiation, muſt be hang'd up againſt the Sun, that the anger of the Lord might be turned away from Iſrael, (and I believe 'twould poſe a man to give any reaſon why this ſin (of adultery at leaſt) in this Land, as well as ſtealing of a trifle, ſhould not be awarded in the ſtyle of that text with hanging up againſt the Sun) and the command there, is to them in place of Judicature to ſee the execution of the Law againſt them, Slay you every one his men, ver. 5. But this is a Judaical outdated puniſhment among us, and it hath been the cunning of Satan that it ſhould be ſo, who having proſpered ſo far for his Clients, would not be quiet till he had gotten all kind of reſtraint or diſcouragement of this ſin to be ſo too, till he had made the fouleſt inceſt a far cheaper ſin and ſafer poſſeſſion, than the practice of ſome Chriſtian vertues; nay, which is obſervable to the laſting ſhame of this Land, till the injur'd man thus deſpoiled and robbed by the Adulterer, be made; by a kind of national cuſtom, the only infamous perſon, and the Barabbas that robb'd him, puniſhed only with that curſe in the Goſpel, of having all men ſpeak well of him. O what is this, but as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, to bleſs them whom God abhors, or as the Prophet, Mal. 3. 14. And now we call the proud, happy; and they that work wickedneſs, are ſet up! Believe it, one or two ſuch ponderous guilts as theſe, are able to keep the juſteſt cauſe from buoying up it ſelf, and our ferventeſt prayers from their πολυϊσχύειν, from working any ſaving miracles upon a Land.

I wiſh there were now no more Barabbas's amongſt us, a canvaſſing againſt Chriſt, but I muſt not flatter you with ſo ſhort a catalogue; Look on your indevotion, that heartleſs zealleſs behaviour in this very houſe of God. Your Hearing, which is moſtly the faireſt part of you, what is it but as of a Rhetor at a Desk, to commend or diſlike, the ſame which you have as well for the Stage as the Pulpit, a Plaudite or an Hiſs; and for that other of Prayer, though it be for thoſe bleſſings of peace, of ſafety, the Shalom that many men have more devotion for, than that other great ſenſe of that word, the ſalvation of their ſouls, and which ardent prayer is the only means to bring down upon us; yet what cold addreſſes, what wandering eyes and thoughts, what irreverent negligent motions, what yawning inſtead of ſighing out our parts of it, what abſolute indifference, if God will take our own witneſs, whether we be heard or no? This want of ardency in us, this no-fire on our Altar of Incenſe, is certainly the thing that hath provoked God to deliver up our Liturgy to Satan, to oppoſe and malign, to calumniate and defame as at this day; the Lord pardon us our part of this ſin. This is the preferring of Barabbas, a Robber, a Devil perhaps, that ſteals away our hearts from Chriſt, even when we are in cloſeſt converſe with him. As for faſting, what is that but an empty, formal, unſignificant name? The ſcorn of the Phariſees twice a week, hath quite driven it out of our Calendar. O conſider this, and but once more conſider; Look on the Sermon in the Mount, the ſeveral graces and duties that there make up the Chriſtian ſomewhat above the pitch of a Scribe or Phariſee, and then every of the contrary vices, nay the very Jewiſh or Heathen, the moral or natural mans vertues, that come ſhort of that high Philoſophy, are every one, the Barabbas in the Text, directly this Jewiſh choice; He that cannot forgive an enemy, bleſs him, pray for him, heap all the hot burning coals of Charity upon his head, and melt him by that artifice, rather than break him, ruine him, damn him by any other, what doth he but prefer his own revengeful luſt, that helliſh piece of ſenſuality, that food for the Wolf, the Vultur, the Salamander, the Devil in him, directly before the commands, not only counsels of Christ? and so Non hunc, sed Barabbam, a Barabbas is still the Choice, and the Christ the reprobate still; which brings me to the third particular, the Choice it self, not only preferring one before t'other, but 1. absolutely rejecting of one: and then 2. ad evitandum vacuum, to fill up the vacuity, pitching upon t'other; non, sed, not this, but, &c.

And 1. absolutely not this, a downright reiterated nolumus hunc, most vehement dislikes to Christ assoon as ever he is mention'd: the Jews had particular quarrels to him, ἐσκανδαλίζοντο, they were many times scandaliz'd at him, but not they only, but it seems, we Gentiles too, the natural man receives not the things of the Spirit, whether the graces or the promises, οὐ δέχεται, he receives them not, not only that he cannot attain to them, for that is said in the latter words, neither can he know them, but οὐ δέχεται, he receives them not, will not accept them when they are offer'd, for they are foolishness to him, not worth taking up in the streets, he cannot stoop to such trifles; and in another place, the same Apostle saith it of Christ crucified, To the Jews a stumbling block, and to the Gentiles foolishness; the things of the spirit are foolishness, and the Christ foolishness too, we not only not chuse him, when any other comes in competition with him, but not take him, when none; An antipathy to Christ as Christ, an absolute aversation, rejection of such merchandise, though there were no price to be paid for them. This is a Mystery of hell, let us view it a while, and to that end consider Christ, in the two main parts of him, in which he shines most illustrious towards us, His graces and his promises, the diet all the year long for his servants, and the wages at the end of his service; the viaticum he affords in the voyage, and the reward in the haven.

For the former of these, for grace, the Bridegrooms feast, Luke 14. which so many were bid to, see there what difficulty there is, to bring men to it, not one comes on the first invitation, though it seems all were really expected, and the entertainment provided; when all is ready, the servants are again sent out to tell them, they are staid for, and the issue is, they all with one consent began to make excuses; the feast was ready, grace ready to be spoyl'd for want of guests, and yet neither civility, nor pity, nor common gratitude can work upon them, or extort the acceptance of such a donative; The Field, the Oxen, the Wife, are like the Barabbas here, not the reasons but excuses of their contempt, pretences only and opportunities of getting off more cleanly, more handsomely from Christ; and if you mark it, so it is. There's nothing that we have learned so perfect from Adam, as that art of excuses; and withall, nothing that we so vehemently desire to be excused from, as the power of grace, when it makes toward our souls, when by the preaching of the word powerfully applied, with an [Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead] and [O consider this, ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces] and [Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and perish:] when by the message of that Angel come up close to us, the Holy Ghost begins to overshadow and beget Christ in us, that procreative light of Heaven darting its beams, and those attended with some conceptions of holiness in a carnal breast, O how uneasie we are, how incumbred, till we can get rid of this burthen, like so many Harlots that live by the trade of not-conceiving, or when that will not be done, force an abortion if it be possible; we must be excused from that austerity, we are impatient of being so attenuated, and spiritualiz'd, wreckt, though it be but from our lees; the last flash of the candle, pangs of the expiring soul, are time enough for this bearing fruit unto God. Lord make us chast, make us sober, make us humble, then, let me die the death of the righteous, and my last end be like his, let me have a shower of sanctity, a Clinicks baptism, some good wholsome wishes or ejaculations to bathe me before my last journy, an Elias's fiery Chariot of zeal then to hurry me to Heaven, sed noli modò, Lord none of this purity yet, the κινδυνεύει εἶναι ἄλλη ψυχή, in Eunapius, the danger of being all soul, all holiness all heavenly mindedness so early, is a sad frightfull thing for a young Courtier, a young Souldier, a young Academick, for any that are under the age, or not come to the infirmities of the Clinici in the Primitive Church, (those that would not be Baptiz'd till they were ready to die, and so were literally βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν, baptiz'd for dead, then, and not till then, desired to be baptized.) Holiness is a dull melancholy thing, fit only for a hypocondriack to be entertain'd with. Thus when the crest-faln Israelites were to be redeemed from an Ægypt to a Canaan, they cry out upon Moses and Aaron, Exod. 5. chide with their Saviours, abomine their Deliverers; thus the harrast degenerous emasculate slave is offended with a Jubilee, a manumission, servitude is his sensuality, he will not go out free, brings his ear to his Master and desires to be bored thorow it, that he may be a slave for ever. Once more, thus the man possess'd with no less than a legion of Devils, casting him sometime into the fire, sometime into the water, tearing him till he foameth again, is passionately faln in love with that legion, hath not the patience to be rid of these Devils; when Christ comes to cast them out, he is most out of charity with that Christ, τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί; what have I to do with thee? not thou Devil, that hast tormented me all this while, but thou Jesus the eternal Son, or thou piety the pretious grace of God, art thou come to torment, i. e. to sanctifie or dispossess me before my time? torment me by delivering me from the Tormentor, disease by curing, poyson me by thy balm or balsome, wound me by thy mollifying plaisters, condemn me to Hell by bringing me into a sight of Heaven? thus when the Beloved comes and knocks at the door of the espoused soul, Open to me my sister, my love, and there waits without doors most unseasonably and beyond all patience, till his head be fill'd with the dew, and his locks with the drops of the night, all the answer that is to be had, is no more but this, I have put off my coat, how can I put it on? I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them? I have put off righteousness like a garment, denudated my self of all that looks like holiness, and all the woomgs of the true-beloved, cannot give me patience to put it on again, I have wash'd my feet in mire or ink, douz'd my carnal affections in all the vileness of the world, and how shall I defile them with grace, pollute them with chastity, defame or profane them with any thoughts of holiness? thus doth the swine wash her self in the mire, and he that comes to cleanse, defiles her; the sinner never so well pleased, as when he is given up to all vile affections, the offers of Christ, the importunities of grace, go for the only oppression, and usurpation, and tyranny in the world, and so non hunc, not this man, not Christ, as Christ signifies grace, that inchoation of sanctity, that he came to bring among us.

And

And non hunc again, as that ſignifies the promiſes which Chriſt brought with him, though thoſe promiſes be of all that is valuable to immortal ſouls, of nothing but Heaven and bliſs, non hunc, none of Chriſt when he comes but a Herald of theſe. For even againſt this, we have two diſlikes:

1. This bliſs is of a new ſpiritual making, (and that is one reaſon why we deſpiſe the Promiſes) conſiſts in the viſion of God, contemplation of heavenly excellencies, nothing of the Turkiſh carnal Paradiſe in it, nothing that this fleſh and bloud, the habitual ſinner can tell what to make of. I remember Philoponus his conceit, that to have a right apprehenſion of God, 'twas neceſſary to ſtudy the Mathematicks. Men naturally cannot underſtand any thing but by phantaſms, and thoſe ſtill mixing in the contemplation of God, make men phanſie God μεθ' ὕλης, with matter and corpulency; and the Mathematicks are a neceſſary means to help us to abſtract from that. I would to God we had ſome ſuch engine, or crane, or pully to elevate our fanſies, to make it poſſible to think any thing pleaſure which is not corpulent and carnal. A madneſs, believe it, that we wrong the Epicureans, to think any of that ancient Sect was ever guilty of it: No, they could pleaſe themſelves with ſpiritual beauty, as far as they apprehended there was any; witneſs Epicurus himſelf, who though he were under thoſe pains of Strangury and Dyſentery that were not capable of increaſe, of which, it ſeems by Laertius, he died, yet, ſaith he, in his Will, ἀνέπαρξε δὲ τοῖς τούτοις τὸ κατὰ ψυχὴν χαῖρον, the joy of his Soul was able to hold out againſt all theſe: Only the Mahometan, and the carnal Chriſtian, is the true Epicurean ſwine that Horace propheſied of, that can find no pleaſure, but in the mire and dunghill, and that's one main reaſon of the non hunc, as he refers to promiſes; becauſe they are celeſtial inviſible felicities, that he cannot find any juice or taſte in.

Præfat. in lib. de an.

Laert. l. 10. p. 721.

But beſides that, there is another reaſon of it, another objection the carnal Jew-Chriſtian hath to thoſe promiſes, becauſe indeed they are but promiſes, becauſe of the futurity of them; he is a man of ſenſe, and not of faith, filius hujus ſeculi, all for preſent poſſeſſions, nothing for advouzons and reverſions. Ephraim is like the Heifer, ſaith the Prophet, that loveth to tread out the corn, the reaſon of that love was, becauſe of that law, that the mouth of the Ox or Heifer muſt not be muzzel'd at that time; ſhe is allow'd to eat at the inſtant that ſhe doth the work, is not put off to ſo long a date, ſo tedious an expectation of ſweating here, and being fed and rewarded in another life, and that made Ephraim love to toyle ſo well. A little preſent payment will go further with her, than the richeſt moſt glorious futurity. Poor ſhort-ſighted creatures! who cannot ſee a hand-breadth before us, like Socinus, huge enemies of Preſcience, will not allow it poſſible for God himſelf to ſee any future, farther than he hath decreed and determin'd it. For God to know, or us to believe any thing but what is before us, is a prodigy that carnal reaſon cannot conſent to; and ſo you ſee the grounds of the [non hunc] the no Chriſt abſolutely at a venture, becauſe there is nothing in him to be eſteemed, neither form, nor comelineſs, no carnal or preſent beauty, that we ſhould deſire him, Iſa. 53. 2. and therefore it follows, he is deſpiſed and rejected of men: non hunc, not this man.

But then this is not all; The diſaffection to Chriſt is ſo great, that rather than have him, the Barabbas ſhall be releas'd: this, you are miſtaken, if you think any large expreſſion to Barabbas, they could value their own lives better, than to deſire impunity for murtherers. The ſhort is, they are ſo bent againſt Chriſt, that ſeeing there is a neceſſity of chuſing one for releaſe, of ſacrificing ſome part of their malice and revenge to their preſent feſtivity, they will part with any the moſt reaſonable part of it, rather than that was pitch'd on Chriſt. Barabbas was a notorious Priſoner, one that had troubled the whole City, and every mans appetite was up to have Barabbas crucified; and yet, rather than Jeſus ſhall live, Barabbas ſhall not be crucified; more inſurrections, more bloud, more ſeditions, more any thing, rather than be in danger to have Chriſt for their King. You may ſee it in Saint Peters meditation upon that part of the ſtory, Acts 3. 14. But ye denied the holy One, and the juſt, and deſired a Murtherer to be given unto you, and killed the Prince of life: the holy One, the juſt, the Prince of life, holineſs, juſtice, life it ſelf, are things not to be endured, to be hunted, purſued, driven out of the world, and in compariſon with them, the Murtherer turns Saint, the moſt abhorr'd ſins ſhall paſs for moſt deſireable rarities, Apollyon the only friend, and Hell it ſelf the vaſteſt preferment.

You ſee from hence, that we may draw toward a concluſion, what hath help'd Barabbas to his favour, what 'tis that hath brought moſt of the ſins of the world into faſhion among men: not any things eſteemable or deſireable in themſelves, no not ſo much as to fleſh and bloud, till a habit and cuſtom hath ſmoothed them to our throats, ſweetened them to our palats, diſguiſed their horrour, and given us ſome tolerable pleaſure in them. Believe it, there are few ſins, but ingenuous nature, when once the fury of youth is over, hath ſufficient diſlikes unto, that σύμφυτος λόγος, the light of natural conſcience, that ὅρκος ἐνσωμάτος τοῖς λογικοῖς γένεσι, in Hierocles, ἐπαγγελία ἀνθρώπου, in Arrians ſtyle, that oath or promiſe, that ſacrament in the mothers womb that every man takes to God, when he hath firſt leave to become a man, can help us to hate them perfectly. Extemplo quodcunque malum committitur, ipſi diſplicet: that one auxiliary in our breaſts, is abundantly able to fortifie againſt them, ſo far, that the man ſhall ſay really and in ſobriety, he hath no pleaſure in them; but then, in many others there is a keen tooth, a ſtinging tail over and above the no pleaſure, many tormina and twinges ſuperadded, the Drunkard that follows that trade of Beſtiality moſt cloſe, finds it a very painful joyleſs calling; I will reveal this ſecret of his confeſſion, though he fall into it oft, he hath no pleaſure in it, no joy in thoſe daily vomits, were they not Phyſick againſt ſomething elſe, againſt that burthen of time that lies ſo unſupportable upon his hands, againſt Melancholy, againſt pangs and twinges of conſcience, like Cain's building of Cities, and his Childrens inventing of Muſick, that the noiſe of the Hammers and the melody of the Inſtruments might out-ſound the dinne within him, or at leaſt to take up quarter before Chriſt, to help ſtop the ear from that ἠχεῖμα σάλπιγξ, σάλπιγξ, that ſtill whiſpering trumpet in Appian, fit for the ſecret invaſion of the ſoul, to keep him from the pain, or perhaps the reproach of being too preciſe: and moſt other ſins are of the like making, we flie to them as to our refuge to ſave us from Chriſt, as the horns of our Altar to keep us from that Goel which we dread, as the Revenger of blood, our only enemy and perſecutor in the world. 'Tis not any prime quality, any ſpecial excellence we find in our carnal entertainments, (thoſe not only vanities but vexations, not only unſatisfying but wounding acquiſitions, thoſe gainleſs torments, thoſe painted flies, with barbed hooks under them) that makes us ſo paſſionately dote upon them, (the Jews were not in love with Barabbas) but only our prejudices to Chriſt, our vehement diſlikes to holineſs, our impatience of any thing that may do us good, our league with perdition, our covenant with death, our zeal to Hell, and abſolute reſolvedneſs to be miſerable eternally.

Such malice hath every ſinner to his own ſoul, ſuch hating to be reformed, that the painful'ſt uneaſieſt ſin, the moſt prodigal expenceful luſt, a very Sodom of filth and burning, not only the ſins of Sodom, but the fire and brimſtone rain'd down and mixt with the ſins, gotten into their compoſition, ſhall be abundant pleaſure and Epicuriſm to him, that hath found no other to ſtay his appetite. I appeal to your conſciences, whether many of you have not ſuffer'd more hardſhip in Satans ſervice, than any man hath in Gods? whether your very ſins have not coſt you dearer, than every any Martyr paid to get to Heaven? Tell me, hath not your luſts had Martyrs of you, many paſs'd thorow the fire to Moloch? hath not your ambition had Martyrs of you, many a baſe ſubmiſſion, a toilſome pluck, a climbing or crawling up that hill of honour? Believe it, the Poet jeer'd you in that not truth but irony, that ſarcaſm and bitter taunt againſt you, Facilis deſcenſus Averni, the deſcent to Hell is an eaſie paſſage; If he ſpake what he thought, I am confident you can give him the lye, produce your ſelves ſo many viſible demonſtrations of the contrary truth, that you can ſhew him by your ſcars as 'twere by the Half-moon in your Breaſts, what a tyrannical Turkiſh task-maſter Satan hath been to you. 'Tis an ordinary paſſage in the ſtory of Julian, that when he receiv'd his deaths wound, he fell a railing at Chriſt; but Philoſtorgius ſeems to rectifie the ſtory, tells us, it was his own Gods, i. e. Devils, that he rail'd at, that he took his blood in his hand out of his wound, and caſt it againſt the Sun, his deified Idol, with a κορέσθητι, be thou ſatisfied; yea, and call'd the reſt of his many Gods, ſaith he, κακὲς ἢ ἐξ ἀλιτῆρας, (ſo the Manuſcript hath it) evil and execrable perſons, τὲς ἀυτῦ θεὲς κακολογῶν, curſing and declaiming at his own Gods, and not at Chriſt: the application is plain, the Devil he is the bloody Maſter, his is the courſe ſervice, and ſad wages, not Chriſts; none is ſo fit to be curſt by his own Clients, as that Prince of darkneſs, ἄρχον ἀιῶνΘ τέτυ, the Monarch ruler of this Age of ours. I have reaſon to believe, there are no fitter Judges to appeal to in this particular, than my preſent Auditory. 'Twas a French Friars conceit, that Courtiers were of all men the likelieſt to bear him company to his Covent, not only fitteſt, but likelieſt to forſake the world, and turn Penitentiaries: He judg'd it, becauſe ſuch an one of all others, had moſt reaſon to be diſpleas'd with the pleaſures of the world, he hath ſeen to the bottom of ſenſual delights, found the emptineſs and torments of thoſe things, which the diſtance and ignorance, that other men are kept at, makes them behold with reverence and appetite; the Courtier hath made the experiment, and ſees how ſtrangely the world is miſtaken in its admired delights, and with Solomon, after a glut of vexatious nothings, is now fit to turn Eccleſiaſtes, or Preacher. I wiſh you would be but at ſo much leaſure, as to think of the Friars meditation, that you would try what mortifying Sermons you could make out of your own obſervations, concerning the vanity of ſenſual miſcalled pleaſures. I am confident, you would be very eloquent, able to outpreach all the Orators you ever heard from the Pulpit, to write more pathetical deſcriptions of the madneſs of a carnal life, than from any more innocent Speculator could be hoped for. That you may begin that uſeful, edifying, laſting Sermon, I ſhall cloſe up mine, having at length run thorow the particulars of my Text, ſhew'd you your ſelves in the Jewiſh glaſs, if it were poſſible to put you out of countenance, to ſhake you out of all tolerable good opinion of your ſelves: And now let every man go home with a [tu es homo] he is the very Jew I have preach'd of all this while.

O that he would think fit to hate that Jew, humble him, labour his converſion, bring him down into the duſt, if ſo be there may yet be hope: And that God that can bring from the duſt of death again, open this door to us, a forlorn deſtitute people! ſo ſhall we ſee and praiſe the power and ſeaſonable bounty of our Deliverer, and aſcribe unto him (as our only tribute) the honour, the glory, the power, the praiſe, the might, the majeſty, the dominion, which through all Ages of the world have been given to him that ſitteth on the Throne, to the holy Spirit, and to the Lamb for ever more. Amen.

Saint PAUL's Sermon to FELIX.

THE EIGHTH,

Being a Lent SERMON at Oxford, A.D. 1645.

ACTS 24. 25.

And as he reaſoned of righteouſneſs, and temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled.

THE Words are the Notes taken from a Sermon of St. Pauls; And the ſucceſs it met with among the Auditors, the trembling of one heathen Officer that was at it, is intirely the conſideration that commended it to me at this time, in hope it might help to perform that ſtrange work, beget a ſpiritual palſie or ſoul-quake in the Chriſtian ſinner, that worſer kind of Heathen, at the repetition.

There's matter enough, God knows, of trembling abroad, (though there were never a judgment to come) to put us all into Belſhazzars paralytick poſture (the countenance changed, the thoughts troubled, the joints or the loins looſed, and the knees ſmiting againſt one another) and we bear it with a ſtrange conſtancy, continue ſtill in as perfect an unconcern'd tranquillity, as if 'twere but a Scene, a Romance, a News from Germany all this while; the Jonas that is gone down to ſleep in the ſides of the Ship, and is the cauſe of all this tempeſt, muſt not be awaked after all theſe billows, our lethargick habits of ſin not diſturbed, only a few cowardly Mariners may be allowed to pray every man to his God, and that's the utmoſt that all theſe prodigies of vengeance can extort from us.

You will therefore give me leave to count it a prize, that I have here found a clap of thunder, that could awake ſomebody, a Sermon that ſet one Felix a trembling; I ſhould be too happy, if the repeating of it, might have the ſame effect on any here preſent. And as he reaſoned of, &c.

In the Words I ſhall but obſerve,

1. The matter of St. Pauls Sermon, righteouſneſs and temperance, and judgment to come.

And 2. the form of it by way of reaſoning. As for the trembling, that muſt be Gods work on you, while I treat of theſe.

The matter I muſt conſider, 1. Abſolutely; then, as it is here cloathed in a double relation, 1. To the Text on which 'twas preach'd, and that you ſhall ſee in the verſe precedent, to be the Faith of Chriſt. 2. In relation to the prime Auditor, Felix, whether as an Officer of Caſars, or as a Heathen, or as one peculiarly guilty of theſe ſins to which the diſcourſe is accommodated.

I begin firſt with the matter, conſider'd abſolutely, righteouſneſs, &c.

Three grand particulars, which though they are Common places and vulgar themes, may yet have leave to give you divertiſements awhile.

The δικαιοσύνη, whether juſtice, or righteouſneſs in the front, (if you had the Fathers wiſh, to ſee and hear S. Paul in the Pulpit, a preſſing at large what you have here only in brachygraphy) would look very ſternly upon the moſt unrighteous oppreſſions of the many; that trade of ſubtilty and intricacy, that hath gotten the incloſure of all not only the wealth and greatneſs of the world, but of the credit alſo, the reputation of wiſdom, yea and of vertue too; the only honourable handſom quality, that all our reſpects and eſtimations are paid to; that new body of morality, that inſtead of the old out-dated deſpiſed rules of juſtice and uprightneſs, hath ſet up that one beloved law of ſelf-preſervation, (that other Antipheron in the Rhetoricks, that always ſeeth his own picture before him, and if health, or ſecurity may be acquired, can ſay to himſelf, as Paracelſus to his ſcrupulous Patient, if the cure be wrought, what matter is it whether it be by God, or the Devil?) inſtead of the comfort of a pure immaculate conſcience, the pleaſure of ſatisfaction of having outwitted and over-reach'd our Brethren; the joy and raviſhment, the high taſte and ſenſuality, as it were, of an indirect action, being to him far above the advantage and gain of it; and either of them able to outweigh the myſtery of Godlineſs, the (whether conſcience, or) reward of blameleſs ſouls.

O! 'tis a fatal character of an accurſed rebellious people, when in the Prophets ſtile, he that abſtaineth from evil, maketh himſelf a prey, when all thoſe generous Chriſtian vertues of meekneſs, and innocence, and charity, and not retaliating to enemies, ſhall become both undoing and ſcandalous qualities, a lawful prize for every Harpy to ſeize on, and ex abundanti, over and above, matter of contumely and reproach to any that ſhall have ſo learn'd to be fools of Chriſt.

And it were a glorious and a royal deſign, worthy the gallantry of this Congregation, and that which would bring Chriſtianity into ſome credit in the heathen world, would give us more hope of Proſelytes from thence, than the Apoſtle of the Indies (Xaverius with his double Goſpel, one of Chriſt, the other of Saint Peter) ever brought back his Maſters; if ſincerity, and uprightneſs, and dove-like innocence (those good natured rarities that our Saviour could not behold without loving the owner of them, although he were no Christian, Mar. 10.21.) might be brought in fashion in a Court, or Kingdom; if oppression and the grosser acts of piracy might be driven out like Wolves, and Bears, and beasts of prey; and disguises, and crafts, and cheats, and all kind of artifices and stratagems, have as many names of vermin allotted to them, and all in one herd pursued, and hounded out of the world; if the examples of a Jacob, a David, a Nathaniel, a Christ, might be permitted to rescue the guileless hearts and lips (at least) from reproach, and scorn, if not from the Vultures talons, if it might be esteemed but as infamous and vile to act, as 'tis to suffer injuries, as ungentlemanly a thing to thrive by fraud, as to perish by good conscience. And till this be set afoot among us (this that an heathen Socrates would, if he were alive again, venture another martyrdom to replant among his Athenians) may this first point of St. Paul's Sermon be for ever a ringing in your ears, περὶ δικαιοσύνης, of righteousness, and a thundering judgment to come, for all those that are not edified by that doctrine.

2. For Temperance, or, as the word ἐγκράτεια, both here and * elsewhere, more properly signifies, Continence, and command of passions and lusts, the τὸ ἐγκράτει ἔχειν, the mastery over a mans self: One cannot, in charity to Christendom, but stay upon it awhile, and recommend it to mens favour, so far at the least, that it may find the ordinary justice, to be preferr'd (in their judgments, if not their passions) before bestiality and villany, before the ἄτιμα πάθη, the infamous affections which nature itself hath reproach'd and branded, that the preserving our bodies the temples of the holy Ghost, may be but as creditable a thing, as any of those μεσήμβρινα δαιμόνια, noon-day Devils, in Gregentius phrase, those impudencies, that have put off the vail, that are become so daring and confident, fornication, adultery, uncleanness, i. e. in the New Testament dialect, εἰδώλων λατρείας, outlared abominable idolatries; that chastity may be kept in some countenance, not pass either for such a strange, or such a ridiculous, such an impossible, or such a scandalous rarity.

* 1 Cor. 9.25. & Ignat. ad Philip. εἴ τις ἀγωνίζεται, ἢ ἐγκρατεύεται, speaking of men and women.

Beloved, there was once a piece of discipline in the Church of God, of sending the Devil into such swine, of delivering up the incontinent to Satans smart, his real corporeal stripes, and inflictions, in the Apostles Age; and after, this smart was commuted for shame, casting them out of the Church, out of the society of all civil men, ἵνα ἐντραπῶσι, that they might be ashamed.

It seems it was then a more fashionable creditable thing to be a praying in the Church, than a dallying in the Chamber; Continence was recommended to Christians, not only among the σεμνὰ and ἁγνὰ, the venerable and the pure, but the προσφιλῆ and εὔφημα, lovely and commendable, Phil. 4. Embraced by men of quality upon the same motives, on which now all the contrary vices are taken up, in adoration to that great Idol, Civility and Reputation; Vertue was then the more splendid title, the more courtly name; And 'tis none of the meanest sins and plagues, provocations and vengeances of this Kingdom, that the measure of honour and gallantry among us, is taken from fools and mad-men, and by that means, shame so prodigiously transplanted; The chast man is the only leper to be separated and thrust out from the Camp, Modesty the only scandalous thing; the three degrees of the new-fashion'd Excommunication, are denounced and executed, like the Athenian Ostracism, upon the several gradations of that vertue; The purity of the body, the Tongue, the Eye, have a kind of Nidui, Cherem and Scamatha proportioned to them, no man is civil enough for ordinary converse, till he hath renounced such pusillanimous innocencies, and brought forth fruits worthy of that repentance, a whole Knight-errantry in that sin, confession with the mouth, glorying of their masculine enterprizes (enough to fill a Romance) and even martyrdom it self, and many sad encounters, and real hellish sufferings in that service, and all this penance, of the least to expiate the crime of bashfulness, to reconcile the modest Puny, to make him fit for society with men.

I remember a conceit of Herodotus, when the Greeks besieged Troy, he believes Helena was in Ægypt, because otherwise had she been in the City, they would certainly have deliver'd her up, and saved themselves: so strange did it seem to him and irrational, that men should chuse rather to die, than part with a lust, And yet to the shame of us Christians, when Gods judgments make such direful approaches to us on this great quarrel for our vile, and reproachful lusts, when a black grim cloud hangs just over our heads, gather'd from the vapours, which this one dung-hill hath exhaled, (as Rome, they say, and others as well as that, is enabled to oppress Countries by the pensions it receives from them) when the voice is come flashing out of that cloud, and the business driven to a close issue, repent or perish irreversibly, (the kingdom used by God at this time, as Antiochus of old by the Roman Ambassadors, put into a circle, as it were, and not suffered to come out, till we shall give our answer) we desert and renounce estates and lives, honours, and souls and all, rather than retrench or abate ought of this accursed superfluity.

And to this unsavoury humour and custom of the world, one Use may be brought home from St. Pauls Sermon, though taken in cypher, περὶ ἐγκρατείας, of continence, I beseech you save me the pains, resume and enlarge it to your selves.

3. For judgment to come, 1. That there is such a thing. 2. That it descends to such mean particulars as justice and continence, I cannot but in passing be your Remembrancer.

1. That there is such a thing.

Injustice and incontinence are two main supplanters of all belief of the judgment to come; when a man hath once set up that infamous trade of the βυλόμενοι πλουτεῖν, 1 Tim. 6. of resolving to be rich in spight of all those objections, and stops, and encumbrances of honesty and direct dealing, when he is come to a contemning that pedantry of justice, of observation of Oaths, that shall interpose so uncivilly to resist his thrift and advancement in the world, believe it, the minæ vatum, the news of the judgment to come, in the Preachers mouth, will be under an heavy suspicion of fraud and cheat, and in fine, pass but for fictions and mormo's, too weak to outlook a brave glittering temptation: the Taxes on the Ecclesiasticks in Florence, which no body else dare collect for fear of the Popes thunderbolts; the Jews will exact undauntedly. Now the covetous worldling is that Jew, whose soul being gone down into the bowels of the earth, πρὸς τὴν χρυσῆν μεταλλείαν, in Diodorus his phrase, to an eternal drudgery in the gold-mineral, is out of the reach of ſounds from Heaven, out of the awe, or noiſe of thunderbolts. The Mammoniſt is in your danger, at your mercy to turn Atheiſt, whenſoever you bid him, whenſoever the lure of Gold ſhall be at leiſure to tempt him, ready to renounce all hope, all fear of another world, whenſoever your goods are ſo put within his reach, that an eaſie perjury will bring them into his Inventory.

And for the luſts of the fleſh, 'twas Ariſtotles obſervation, that they are φθαρτικαὶ τῆ ἀρχῆς, they debauch and corrupt our principles, they ſend up more heathen fumes into the brain, than any other diſtemper can do. Saint Cyril tells us of ſome Idolaters that would have only a day-God, becauſe the night was a time for revelling, and to have a God then, would deſtroy their game, and therefore they pitcht upon the Sun, ἵνα κατὰ τὴν νυκτὸς καιρὸν ἄθεοι μένωσι, that they might be Atheiſts all night, and then they take it out to purpoſe, ἀμυνόμενοι τὴν ἡμέραν, (as St. Baſil ſaith of the Gluttons faſts) revenging themſelves on their Day-devotions by their Night-revels, never acknowledge a God, when a luſt is to be loſt by it: and Athenagoras hath given it for a rule, that the denying of the Reſurrection, the reſolved concluding the world with this life, and believing nothing of another, is the κοινὸν δόγμα, καὶ νόμος εἰς ἀκολάσους καὶ ἡδονὰς φίλος, the only beloved doctrine of the voluptuous. He that hath once transformed himſelf into that ſwine, hath his Optick Nerves ſo chang'd in his forehead, that (as Plut. obſerves of that creature) he never ſees Heaven again, till he be laid on his back. And, I fear the race of ſuch heathen ſwine, is likely within a while to prove the prime ſtaple commodity of the land.

We are fallen into peeviſh times, wherein all Gods methods are quite perverted; the powerfull'ſt means that were ever afforded for the caſting ſuch Devils out of a Kingdom, are debauch'd into matter of improvement and heightning of the humour, and even dethroning God, if he will not comply with it; the very Angels that came to Sodom to viſit for villany, are once more aſſaulted and violated by our luſts; I mean, thoſe judgments from Heaven upon a vitious Generation, that would have inſpired a Colony of Scythians with ſome piety, by a ſtrange kind of Antiperiſtaſis, or contrary working, have made men more profane, and godleſs, than ever they were before; the ſtorm ſo cloſe over our heads, that in other Kingdoms they ſay ſets them a ringing bells, ſhooting guns, lifting up voices to break and diſſolve the cloud that threatens them, hath ſet us upon the ſame deſign by oaths and blaſphemies, and thoſe accurſed κελευσμάτα the ſhouts of our Souldiers, have broke the cloud indeed, brought down (not the Dove flying over our heads, as Hiſtorians tell us, a ſhout in an Army once did, and an Army of united prayers may do ſo again, but) the Eagle to a carkaſe, the Night-raven to the funeral of a Conſumptive Church and Monarchy, an Hell from Heaven upon an abominable people.

Ἀναίσθητος ὅστις πολλὰ παθὼν οὐ σωφρονίζεται, could the Tyrant Phalaris ſay, He that is not made ſober by many ſufferings is abſolutely inſenſate. And yet God knows, out of this rock the greateſt part of this Age ſeems to be hewed: The thunder about our ears that could teach the moſt barbarous Nations to believe and tremble, the breaking in of the Lions that diſciplin'd the Aſſyrians in Samaria to ſeek out inſtruction in the manner of the God of the land, 2 Kings 17. Gods uſing us as the Phyſician, in the Epigram, did the Lethargick Patient, putting a Lunatick into the ſame room with him, to dry-beat us, if poſſible, into ſenſe and life again: His proceeding to that great cure of the λῦσιν ἕξεως, diſſolving the habit of the body politick, and to that end, letting blood to a deliquium, which Hippocrates reſolves ſo neceſſary to abate the ἢ ἐπ' ἄκρον ἰσχὺν, the high, full, athletick health, that is ſo dangerous in his Aphoriſms; the driving out into the field with Nebuchadnezzar, which infuſed reaſon into that λυκάνθρωπος, which untransform'd him again, and raiſed up his eyes to an acknowledgment of him that liveth for ever, Dan. 4. have, God knows, wrought the quite contrary on us, waſted the ſeeds of natural piety within us, erected Academies of Atheiſm, endowed them with Schools and Profeſſours, where the art of it may be learned at a reaſonable rate; a young ſinner of an ordinary capacity, may within a few months obſervation, ſet up Atheiſt for himſelf, prophane, ſcoff at the Clergy, be very keen and witty upon Scripture, have exceptions againſt the Service of the Church, and all with as good grace as if he had ſerv'd an Apprentiſhip in Italy; or at the feet of that great Maſter, that Martyr of Atheiſm, Vanninus.

He that at the breaking in of this torrent of miſery upon the land, had but walk'd in the counſel of the ungodly, was but upon probation and deliberation whether he ſhould be wicked or no; that after ſome months, when the waters began to turn into blood, was yet advanced to a moderate proficiency, a ſtanding in the way of ſinners, and found it but an uneaſie wearieſome poſture, a ſtanding upon thorns or flints; is now fairly ſate down in the chair of the Scorner, or prophane Atheiſt; in cathedrâ, as a place of eaſe or repoſe, can blaſpheme without any regrets of a petulant conſcience; in cathedrâ, as a ſeat of ſtate, prophanes with a better grace than he can do any thing elſe, is become a conſiderable perſon upon that one account, is valued among Lookers on, by that only excellency; and in cathedrâ again, as a Profeſſors chair, a Doctor of that black faculty, ready to entertain Clients, to gather Diſciples, to ſet up an Independent Church of rational Blaſphemers, and (being himſelf a complete Convert, ſufficiently approved to Satan) to confirm and ſtrengthen thoſe puny Brethren, that are not arrived to the accurſed meaſure of that fulneſs, fit them with Machiavels capacity for vaſt undertakings, by that excellent quality of being wicked enough, the want of which, ſaith he, hath been the undoing of the world. And ſhall not God viſit for this? ſhall he not be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? A wonderful and horrible thing is wrought in the land, the judgments that were ſent to awake, have numm'd and petrefied us, the fire in the bowels of this earth of ours, hath turn'd us into perfect quarry and mine, and as Diodorus tells us, in Arabia the Ice and Cryſtal is congeal'd ὑπὸ θείου πυρὸς δυνάμεως, οὐκ ἀπὸ ψύχους, by the power of Divine fire, and not by cold: ſo are theſe icy Cryſtal hearts of ours frozen by that fire from Heaven, that ſhall one day ſet the whole Univerſe a melting.

But beſides theſe Atheiſts of the firſt magnitude, other inferiour pretenders there are, that cannot ſhake off all apprehenſions of all judgment to come, but yet upon diſtant tamer principles, can do Satans buſineſs as well; for ſuch trifles as this Text takes notice of, the contraries to juſtice and continence, nence, they have an ἀπολύτρωσις, like Marcus in Iren. that charmed ſhield from the Mother of the Gods, which ſhall render them ἀόρατοι τῷ κρίνοντι, inviſible to the Judge; The judicature erected by Chriſt, takes not cognizance of ſuch moral breaches as theſe, there nothing but infidelity proves capital, or if the breaches of the Firſt Table may be brought in collaterally under that head, yet for theſe venial defailances againſt the Second, this toy of circumventing our brethren, of defiling the fleſh, (as its conſequent in S. Jude, ſpeaking evil of dignities) Chriſt came to make expiation for ſuch, not to receive bills of indictment againſt them, to be their Prieſt, but not their Judge. I remember a ſaying of Picus Mirandula, That a ſpeculative Atheiſt is the greateſt monſter but one, and that is the practical Atheiſt. And yet this is the darling of the carnal Fiduciaries, that can help him to reconcile his groſſeſt ſins, his any thing with Faith; how well, you will have leiſure to ſee, if you pleaſe to deſcend with me from the abſolute to the relative view of the matter of S. Pauls Sermon, and conſider firſt the relation which it hath to the Text on which he preach'd it, and that you ſhall ſee in the former verſe, περὶ τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως, concerning the faith on Chriſt, and that is my next ſtage.

Ἡ εἰς Χριστὸν πίστις, The faith on Chriſt, the phraſe that ſome nice Obſervers have laid ſuch weight on, to denote the ſpecial act of juſtifying faith, as 'tis an affiance on Chriſt; of a far higher pitch, than either the believing Chriſt, or believing in Chriſt; and yet it ſeems, thoſe ſo deſpicable moral vertues, (thoſe that ſo few think neceſſary, and ſome have affirm'd, deſtructive and pernicious to ſalvation) are here brought in by S. Paul, (I hope not impertinently) under this head, juſtice, and continence, and judgment to come, parts of a Sermon of the faith on Chriſt.

So 1 Cor. where St. Paul had faſten'd his determination, chap. 2. to know nothing among them but Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified, in the very next chap. he charges them with ſins of carnality, ſtrife, envyings, factions; in the 5. with Fornication or inceſt; In the 6. with going to law before Infidels: all theſe, it ſeems, the prime contrarieties to the faith or knowledge of the crucified Saviour. Thus in St. James, you may mark, that works of charity and mercy are called θρησκεία, Religion, ch. 1. 27. And being authorized from ſuch great Apoſtles, I ſhall not fear to tell you, that the prime part of the knowledge, and faith, and religion of CHRIST, the life and power of Chriſtianity, is the ſetting up and reigning of theſe vertues in our hearts: you may ſee it, Tit. 2. 11. The grace of God that bringeth ſalvation to all men, hath appeared, χάρις σωτήριος πᾶσιν, the Catholick ſalvifick grace, be it Chriſt himſelf, or the Goſpel of Chriſt; and the end of this Epiphany follows, παιδεύουσα, to diſcipline, or to teach us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly and righteouſly, the very vertues in this Text, with the addition of one tranſcendent one, and godly, in this preſent world: A ſtrange catalogue of fundamentals, one would think, for Chriſt to aſcend the croſs to preach unto us; We expect other manner of doctrines from him, doctrines of liberty, Jubilee and manumiſſion, (as the merit and acquiſition of his ſufferings) of ſecurity and protection from ſin, that a little carnality ſhall not hurt us, of freeing us from this bondage to obediences, at leaſt, from any judgment to come, for ſuch errors as theſe, that fleſh and blood makes ſo neceſſary and incorrigible: We have generally a ſmoother ſcheme of Chriſtianity than Salvian dream'd of, in his [Quid eſt fides, niſi præceptis Chriſti obedire?] What is is Faith, but obedience to the commands of Chriſt?] The neceſſity of purifying, or mortifying of luſts, goes for an hereſie of this nicer Age, which muſt ſuperadd works to faith, our own obedience to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo in Simon Magus his phraſe, homines in ſervitutem redigere, make ſlaves of free-born men, have them live as well, as if Chriſt had never died for them.

The truth is, the doctrine we have now in hand, if believed and obey'd, is ſo certainly deſtructive of the Devils kingdom (and none other ſo certain but this) that you cannot blame Satan and his inſtruments, to cry it down as the vileſt hereſie in the world.

He may hope for ſome tolerable quarter from any other principles, eſpecially from thoſe of the Solifidian and Fiduciary, brave, delicate, inoffenſive doctrines, that have nothing in them contrary to paſſions, and that gets them ſuch zealous Advocates, for by this divinity they have their luſts. And though it pleaſes God, by the power of his Grace to preſerve ſome men, that have imbibed theſe principles, from thoſe ἀτραπλώδη ῥεύματα, in Epiphanius's phraſe, thoſe ſtreams of brimſtone, that naturally flow from ſuch mines as theſe, I mean from the pernicious and poyſonous effects of them, though ſome that conceive obedience unneceſſary to juſtification, live very ſtrict and gracious lives in ſpight of all thoſe advantages and encouragements to the contrary, yet now God knows, the truth is too groſly diſcovered; the Gnoſticks Divinity begins to revive, a great deal of carnal, I am ſure of ſpiritual filthineſs, yea all the profaneneſs and villany in the world, is now the moſt natural ſpawn of thoſe infuſions; and to look no further than the glaſs, and thoſe foul ſelves which that reflects unto us, The cauſe of God, and the faith of Chriſt, of which we are ſerouſly ſuch Champions, is I fear as much diſhonoured and renounced by our faithleſs, apoſtate, atheiſtical actions, by our helliſh oaths and imprecations, (that pultroon ſin, that ſecond part of Ægyptian plague of frogs and lice, and locuſts, the baſeſt that ever had the honour to blaſt a Royal Army, that caſts us into ſuch Epileptick fits, ſuch impure foamings at the mouth, and will not be bound, no not with chains; in a word, by our going on in ſuch ſins, againſt which the denunciation is moſt punctual, that they which do theſe things ſhall never enter into the kingdom of Heaven, and yet flattering our ſelves, that we ſhall not fail to enter, as by all the ſpecies of infidelity, all the Judaiſm, and Mahometiſm, and Barbariſm in the world. And therefore as it is the mercy of the Apoſtle thus to diſabuſe his beſotted Corinthians, [know ye not] and [be not deceived] neither Fornicators, nor any of that beſtial crew, ſhall inherit the kingdom of heaven; in theſi, ſo is it the juſtice of his charity to make it a prime ingredient in an Apoſtolick Sermon; ſcarce any other Article ſo neceſſary to be preached, eſpecially to a Felix, whether as a Commander, or as a Heathen, or as one peculiarly guilty of thoſe ſins: and that is the ſecond part of the relative aſpect of theſe words, as they refer to the Auditory, my next particular.

And 1. as Felix was an Eques Romanus, Procurator of Judæa, whoſe power gave him opportunities to be unjuſt; and his ſplendid life, temptations to incontinence; no part of Chriſtian Religion, gion, no Article of the Creed is so proper for his turn, as the doctrine of the judgment to come, for such sins as these: that palliate vulgar cure of healing and not searching of wounds, of preaching assurance of present pardon, before reformation is wrought, of solacing but not amending of sinners, is not the method in Saint Pauls, in Christs dispensatory; 'tis the scandal rather and reproach of Christianity in Julian, ὅτις φθορεύς, ὅτις μιαφόνος, οὐκ ἔστιν ἁγνὸν, security, and protection, and place of confidence from Christ to the most polluted villain, the defamation of Constantine in Zosimus, that he turn'd Christian, because he was guilty of such sins, for which no other Religion allowed expiation; No, the only safe medicinal course is, to apply corrosives and caustick, the terrours of the Lord, and the consuming fire of the Lord, the judgment to come, when any mortified flesh is to be gotten out; and to accept the face of a Felix in this kind, to withhold those saving medicines in civility to the person to whom they are to be administred, and so suffer that sin upon my splendid Neighbour, that my charity requires me to rebuke in any meaner person, this is the unjustest rudeness in the world, the most treacherous senseless compliance, the most barbarous civility, cruel mercy, the telling him in effect, that he is too great to be cured; this, saith Procopius, is the saluting by the way, which Elisha forbids Gehazi, and Christ the Disciples, the one when he went to cure, the other to preach; and 'tis his observation there, that such civilities θαυματουργίας κωλύουσι, keep Preachers from working any miracles, the gentle handling of the great mans sins, is many times the damning of him, and debauching all the neighbourhood; The Lord be merciful to our whole Tribe, for our uncharitable omissions in this matter.

And for once I may chance to deserve your pardon, if I do not conceive the flatteringst addresses to you, to be always the friendliest: If in meer charity to some Auditors I imitate my Saviour, and tell you of woes even under a Saviour, of casting into utter darkneß where the worm never dieth, and the fire is not quenched, with all the variations and exchange of accents, three times repeated by our Saviour, within four Verses; of an horrendum est, what a fearful thing it is to fall into Gods hands, and be ground to powder, by that fall, if I bring out all those Topicks of so true, and withall such amazing Rhetorick, with [who can dwell with everlasting burnings?] and all little enough to rouze you out of that dead prodigious sleep of sin, to retrench the fury of one riotous lust,

I beseech you tell me, is there ever a judgement to come, ever an account to be given for moral vertues? Do you so much as fear, that for every unclean embrace, or dalliance, every shameless loud riot, for every boisterous rage or execration, that I may not add, for every contumelious rude address to the throne of grace, every base contempt of that majesty that fills this place, God shall one day call you into judgement? if you do, and yet go on in these, believe me, you are the valliantest daringst persons in the world: and if death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forlorn hope, for the Cannons mouth, for Cuiraisiers, for fiends to duel with: and let me for once set up an infamous trade, read you a Lecture of cowardise, and assure you that a judgment to come may be allow'd to set you a trembling; that it may be reconcilable with Gallantry, to fear him that can cast both body and soul into hell, and put you in mind of that, which perhaps you have not considered, that you are not Atheists enough, to stand out those terrours when they begin to come close up to you, in a death-bed-clap of thunder: Cain that was the first of this Order, was not able to bear that near approach, he went out from the presence of the Lord; and the Rabbins have a fansie of Absalom, that when he was hang'd by his hair in the midst of his rebellion, he durst not cut it, because he saw hell below him, but chose to die rather than adventure to fall into that place of horrour, that his attached conscience had prepared for him; They are, believe it, such unreformed Atheistical hights as these, that have made it so indifferent a choice, Whether the kingdom be destroyed, or no; whether it be peopled with Satyrs, or with wilder men, become all desart, or all Bedlam.

This heavyest judgment that ever fell upon a Nation, extream misery, and extream fury, is, I confess, a most direful sight, but withall, a more inauspicious prognostick, a sound of a Trumpet to that last more fatal Day, with an Arise thou dementate sinner and come to judgment; When all our most bloudy sufferings and more bloudy sins got together into one Akeldama or Tophet, shall prove but an adumbration of that heavier future doom, after which we shall do that to some purpose, which we do now but like beginners, by way of essay, curse God and die, suffer and blaspheme, blaspheme and suffer for ever.

But then secondly, this doctrine of justice, and continence, and judgement to come, is most necessary, as to awake the courtly Governour Felix, so in the next place, to convert the unbelieving heathen Felix.

Will you see the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, when they are to be infused into such an one, or as the Original hath it, λόγον ἀρχῆς τῆς Χριστοῦ, Heb. 6. 1. the doctrine of the beginning of Christ, the laws of the μύησις, or initiation of a heathen Convert, the elements of his Catechism, they are in that place, Heb. 6. 2. 1. Repentance from dead works. And 2. Faith towards God. 3. Resurrection. And 4. Eternal judgment: and believe me, for him that thus comes unto God out of his animal heathen unregenerate life, τὰ ἀναγκαῖα σύντομα, the Catalogue of the necessaria credenda, is not over large, he must believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder, Heb. 11. 6. this, and it seems no more but this, is the minimum quod sic, the summ of the faith, without which 'tis impossible to please him: and therefore perhaps it was, that Ammianus Marcellinus expresses his wonder, that Constantius should call so many Councils, whereas before, Christian Religion was res simplicissima, a plain Religion without contentions or intricacies, and Epiphanius of the primitive times, that ἀλήθεια & εὐσέβεια, divided the Church into its true and erroneous members, Impiety the only Heretick, good life the orthodox professour.

Next the acknowledgment of the one God, and his eternal Son the crucified Messias of the world, and the Holy Ghost, those one and three Authors of our Religion, into which we are baptized (and those few other branches of that faith) the judgment to come, and the practice of Christian vertues in in the elevated Christian pitch, is the prime, if not only necessary. And though there be more to be known, fit to exercise his industry, or his curiosity, that hath treasur'd up these fundamentals in an honest heart; yet sure, not to serve his carnal mind, to purge his spleen, to provoke his choler, to break communions, to dilapidate that peace, that charity, that Christ, beyond all other inheritances, bequeathed to his disciples. Let us but joyn in that unity of spirit in those things which we all know to be Articles of Faith, and the precise conscientious practice of what we cannot chuse but know to be branches of our duty, and I shall never lead you into any confounding depths or mazes, divert you one minute by a walk in the gallery, from that more Christian imployment and task in the workhouse: And that will be the improvement of the second particular.

Lastly, as the Felix was guilty of those sins, which those vertues did reproach to him.

This Felix is to be met with in our books, presented to us on a double view of Tacitus and Josephus; Tacitus renders him an Eques Romanus, that Claudius had sent Procurator of Judæa, to manage it for a time, and saith, he did it per omnem sævitiam & libidinem, in the most cruel arbitrary manner; and then see the difference of an Apostolick Preacher, from Tertullus the Rhetor, the one at his humble address and acknowledgment of the obligations that the whole Nation had received from this most excellent Felix, ver. 2. But Saint Paul in a pricking close discourse, of justice, and (upon neglect of it) judgment to come.

Josephus he looks nearer into his actions, and finds him a tyrannical usurper of another mans wife, Drusilla seduced to his bed from her husband Azys the King of the Emesseni. And then the Sermon of the faith on Christ presently lets loose at this adulterous couple; and so you have the seasonableness of the περὶ ἐγκρατείας too, of chastity to the unchaste Felix, and of judgment to come on such wasting sins.

This will certainly teach the Preacher, the combatant of the Lord, the νομίμως ἀθλεῖν, the regular manner of his duelling with sin, not the ἀέρα δέρειν, wounding the empty air, lashing those sins or sinners, that are out of reach of his stripes, but the closer, nearer encounter, the directing his blows at those crimes that are present to him, most culpable and visible in his Auditory; and thus grasping with the Goliah of Gath, the tallest Philistine in the company.

There is a wide distance betwixt reproaching of present, and absent sinners, the same that betwixt reproof, and backbiting, the boldness and courage of a champion, and the detractions and whispers of a villain; the first, is an indication of spirit; the second, of gall; the first, that a man dares attempt the loving, and saving of his brother, when he shall endanger being curs'd and hated for it, sacrifice your opinion to your health, your kindness to your souls; the second, is a character of a Sollicitor fee'd on none but Satans errand, an Orator to set you a railing, but not a trembling, one that can write Satyrs, on condition they shall do you no good, incense, but not reform, that if it shall be possible for hell to lose by his Sermon, will never preach more; The one meaneth to transform his Auditory into converts and Saints, the other into Broylers and Devils; the one hath all the charity, the other all the mean malice and treachery in his design.

And having such a copy before our eyes, suppose a man should divert a little to transcribe it, and instead of prudence, and tempering and reviling of those that are out of our reach, reason a while of one branch of justice, yea, and of the faith of Christ, in which 'tis possible we may some of us be concern'd; and enquire, Whether there be not a piece of Turkish Divinity stole out of their Alchoran into our Creed; that of Prosperum & felix scelus virtus vocatur, whether the great laws of Vertue and Vice, be not by some Politici, taken out of the Ephemerides, nothing decreed honest, but what we can prognosticate successful, the [victa Catoni] the liking that cause which the heavens do not smile on, is a piece of Philosophical sullenness, which we have not yet learn'd of Christ; What is this, but as Saint Bernard complains in his time, that those images had the most hearty adorations performed to them, which had most of the gold and gemms about them; the God obliged to the Image, and the Image to the dress, for all the Votaries it met with; Have the Romanists marks of the Church so convinc'd us, that we must presently forsake a Saviour, because we see him in danger of crucifying, tear our Gospels, and run out with horrour, assoon as we come to the 26. of Mat. The multitude with swords and staves for to take him? Was the Cause of God worth the charge and pains of killing men formerly, and is it not worth the patience and constancy of suffering now? Is there any condition in the world so hugely desireable, as that of suffering for or with Christ? Ἰδὲ, μακαρίζομεν τοὺς ὑπομένοντας, [Behold, we count them happy that suffer,] was Gospel in Saint James his days, Chap. 5. 11. (the μακαρίζειν denotes the state of the οἱ μάκαρες, the dead Saints in their countrey of Vision, as you know Saint Steven at the minute of his sufferings saw the glory of God, and Jesus sitting) the state of suffering is a state of bliss, I may add a superiour degree of a glorified state, a more than ἰσαγγελία, a dignity above that Orbe that the Angels move in; For, they for want of Bodies are deprived of the honour of suffering, all that they aspire to, is but to be our Seconds, our Assistants in this combate; only Christ and we have the enclosure of that vast preferment. And if there be any need to heighten it yet further, is there any prize more worthy that masculine valour, than that venerable sacred name Jerusalem the Mother of us all, that brought us forth unto Christ, begot us to all our hope of bliss, and now, for no other crime but that, is a strugling under the pangs and agonies of a bitter combate with the ingratefull'st children under Heaven? the Church of England, I mean, which whosoever hath learning and temper enough to understand, knows to be the brightest image of primitive purity, the most perfect conjuncture of the most ancient and most holy Faith, that for these twelve hundred years any man ever had the honour of defending, or suffering for. And should the provocations of an ungracious people the not valuing or not walking worthy of the treasures here reserv'd, the rude continued iniquities of our holy things, tempt God to deliver it up, as he did once his Ark to the Philistins, his Christ to the Pharisees and the Souldiers, the zeal of the one, and the fury of the other; yet sure this would not be the confuting of what now I say, 'twould not, I must hope, be an argument of Gods renouncing that Ark, and that Christ, which he did not thus deliver. The Turks having conquer'd and torn out of the Christians hands the places of the Birth and passion of Christ, did after this way of Logick, infer that God had judg'd the cause for Mahomet against Christ; and Trajan could ask the primitive Martyr Ignatius, Et nos non tibi videmur θεοφόροι, &c. Have not we as much of God in us as you, who prosper by the help of our deities against our enemies? Let me purloin or borrow this heathen piece out of your hands, and I shall be able to give you an antienter piece in exchange for it, a thorough Christian Resolution of abiding by God, of approving our selves to Heaven, and to our own breasts, whatsoever it costs us, of venturing the Ermins fate (the very Hunters hand, rather than foul her body) the pati, & mori posse, the passive as well as the active courage, which will bear us up through all difficulties, bring us days of refreshment here, or else provide us anthems in the midst of flames, a paradise of comfort here, and of joyes hereafter. and let this serve for the exemplifying the point in hand, the fitness of our Apostles discourse to Felix's state.

I might do it again by telling you of the dreadful majesty that dwells in this house, the designation of it to be a house of Prayer to all people, a place of crying mightily to the Lord at such times as these: should I let loose a whole hour on this theme in this place, 'twould be but too perfect a parallel of Saint Pauls discourse of chastity before Felix, which in any reason ought to set many of my Auditors a trembling, but it seems we have not yet sufferings enough to do so: and there is one particular behind that will rescue you from this uneasie subject, the manner of Saint Pauls handling this theme, by way of reasoning. And when he reasoned, &c.

The importance of this reasoning I shall but name to you, which I conceive to be, 1. The proposing to a very Heathens consideration, the equity and reasonableness that there should be a judgment to come, to recompence the unjust and incontinent person. And 2. the charging home to each sinners heart, the extream unreasonableness, that for so poor advantages as either of those sins bring in to any man, he should think fit to venture that dismal payment in another world.

And now my Brethren, to conclude this reasoning, and your task of patience together; when you are likely to have so little excuse in perishing, so no colour of reason for so wild an option, of chusing death in the errour of your wayes, when you must be so out of countenance when you come to that place of darkness, so unable to give an account to any fiend that meets you, why you should cast away all the treasures in the world for that so sad a purchase, and act that really which the Rabbins feign of the Child Moses, prefer the coal of fire before the ingot of gold, chop it into your mouths and so singe your tongue, not to make you stammer with him, but howle with Dives for ever after, and not get one drop to quench the tip of that tongue, which is so sadly tormented in those flames; when, I say, you are likely to come so excuseless to your torments, so unpitied, and so scorned, so without all honour in your sufferings, as having but your petitions granted you, advanced to your vengeance as to your preferment, optantibus ipsis, whilst Heaven was look'd on as a troublesome impertinent suiter, and you would not be happy, only because you would not; O remember then the Disciples farewel, when they gave over the Jews, and turn'd to the Gentiles, Behold you despisers, and wonder, and perish; But before you do so, if it be possible give one vital spring, and if but for Pythagoras's [ἀσχύνης σωτῆρ] for the reverence, (if not the charity) for the honour and awe you owe to your own souls, if not to save them, yet to save your credits in the world, to manifest that you are not such abject fools, retract your choice, call back the hostages you have given to Satan, and set out on a more rational, more justifiable voyage. You have heard of the rich Spaniard that had put all his estate into jewels, how he was ready to run mad with the fansie of thinking what a condition he should be in, if all men next morning should awake wise, that he should become not only the arranteſt Begger, but the most ridiculous Fool. And believe it, that last Trump when it begins to sound, will have the faculty thus to make all men wise, to disabuse, and inspire the whole world with a new sense: Those that are in the flames before you, will reproach your madness, count you but Bedlams to come thither; Poor Dives, if he had but a Messenger, would long since have sent you a hideous report and admonition, that whatever it cost you, you should not venture coming to that place of torments; O let Saint Pauls reasoning do it to us here, that we make not such piteous bargains, pay not so sad a price for so pure a nothing. Let us be wise now, that we may be happy eternally; which wisdom the only way to that happiness, God of his infinite mercy grant us all: to whom, &c.

The

The bleſſing influence of CHRIST's Reſurrection.

The NINTH, Being An Eaſter SERMON at S. Maries in Oxford, A.D. 1644.

ACTS III. 26.

God having raiſed up his ſon Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

IT WERE but a cold unequal oblation to ſo bleſſed, ſo glorious a feſtivity, to entertain you with the ſtory of the Day, to fetch out the napkin and the grave-cloaths, to give you that now for news, that every ſeventh day for ſixteen hundred years, hath ſo conſtantly preach'd unto you. 'Tis true indeed what Ariſtotle obſerves in his μηχανικὰ, that the every-day wonders are the greateſt, the perfecteſt miracles thoſe that by their commonneſs have loſt all their veneration; he ſpeaks it of a circle, which is of all things moſt common, and yet of all things moſt ſtrange, made up of all contraries, and ſo the mother of all prodigies in art, of all the engines and machines in the world. And the ſame might be reſolved of this yearly, this weekly revolution, the greateſt, but common'ſt feſtival in the Chriſtians Calendar, βασιλίσσα ἡμέρα, the Queen-day, as S. Chry. calls it, I, and that Queen, all glorious within, a many ſaving miracles incloſed in it, and yet this Queen of moſt familiar condeſcendings, is content to be our every weeks proſpect, and after all this, as glorious ſtill as ever, no gluts, no ſatieties in ſuch beholdings.

But ſuppoſing this, I muſt yet tell you, one precious gemm there is in this jewel, one part of the great buſineſs of this day, which is not ſo commonly taken notice of, and that is the bleſſing ſaving office of the day to us, the benign aſpect, the ſpecial influence of the riſing of Chriſt on the poor Sinners ſoul, the uſe, the benefit of the Reſurrection; and to diſcover this unto you, let me with confidence aſſure you, there is not a vein in this whole mine, a beam in this whole treaſure of light, a plume of thoſe healing wings of the Sun of righteouſneſs, a Text in this whole Book of God, able to ſtand you in more ſtead, than this cloſe of S. Peters Sermon: That our juſtification is more dependent on his reſurrection, than his death it ſelf, is ſometimes clearly affirmed by S. Paul, he was delivered up for our offences, and raiſed again for our juſtification, Rom. 4. 25. It is God that juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again, Rom. 8. 34. and ſo, for ſalvation it ſelf, And being made perfect, he became the Authour of eternal ſalvation, Heb. 5. 9. τελειωθεὶς, being conſummate and crown'd, (as τελείωσις ἀθλήτου, is the crowning of Martyrs) or τελειωθεὶς, being conſecrated to his great Melchiſedech-prieſtly office (as the context enforceth, and τελειῶσθαι in the Septuagint imports) in either ſenſe a denotation of the reſurrection of Chriſt peculiarly; and in this capacity conſidered, he became the αἴτιος σωτηρίας, the Author of our ſalvation. But for all this compacted together, and the diſtinct explication of the manner how all this is wrought by Chriſt's reſurrection, this is a felicity reſerv'd, the peculiar prerogative of this Text, brought out now and prepared for you, if you can but have patience till you ſee it open'd. God having raiſed up his ſon Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs, &c.

In theſe words, one fundamental difficulty there is, the clearing of which, will be the firſt part of my task, and ground-work of my future diſcourſe; and that is, to enquire what is meant by ſending Chriſt to bleſs, which when we have open'd, there will remain but two particulars behind, The time of this ſending, and the interpretation of this bleſſing; the time of this ſending, after his reſurrection, God having raiſed up, ſent him. The interpretation of this bleſſing, or wherein it conſiſts, In turning every one, &c.

I begin with the firſt of theſe, To clear the fundamental difficulty, or explain what is meant by ſending to bleſs.

All ſorts of Arts and Sciences have their τεχνολογήματα, their peculiar phraſes and words of art, which cannot be interpreted fully, but by the critical obſerving their importance among thoſe Artiſts. Caſaubon, I remember, obſerves it among the Deipnoſophiſts, that they had their ἀτεχνολογήματα, that none but Athenæus can interpret to us: and certainly the Book of God and Chriſt that ſpake as never man ſpake, muſt not be denied this priviledge; Among the many that might be referr'd to this head, two here we are fall'n on together, the matter of our preſent enquiry, ſending, and bleſſing. The word שלח to ſend, and the Greek parallel to it, if we look it in common Dictionaries, and in many places of the Scripture it ſelf, is a word of moſt vulgar obvious notion, but if you will ask the Scripture-Critick, you ſhall find in it ſometimes a rich, weighty, pretious importance, To deſign, or deſtine, to inſtal, or conſecrate, to give commiſſion for ſome great office, [How ſhall they preach, unleſs they be ſent?] and a hundred the like. Thus we hear of the ſending of Kings, Judges, Prophets; but eſpecially, of our ſpiritual Rulers, under the Goſpel: No other title aſſign'd them, but that of שלוחים or ἀπόστολοι, the miſſi, the ſent or the Meſſengers of Chriſt, (the more ſhame for thoſe that contemn this miſſion, lay violent hands on that ſacred function, the meaneſt and loweſt of the people, (to make one parallel more betwixt Jeroboams Kingdom, and ours) thoſe παραχαράγματα, in Ignatius phraſe, braſs Coines of their own impreſſing, ſo contrary to the royal prerogative of heaven, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, in S. Peters agoniſtical ſtile, that run without any watch-word of Gods to ſtart them; yea, and run like Ahimaaz, out-run all others that were truly ſent) The defect in our tongue for the expreſſing of this, is a little repair'd by the use of the word Sent, and so read it thus, God having raised up his son Jesus, gave him commission to bless us, you will somewhat discern and remember the importance of this first phrase.

And so again, ברך to bless, and the εὐλογῶν, in the Text, so fully answerable to it, though it be a vulgar stile in all Authors, yet a propriety it hath in this place, and in some others of Scripture, noting the Office of a Priest, to whom it peculiarly belongs to pronounce, and pray for blessings, i. e. in this eminent sense, to bless others.

For there being two sorts of Priests in the Pentateuch, or if you will, two acts of the same Divine function, the one of blessing, the other of sacrificing, the one observable in the Fathers of every Family, in Gen. (who therefore use solemnly to bless their children) and after the enlarging of Families into Kingdoms, belonging to Kings, and eminently and signally notified in Melchisedech, Gen. 14. 19. the other more conspicuous in Aaron, and his Successors in the Jewish Priesthood: Both these are most eminently remarkable in our Christ, the one in his death, the other ever since his resurrection. The sacrificing part most clearly a shadow of that one great oblation on the Altar of the Cross for us, and in spight of Socinus, such a Priest once was Christ, though but once, in spight of the Papists: Once, when he offer'd that one precious oblation of himself, the same person both Priest, and Sacrifice; and but once, no longer Priest thus, than he was thus a sacrificing; this is his παραβατὸν ἱερωσύνη, or μὴ μεταβατὸν, Heb. 7.23. a Priesthood not suffer'd to continue, the same minute determin'd his mortal life and mortal Priesthood, buried the Aaronical rites and the Priest together. But for the Melchisedech Priesthood, that of blessing in my Text, that of intercession, powerful intercession, i. e. giving of grace sufficient to turn us; this is the Office, that now still belongs unto Christ, the peculiar grand Office, to which that notion of χριστὸς (to which Christs durable unction) belongs, by which he was τετελειωμένον εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, consecrate for evermore, Heb. 7. ult. parallel to that so frequent style of his, A Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech; not that Melchisedech was a Priest for ever, and Christ like him in that, but that Christ was to continue for ever such a Priest as Melchisedech in Gen. was; or, that his Aaronical Priesthood had an end, one sacrifice, and no more, but his other Melchisedech priesthood was to last for ever; which you will more discern, if you proceed to the second particular, the date of this sending, the time of his instalment into his Priesthood, after his resurrection: God having raised up, sent, &c.

That the resurrection instal'd Christ to his eternal Priestly office, (or to that part of it, which was to endure for ever,) is a truth that nothing but inadvertence hath made men question; There's nothing more frequently insinuated in the Scripture; were not my Text demonstrative enough, first [raised up] and then thus [sent] or instal'd, the 5. and 7. to the Heb. would more than prove it: so in that fundamental grand prophecy, to which all that is said there, refers, that in the 110. Psal. the Priesthood of Christ is usher'd in with a [Sit thou at my right hand] ver. 1. ruling in the midst of enemies, ver. 2. the day of his power, ver. 3. all these certain evidences of his resurrection; and then, and not till then, ver. 4. [The Lord hath sworn, &c. thou art a Priest for ever:] a mortal, dying, determinable Priest he was before in his death, but now after his resurrection from that death, a Priest for ever. Once more, Heb. 7.15. perhaps there may be some Emphasis in the [ἀνίσταται, ariseth] there ariseth another Priest, or he ariseth another, an Aaronical Priest in his death, but ἕτερος ἱερεὺς, a Melchisedech, (i. e. another kind of) Priest in his resurrection. Add to this, that the Melchisedech-Priest must be like the type, a King as well as a Priest, (which Christ as Man was not, till after his resurrection) and so that other famous type of our Jesus, Zach. 6. 13. Josua the son of Josedek the High-Priest, he shall be a Priest upon the throne, and the counsel of peace (that grand consultation of reconciling sinners to God) shall be betwixt them both, in the union of that Sceptre and that Ephod, that Mitre and that Crown, the χριστὸς βασιλεὺς, and ἱερεὺς, the Regal and Sacerdotal Office of Christ; and as one, so the other, both dated alike from after the resurrection; ὅσπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι, the thing that by this accumulation of Scripture-testimonies, it was necessary to demonstrate. For the clearing of which truth, and reconciling or preventing all difficulties about it, please you to take it in these few Propositions.

1. That the Crucifixion of Christ was a Sacrifice truly propitiatory and satisfactory for the sins of the whole world, (and there's nothing further from this Text, or our present Explication of it, than to derogate from the legality, the amplitude, extent, or precious value of this sacrifice.)

Yea and 2. that Christ himself thus willingly offering, delivering up himself for us, may in this be said a Priest, or to have exercised in his death a grand act of Priesthood.

But then 3. this is an act of Aaronical Priesthood, which Christ was never to exercise again, having done it once, Heb. 7.27. and so far distant from his eternal Priesthood. Or, to speak more clearly, an act of Christ this, as of a second Adam, a common person, order'd by the wisdom of God to bear the chastisement of our peace, the Scape-goat to carry all our sins on his head into the wilderness, into a land not inhabited, Deut. 16.22. the ἄδης in our Creed, to which he went; and so, though it were typified by all the sacrifices of the Priests, and though in it that whole body of rites were determin'd, (no more Aaronical Priests seasonable after this one sacrifice) yet still this is no part of the eternal regal Melchisedech-priesthood, that of powerful intercession, that of blessing us in the Text; for though the death of Christ tend mightily toward the blessing of us, though there were a wonderful act of intercession on the Cross, [Father forgive them] yet that powerful intercession, that for grace to make us capable of mercy, that blessing in this Text, the power of conferring what he prays for, this 'twas to which the resurrection instal'd him.

4. If all this will not satisfie, why then one way of clearing this truth farther, I shall be able to allow you that the death of Christ consider'd as a sacrifice, may under that notion pass, not for an act of a Priest in facto esse, but for a ceremony of his inauguration in fieri; thus in the 8. of Levit. at the consecrating of Aaron and his sons, you shall find sacrifices used, the Ram, the Ram of consecration, ver. 22. and apportion'd to that, this Lamb of God, that by dying taketh away the sins of the world, may pass for a Lamb of consecration, the true critical importance of the τελειῶσαι διὰ παθημάτων, Heb. 2. 10. that the Captain of our salvation was to be consecrated by sufferings. This death of his, that looks so like an act of Aaronical-Priesthood, is the preparative rite of consecrating him to that great eternal Priesthood after the order of Melchisedech, and this preparative most absolutely necessary both in respect of Christ and us, of Christ who was to drink of the brook of the way, before his head should be lifted up, humbled to death, &c. Phil. 2. wherefore God hath also highly exalted him, for that suffering, crown'd him;

Yea,

Yea, and in reſpect of us too, Heb. 2.9. who were to be ranſom'd by his death, before we could be bleſs'd by his reſurrection, deliver'd from the captivity of Hell, before capable of that grace which muſt help us to heaven, which ſeems to me to be the deſcant of that plain ſong, Heb. 2. 17, 18. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, i. e. as the 18. verſe explains it, to ſuffer being tempted, to undergo the infirmities and mortality of our fleſh, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Prieſt, &c. his infirmities and effuſion of his blood are not this Prieſthood of it ſelf, but the qualifying of the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, to become a high Prieſt, and that a merciful and faithful one, merciful to pardon ſlips, and faithful to uphold from falling, and ſo a Prieſt ſuch as it is moſt for our intereſt to have. And ſo once more the dream is out that Artemidorus mentions of one; he dream'd he was crucified, and the conſequent was, ἱερεὺς ἀνηλίφθη, he was taken up to be a Prieſt of Dioſpolis; And by the way, let me tell my Clergy Brethren, if that ſhall prove the conſequent of our Prieſthood, which was the preſage of Chriſts, the pains, the contumelies, yea and death of that Croſs; what is this, but a bleſſed lot, that hath brought us ſo near our Chriſt, and a means to conſecrate us too to our βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, to be Kings and Prieſts for ever in Heaven?

I have thus far labour'd to clear this doctrine, calculated the time of Chriſts enſtalment to his eternal Prieſthood, and found it exactly the ſame with the ἀρα here in this Text, not till after the reſurrection, to which I ſhall only add one final grand proof of all, which will ſum up all that hath been hitherto ſaid, That parting ſpeech of Chriſts, Mat. ult. [All power is given unto me both in heaven and earth,] that, you know, was after the reſurrection, and ſo from thence that power was dated, and that commiſſion of bleſſing, that here we ſpeak of; The act of his eternal Prieſthood is his interceſſion, that his powerful interceſſion, that his giving of that grace which he interceeds for, that the bleſſing in this Text; and ſo the commiſſion of bleſſing was given him, not till after the reſurrection. And believe it, though it look all this while like a rough ſapleſs ſpeculation, there is yet ſomewhat in it, that may prove very uſeful and ordinable to practice, a hint if not a means of removing one of the harmful'ſt ſcandals, and impediments of good life, that is to be met with. We are Chriſtians all, and by that claim, τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, on rank, and on march toward eternal life; and yet many of us live like ſo many Mahometans or China-infidels, quite out of all form of obedience to the commands of Chriſt, we do not reverence him ſo much, as to pretend toward ſerving him, not advance ſo far as but to be hypocrites in that matter, live in all the ſenſuality and vileneſs in the world, and yet live confidently, reſolve we have done what is required of us by Chriſt, can juſtifie our ſtate for ſuch as God is pleaſed with; And if we be called to account, the anchor of all this unreaſonable falſe hope of ours, is moſt conſtantly this, that Chriſt our Prieſt hath propitiated for us, we fly to our City of refuge till our Prieſt be dead, and then we are quit by proclamation, out of the reach of the avenger of blood. 'Tis the death of Chriſt we depend on, to do all our task for us, his prieſtly, not regal office, we are reſolved to be beholding to; In that we have Chriſt the Sacrificer, Chriſt the Reconciler, Chriſt the Satisfier, and theſe are Chriſts enough to keep us ſafe, without the aid of Chriſt the King, that Judaical unedifying notion of a reigning Meſſias; and then, quis ſeparabit? what ſin, what devils, what legion, what act, what habit, what cuſtom, what indulgence in ſin, i. e. what Tophet, what Hell ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love, the favour, the heaven of God?

He that hath Chriſt the Prieſt, hath all; he that believes in the ſufferings, hath Chriſt the Prieſt, though not the King; hath the faith, though not the works, i. e. the righteouſneſs, though not the Heatheniſh morality; the Proteſtant, Orthodox part, though not the Popery, the Antichriſtianiſm of a Chriſtian, and ſo, is but the richer for that want, hath the greater portion in the ſufferings of Chriſt, by the abundance of thoſe ſins he ſuffered for; the more of the Prieſt is ours, by how much the leſs of the King is diſcernible in us. Having driven our unchriſtian lives to this principle, this ſolemn conceit of ours, that the Prieſtly office of Chriſt (to which, if rightly underſtood, we owe all our ſalvation) is nothing but the death of that Chriſt, methinks 'twere now poſſible to convince the ſecure Fiduciary of the error and ſophiſtry of his former way, to rob him of his beloved cheat, now that we have prov'd ſo clear, that Chriſt commenc'd his eternal Prieſthood (that on which all our bleſſedneſs depends) from the ἀναστάσεως, not till after his reſurrection. For Tell me, O thou whom my ſoul loveth, and mourneth, and bleedeth for in ſecret, thou carnal confident, that haſt wearied thy ſelf in the greatneſs of thy way, thy profane wild-gooſe chaſe of ſin, and yet haſt not ſaid, there is no hope, thou that wilt profane and be ſaved too, riot and be ſaved too, reconcile faction, rebellion, ſacrilege, oppreſſion, oaths, carnality, all the unchriſtian practices in the world, (the confutation of the whole Goſpel) with ſalvation; Tell me, I ſay, what Chriſt it is, thou wilt be tried, or ſaved by; by Chriſt the King? I am confident thou wert never ſo impudent, to venture thy rebellions to that cognizance: Well, it is Chriſt the Prieſt thou ſo dependeſt on; and why Chriſt the Prieſt? Why? becauſe he hath ſacrificed himſelf for thee. Now let me tell thee, 1. That ſome have gueſt ſhrewdly, that though Chriſt died for all the ſinners and ſins in the world, yet his ſufferings being but finite in duration, though infinite in reſpect of the perſon of the ſufferer, will not prove a λύτρον ἰσόρροπον, a proportionable ranſom for thy ſins; I mean, the impenitent ſinners ſins, in duration infinite, being, as they are, undetermin'd, uncut off by repentance. Thou muſt return, reform, confeſs and forſake, or elſe thou haſt out-ſinn'd the very ſufferings of Chriſt, out-ſpent that vaſt ranſom, out damn'd ſalvation it ſelf: that may be a conviction ad hominem perhaps, and therefore I mention'd it in the firſt place. But then, 2. Thou art, it ſeems, all this while miſtaken in thy Prieſt, thou art, it ſeems, all for the Aaronical, and haſt not yet thought of the Melchiſedech-Prieſt; thou art all for the ſacrificer, and never dream'ſt of the bleſſer. Thou layeſt all thy weight on the Croſs of Chriſt, and art ready to preſs it down to hell with thee, with leaning onely, but not crucifying one luſt on it; never thinkeſt of being riſen with Chriſt, the condition ſo indiſpenſably neceſſary to give us claim to the benefit of his death, and ſo in effect, thou leaveſt Chriſt in the grave, and thy ſelf in that mournful caſe of the deſpairing Diſciples, ſperaveramus, we had hoped, but never look'ſt after a reſurrection. 'Twas Saint Pauls ſaying, [If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we were of all men moſt miſerable] I ſuppoſe it is, in this life only, not of us, but of Chriſt on this earth; for it is brought to prove Chriſts reſurrection, there, and it follows immediately, but now is Chriſt raiſed, 1 Cor. 15.20. and if that be the ſenſe of the ζωῇ ταύτῃ there, the [this life of Chriſt] contains alſo his death under it, for both thoſe together it is, that muſt make up the oppoſite to the re- ſurrection. And then I ſhall enlarge the Apoſtles words, though not ſenſe, If in the earthly life and death of Chriſt we had hope only, a ſad life, and a contumelious death, if there were no ſuch thing as a reſurrection to help bleſs us, we were of all men the moſt miſerable; hadſt thou no other Prieſt, but the Sacrificer, the mortal finite Aaronical-Prieſt, nothing but the ranſom of Chriſts death (which though it be never ſo high a price, is yet finally unavailable to many for whom it was paid, he bought them that are damn'd for denying him, 2 *Pet.*2.1. the wilful ſinner treads under foot the Son of God, profanes the blood of the covenant by which he is ſanctified, Heb. 10. 29. and ſo there's deſtruction enough ſtill behind for the impenitent wretch, after all that Chriſt hath ſuffer'd for thee) what forms of ejulation and lamentation were enough for thee, Alas my Brother! ah Lord! or ah his glory! what mourning or wailing were thy portion? Tell me, wilt thou be content to leave thy Father before he hath bleſſed thee? Jacob would not do ſo with the Angel, but would wreſtle his thigh out of joynt, rather than thus part with him, and even the profane Eſau will run and weep bitterly for it; and then art thou more nice and tender than that ſmooth Jacob, wretchleſs than that profane Eſau, if thou content'ſt thy ſelf only to have brought Chriſt to the grave, that ſtate of curſe, and never look'ſt out for the bleſſing provided for thee in the reſurrection: Miſtake me not, I would not drive you from this Croſs of Chriſt, diſcourage you from that moſt neceſſary act of faith, the apprehending the crucified Saviour; No, if my lot had fallen on a Good-friday, I would have ſpent my whole hour on that one theme, and known nothing among you but Jeſus Chriſt and him crucified: Only my deſire is, that you will not allow one act of faith to turn Projector, to get all the cuſtom from the reſt, that you will permit Chriſt to live in you, as well as to die for you, to bleſs as well as to ſatisfie, to riſe again for your juſtification, as well as to be delivered up for your offences, that you will attend him at Galilee as well as at Golgotha, think of the triumphant as well as the crucified Saviour, the Melchiſedech as well as the mortal Aaron-Prieſt. And not only to think of his riſing, I muſt tell you, but count of a work, a mighty important neceſſary work, that of turning, in this Text, to be wrought on us, and in us by that reſurrection now, after the pardon impetrated by his paſſion; I ſay, not only to think of and believe him riſen, the Devil hath as much of that thought, as frequent repeated acts of that belief as you, and there is not ſuch magick in that faith, or phanſie, as to bear you to Heaven by meditating on his journey thither, to elevate you, by gazing on his aſcenſion. No, that faith muſt be in our hearts too, that principle of action, and practice, they muſt open to him as the Tulip to the riſing Sun, or as the everlaſting dores to that King of glory, give him an alacrious hoſpitable reception, as the friend to the friend, as the diſeaſed to the Phyſician, deliver themſelves up moſt willing Patients to all his bleſſing warming influences, to all his medicinable ſaving methods, that he may ſanctifie, and reform, bleſs and turn, live and reign in our hearts by faith, and prove a Shiloh in the Criticks notion of the word, from שלה fortunatus eſt, the work of the Lord, for which he raiſed him, thrive and proſper in his hands. We muſt riſe with Chriſt as well as die with him, doe as the bodies of the Saints that ſlept, Mat.28.53. ariſe and come out of our graves of ſin, go into the holy City and appear to many. Our reſurgere muſt be attended with an ire, (an ire of obedience, Go, and he goeth; an ire of motion too, an active ſtirring vital life, not ſit only or creep, but go and walk, and run the way of Gods commandments) and then 2. we muſt have a term for that motion, a matter for that obedience, an ubi for that ire, and that [civitatem ſanctam,] 1. the City, and then the holy; the life of the man, the Citizen, the Common-wealths man, riſen with Chriſt, in every of theſe capacities; and then the ſanctam, a ſuperaddition of all ſanctity, of all that's Chriſtian; and in all theſe notions we muſt ire, and praire, go before as a ἀρχηγός, and ſo do that great act of charity, attract others after us by exemplary lightſom actions, apparere multis, conduct the ſtray multitude to heaven. That this is the benefit of Chriſts reſurrection, and that there is no faith, or belief in this article to be counted of, but that is thus improv'd, thus evidenced, is the ſpecial thing that I meant to perſwade you from theſe words, which I ſhall endeavour to do, by reſerving the remainder of the time for the third and laſt particular, the interpretation of this Prieſtly office of Chriſt, to which the reſurrection inſtal'd him, or wherein this bleſſing conſiſts, In turning, &c.

For the equal dealing with which, I conceive my ſelf obliged to ſhew you theſe three things:

1. What is meant by turning away every one from his iniquities.
2. What the dependence is betwixt this and the reſurrection of Chriſt.
3. How this turning is an interpretation of bleſſing, God having raiſed up his ſon Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs us, in turning, &c.

For the firſt, every ſyllable will be a hint of direction for this matter, 1. Turn] that one ſyllable is the beſt deſcription of the great ſaving grace of repentance, μετάνοια τῆς νοῦ, in Athanaſius's phraſe, the inverting, the tranſpoſing, or the turning of the ſoul, and leſs than that, will not prove ſufficient; humbling, and confeſſing, and grieving, and hating, will not ſerve the turn, theſe are but initial preparatives to that laſt hand, but dull lines, but liveleſs monagrams, which that vital pencil in this Text, that of turning, muſt fill up; The want of this one accompliſhment, is the ruining of all, makes that vaſt Chaſm, as wide as that betwixt Dives and Abrahams boſom; the ſorrowing, confeſſing, ſelf-hating, (if unreformed) ſinner may fry in Hell, when none but the returning Prodigal can find admiſſion to Heaven; and that for the [turning.] The manner of which, will be worth the obſerving alſo; the word [ἀποστρέφω,] here is common to Chriſt and us, but in a different power and ſenſe, he by way of efficience, we of non-reſiſtance, active in Chriſt, and but neutral in us, he to turn us, and then we to turn, not to reſiſt that power of his grace, not to go on, when he turns: So in other phraſes of Scripture, he to draw, and then we to run after him; God to work in us both to will and to do, and then we to work out our own ſalvation; he to knock, and we to open; he to rouze the ſleeper, and we to awake, and riſe from the dead; we to obey his grace, but his grace moſt neceſſary thus to turn us: or yet more plainly, Chriſt to uſe all the means of turning us, that can belong to God, dealing with reaſonable creatures, and ſuch as he means to crown, or puniſh; his call, his promiſe, his threats, his grace, preventing, exciting, aſſiſting, in a word, all but violence, and coaction, (which is deſtructive of all judgment to come) and we not to reſiſt, to grieve, to quench thoſe bleſſing methods, to turn when he will have us turn. Then [every one of you] the extent of that grace, conſequent to that reſurrection, He is gone up on high, hath led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men, men indefinitely there, and all fleſh in the other prophecy (I will pour out my ſpirit on all fleſh) and here every one of you, i. e. primarily every one of you Jewes, [unto you firſt] in the beginning of the Verſe, but then from them diffuſively to all others; The σωτήριος χάρις, Tit. 2. 11. hath appeared unto all men, παιδεύουσα, &c. taking them all into the ſchool of diſcipline, teaching them to live ſoberly, and juſtly, and piouſly in this world; and again [every one] this turning is indiſpenſably neceſſary, and therefore to every ſelf flatterer, O be not deceived, &c. and bring forth fruit, &c. and think not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abrahaam, &c. There is no diſpenſation for Abrahams Children, for the elect, for men of ſuch and ſuch perſwaſions, no ſpecial priviledge for Favourites, no Poſtern-gate, or back ſtairs for ſome choice privado's, all their prerogative is the ὑμῖν πρῶτον, earlier grace, or more grace, and conſequently ſo much the more obligation, but then except you repent, and return, you ſhall all periſh. 3. [From his iniquities] Iniquities, firſt, and then [his] Iniquities; not the παραπτώματα, every legal breach, or declination, the reſurrection and grace of Chriſt will not thus return us to a Paradiſe on earth, will not thus ſublime us quite out of our frail ſinner-ſtate, till our mortality be ſwallowed up with life, but the πονηρίαι, villanies and wickedneſſes of the carnal man, the waſting acts, and noiſome habits of an unſanctified life, from theſe, Chriſt died and roſe, that he might turn us. There is not a more noxious miſtake, a more fatal piece of Stoiciſm amongſt Chriſtians, than not to obſerve the different degrees and elevations of ſin, one of the firſt, another of the ſecond magnitude, one ignis fatuus or falſe ſtar differing from another in diſhonour, though not in glory, ſome ſpots that are ſpots of ſons, that by a general repentance, without particular victory over them, by an habitual reſolution to amend all that is amiſs, without actual getting out of theſe frailties, are capable of Gods mercy in Chriſt, reconcileable with a regenerate eſtate, ſuch are our ἀσθενείαι, our weakneſſes, ignorances, and the like; and ſome that are not the ſpots of ſons, they which do them, ſhall not without actual reformation, and victory, and forſaking, enter, or inherit the kingdom of God, after all that Chriſt hath done, and ſuffered for them; ſuch our deliberate acts, and habits againſt light, againſt grace, the πονηρίαι, in the Text; and let me tell you, the not pondering theſe differences, not obſerving the grains, and ſcruples of ſin, how far the ἀσθενείαι, extend, and when they are overgrown into πονηρίαι, is the ground (that I ſay no more) of a deal of deſperate profaneneſs; We cannot keep from all ſin, and therefore count it loſt labour to endeavour to abſtain from any; having demonſtrated our ſelves men, by the ἀσθενείαι, we make no ſcruple to evidence our ſelves Devils too, by the πονηρίαι; the deſperation of perfect ſinleſsneſs, makes us ſecure in all vileneſs; and being engaged in weakneſs, we advance to madneſs; either hope to be ſaved with our greateſt ſins, or fear to be damned for our leaſt; and having reſolv'd it impoſſible to do all, reſolve ſecurely to do none; our infirmities may damn us, and our rebellions can do no more; our prayers, our almes have ſin in them, and our murthers and ſacriledges can be but ſinful: and ſo if the Devil or our intereſts will take the pains to ſolicite it, the deadlieſt ſin ſhall paſs for as innocent a creature, as tame, a ſtingleſs Serpent, as the faireſt Chriſtian vertue; and all this, upon the not obſerving the weight of the πονηρίαι here, which Chriſt roſe from the grave on purpoſe to turn us from, and from which whoſoever is not turned, ſhall never riſe unto life. Add unto this, the [ἀνὸς] the [his] iniquities, as it refers to the author of them, and this is the bill of challenge and claim to thoſe accurſed poſſeſſions of ours, nothing is ſo truly, ſo peculiarly ours, as our ſins; and of thoſe, as our πονηρίαι; Our frailties, our lapſes, our ignorances, the diſeaſes, and infelicities of our nature, which may inſenſibly fall from us, vix ea noſtra voco; but our waſting, wilful acts, and indulg'd habits, thoſe great Vultures and Tygres of the ſoul, they are moſt perfectly our own, the natural'ſt brats, and trueſt progeny, that ever came from our loins, nor Ζεὺς, nor μοῖρα, nor ἐρινύς, in Agamemnons phraſe, nor God, nor Fate, nor Fiend, are any way chargeable with them: The firſt were blaſphemy, the ſecond Stoiciſm and folly to boot, the third a bearing falſe witneſs againſt the devil himſelf, robbing him of his great fundamental title of διάβολος, Calumniator, and proving thoſe, that thus charge him, the greateſt Devils of the twain; and all this, is but one part of the [ἀνὸς] here, the [his] &c. as it refers to the Author. And [ἀνὸς] again, the [his] as it is a note of eminence, his peculiar, prime, reigning ſins, that all others, like the ὁ δῆμος, or commonalty are fain to be ſubject to, ſometimes a monarch-dictator-ſingle-ſin, a [the plague in his own heart] a principality of ambition, of pride, of luſt, of covetouſneſs, that all others at their diſtance adminiſter unto; ſometimes an optimacy of a few, all prime coequal in their power; and ſometimes a democracy, or popular ſtate, a whole Ægypt full of locuſts in one breaſt, a Gad, a troop or ſhole of ſins, all leading us captive to their ſhambles; and thus our Sovraign ſins, as different as our tempers, and every one the [ἀνὸς] here, every man from his iniquities. The ſumm of this firſt proſpect is briefly this, The turning every one from his iniquities, wherein Chriſts bleſſing us conſiſts, is his giving of grate ſufficient to work an univerſal, ſincere, impartial, thorough-change of every ſinner, from all his reigning, wilful ſins; The ſincerity, though not perfection of the new creature; And the dependence betwixt this and the reſurrection of Chriſt, is the ſecond, or next enquiry.

The reſurrection of Chriſt in the Scripture-ſtile, ſignifies not always the act of riſing from the dead, but the conſequent ſtate after that riſing, by the ſame proportion that καινὴ κτίσις, the new creation, and the being regenerate or born of God, ſignifie the ſtate of Sonſhip, and not the act of begetting only: So that in brief, the ἀναστήσας here, the raiſing up of Jeſus, ſignifies the new ſtate, to which Chriſt was inaugurate at his reſurrection, and contains under it all the ſeverals, of aſcenſion, of ſitting at the right hand of power, of the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and his powerful interceſſion for us in Heaven ever ſince, and to the end of the world; And this is the notion of the reſurrection of Chriſt, which is the bleſſer, which hath that influence on our turning; 'twill not be amiſs to ſhew you how.

And here I ſhall not mention that moral influence of his reſurrection upon ours; by the example of his powerful riſing out of the grave, to preach to us the neceſſity of our ſhaking off the grave-cloths, that cadaverous, chill, noiſome eſtate of ſin, ἵνα συνεγερθῶμεν τῷ Χριστῷ, to riſe again with him; This is the bleſſing in the Text; but this, the example of Chriſt might preach long enough to dead ſouls, before it would be hearkened unto, although the truth is, the antient Church by their ſetting apart theſe Holy-days for the baptizing of all that were baptized, and the whole ſpace betwixt this and Pentecoſt, and every Dominical in the year, for the geſture of ſtanding in all their ſervices, that no man might come near the earth, at the time that Chriſt roſe from it, did certainly deſire to enforce this moral on us, that our ſouls might now turn, and be bleſſed, riſe and be conformed to the image of Chriſts reſurrection; Bleſſed Lord! that it might be thus exemplary to us at this time. But to omit this, the ſpecial particulars wherein the reſurrection of Chriſt, as our bleſſer, hath its influence on our turning, are briefly theſe three:

1. The beſtowing on us ſome part of that Spirit, by which Chriſt was raiſed out of the grave. Conſider Rom. 8. verſe 11. and 'tis all that I ſhall ſay to you of that firſt particular. If the Spirit of him that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, dwell in you, he that raiſed up Chriſt, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you, that Spirit of power by which Chriſt was raiſed out of the grave, is the very efficient of our turning, our new birth, the Author of our preſent bleſſedneſs, and the pledge of our future immortality; God having raiſed his Son by his Spirit, anointed him with that Spirit, to work the like miracles daily on our ſouls, in bleſſing, in turning every one, &c. and that is the firſt thing.

2. Chriſts reſurrection hath a hand in bleſſing, in turning from iniquity, in reſpect to that ſolemn miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt promiſed before, and performed immediately after his aſcenſion. This not perſon, I mean, but office of the Holy Ghoſt, in ſetling a Paſtorage in the Church, and to it the conſequent power, and neceſſity of preaching, adminiſtring Sacraments, governing, cenſuring, all which were the effects of the Holy Ghoſts deſcending, and the direct interpretation of the λαβέτε πνεῦμα, then, and ever ſince then: To which if you pleaſe to add the promiſe of the annexion of the Spirit, and the inviſible grace of God to the orderly uſe of theſe, ſo far that the preaching of the Goſpel (not only that manner of preaching among us, that hath gotten the monopoly of all the ſervice of God into its Patent, the only thing that many of us pay all our devotion to; but any other way of making known the Goſpel of Chriſt, the doctrine of the ſecond Covenant) is call'd διακονία πνεύμα⟨τος⟩, 2 Cor. 3. 8. the adminiſtration, or means of diſpenſing the Spirit to us, and the Sacrament κοινωνία αἵμα⟨τος⟩, the communication of the bloud of Chriſt, yea and the cenſures, no carnal, weak, blunt weapons of our warfare, 2 Cor. 10. 4. but mighty through God, &c. you have then a ſecond energy of his reſurrection toward our turning, ſo great, that he that holds out againſt this method of power and grace, and will not turn nor underſtand after all this, ſhall never be capable of any other means of bleſſing, of working that great work for him: and ſo you ſee the ſecond ground of dependence, between the reſurrection, and bleſſing, or turning. O that it might work its deſign upon us, that to day we would hear the voice, that cries ſo loud to us out of heaven, the laſt perhaps numerically, I am ſure the laſt in ſpecie or kind, the laſt artifice, this of the Word, and Sacraments, that is ever to be hoped for to this end, to bleſs us, to turn us every one from our, &c.

3. The Reſurrection hath to do in bleſſing, and turning, in reſpect of Chriſts Interceſſion, that prime act of his Melchiſedech-prieſthood, his powerful interceſſion, i. e. in effect, conferring of grace on us; thus Rom. 8. 34. where that weighty buſineſs of juſtifying is laid more on the Reſurrection, than Death of Chriſt, (It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again.) 'Tis thus enlarged in the next words, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us; his interceſſion, powerful interceſſion at the right hand of God, (a conſequent of Gods raiſing up his Son Jeſus) hath a main influence on turning firſt, and then juſtifying the ungodly: and ſo Heb. 7. 25. Wherefore he is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, σώζειν εἰς τὸ παντελές, to ſave them for good and all, deliver them from all kind of aſſailants, from ſin, from themſelves, from wrath, from hell, though not abſolutely all, yet thoſe that come unto God by him, thoſe that turn when he will have them turn, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. Will you ſee this more clearly? Why then thus. There are three degrees of grace, preventing, exciting, aſſiſting: the firſt for converſion, the ſecond for ſanctifying, the third for perſeverance. And two acts of turning, being already premiſed, for the beginning of that bleſſing work, 1. By the power of that Spirit that raiſed Jeſus from the dead; Then 2. By the deſcent of the holy Ghoſt; (the firſt as the ſeed ſown, the ſecond as the rain and Sun-ſhine to bring it up) there is yet a third required for the earing and hardning of the corn, that of Gods giving increaſe, for the conſummating this weighty affair, for the confirming and eſtabliſhing thoſe that are initially bleſt and turned into a kind of Angelical ſtate of perſeverance: And to this it is, that Chriſts continual interceſſion belongs, for that is peculiarly for Diſciples, for thoſe that are Believers, Chriſtians already, that they may be preſerved and kept in that ſtate (as for Saint Peter in the time of ſhock, of tempeſt, when Satan is at his [expetivit]) that if we be permitted to be tempted, yet our faith may not fail, Luke 22. 32. Another copy of this interceſſion you have John 17. the whole chapter is a preſcript form of it, a platform of what he now daily performs in heaven. Look in the 11. verſe, Holy Father, keep through thine own name, own power, thoſe whom thou haſt given me, thoſe that are believers already: and in the 15. I pray not, that thou ſhouldſt take them out of the world, but that thou ſhouldſt keep them from the evil one; not for immunity from temptations, for an impeccable ſtate, but for a ſufficiency of grace to keep, to ſuſtain them in time of temptation, that they may be able to ſtand. So that this Interceſſion of Chriſt, is apportion'd and adequate to the προκόπ⟨τοντες, proficients, thoſe that are Believers already, Diſciples, (or others to come, that ſhall be ſuch, and when they are pray'd for, are conſidered under that notion, as 'tis clear ver. 20. Neither pray I for theſe alone, but for them alſo that ſhall believe on me through their word) a direct notation, who they are, that this daily interceſſion for keeping, for perſeverance, belongs to, the believers, faithful diſciples, and none others, I pray for them, I pray not for the world, ver. 9. Other prayers he can allow for the world, the verieſt incarnate devils in it, the very crucifiers, Father forgive them; but this prayer for perſeverance, for keeping, is only for the [them] the believers there: The impenitent unbeliever cannot have his portion in that, unleſs he would have Chriſt pray to damn him irreverſibly, to keep him in his impenitence, to ſeal him up unto the day of perdition: You ſee from hence by way of reſult or corollary, what 'tis that our perſeverance in the faith and favour of God, is imputable to, not any fatal contrivance for ſome ſpecial confidents, that their ſins ſhall not be able to ſeparate them, not any ſuch ἀπολύτρωσις, as Marcus his Scholars in Irenæus, pretended to, that by it they were φύσει πνευμα⟨τικοὶ, naturally ſpiritual, that all the debaucheries in the world could no more vitiate them, than the Sun-beams are profan'd by the dunghill which they ſhine on, or the gold by the ſluttery it may be mixt with, that by the ſhield of the mother of heaven, what ever they did, they were ἀόρα⟨τοι τῷ κρίνῃ, inviſible

to the Judge. No ſuch comforts and hopes as theſe, of perſeverance in ſin, and favour with God at once, of making good our union with God, when we are in the gall of bitterneſs, of being juſtified, when we are not ſanctified; that magical ſpell, that faſtens us in a circle, (and then what ever we do there, the devil cannot approach us) is the very hope of the hypocrite in Job, and that hope as hypocritical as himſelf, periſheth, and vaniſheth, when he hath moſt reſt to ſet upon it, Νώτης ἐλπὶς ὁ πλάνης, ſaith Ariſtotle, the debauch't young man can entertain himſelf with ſuch daring courageous hopes as theſe, γῆραι δὲ ἐγγύθι, but old age and death-beds are not of ſo good aſſurance. There is but one principle, I ſay, of our perſeverance to be depended on, that of Chriſts daily interceſſion for the true humble diſciple, that his faith may not fail, and that Interceſſion an act of power in Chriſt, to give what he thus prayes for; All power is given unto me, and ſo in effect, a doing, and giving, what ever is required on Gods part to the working of this bleſſed work upon our ſouls, a concurrence, an actual donation of minutely aſſiſtance to them that humbly wait and beg for it, and that, ſecondly, receive it, and make uſe of it when 'tis given. That double condition is indiſpenſably required on our parts, to the obtaining of this grace, as you may ſee it in the Habenti dabitur, the parable of the talent: and Heb. 7. 25. He is able to ſave them that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them: the ability to ſave and deliver out of the tempters hand, to give perſeverance, is explained by his continual interceſſion, but that only to thoſe that come unto God by him, the pious diſciple, and true Chriſtian, the worſhipper of God that doth his will, that 1. begs, and then, doth not reſiſt, and grieve that Spirit of his, (as Heb. 5. 9. he is authour of ſalvation, to whom? to all thoſe that obey him) he is [able to ſave them] as if Chriſt were not able to ſave any others, to give any other perſeverance, (as he could not do miracles in his own country, becauſe of their unbelief.) The truth is, his decree and oath hath manacled him, not to work ſuch miracles of mercies, prodigies of perſeverance, for the profane impenitent, the either ſpiritual or carnal preſumer. You ſee now the dependence betwixt the ἀναστῆναι, on one ſide, and the ἐυκτηγεῖν & ἀποστρέφειν, on t'other, the riſing on one ſide, and the bleſſing and turning on t'other: I proceed to my laſt particular, that the turning is but a periphraſis of bleſſing, To bleſs us in turning, &c.

And I would it were in my power, inſtead of demonſtrating to your brain, to preach this home to your affections, to perſwade you, and convince you of this great truth, the belief of which, your felicity here, and eternity hereafter, ſo much depends on; could you but acknowledge the ὅτι, that there is any ſuch thing as bleſſedneſs in a regenerate life, diſcern this myſtery of godlineſs, the preſent joyous eſtate, that lies folded up in the new creature, 'tis impoſſible you ſhould be any longer in love with periſhing. There may be perhaps, ſome ſmooth, pleaſant parts in ſin, that the beaſt about you may delight in, ſome entertainment for that carnal brute; but what a poor acquiſition is that delight, to tempt thee out of bleſſedneſs, to rob thee of ſuch ineſtimable treaſures? A piteous exchange this, make the beſt of it: but when that moment any joy is not to be had neither, when there is ſo little, ſo nothing even of tranſitory carnal pleaſure in it, then Return, O Shunamite, return, let not the Prodigal out-wit thee, out-thrive thee, riſe up in judgment againſt thee, and condemn thee; He, after the exhauſting not only of his patrimony, but of his fleſh, a creſt-fall'n degenerous Prodigal, a kind of Lycanthropos Nebuchadnezzar, (but in worſe company) driven from men to ſwine, which of all other creatures are unfitteſt to preach returning (their ocular nerves, ſaith Plutarch, are ſo placed, that they can never come to ſee Heaven, till they are laid upon their backs) yet even (this gueſt of ſwine) Prodigal can at laſt think fit to return to his Father; O let this Prodigal turn Preacher, (as ſuch ſometimes, when they have run out of all, are wont to do) I ſhall give him the Text, on which I ſhall be confident he will be very rhetorical, Return unto thy reſt, O my ſoul.

Again, conſider the τί, what bleſſedneſs is, and that may poſſibly work upon you; Other excellencies there are, that may ſet you out in the eyes of men, generoſity, obligingneſs, wiſdom, learning, courage, &c. and every of theſe can be thought fit to be ſome ſober mans Idol. And yet the utmoſt that can belong to theſe, is to be praiſe-worthy: And then, what proportion is there betwixt all theſe, and one ſuch heroick excellency, of which the Philoſopher can ſay, praiſe is too poor a reward for them, we count them bleſſed.

O then, if there be any conſolation in Chriſt, any vertue, any praiſe, if any ſo noble a quality as ambition be left in you, if any ſpark of that Veſtal flame, any aſpiring to that which will ennoble and ſublime your natures, any deſign on bleſſedneſs, behold and remember the turning in this Text; nay, if you are but ſo wel-natured as to wiſh a poor piteous accurſed kingdom out of the jawes of ſo many hells, and capable of ſome return toward bleſſedneſs again, fulfil you my joy. Away with thoſe objections and prejudices we have to repentance, that 'tis a rugged, thorny, galling way, a dull, melancholy, joyleſs ſtate, what ever you can miſs, what ever quarrel in it, 'twill be abundantly repair'd and ſatisfied in this one of bleſſedneſs; ſend me all the torments and miſeries of this malicious Age, the inventions of wit, and cruelty, all the diſeaſes, that the Heathens fear had deified, and in the midſt of theſe, a preſent, inſtant bleſſedneſs, and I ſhall certainly defie them all; give me bleſſedneſs upon the rack, upon the wheel, and if you will ſuppoſe it poſſible, in hell it ſelf, and I will never ask Father Abrahams favour or allay to thoſe flames, I ſhall not doubt but to enjoy that any thing, that hath bleſſedneſs in it. The very Heathens, ſaith Saint Auſtine, had a great deſign upon one treaſure that they found they had loſt, uſed all means they could think would contribute toward the recovery of it; and in that queſt went at laſt, ſaith he, and gave their ſouls to the Devil, to get purity for thoſe ſouls. 'Twere then but reaſon that you would give your ſouls unto God, to purchaſe it, that you would ſet a turning, a purifying, when the ſame compendium renders you pure, and bleſt together, when the being happier than you were before, is all that you pay to be ſo for ever.

I have tired you with preaching that, that would have been more ſeaſonable to have prayed for you, that God, having, as on this day, raiſed up his Son Jeſus, will vouchſafe to ſend him into every of our hearts, to bleſs us, to bleſs this accurſed, miſerable Kingdom, this ſhaking, palſie Church, this broken State, this unhappy Nation, this every poor ſinner ſoul, by turning all, and every one from his iniquities, by giving us all, that only matter of our peace, and ſerenity here, and pledge of our eternal felicity hereafter; Which God of his infinite mercy grant us all, for his Son Jeſus ſake whom he hath thus raiſed. To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt be aſcribed, as our only tribute, the honour, &c.

GOD'S

GOD'S Complaint againſt REVOLTERS.

The X. SERMON,

Prepared at Carisbrook-Caſtle, but not Preach'd.

ISAIAH 1. 5.

Why ſhould you be ſtricken any more? you will revolt more and more.

IT is a heavy complaint of Gods, and though expreſs'd without much noiſe, yet in a deep melting hearty paſſion, not only in the verſe next before my Text, with heaven and earth call'd to be witneſſes of the complaint, but with a little varying of the expreſſion, every where elſe, throughout the Prophets, that Iſrael doth not know, Gods people doth not conſider. All the arts of diſcipline and pedagogie had been uſed to teach them knowledge, and conſideration, i. e. to bring them to a ſight, and ſenſe of their eſtate, Lectures, warnings, chidings, blows, ſhaking, and rouzing, and hazening them, if it were poſſible, to awake them out of that lethargick, ſenſleſs condition. The whole people uſed like that proud King of Babylon, driven from men, ſet to live and converſe with the beaſts of the field, (ſuch were the Chaldeans, whither they were carried captive) if ſo be, as it fared with him, ſo it might poſſibly ſucceed with them, the Field be a more gainful School than the Palace had been, that by that means at leaſt they might lift up their eyes to heaven, and their underſtanding return to them, Dan. 4. Turn'd from men into Beaſts, that that ſtranger Metamorphoſis might be wrought on them, a transformation from men into men, from ignorant brutiſh, into prudent conſidering men, nay delivered up even unto Satan by way of diſcipline, that Satan might teach them ſenſe; The plagues of Ægypt, of Sodom, of Hell let looſe upon them, to try whether like the rubbing and the ſmarting of the Fiſhes gall, it might reſtore theſe blind Tobits to their eyes and ſouls again. To work the ſame work, if it be poſſible, upon us, is, I profeſs, my buſineſs, and only errand at this time; There hath been a great deal of pains taken by God to this purpoſe, doctrine and diſcipline, inſtructions and corrections, and all utterly caſt away upon us hitherto, the whole head ſick, and the whole heart faint, in the words next after my Text, which you muſt not underſtand, as ordinarily men do, of the ſins of that people, that thoſe were the wounds, and bruiſes, and putrified ſores, (give me leave to tell you, that is a miſtake, for want of conſidering the context) but of judgments, heavy judgments, diſeaſes, piteous diſeaſes, both on head and heart, Epilepſies, wracking pains in the head, the whole Kingdom may complain in the language of the Shunamites Child, O my head, my head! nay, in the Prophets, the crown is fallen from our head, the crown of our head torn and fall'n from our head, and the heart in terrible fainting fits, every foot ready to overcome; From the ſole of the foot to the crown of the head, from one extream part of the Nation to another, nothing but diſtreſs or oppreſſion, ſuffering, or acting direful Tragedies, miſery or impiety, (the latter the more fatal ſymptome, the greater diſtreſs of the two) and yet no man layeth it to heart, England will not know, will not conſider.

The truth is, the deformities which are in our ſelves, we are ſuch partial ſelf-paraſites, that there is no ſeeing in a direct line, no coming to that proſpect, but by reflection; ſhall we therefore bring the Elephant to the water, and there ſhew him and amaze him with the ſight and uglineſs of his proboſcis? the ſtate of the Jews is that water, where we may ſee the image of this preſent Kingdom moſt perfectly delineated in every limb and feature, its proſperity, its pride, its warnings, its provocations, its captivities, its contumelious uſing of the Prophets, ſcorning the Meſſengers from God that came to reprieve them, at length its fatal preſages, the deadly feuds, ζηλωται & σικάριοι, Zelots and Brothers of the ſword, plowing it up to be ſow'd with ſalt and brimſtone, and all this chargable culture and diſcipline caſt away upon them uttterly, mortifying (inſtead of ſins and impieties) nothing but the relicks of piety, and civility and ingenuous nature; a ſtrange peſtilential feaver, ſeiſing upon their very ſpirits and ſouls; and now nothing but a Roman Eagle, or a Hell, a Titus, or a fiend, left behind to work any reformation on them. Thus all Gods thunderbolts being exhauſted, his methods of diſcipline pozed, and nonplus'd, and fruſtrated, there is nothing behind, but calling in and retracting thoſe rods, the no longer vouchſafing thoſe thunderbolts; a news that perhaps you would be glad to hear of, a reſpite of puniſhments, but that the moſt ominous direful of all others, the moſt formidable of all Gods denouncings, the laſt and worſt kind of deſertion; Why ſhould you be (not embraced and dandled, but ſcourged and) ſmitten any more? You will revolt more, and more.

Theſe words will afford you theſe four fields of plain and uſeful meditation:

1. Gods cuſtom of ſtriking ſinners, and encreaſing ſtripes on them, in order to their reformation.
2. The prime proper ſeaſons for ſuch ſtriking: 1. In caſe of revolt. 2. In caſe of revolting more.
3. The one only caſe in which ſtriking becomes uncharitable, when the more and the more God ſmites, the more and the more the ſinner revolts.

4. And laſtly, the pitiful eſtate of the ſinner when he comes to this, when in this caſe God removes ſmiting, for though it be an act of mercy in God, yet 'tis that which bodes very ill, 'tis an indication of the moſt deſperate eſtate of the Patient. Why ſhould you be ſtricken any more?

I begin firſt with the Firſt, (which lies not ſo viſible and diſtinguiſhable in the Text, but is the foundation, that is ſuppoſed under it, and on which all that is viſible is ſuperſtructed) and that is Gods pious and charitable deſign in ſmiting ſinners, and encreaſing ſtripes on them; though now, on more prudential conſiderations, they ſhall not be any more ſmitten.

If my children forſake my Law, &c. I will viſit their offences with the rod, and their ſins with ſcourges, ſaith God by the Pſalmiſt. God hath his viſits for diſtempered children, not only like that of St. Pauls, in the ſpirit of meekneſs, but alſo ἐν ῥάβδῳ, with the rod: and if that ſingle engine of diſcipline will not do it, there are ſharper and more behind, the flagella, or ſcourges, in the Plural. And this by the way of prudent medicinal proceſs, of ſolemn deliberate diſpenſation, according to rules of Art: You will preſently diſcern it, if you but look into the nature, and cauſes, and proceſs of the diſeaſe: I ſhall give you but one way of judging of theſe, by remembring you, that all ſin is founded in bono jucundo, in the pleaſing, or delighting of the carnal faculty: Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own luſt and enticed, when his carnal pleaſurable faculty ἐξέλκει καὶ δελεάζει, draws him out of his road of piety, by an amiable pleaſurable lure or bait: Of this kind, if you will look into the retail, you ſhall find every ſin in the world to be, ſome law of the members, ſome dictate of the fleſh, which is all for ſenſitive pleaſure, a warring, a contending, arguing, and pleading before the will, againſt the adverſary law of the mind, againſt the dictates of honeſt, or vertuous, of the rational, or chriſtian, which is a pretending and contending on the other ſide. Three repreſentations there were of the apple in the firſt ſin, and every of thoſe under this notion of pleaſure: The woman ſaw, 1. That 'twas good for food, pleaſurable to the taſte: 2. A deſire (as 'tis in the Heb.) which we render again, pleaſant to the eyes: And 3 that 'twas to be deſired to make one wiſe, i.e. according to the ſame Heb. notion, pleaſurable in this, that it would make them know more than they did before, a kind of ſatisfaction, and ſo pleaſure to the underſtanding, (as you know, knowledge, though it be but of trifles and news, is a moſt pleaſurable thing.) And, ſo generally every ſin is begotten after the image and likeneſs of that firſt; the pleaſures of luſt, the pleaſures of revenge, (that huge high Epicuriſm) the pleaſures of pride, (the greateſt that Ariſtotle, or the Author περὶ κόσμου conceived that the old Heathen gods could pretend to, in their receſſes, their not vouchſafing to ſee or hear any thing, but by Perſpectives and Otacouſticks) or again, the pleaſures of hereſie, of ſchiſm, which he that is guilty of, ſaith the Apoſtle, is he not carnal? the pleaſures of ſingularity, and being head of a Faction, they ſay, the hugeſt ſenſuality, and voluptuouſneſs, the moſt bewitching raviſhment of any: And even covetouſneſs, and ambition, the ſins which ſeem to be particularly faſtned on two other notions of the forbidden fruit, the profit and honour, the wealth and greatneſs, the baits of the world, and not of the fleſh, (and may have ſmitings of God proportion'd to them, on our eſtates, and honours, as well as on our fleſh) yet, I ſay, even theſe would certainly never be able to work upon us, if there were not a notion of pleaſure in them: and therefore one of them is call'd the luſt of the eye, and the worldly pomp, and greatneſs, the object of the other, (as that in Moſes, of the honour of being called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter) is diſtinctly ſtyled the pleaſures of ſin, in the plural, Heb. 11.25. And indeed the matter is clear and demonſtrable, there being but two contrary faculties about us, the rational, and the carnal principle, the inward and the outward man, as every vertuous and chriſtian thought and action is a συνήδεσθαι τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ θεοῦ, Rom. 7. 22. a complacency and delight of the upper nobler ſpiritual faculty in the law of God, the object apportion'd to that, ſo is every ſin that is ever committed, a συνήδεσθαι τῷ νόμῳ ἐν μέλεσι, a complacency, or conjunction in liking, a being pleaſed with the law of the members, a chuſing of that which may be moſt agreeable and proportionable to the deſigns of the fleſh, i.e. moſt deſirable and pleaſurable to that.

Having given you the character of the diſeaſe, the diſtinct nature of ſin, the propriety of the diſtemper, that ſome either true or falſe ſenſual pleaſure, ſomething that is really delectable to the fleſh, or that either by a falſe glaſs of paſſion, or cuſtom, or elſe by an imperfect half light, appears to be pleaſurable, is the foundation and matter of every ſin, (never any revolts from God, but when we hope to enjoy our ſelves better in ſome other company, ſome revenue or income of ἀπόλαυσις, or joy to the fleſh expected, and aim'd at in every extravagance or out-lying) you cannot now chuſe but acknowledge the propriety of the Phyſick, which we have here before us, the uſefulneſs of the ſtrokes, or ſmitings for this recovery. When a man is in the purſuit of a meer pleaſurable object, which he confeſſes to value for nothing elſe, but that it is ſweet to taſte, could he but diſcern or eſpy the whole ſweetneſs and pleaſurableneſs of it ſecretly let out, or ſpilt upon the ground, or evaporate before his eyes, or but a ſcourge held over his head, or a Vial of gall or wormwood imbibed, that for every dram of pleaſure ſhall give him a terrible proportion of bitterneſs at the preſent, of inſtant pain and ſmart: 'tis not imaginable that any man in his ſenſes ſhould advance one ſtep further in this purſuit; the more ſenſual and carnal man he is, the more he muſt abhor ſuch marches as theſe, which are ſo treacherous and malicious to the very fleſh; he that can ſatisfie himſelf with the empty name of ſin, though it taſte never ſo ſowr or loathſome, that will not in this caſe cõpremiſe, and compound with innocence, take purity on Chriſts terms, rather than venture on preſent racks and torments, had need be a ſublime, aereal, ſpiritual ſinner indeed, like Lucifer himſelf, who we know, is all Spirit, he muſt have nothing left of ſenſe or fleſh about him; Were but the thouſandth part of that Hell which expects the indulgent ſinner in another world, mixt in the very cup of his pleaſurableſt ſin here, the leaſt preſent whip inſtead of all thoſe future ſcorpions, it would be almoſt impoſſible for the moſt magnanimous ſinner to venture ſo deep for that empty honour, the bare opinion, or phanſie or crédit of having aſſaulted and rebelled againſt Heaven, and gain'd nothing by it, to pay ſo dear for that which is not bread, hath nothing of ſubſtance or ſatisfaction in it; And therefore this is the deſign of Gods rod, his ſmitings, his puniſhments, to give us a little of that Hell before hand, (which our infidel ſenſes apprehend nothing of, as long as 'tis future) to help us to ſome diſreliſh to ſin at the preſent, to give us ſome part of its portion, (of the odiouſneſs & bitterneſs of it) in the very mouth, that we may not have any joy in chewing, or ſwallowing down ſo abhorred a mixture, which hath ſuch a certain arrear of horror, and bitterneſs in the ſto- mach, to rain down ſome fire and brimſtone into our throats, whenſoever we are gaping after that forbidden Tree; thus to diſcourage, if not to allay our hydropick thirſt, to incumber and traſh us in our violent furious marches, to pluck off the wheels of our Egyptian chariots, that they may drive more heavily, that finding the moſt pleaſurable ſin ſuch a ſad γλυκυπικρον, a compoſt of more bitter than ſweet at the very inſtant, we ſhould never be ſuch blind obedient Votaries of Satan, never ſo perfectly renounce and deny our ſelves, our own eaſe, our own all kind of intereſts and advantages, never be ſuch profeſt enemies and tyrants againſt our own fleſh, as to go on in ſuch chargeable ways of ſin, when we ſee and feel ſo ſadly, how without and before the certain cures of a chill'd old age, by this charitable anticipation of Gods ſmiting hand, the days are come upon ſin, that we can truly ſay that we have no pleaſure in it. And ſo you ſee the grounds of this medicinal method, the charity and piety of Gods deſign in ſmiting, my firſt obſervable; I proceed briefly to the prime proper ſeaſons of this charity, this ſmiting, 1. In caſe of revolt, 2. Of revolting more, my ſecond particular.

Gods firſt ſeaſon of puniſhing is inſtantly upon revolt, at the firſt breaking off, or averſion, or departure from God; And ſure he that is not ſuffer'd by God to enjoy one eaſie or comfortable hour in ſin, that is preſently call'd to diſcipline, taught what a jealous God he hath provoked, that is rouzed and awaked at the firſt nod, watch'd over by the moſt vigilant Monitor, (that he cannot move out of his poſture of piety, but preſently God in heaven is a calling out to him to reduce him to his rank again) cannot chuſe but acknowledge himſelf a prime part of Gods care and ſollicitude. The firſt day of going out into the field, as in Gods, ſo in Satans ſervice, is generally a nice and a critical day; according to the ſucceſſes or diſcouragements we meet with then, we have more or leſs mind to the trade for ever after; ſhould but our beginnings of revolt from God, our firſt treacherous intentions againſt him prove lucky, and ſmooth, and proſperous, 'twere eaſie and prone (and not at all improbable) for us to glide inſenſibly into all rebellions and impieties, to ſwear fealty to Satan, that hath entertain'd us ſo hoſpitably, and ſuddenly to engage ſo deep under his colours, that there would be no retiring with honour, no returning to God without being infamous, without undergoing the brand of Apoſtates from Satan, of a kind of Fœdi-fragi, Covenant-breakers and Deſertors; Our repentance would go for the more ſcandalous thing, our reduction to our allegeance to Heaven, would be the forfeiting of a truſt, and within a while appear the more ill-favour'd, reproachful revolt of the two; Whereas if we meet with ſome checks and diſcouragements betimes, ſome rouzing bruſhes at the firſt entrance into the ſervice, 'tis poſſible we may diſcern our error; eſpecially, if it were the fleſh that helped to ſeduce us, if the hope of advantage that brought us into it, becauſe the wicked goes unpuniſhed, therefore the heart of man is wholly ſet to do evil, ſaith Solomon, and therefore, that God may not be thought to deſert them preſently at the firſt revolt, to deliver up that heart of theirs to that hell upon earth upon this firſt ſingle provocation, God is concern'd in faithfulneſs to cauſe them to be troubled, not to lead them into this temptation, to profane continuance in ſin, but to give them this grace, this gift of puniſhment, to reduce and recal them preſently, as ſoon as they are revolted, to let Satan or his inſtruments looſe, to diſeaſe and awake this drowzy ſervant of his, who therefore to ſuch purpoſes though he be caſt out of heaven, from being Gods menial ſervant, is ſtill ὑπηρέτης θεῦ, Gods officer, and miniſter, retains ſo much of his old angelical title, of being a miniſtring ſpirit, and that, if we be not wanting to our ſelves, to the greateſt advantage of our ſouls, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, not εἰς φθορὰν, a piece of edifying, not ſanguinary diſcipline. And let me tell you my opinion, that for that which is called punitive juſtice, ſeverity or revenge on ſin, that part of the Magiſtrates office among men, to be ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν, an avenger for wrath, were it not in meer neceſſary charity to them that are puniſhed, or to them that are warned by others puniſhment, there were no reaſon for any man to inflict it upon another, 'twere wholly to be left to Gods tribunal.

From this hint, two things I deſire to commend to my Auditory, by way of Application.

1. The care that they are to have, to take ſpecial notice of every the ſofteſt degree of ſmiting that ever befals them in their lives; be it ſickneſs, or a miſcarriage, a thouſand to one, it is an application of Gods to ſome ſpecial diſtemper of thine, to ſome degree of revolt from him: This I will not ſay is perpetually true, becauſe I know there be other uſes of ſmitings, for the exerciſe of many Chriſtian vertues, (which would ruſt and ſully and come to little, and ſo Chriſt loſe all the glory and renown, and we all the reward of them, if we had not ſuch occaſions to exerciſe them) but I ſay, the odds is ſo great, when the rod of God comes, that it comes for ſome ſuch revolt of thine, that certainly it is thy duty, ſo far to diſtruſt thine own excellencies, as to doubt that it comes not to thee meerly as to an athleta, or combatant, or perfect Chriſtian, πρὸς δοκιμασίαν, by way of trial only, but as to one guilty of ſome kind of revolt, and ſo εἰς κόλασιν, for puniſhment and reformation: And though I cannot be confident it is ſo, yet believe me, thou haſt ſo much reaſon to ſuſpect thy ſelf, that it will be worth thy pains to examine, upon every ſtroke on thy body, thy eſtate, nay on thy reputation, every curſing of a Shimei, every approach, or terror, brandiſhing the rod, or ſword againſt thee, that 'tis ſome preſent ſin of thine, ſome degree of inſtant revolt that hath brought this ſtroke upon thee. Εἴ τις ἀσθενεῖ, ſaith S. James, If any man be ſick, &c. The whole Text ſuppoſeth it ſtrongly probable, that he that is thus viſited, hath committed ſome act of revolt, either of greater or leſſer moment, either againſt God, or his brother, to which that ſickneſs hath ſome relation; and there is a notable place, Eccluſ. 18. 21. Humble thy ſelf before thou be ſick, and in the time of ſins, ſhew repentance, ſuppoſing the time of ſins to be the forerunner of ſickneſs; and he that would but thus examine himſelf, whenſoever he hath any ſuch bitter potion ſent him from God, ask his own conſcience (his beſt adviſer) the queſtion, to what former diſeaſe it is, to which God ὡς ἰατρὸς, not as an enemy, but a Phyſician, hath accommodated this application, he might perhaps forty years hence thank me for this admonition, and be able to tell me that from this day to that, he hath experimented the truth of the obſervation, never received a corroſive plaiſter from God, but upon enquiry, he found a piece of dead fleſh in himſelf, to which it clearly belonged; I doubt not but a few good memories might preſently bring me in a catalogue of proofs to my obſervation, I deſire you will be your own Confeſſors, and do it to your ſelves; and then do the duty that in ſuch caſe belongs to you. And that is, (in the ſecond place) not only to acknowledge the diſeaſe before God moſt freely, and apply his phyſick and our diligence to the cure of it, but withal to look upon theſe ſtrokes, as the ſoveraign'ſt mercies, ſo many beams of meer grace, Sermons from Heaven,

Heaven, the very [bath Col] the voice from heaven of old, that seldom came but with a clap of thunder along with it, methods of Gods restraining, and exciting Spirit, and thank God as heartily for them, as for the richest boons, the warmest sunshines, that you ever received from the sun of righteousness; and being once made whole, rescued (upon thy return) from one such first smiting, it concerns thee nearly for ever after, to go, sin no more, lest a far worse thing happen unto thee.

For so I told you, there is a second reason of smiting, and that, of doubling the blows, viz. upon our revolting more. God doth not presently upon the first recidivation, or relapse, give up the sinner for desperate; he concludes indeed most justly and deliberately, that the κακοχυμία, or disaffection is the stronger, when it breaks forth again, the leprosie more dangerous, that it spreads in the flesh, after it hath been look't on by the Priest, that the former Physick, if 'twere sufficient to set him on his legs again, was not yet able to make him a hail sound man, some venomous humour was left behind, and in all probability, a stronger physick is now necessary, perhaps a whole course of steel: A physick, God knows, that this Kingdom hath been under five or six years, I would I could say, the Patient prospered under it; nay, that it had not grown far worse, gone backward in all auspicious symptomes ever since, as if that steel, not sufficiently prepared, were turned into the habit of the body, and now wanted some higher chymical preparations to work it out again. If this be the case, as God knows its too suspitious it is, I am then fallen on my third general, the only case wherein this sharp physick becomes unseasonable, when the more and more God strikes, the more and more the sinner revolts; and to that I must now hasten. Why, &c.

A nice subtile question and dispute there hath been among Divines, which may in part have its decision from hence, concerning a peculiar middle third kind of knowledge in God; as whether, on supposition that such a thing should come to pass, which never shall, God knows what will follow by way of consequence. To this purpose many notable passages of Scripture there are: the Oracle, that David received about the men of Keilah, the assurance that they would deliver him up, if he entrusted himself to them; though the truth is, he never made the tryal of their sincerity, but believed God the searcher of their hearts, without that more costly experiment. So when Christ affirms of Tyre and Sidon, that, if the miracles done in Bethsaida, had been done among them, they had infallibly repented. And so St. Paul in his voyage by sea, that told the Mariners how certainly they should be cast away, if any went out of the ship, though they neither went out, nor lost one life. And so here, where God by the Prophet foretels, that in case he now should smite them any more, they would revolt more and more, and therefore resolves to give over smiting. To enter into any part of that subtile debate, is not my design, as remembring that of Greg. Naz. that the Ammonites and the Moabites were not permitted to enter into the Church of God, i. e. saith he διαλεκτικὰς, καὶ κακοπτώγμονας λόγους, curious and subtile discourses, which are not very apt to minister grace, or edification to the hearers: the utmost that will be of use or profit to us, is, to observe this positive aphorism of Gods methods of discipline, of his gracious œconomies, seldom or never to send punishments on any, but when they are probable to do some good, to work reformations on them. Two cases there are in Physick, when the Physician in all reason withdraws his hand and his drugs, 1. When the Patient is desperate, and the Physick of an high nature; for then such costly drugs should neither be poured out, nor defamed, neither lose their vertue, nor adventure their reputation on the desperate patient; as long as there is hope, they must be placed, (be it never so chargeable or painful) even to cupping and scarifying, even skin after skin, (as those words in Job would be render'd, those things that are nearest to us one after another) and all that he hath will he give for his life; and when there is no hope, some easie Physick, some indifferent, tame cordials may be allow'd, till the last gasp; but the nobler drugs must not be thus riotously dealt with; and so in like manner to the desperate revolter, the sun may shine, and the rain may fall on him, as well as on the most hopeful, some indifferent ordinary ways of cure, such are prosperity, affluence of Fortune, and the like; but for the magistrals of nature and art, such are Gods smitings and punishments, which cost God dear, as it were, he is fain to fetch them from far, to go out of his place for them, in the Prophets style, God will not be so prodigal of these, but when there is hope that they may prove successful.

And so again, secondly, when the condition is more hopeful, yet in case the kind of physick is become too familiar with the body, when it ceases to be physick, and proves diet, turns into nourishment and encrease of the disease, 'tis then more than time to change the bills, to set the Patient to some new course; and this is the case in the Text again; and I heartily wish to God, it were not the very case of the Kingdom: I will not say, 'tis a desperate patient, that no method of Gods could possibly work good on us, (no, I will hope and pray yet against our wickedness, and do it on this very score; For although some part of the Nation have had, for a long time, little of this bitter physick administred to them by God; yet sure some of us are still under this cure of the rod, have not all our caustick plaisters torn off from us, from whence I think I may conclude, that God is still a wrestling with our disease, hath not yet given us quite over unto death) but this I am afraid, I may too truly say, that of those that are still under this sharp and soveraign course of Physick, this of punishments, it is become too familiar with most of us, we look not on our afflictions as on medicines sent us immediately out of the special dispensatory of Heaven, but as the ordinary diet and portion of mortal mutable Men; I wish I could not add, that our malady hath most highly thrived, and prospered under our Physick, more new kinds, and varieties of sinning, from all the Nations about us, nay from Hell it self taken in, incorporate and naturaliz'd among us, in a few years of Gods sword being drawn, his thunderbolts scattered among us, a greater progress toward Atheism made generally in this Nation under this preaching of the rod, than in many Ages before had been observable among us; Let it be considered with some sadness, and it will certainly appear to the eternal shame of a provoking people that to every degree of oppression and injustice, that this Nation was formerly guilty of, the thousand-fold were now a very moderate proportion; to every oath, that was formerly darted against Heaven, there are now whole vollies of perjuries, never did so course and sturdy, so plain, and boisterous a sin, so perfect a Camel go down so glib, and go over so easily. To omit that prodigy of lying and slandering (a vapour that came visibly out of Hell, assoon as it was there resolved that innocence must suffer) some sins as waſting as any in the whole inventory, have of late grown ſo frequent, and faſhionable in the world, that they have quite put off the nature of ſin, by being our daily food, digeſted and converted into other ſhapes, as if ſwallowed by a pious man (who, God knows, muſt anſwer the deareſt for his revolts) they ſhould turn into his ſubſtance, become acts of piety, of the higheſt ſize, one ſuch metamorphos'd, transfigured ſin is become able to commute, and expiate for a hundred more, that have not had the luck of that diſguiſe; and, in a word, our revolts are ſo prodigiouſly increaſed, improved into ſuch a mountainous vaſtneſs, ſuch a colony of none but gyantly ſhapes, that though I cannot undertake to foretel our fate, or affirm that we are thoſe very men come to that very criſis, upon which God by the purport of the doom in my Text, will ſoon give over ſmiting any more, (which perhaps ſome might be ſo mad as to think an happy news, if they could but hear of it, and would be content to venture any hazard that this could bring on them) yet this I ſhall from hence be able to pronounce dogmatically, that ſhould ſuch a fate befal us, (either the Nation in general, or any of us in particular) ſhould there be a reſpite of the rod, before any laying down of the ſins that call'd for it, a ceſſation of arms betwixt heaven and earth, before a ceſſation of hoſtilities between earth and heaven, this were as the laſt, ſo the worſt of evils, a calm to be dreaded beyond all the loudeſt tempeſts, which will be the better evidenc'd and demonſtrated to you, if we proceed to the fourth and laſt particular, the pitiful eſtate of the ſinner, when in this caſe God removes ſmiting, Why, &c.

To diſcern the ſadneſs, and deplorableneſs of this eſtate, I ſhall need give you no ſharper character of it, than only this, that 'tis a condition that forceth God to forſake us in meer mercy, to give over all thoughts of kindneſs to us, and that the only degree of kindneſs left, whereof we are capable: In plain terms, to that man or people, that is the worſe for ſtripes, theſe two moſt unreconcileable contraries are moſt ſadly true:

The removing of theſe ſtripes is the greateſt judgment imaginable.

And yet 2. That greateſt judgment is the only remaining mercy alſo.

Conſider theſe two apart, and you will ſee the truth of them.

1. The removing the phyſick before it hath done the work, is the greateſt judgment, even ſubſtraction of all grace, downright deſertion, and nothing more fatal than that, to him that cannot recover, or repent of himſelf, without the aſſiſtance of that phyſick; ſtrokes are not ſent by God, but as a laſt, and neceſſary reſerve, when a long peace and proſperity have been tried, and not been able to make any impreſſion on ſin; nay perhaps, have gone over to the enemies ſide, taken part with ſin, prov'd its prime friend, furniſh'd it with weapons, and ammunition, enabled it to riot, and grow luxurious, and to think of being final Conqueror over the Spirit of God, which had it been kept low, it could not have done; and in this caſe, the weight and fortune of the whole battel lies on ſtripes, and if thoſe be commanded away by God, if recall'd upon a firſt or ſecond repulſe; if all Gods thunderbolts, the only remaining hope, have the retreat ſounded to them, what a deſtitute, routed, forlorn, eſtate is the Soul then left in? Had ſin been wounded or worſted in the fight, brought to ſome viſible declination, yet this withdrawing of thoſe forces that gave this luſty aſſault, would preſently reſtore it to ſome heart and courage again, would give it ſpace to rally and recover ſtrength; and ſo oft it falls out, that when afflictions have done their work, mortified our exceſſes, and ſo march home again to God, in triumph over the enemy, yet within a while (after the ſmart is forgotten) the very vanquiſh'd luſt returns, and gets ſtrength again, and, as 'tis oft in Thucydides ſtory, by that time the trophies are ſet up, the baffled enemy regains the field and victory: But when on the other ſide, ſin after the combate with Gods rod, comes off unwounded, and haile, and the bruiſed and batter'd rod is ſeen to have retired alſo, then this is the greateſt fleſhing of ſin imaginable, a perfect bloudleſs victory over grace, over Gods merciful Spirit, ſtriving with us; and nothing but haughtineſs, and triumph, and obduration is to be lookt for, after ſuch ſucceſſes; And this is that ſad ſtate of deſertion I told you of, a leaving the poor ſoul, like him that had fall'n among thieves, wounded, and half dead; and not ſo much as one good Samaritan near to bind up, or pour in the leaſt drop of oyl, into the wounds, (for 'tis not imaginable, that eaſe, or peace, ſo calm, ſo ſoft, ſo puſillanimous a creature, as affluence or proſperity is, ſhould ever come in to the reſcue, ſhould do ſuch valiant acts, when ſo much ſtouter, ſterner inſtruments have been ſo utterly repulſed) And yet in this ſad caſe, the matter is not yet at the higheſt; but, (which was the ſecond part of the true, but doleful Paradox) this very deſertion is the only tolerable mercy now behind. Should God continue ſtripes, and they ſtill make the ſinner more Atheiſtical, this, I ſay, would but increaſe the load in hell; Every improſperous ſtroke on the ſteel'd anvil heart, will but add to the tale of oppoſitions, and affronts, and reſiſtances, and ſo to the catalogue of guilts and woes, that ſad arrear which another world will ſee paid diſtinctly; and ſo the calling off, or intercepting of theſe ſtrokes, (i. e. theſe our unhappy advantages and opportunities of enhanſing our ſcore, or reckoning) is a kind of mercy ſtill, though but a pitiful one; and if God do not think fit to afford us this mercy, if God do not give over ſmiting in this caſe, this is then his greater ſeverity yet.

And ſo I conceive the impenitents ſtate brought to an extraordsnary iſſue, that whatſoever God deal out to us, the conſequence is of a nature moſt exquiſitely miſerable; If he take off his puniſhments, we are in a deſperate eſtate, there's nothing left, in any degree probable to do any good on us; and if he do not take them off, they do but accumulate, and heighten our future torments; the mercy is a cruel mercy, and the ſeverity a cruel ſeverity; the firſt leaves us in a palſie or lethargy, a dead ſtupid mortified ſtate, and the ſecond encreaſes the Feaver, adds fuel to the flames: If he ſtrike not, we lie dead in ſin, as ſo many trunks and carkaſſes before him; if he ſtrike on, he awakes us into oaths and blaſphemies, and ſo ſtill more direful provocations.

And ſo, as we are wont to ſay of an erroneous Conſcience, in caſe the commands are lawful, which that thinks unlawful, it ſins which way ſoever it moves; by diſobedience, againſt the duty of the fifth Commandment; and by obedience, againſt the dictate of conſcience (a ſad exigence, no way in the world to be avoided, but by getting out of the prime fundamental infelicity, getting the erroneous Conſcience informed and rectified:) ſo is it, in a manner, with God towards this unhappy creature creature of his, that hath not, nor is like to edifie under ſtripes, he wounds it mortally, whatſoever he deſigneth toward it; his deſertion is cruel, and his not deſerting is cruel too. Lay but the ſcene of this Kingdom at this time, (of which I may ſay, 'tis a ſtubborn unnurtur'd ſcholar of Gods, a very ill proficient under ſtripes; far worſe, and more hopeleſs now, than when firſt it came under this diſcipline) and I ſhall challenge the prudenteſt Diviner under Heaven, to tell me rationally, what 'twere but tolerably charitable to wiſh, or pray for it, in reſpect of the removal of Gods judgments: ſhould we be reſpited, before we be in any degree reformed, thruſt out of Gods School, now we are at the wildeſt? This were a woful change, removing of Canaanites, and delivering us up to the beaſts of the field, breaking down the incloſure, and letting us out into the wilderneſs, reſcuing us out of purgatory, and caſting us into hell, and never any Orate pro animâ, prayer for deliverance out of thoſe Poetick flames, was ſo impious, ſo unkind as this. And whilſt I have this proſpect before me, methinks I am obliged in very charity to pray, Lord keep us in this Limbo ſtill, theſe but tranſitory afflictions of this life, which in compariſon with ſpiritual deſertion, or delivering up to our ſelves, is a very chearful and comfortable condition: And yet ſhould God thus hearken to that prayer, continue us under this diſcipline longer, provide a new ſtock of Artillery, and empty another Heaven, another Magazine, and Armory upon us, and all prove but bruta fulmina ſtill, another ſeven years of judgments thrive no better with us, than the laſt ſad apprentiſhip hath done; O what an enhanſement would this be of our reckoning? What a ſad ſcore of aggravations, (that is, of ſo many mercies and graces, ſo many wreſtlings of his ſpirit with ſin, all griev'd and repell'd by us) and conſequently, what a pile of guilts toward the accumulating of our flames? what is the natural and the only ſalvo to this intricacy, I ſuppoſe 'tis prone to any man to divine; why to reform the fundamental error, which can no otherwiſe be repair'd after; to begin, if it be but now, to edifie, and to be the better for ſtripes, to ſet every man to this one late, but neceſſary reſolution, and not to be content to have done ſomewhat at home in private, every man in mending one, as they ſay, (though if that were done uniformly, 'twould ſerve the turn) but every man, whoſe heart the Lord hath ſtrucken, to be a convert-humble-mourner for the iniquity of his people, (for the provocations of this Church, and Kingdom, and for the plague of his own heart) to go out, and call all the idle by-ſtanders in the field, to draw as many more, as 'tis poſſible, into that engagement, and in this ſenſe to bring into the ſervice a whole army of Covenanters and Reformers, every man vowing hoſtility againſt thoſe waſting ſins of his, that have thus long kept a tortur'd broken Kingdom, and Church upon the wheel, which can never get off, till we come whole ſholes of ſuppliants, and auxiliaries to its reſcue; nay, till the ſins that firſt brought it to this execution, become the ἀντίψυχοι, be delivered up chearfully to ſuffer in the ſtead. That this work be at length begun in ſome earneſt, you will ſurely give God and his Angels, and your friends leave to expect with ſome impatience; and 'twere even pity they ſhould any longer be fruſtrated: If they may at laſt be ſo favour'd by us, our ſtate will be as great a riddle of mercy and of bliſs, as 'twas even now of ſadneſs and horrour: Let God do what he pleaſe to us for the turning, or for the continuing our Captivity, 'twill be matter of infinite advantage, and joy to us; If he continue us ſtill upon the croſs, after the conſummatum eſt, after the work is done, after it is a reform'd, purifi'd Nation: O that is a ſuper-angelical ſtate, a laying a foundation in that deep, for the higher and more glorious ſuperſtructure of joy and bliſs in another world; Nay, if he ſhould ſweep us away in one akeldama, this were to the true Penitent, but the richer boon, a tranſplantation only, a ſending us out a triumphant (not captive) colony to heaven. Or if we be then taken down from the Croſs, and put into the quiet chambers, or dormitories, if there be ſeaſons of reſt and peace yet behind upon this earth in theſe our days, O they will be rich ſeaſons of opportunity to bring forth glorious proportionable fruits of ſuch repentance, a whole harveſt of affiance and faithful dependence upon Heaven, a daily continual growth in grace, in all that is truly Chriſtian: In a word, of rendring us a kingdom of angelical Chriſtians here, and of Saints hereafter; Which whether it be by the way of the Wilderneſs, or of the Red-ſea, by all the ſufferings that a Villanous world can deſign, or a gracious Father permit and convert to our greateſt good, God of his infinite mercy grant us all, even for his ſon Jeſus Chriſt his ſake, To whom with the Father, &c.

THE

THE PASTORS MOTTO.

The XI. SERMON.

Preach'd to the Clergy of the Deanery of Shorham in Kent, at the Visitation between Easter and Whitsuntide, A.D. 1639. held at S. Mary-Cray.

2 COR. 12. 14.

For I seek not yours, but you.

THis Text hath somewhat in it seasonable both for the assembly, and the times I speak in; For the first, It is the word, or Motto of an Apostle, Non vestra sed vos, not yours but you, transmitted to us with his Apostleship, to be transcribed not into our rings, or seals of Orders, but our hearts, there, if you please, to be ingraven with a diamond, set as the stones in our Ephod, the jewels in our breast-plate, gloriously legible to all that behold us. And for the second, consider but the occasion, that extorted from our humble Saint, this so magnificent elogie of himself, you shall find it that which is no small part of the infelicity of his successors at this time, the contempt and vileness of his ministery, a sad, joyless subject of an Epistle, which would have been all spent in superstruction of heavenly doctrine upon that pretious foundation formerly laid, in dressing of those noble plants, that generous vine Isa. 5. that had cost him so much care to plant, but is fain to divert from that, to a comfortless παρεγγον, a parenthesis of two or three chapters long, to vindicate himself from present danger of being despised, and that, even by his own children, whom he had begotten in the Gospel, but other pseudo's made up all of lying, and depraving, had debauch'd out of all respect to his doctrine or estimation to his person. I should have given a S. Paul leave to have hoped for better returns from his Corinthians, and now he finds it otherwise, to have expres's'd that sense in a sharper strain of passion, and indignation, than Tullie could do against Antonie, when on the same exacerbation he brake out into that stout piece of eloquence, quid putem? contemptumne me? non video quid sit in moribus aut vitâ meâ, quod despicere possit Antonius. But there was another consideration, which as it composes our Apostles style, so it inlarges it with arguments, all that he can invent, to ingratiate himself unto them, because this contempt of their Apostle, was a most heinous provoking sin, and withal, that which was sure to make his Apostleship succesless among them; And then, though he can contemn reputation, respect, any thing that is his own, yet he cannot the quaero vos, seeking of them, that office that is intrusted him by Christ, of bringing Corinthians to heaven; Though he can absolutely expose his credit to all the Eagles and Vultures on the mountains, yet can he not so harden his bowels against his converts, their pining, gasting souls, as to see them with patience posting down this precipice; by despising of him, prostituting their own salvation; And therefore in this ecstatick fit of love and jealousie in the beginning of chap. 11. you may see him resolve to do that, that was most contrary to his disposition, boast, and vaunt, and play the fool, give them the whole tragedy of his love, what he had done, and suffered for them, by this means to raise them out of that pit, force them out of that hell, that the contempt of his ministery had almost ingulph'd them in. And among the many topicks that he had provided to this purpose, this is one he thought most fit to insist on, his no design on any thing of theirs, but only their souls; Their wealth was petty, inconsiderable pillages and spoil, for an Apostle in his war-fare, too poor inferior gain for him to stoop to; A flock, an army, a whole Church full of ransomed souls, fetched out of the Jaws of the Lion and Bear, was the only honourable reward for him to pitch design on, Non quaero vestra, sed vos, I seek not yours, but you.

In handling which words, should I allow my self licence to observe, and mention to you the many changes that are rung upon them in the world, my Sermon would turn all into Satyre, my discourse divide it self not into so many parts, but into so many declamations, 1. Against them that are neither for the vos nor vestra, the you, nor yours. 2. Those that are for the vestra, but not vos, the yours, but not you. 3 Those that are for the vos, you, but in subordination to the vestra, yours; and at last perhaps, meet with an handful of gleanings of pastors, that are either for the vestra, yours, in subordination to the vos, you; or the vos, you, but not vestra, yours. Instead of this looser variety, I shall set my discourse these strict limits, which will be just the doctrine and use of this text, 1. Consider the τὸ ῥητὸν, the truth of the words in S. Pauls practice. 2. The τὸ λογικὸν, the end for which they are here mentioned by him. 3. The τὸ ἠθικὸν, how far that practice, and that end will be imitable to us, that here are now assembled; and then I shall have no more to tempt or importune your patience.

First of the first, S. Pauls practice in seeking of the vos, you, that his earnest pursuit of the good of his auditors souls, though it have one very competent testimony from this place, v. 15. ἡδέως δαπανήσω καὶ ἐκδαπανηθήσομαι ὑπὲρ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν, most willingly will I spend and be spent for your souls, even sacrifice my soul for the saving of yours, yet many other places there are, which are as punctual and exact for that, as this in this text, nay 'tis but a ζητῶ seek here, but you shall find it an ἀγωνίζομαι contend] in many other places, all the agonistical phrases, in use among the antient Grecians, cull'd out, and scattered among his Epistles, fetch'd from Olympus to Sion, from Athens to Jerusalem, and all little enough to express the earnest holy violence of his soul in this καλὸς ἀγὼν good fight, as he calls his ministery, running and wrestling with all the difficulties in the world, and no βραβεῖον or ἄθλον, price, or reward of all that industry, and that patience, but only the ὑμᾶς you, gaining so many colonies to heaven. But then for the non vestra, not yours, his absolute disclaiming of all pay for this his service, this text and the verses about it, are more punctual, than any that are to be met with; In other places he can think fit, the Souldier, i. e. minister, should not war at his own charges, that the oxes mouth should not be muzzled, and that the labourer should be thought worthy of his reward, and a double honour for some of those labourers, the πρωτοτόκια, elder brothers portion, the priviledge of primogeniture for some, and that consisting not only in a πρωτεῖα precedence, but διπλῆ τιμὴ, double honour, 1 Tim. 5. 17. and that of maintenance too, as well as dignity. But in this chapter to these Corinthians, the Apostle renounces receiving, or looking after any such revenue or incouragement to his Apostleship; what he saith here, ὃ ζητῶ, I seek not, for the present, he specifies both for time past and to come, οὐ κατενάρκησα, I have not, v. 13. and οὐ καταναρκήσω, I will not, v. 14. i. e. saith Hesychius, that best understood the Hellenists dialect, καταναρκήσα βάρυνα, it signifies to lay burthens on others, and the Apostle in that very word, v. 16. οὐ κατεβάρησα ὑμᾶς, I have not laid weights on you, and yet farther, v. 17. οὐκ ἐπλεονέκτησα, I have not coveted, all to this same purpose, that S. Paul, on some special considerations, would never finger one penny of the Corinthians wealth, but still used some other means to sustain himself, that he might be sure not to be burthensome to them. What these means were, will not be easie to say exactly, yet I think one may collect them to be one or more of these three: 1. Labouring with his own hands, earning his maintenance on the week days by his trade of making tents, as we read, Acts 18. 3. and that particularly at Corinth, v. 1. 2. Receiving pensions of other Churches, which furnisht him with a subsistence, though he had none from Corinth; and that is more than a conjecture, he mentions it himself, chap. 11. 8. and calls it the robbing of other Churches, taking wages of them, to do you service; and perhaps, 3. Being relieved by some Christians, that accompanied and ministred to his necessities; for that was the practice of other Apostles, whatever it was of S. Paul; and that I conceive the meaning of that mistaken phrase, 1 Cor. 9. 5. have we not power, ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν, to carry about a believing or a sister woman, or matron (for so ἀδελφὸς a brother is every where a believer, and ἀδελφὴ sister is but the varying the gender, or sex) as many others did, to maintain and defray the charge of their journey, that so they might μὴ ἐργάζεσθαι v. 6. forbear working, and yet eat and drink, v. 4. not starve themselves by preaching the Gospel. Such an one was Phœbe, Rom. 16. 1. who therefore is called διάκονον, a servant of the Church of Cenchrea, i. e. one that out of her wealth διηκόνει ministred to the Apostles and sustained them, and particularly S. Paul at Corinth, as will appear, if you put together that second verse of Rom. 16. and the date or subscription in the conclusion of the Epistle. In v. 2. she is called προστάτις πολλῶν καὶ ἐμοῦ αὐτοῦ, προστάτις, i. e. πρόξενον, entertainer and succourer of many, and of S. Paul himself, and this it seems at Corinth, for there she was with him, and from thence she went on S. Pauls errand to carry this Epistle to the Romans, as 'tis in the subscription. The same he affirms distinctly of the brethren, i. e. the faithful, that came from Macedonia, ὑστέρημά μου προσανεπλήρωσαν, c. 11. 9. they supplyed my wants. And so still, the Corinthians had the Gospel for nothing; By these three means, the Apostle kept himself from being burthensome to them. But you will wonder perhaps, why S. Paul was so favourable to these Corinthians, so strictly and almost superstitiously careful not to be burthensome, or chargeable to them: This I confess was a receding from a right of his Apostleship, and more than will be obligatory or exemplary to us, nay more than he would yield to, as matter of prescription to himself, in other Churches, for there, 'tis apparent, he made use of that priviledge; But then 'tis still the more strange, he did it not at Corinth; The reason I can but guess at to be this; The Church of Christ in other parts at that time, particularly in Jerusalem, was in some distress, and 'twas committed to S. Pauls trust, to get a contribution, out of all other parts for them; This contribution is called by an unusual phrase, χάρις grace, I know not how many times, in c. 8. of this Epistle, which I conceive the very word, which in Latine and English is called charity, charitas, ἀπὸ τῆς χάριτος (in a sense that Aristotle uses χάρις * Rhet. 11. 7.) and as it is all one with κοινωνία, v. 4. communication, distribution, ministring to the Saints, and as in the benediction, χάρις, grace, and κοινωνία communion, are words of the like importance. Where by the way let me put you in mind of one special part of the ministers charge, where ever he officiates, by doctrine, and by chearful example, (by preaching the duty and the benefits, and setting them lively copies of it) to raise up the charity of his people, and from that, to see to the liberal provision of all that are in want in that place, yea and if need be, that it overflow its own banks (if they be narrow) and extend to the watering of others also. In the primitive times, the Offertory was the constant means of doing this, no man of ability ever coming to the sacrament without remembring the Corban, and out of that treasury the προεστὼς or Priest being inabled, ‖ πᾶσιν ἁπλῶς ὧν χρείᾳ ἔστι κεκτημένων γίνεται, became the common guardian of all that were in want; The weight of which task was so great in the Apostles times, that they were fain to erect a new order in the Church, to assist them particularly in this, διακονεῖν τραπέζαις, to furnish tables, i. e. distribute maintenance out of that bank to all that were in need, Act. 6. 2. I wish heartily our care and our practice may not fall too short from such a venerable example. Well, there being need, more than ordinary, at that time for our Apostle to quicken his Corinthians liberality to the poor brethren of other Churches, was the reason I conceive, of his renouncing all part of their liberality to himself, inflaming their charity by that means, shewing them first in himself a pattern and example of bounty, bestowing the diviner food of their very souls upon them, as freely as the sun extends his beams, or the stars their influence, pouring down heaven upon them in a shower, and yet to exceed the clouds in their bounty, never thinking of any means to draw from them to his own sphere any the least tribute out of their fatness, abundantly satisfied, if those clouds, that have been so inrich'd by him, will melt or sweat out some of their charity to others, give poor Christians leave to be the better for their fulness. Having given you an account of the Apostles practice in this non vestra, renouncing, disclaiming any profit, or gain from his labours among the Corinthians, I proceed to enquire, why he boasts

* Καθ' ἣν ὁ ἔχων λόγιαν χάριν ἔστιν ἐπαγγεῖλαι τῷ δεομένῳ.

boasts of it in this place, and keeps it not secret betwixt himself and God, but in several phrases mentions it over and over again, οὐ κατεβάρησα, οὐ κατεβάρησα, οὐκ ἐπλεονέκτησα, I have not overcharged you, I have not burthened you, I have not coveted any thing from you, and οὐ ζητῶ, I seek not yours.

The plain truth is, the Apostle is fain to boast, to recite, and rehearse his merits toward them, to demonstrate how, above what strict duty exacted, he had obliged them, and all little enough to vindicate his ministery, to bring them into any tolerable opinion of him: He had been reproach'd by them, counted weak, a fool, in the former chapter, and by that means he is compelled thus to glory, v. 11. The thing that I would have you make matter of meditation from hence, is, the constancy of the devil, and his indefatigate perseverance in this grand μεθοδεία τῆς πλάνης, artifice of deceipt, in stealing away mens hearts from their Apostles and Pastors, and the mighty successfulness that this meets with, debauching whole nations and Churches at once, particularly all Corinth, (a most numerous populous city of forward Christians, and Metropolis of Achaia) from all love, respect and estimation of their spiritual father, and that within few years after their spiritual birth, by that very Paul begotten in the Gospel. Thus is the present ministry of this Kingdome, that very same subordination of Bishops, Presbyters and Deacons, that so near the Apostles, as in Ignatius time, could not be violated without profaneness, and even disclaiming of Christianity, (by him most clearly and distinctly set down almost in every of those Epistles, which Vedelius at Geneva, a severe Aristarchus, could not doubt but they were his) that ministry of ours, the very same that planted the Protestant Religion among us, watered it with their blood, (our Pauls and our Apollos's too) to whom God by that prolifical teeming martyrdom of theirs, hath since raised up a most numerous, Learned, Orthodox seed, ready, I doubt not, in defence of our Religion, to fill up the sufferings of their fathers, to dye their garments in the same wine-press, to run, if occasion should be, and croud into that fiery chariot, and there like the antient ἀποβάται in Athenæus, fight and shoot out of those warm seats, καὶ ἀγωνίζεσθαι, and contend earnestly for that faith that was once delivered to the Saints in this kingdome: This so learned, puissant, Orthodox ministery of ours, yet how is it by the sons and daughters of their love, their sweat, their prayers, their tears, their lungs, their very bowels, sorry am I to say, by some sons of the very Prophets, defamed, and vilified? I speak not this, either to raise, or invenome any passion in my fellow-brethren; but, God knows, out of two other more useful designs, 1. From the common fate of others, and even this Apostle, before us, to leave off wondring at this act of Gods providence, in permitting, and Satans malice in attempting it. Think it not strange, saith the Apostle, concerning the fiery trial; this I cannot call by that title, 'tis rather the airy trial, a blast of poysonous vapour, that Satan in a kind of hypocondriacal fit hath belch'd out against the Church, yet are we to think as little strange of it; 'Tis as familiar for that mouth of hell to breathe out smoke, as fire; slanders, as slaughters against the Church; Christ was defamed for a glutton, and one that had a devil, crown'd with reproaches, as well as thorns, first wounded with the sword of the tongue, and then after with nails and spear, made viler, than Barabbas by the peoples cry, before condemned to the cross by Pilate; And when the Master of the house hath been patient to be called Belzebub, well may a disciple of his retinue digest the title; And therefore, methinks, S. Paul can write it calmly, we are become, ὡς περικαθάρματα as the off-scouring, and πάντων περίψημα, 'tis a phrase of mighty intimation, like a man, that in a plague-time is chosen out, the vilest, unsavouriest in the city, carried about in the guise of nastiness, then whipt, then burnt in a ditch, or cast into the sea, every man giving him a [γένου περίψημα, and γένου κάθαρμα,] Let the curse of the whole city light on thee; And thus, saith the Apostle, are we become, we Apostles, we Ministers; Yea and θέατρον τῷ κόσμῳ καὶ ἀγγέλοις καὶ ἀνθρώποις, a spectacle to the world, and angels, and men, θέατρον the theatre for all the θηριομαχίαι καθ' ἀνθρώπων, as some (I say not how well) have lightly changed the phrase, 1 Cor. 15. 32. combating with mens as with lions, and bears, or else θέατρον, the stage, and scene for the whole world of fiends and men, to act their tragedies upon; and no manner of news in all this. Even among the heathen, the Grammarians tell us, that never any Comedy of Aristophanes took so well, as his Clouds, that was spent all in reproaching of Socrates, and under that title involved the whole condition of learning; Though through Alcibiades's faction, excidit, it miscarried, mist its applause once or twice, yet when men were left to their own humours, 'twas cried up extremely. And therefore not to think it strange, that is the first thing; Yea and 2. To make it matter of rejoycing and triumphing, of a χαίρετε καὶ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, Mat. 5. 12. a plain shouting for joy, or as we render it, exceeding gladness, that they are worthy of this degree of Christian preferment, to suffer shame for Christs name; That wo of Christs we have been generally secure, and safe from, Luke 6. 26. Woe unto you when all men speak well of you, we have had in all ages friends good store, that will not let this curse light on us; And blessed be God, if it prove ὑμεῖς ἔσχατοι, we of the last age peculiarly, that that great blessing is reserved for, Mat. 5. 11. Μακάριοι ὅταν ὀνειδίσωσιν καὶ διώξωσι καὶ εἴπωσι πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, blessed are ye when men shall revile and persecute and say every evil word against you; But withal let us be sure to take along with us the ψευδόμενοι falsly] that follows, that it be our innocence that is thus reviled: The devil is most ready to do it then, being κατήγορος τῶν ἀδελφῶν, accuser of the brethren, the best Christians, that he may exercise two of his attributes at once, accuser and lyer both; If he do not so, I am sure 'twill be small matter of rejoycing to us, small comfort in suffering as a thief, saith the Apostle, though all joy in suffering as a Christian; and so, small comfort in the ὀνειδίσωσιν, being reproached, unless the ψευδόμενοι falsly] be joyned with it; And therefore you must add that caution to your comfort, that they be your good, at least your justifiable deeds, that be evil spoken of, or else it will not be a sic prophetas, the prophets were used like you. The Clergy-man that in such a time as this, when the mouth of hell is open against us, shall think fit to open any other mouth, to join in the cry against the Church, to give life, or tongue to any scandalous sin, and set that to its clamans de terra, crying from the ground; that shall with any one real crime give authority to all the false pretended ones, that are laid to the charge of our calling, that by drunkenness or incontinence, by luxury or sloth, by covetousness or griping, by insolence or pride, by oaths or uncomely jesting, by contention or intemperate language, by repaying evil for evil, or railing for defamations, shall exasperate this raging humour, and give it true nourishment to feed on; what doth he but turn broiler and bonefeau, make new libels against the Church, and by that means perſwade credulous, ſeducible ſpectators, that all are true that have been made already; I know not what climax or aggravation of woes, is heavy enough for that man; all the lamentations and θρηνοδίας, in the Bible, Alas my brother] will not reach unto it; that of the milſtone about the neck, or the Melius ſi nunquam natus eſſet, it had been better if he had never been born] are the fitteſt expreſſions for him. S. Paul for the vindicating his miniſtery from vileneſs, was fain to mention all the good deeds he had ever done among them: O let not us bring our evil to remembrance, by acting them over afreſh, but think it moſt abundantly ſufficient, that we have already thus contributed to the defaming of our calling; He that hath done ſo formerly, that by the guilt of any one ſcandalous ſin (and it need not be of the firſt magnitude, to deſerve that title in a Miniſter) hath contributed ought to the vilifying of the whole Order, 'tis now time for him to ſee what he hath done, been a troubler of Iſrael, ſet the whole kingdome in an animoſity againſt the Clergy, and when will he be able to weep enough in ſecret, to waſh out this ſtain, incorporate into the very woofe of our robe? I ſhall no farther aggravate the ſin upon him, than to prepare him to ſeek out for ſome remedy, and to that end to bear me company to my laſt particular, how far we are concerned in the tranſcribing S. Pauls pattern, how far that practice, and that end is imitable by us, that are here aſſembled.

This practice conſiſts of two parts, a poſitive, and a negative. The poſitive part of this practice, the ἀλλὰ ὑμᾶς, but you] hath no caſe of ſcruple or difficulty in it; The ὑμᾶς] are the Corinthians ſouls; As in other places the ſouls ſignifie the perſons; ſo many ſouls went out of Ægypt, i. e. ſo many men; ſo here, by way of exchange or quittance on the other ſide, you, i. e. your ſouls, according to that of Pythagoras of old, ὁ ψυχή συ, thy ſoul is thou; And then add the ζητῶ, I ſeek] to it, and it gives you the uncontradicted duty of a Miniſter, to be a ſeeker of ſouls, the ſpiritual Nimrod, the hunter before the Lord, hunter of men, hunter of ſouls, and that indeed as wild, and untameable, ſubtle a game, as any wilderneſs can yield; ſo unwilling to come into our toyls, ſo wiſe in their generation to eſcape our ſnares, ſo cunning to delude all our ſtratagems of bringing them to heaven, that a man may commonly labour a whole night and catch nothing. He that winneth, or taketh ſouls, is wiſe, ſaith the wiſe man, Prov. 11. 30. A piece of wiſdom 'tis, not ſuddenly learned; a game, wherein all the wiſdome of the world, the φρόνησις σαρκὸς, the prudence of the fleſh, and the cunning of hell, are all combin'd in the party againſt us, for this ἀμφισβήτημα θεῶ καὶ δαιμόνων, as Syneſius calls the ſoul, this ſtate betwixt God and devils; and the game muſt be very carefully play'd, and dexterouſly managed on our ſide, if we think ever to win it out of their hands. The manner of paſtors, as of ſhepherds among us, is much changed from what it was in the Eaſtern parts of the world, in Greece and in Jurie; The ſheep, ſaith the Philoſopher in his time, would be led by a green bough, and follow whitherſoever you would have them; and ſo in the Scripture is ſtill mention of leading of ſheep, and of the people like ſheep, Pſal. 77. but now they muſt be driven and followed, yea, and ſometime by worrying brought into the fold, or elſe there is no getting them into the faireſt lovelyeſt paſture. The ſheep were then a hearing, and a diſcerning ſort of creatures, could hear the ſhepherd, and know his voice from all others, and when the thief and robber came, the ſheep did not hear them, John 10. 8. but now 'tis quite contrary, either not hearing at all, profaneneſs and diſſoluteneſs hath poſſeſs'd our ſouls with the πνεῦμα κατανύξεως, ſpirit of ſlumber, torpor, abſolute deafneſs, that all our hearing of Sermons is but a ſlumber of ſuch a continuance; or elſe having no ears for any but the thief and robber, if any come on that errand, to rob us of our charity, of our obedience, of our meek and quiet ſpirits, and infuſe calumnies, animoſities, railings, qualities that ipſo facto work metamorphoſes in us, change ſheep into wolves, his voice ſhall be heard, and admired, and deified, like Herods, the voice of God and not of man, though nothing be ſo contrary to God or godlineſs, as that voice. In this and many other conſiderations it is, that the ζητῶ I ſeek] here is ſo neceſſary; All our pains and induſtry, diligence and ſagacity, are little enough, to bring men into the true way to heaven, ſo many by-wayes on every ſide inviting and flattering us out of it, ſo much good company perſwading, nay ſo many falſe leaders directing us into error, that a Miniſter had need faſten himſelf into the ground (like a Mercuries poſt in this diviſion of waies) and never leave hollowing, and calling, and diſabuſing of paſſengers with a---This is the way, walk in it; or in the Apoſtles words, Follow peace with all men (διώκετε purſue and follow it) and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord; Peace and holineſs, two ſuch ſtrangers, ſuch prodigies in the world, (having taken their leaves ſo ſolemnly with Aſtræa for heaven) that unleſs they be followed with a διώκετε full ſpeed, as in an hue and cry, there is ſmall hope of overtaking or bringing them back again to the earth: And yet without them, heaven muſt be fain to turn an unhabitable part of the world, pars globi incognita, as empty of Saints, as it is full of glory; without them, Nemo Deum, no man ſhall ſee God. Could I imagine it poſſible for me to be inſtrumental to you in this work, to adviſe or direct you in this courſe, this method of ſeeking your peoples ſouls, ſo that God might one day find them in this temper, in pace & Sanctitate, in peace and holineſs, I ſhould put off all the reverence that I bear to this aſſembly, all conſideration of the buſineſs of this day, and venture to be unſeaſonable that I might be uſeful to you in this point; But I know there be no general rules, that can promiſe themſelves ſuch a ſucceſſfulneſs; the variety of tempers muſt have different accommodations, and well if after uſing of all means, we can be able to ſave any. The way moſt probable in my conceipt, is, the bringing men acquainted with the difference betwixt the firſt and ſecond Covenant; then, pitching on the ſecond, as that that belongs to us Chriſtians, to ſhew them the condition of this covenant in the groſs, the νόμος πίστεως, law of faith, made up of commands as well as promiſes, all the Goſpel-precepts that join together to complete that Codex, that law of Repentance, ſelf-denyal, Charity, the New creature, which S. Paul interprets πίστις ἐνεργουμένη δι' ἀγάπης, Faith conſummate by love, or, as S. James, τελειουμένη δι' ἔργων, perfected by works, ſincere, impartial, conſtant, though not unſinning, perfect obedience; And then, if you will have it in the retaile, the Sermon in the mount, in the 5 and 6 of Matthew will give it you completely; were men but poſſeſs'd that thoſe duties there mentioned, with the ego autem, but I ſay to you] were duties indeed, not only phraſes, and formes of ſpeech, that they are not only by grace made poſſible to a

Chriſtian

Chriſtian (an eaſie yoke, light burthen, and a command nigh unto thee, Rom. 10. 8. i. e. ἐν ὑπάρχῳ, as the 72. render that place of Deuteron. from whence it is cited) but alſo moſt indiſpenſably neceſſary, without which nemo Deum, none ſhall ſee God, Gods oath being gone out againſt all others, with a nunquam introibunt, they ſhall never enter into his reſt; It would, I conceive, within a while be found neceſſary, either to give over pretending toward heaven, or elſe to obſerve thoſe geſſes, that alone of all others can bring us thither; and ſo the world of Chriſtians be once more divided, as Epiphanius ſaith it was in the firſt ages, not into Orthodox and heretical (for thoſe are titles, that every man will apply as he liſts, the one to himſelf and his adherents, the other to all others that he diſfancies;) nor again into ſpiritual and carnal, (for thoſe were abuſed too in Tertullians time; as ſoon as ever he turned Montaniſt, then ſtrait nos ſpirituales, we ſpiritual, and all others animales pſychici, meer animal men) but into εὐσεβεῖς καὶ ἀσεβεῖς, godly and ungodly livers, and ſo impiety, injuſtice, and uncharitableneſs be the grand hereſies, to be anathematized, and peace and holineſs the moſt Orthodox Chriſtian tenets in our Religion. But then for the atchieving this aim, let me tell you, that men muſt have more than Sermons to lead them, the viſible preachings of your lives muſt συνεργῶν, cooperate, and join in the work of drawing ſinners to God, or elſe 'twill hardly prove ſucceſsful: you know the ſtory in Gellius, when that excellent counſel was given at Lacedemon by one that was vitâ defamatiſſimus, infamous for a very ill life, they were to take the counſel out of his mouth, and appoint a good man to deliver it, though a worſe Orator, Lib. 18. 3. Two things the Goſpel was firſt planted by, teaching, and miracles, and thoſe miracles in Scripture-phraſe are called works and mighty works; Now though the miracles be outdated, yet the ἔργα works, in the other ſenſe, muſt never be antiquated, 'tis they that the δύναμις power belongs to, the efficacy, and force, and mightineſs of our preaching, which if it be not added to our Sermons, our threats will be taken for Mormo's, our promiſes for deluſions our exhortations out of Scripture, for acts of tyranny and oppreſſion, laying thoſe burthens on other mens ſhoulders, which we will not touch with our own fingers; But if our lives bear witneſs to our doctrine, by letting them ſee us write thoſe copies with our own hands, which we require them to tranſcribe, then, as Polybius ſaith of Philopœmen, that good Orator, and good man, (and the goodneſs of the man was the ſpecial piece of his oratory) οὐ μόνον ἀποτρέψει, ἀλλὰ καὶ παρορμᾷ, we ſhall not only perſwade, but inforce our auditors; This is the only honeſt way of inſinuating our ſelves into our peoples affections, by letting them ſee how hearty our exhortations are, by our zeal to obſerving them our ſelves; by ſhewing what miracles of reformation the Goſpel is able to work on them, by an eſſay of its efficacy on our own breaſts; And if this poſitive part of S. Pauls practice be perfectly con'd, the negative will follow, the non veſtra, not yours.] He that heartily and affectionately ſeeks the ſouls of his auditors, will never pitch deſign on any thing elſe, that is theirs; the crown that belongs to him that converteth many to righteouſneſs, is too rich to receive luſter or commendation from any inferior acceſſion, or acquiſition from any thing that the veſtra, yours] can ſignifie; He that hath any conſideration of the veſtra, yours, in this work of a Paſtor, is the μισθωτὸς, the mercenary hireling, that Chriſt ſo prejudiceth with the φεύγει and οὐ μέλει περὶ προβάτων, he flyes, and he cares not for the ſheep, from no other topick of proof, but only, ὅτι μισθωτὸς, becauſe he is an hireling, Joh. 10. 13. And of what ill conſequence 'twas foreſeen this would be in the Church, you may conjecture by that one act of the adminiſtration of Gods providence in this behalf, conſtantly obſervable through all ages. That no Miniſter of Gods might be forc'd to ſuch viler ſubmiſſions, driven out of that Apoſtolical, generous ingenuity (Freely have you received, freely give,) into Gehazi's meanneſs, and mercenarineſs, ſelling and bartering that ſacred function, the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, or the exerciſe of thoſe gifts; it is no doubt, that Gods providence hath in all ages ſo liberally provided for endowing of the Church. Among that people where he himſelf ſo immediately preſided, that, ſaith Joſephus, it could not be called by the ſtyle of any other nation, monarchy, ariſtocracy, but θεοκρατία, neither adminiſtred by Kings or Senates, but immediately by God himſelf; there the Levites, without any of their own arts or purſuits, were much the richeſt Tribe of the twelve, loſt nothing by having no portion among their brethren; Not to mention their parts in ſacrifices and offerings, and their forty eight cities with ſuburbs, made over to them Num. 35. the Lords being their inheritance, i. e. the inſtating the tithes upon them, was demonſtratively as large a revenue to them, as (ſuppoſing an equal diviſion) the remainder could be to any other Tribe, yea and larger too, as much as the twelve tenth parts which they received, exceeded the nine, that remained to each Tribe after the decimation, i. e. by one third part of what was left to any Tribe. And among Chriſtians in the infancy of the Church, before the miniſtery was indowed with any certain portion, yet ſure the κοινωνία τῶν ἁγίων, the Chriſtians ſelling their lands, and bringing the price of them to the Apoſtles feet, though not for them to incloſe, yet for them to partake of, as well as to diſtribute, kept them from any neceſſity of the quæro veſtra, ſeeking that which was other mens. Nay, where that proviſion was not to be expected, as in their travailes, and journeyings, yet the ſtaff and the ſcrip are interdicted the Apoſtles, Mat. 10. 10. and under thoſe two phraſes, the quæro veſtra, the making any gain by the Goſpel, the ſtaff in that place was according to the cuſtome of the Jews, baculus paupertatis, the ſtaff of poverty, which Jacob intimates, when he ſaith, with my ſtaff I went over Jordan, i. e. in another phraſe, a poor Syrian ready to periſh, particularly ῥάβδος πλαγίας, the ſign of a Mendicant, (which the Germans call at this day, baetel ſtab, from the Greek αἰτεῖν, this begging or craving ſtaff) and this, with the ſcrip, was forbidden the Apoſtles in S. Matthew, though in Mark's relation, another kind of ſtaff, the ſtaff, for travaile be permitted them; To ſhew Gods abſolute diſlike of quæro veſtra] in Apoſtles, even before any certain proviſion was made for their maintenance, God, that feeds the young ravens, ſuſtains the deſtitute (and believe it, his Exchequer is no contemptible bank, his table in the wilderneſs is ſerved with quails and manna) undertaking to provide for them ſufficiently by ſome other means; And ſince by that ſame providence the Church is now indowed again in moſt parts of Chriſtendom, and Gods ſevere denunciations againſt ſacriledge ſet as an hedge of thorns about Levi's portion, ſure to prick, and feſter, and rankle in his fleſh, that ſhall dare to break in upon it, what is this but ſtill a continued expreſſion of Gods diſlike of the quæro veſtra, who hath therefore made over his own portion on us, that therewith we might be contented, and provided for, without the πλεονεξίαν, v. 17 without letting looſe our hands, or our appetites on other mens poſſeſſions? You ſee then, by the way, the error of thoſe, that from this practice of the Apoſtle, are ready to preſcribe us abſolute poverty, that will have all the lawful proper revenues of the Church prohibited, under the veſtra, and then claiming of tithes or any other Eccleſiaſtick endowment ſhall get under that ſtyle, and the Apoſtles non quæro] urged for a precedent againſt us; with how little law, or logick you will perceive, when you remember that the tithe, or what elſe is conſecrated, is by the very laws of this kingdom (to derive the pedegree no farther) as much the Miniſters own, held by the ſame tenure of Donation firſt, then of Parliamentary confirmation, that any mans inheritance deſcends unto him, and therefore to demand them, is no more a quæro veſtra, than to demand a rent of a tenant, in a word, a direct mea, not veſtra, a right, and not a gratuity. Nay the learned Jews have gone farther (R. Bechai on Deut. 14.) that if the tithe be not paid, the whole heap becomes Gods portion, and cite it as a ſpeech of Gods, that if thou pay the tithe it is thy corn, if not, it is Gods corn, and therefore, ſaith he, it is ſaid, Hoſ. 11.9. therefore I will return and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the ſeaſon thereof; like that land that is held in capite, with a rent reſerved, the non-payment of the rent or homage, is the forfeiting of the tenure. But I deſire not to follow this Jew in his meditation, but rather to come home to our ſelves, and not only to interdict our ſelves, the quæro veſtra, but even regulate us in the quæro noſtra, purge out of this aſſembly whatever may ſavour of the Jew, all griping, or rigor, or ſowreneſs, or ſummum jus, even in the quæro noſtra, ſeeking that, that is our own. To this purpoſe in the firſt place, not to ſeek all that is our own; Though 'twere not a fault in the Lay-Phariſee, Mat. 23. 23. Ἀποδεκατοῦτε ἡδύοσμον, to pay tithe of cumin, and the ſmalleſt herb, yet perhaps it may be in the Prieſt to require it; A fault not of injuſtice, or the quæro veſtra, but of ſordidneſs, and meanneſs in the quæro mea: Ariſtotle I am ſure would condemn it under that ſtyle of φειδωλοὶ, γλίσχροι, κίμβικες, too much poorneſs and tenuity of mind, τῷ δόσει ἐλλείπειν τῇ δὲ ἀλλοφίων ἐκ ἐφίεσθαι, though not in deſiring other mens, the quæro veſtra in the text, yet in want, or defect of that liberality, ingenuity, that is required of the moral man, which he there ſpecifies by the κυμιοτρίσης, exactneſs even to the partition of a Cumin ſeed, a fault, if obſervable in a heathen, then ſure cenſurable in a Chriſtian, and in a Miniſter, vile, and ſcandalous. When this is reſolved againſt in the firſt place, as illiberal, degenerous and beggarly, contrary to that generoſity, and ſuperiority of mind, that our profeſſion ſhould be thought to infuſe into us; The next thing I muſt require of you in the quæro mea, is a general unconcernedneſs in the things of this world, uſing the world as if we uſed it not, poſſeſſing the wealth we have, but not being poſſeſs'd by it (for then it turns our devil or familiar) as able to part with it at Gods call, as to receive it at his gift, pouring it out upon every his intimation, ſeeking, and projecting for advantages to be the better for this falſe Mammon, by being rich in good works, and when we ſee it a parting from us of its own accord, taking a chearful unconcerned leave of it, retaining ſo much of the Sceptick, as the ἀταραξία amounts to, an untroubledneſs with theſe inferiour events, and of the Stoick, or wiſe man in Antoninus, as ὁ ποιῶν τραγῳδίας, to act no paſſionate, lugubrious, tragical part, whatever ſecular provocation croſs us on the ſtage. Then 3, an entire contentedneſs with our lot, that duty of the laſt commandment, which is abſolutely required to the non quæro veſtra, or as our Apoſtle interprets himſelf, the ἐκ ἐπλεονέκτησα, not, as we render it, not making a gain, but not deſiring, coveting any thing that is anothers. To this purpoſe excellently Epictetus of old, that he that taſtes, and carves to himſelf of thoſe diſhes only, that are ſet before him, reaches not after thoſe that are out of his diſtance, ἐντὸς ὄντως θεῶν συμπότης, is fit for a gueſt at Gods table, which you may make, if you pleaſe, a periphraſis of a Miniſter: Did I not fear that this were a duty of too great perfection for ſome of my auditors, an unuſquiſque non poteſt capere, every one cannot receive it, I ſhould go on with that divine Philoſopher, that he that abſtains from that which is ſet before him, contemns that riches, that comes knocking at his door, ὁ μόνον συμπότης τῷ θεῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνέδρων, is not only a gueſt at his board, but a companion in his throne, and that is the pitch, that I would commend unto you, if I might hope, you would endeavour after it. But then 4. and laſtly, the minimum quod ſic, (that that I muſt not leave you till you have promiſed me, wreſtle till break of day, except you will thus bleſs me) the loweſt degree, that can be reconcileable or competible with an Apoſtle, is the not ſuffering your quæro veſtra, your hope, or deſign, of ſecular advantages, gaining of gratuities, gaining of applauſe, to have any the leaſt influence on your preaching, to intermix never ſo little in your ſeeking of ſouls; This is the καπηλεύειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ, daſhing, or imbaſing the word of God, corrupting it with our unworthy mixtures, making it inſtrumental to our gain, or popularity, the meaneſt office, the vileſt ſubmiſſion in the world. I remember a note of Procopius on 2 Kings, that Eliſha ſending his ſervant to cure the Shunamites child, forbids him to paſs any complement with any by the way; I had thought it had been for ſpeed, but he ſaith, ἤδει τὸ φιλότιμον, ἤδε φιλοδοξίαν τὴν θαυματουργίαν κωλύει, he knew his popular humour, and that popularity hinders working of miracles; and then by the ſame reaſon we may conclude, that that muſt needs enervate the word of God, and make it heartleſs and liveleſs in our hands, and the Miniſter that is given to it, will hardly ever work wonders in the curing, or recovering of ſouls. But that ſervant, you know, had another fault, φιλαργυρία, deſire of money, ἡ τῆς κακίας μητρόπολις, the mother-city whence all wickedneſs comes forth, ſaid Bion of old, and Timon puts them both together, ἀπληστία καὶ φιλοδοξία τῶν κακῶν στοιχεῖα, inſatiate love of wealth and honour are the elements of evil; and 'tis ſtrange to ſee how truly thoſe wiſe men were called vates, what Prophets they were, what direct Satyrs, thoſe words of theirs are againſt the times we live in; Our ἀπληστία and φιλοδοξία, covetouſneſs and popularity, are the elements of all the ruine, the ſeeds of all the deſolation that is threatned againſt this Church, ſome of us by the notorious ſcandalous guilt of thoſe two crimes, tempting raſh, uncharitable ſpectators to reſolve that thoſe ſins are the formalis ratio of a Clergy-man, accidents of the eſſence and inſeparable from the order: (and 'tis not the illogicalneſs of the inference, that will excuſe them, that have joyned with Satan in temptation to make that concluſion, nor deliver us from the deſtruction that follows it.) Others of us on the contrary ſide, but from the ſame principles, decrying all due either of maintenance, or reſpect to the Clergy, diveſting themſelves of all, but contempt and drudgery, hoping (we have juſt reaſon to ſuſpect) by flying both, to be courted by them both, to have them more ſure at the rebound, than they can at the fall, to run from them here moſt violently, that they may have them alone to themſelves when they meet at the Antipodes. What imprudent bargains ſuch men are likely to make, if they ſhould be taken at their words; what skittiſh things popular benevolence, and popular applauſe have been always found to be, experience hath taught others. I deſire even they that make that choice, may never pay ſo dear for that knowledge; But whatever the error prove in the tranſitory commodities of this world, it matters little; for wealth and honour are, ſure, things that we may go to heaven without, and ſo, for as much as concerns our individuals, are not neceſſary to us, as Chriſtians; yet can I not aſſure you, but that they are neceſſary to us in ſome degree as Miniſters, wealth in a competence to reſcue us from contempt; and reſpect, at leaſt ſo far, as a ne quis te deſpiciat, let no man deſpiſe thee, to keep us from being utterly unprofitable; ſome revenue of our own, to keep us from the quæro veſtra; and ſome authority of our own, to inable us from the quæro vos; ſomewhat of either from the character of our office, that we be not tempted to ſeek either by unlawful means, to purchaſe the veſtra, by the ſale of vos, to acquire the favour of our auditors by the expoſing of their ſouls. Think but how probable a fear this may be, when things come to ſuch a complication, that he that hath a ſin to be preach'd againſt, hath a benevolence to be preach'd for; he that hath a wound to be cured, is able to be thankful, if he may be kindly uſed, yea, and to multt the Chirurgion, if he be too rough; when he that hath ſomewhat to mend, hath alſo ſomewhat to give, a commutation to eſcape his penance; whether this may not prove a temptation to him that hath no other livelihood to depend on; and conſequently, whether rankling and gangreening may not be lookt for, as an ordinary title in our weekly bills, when the skinning of wounds is become the gainful craft, and compliance and popularity the great Diana, that trade by which men have their wealth. But perhaps the moſt of this is an extravagance, I wiſh and pray it may prove an unneceſſary one.

There is yet one branch of the application behind; the end why St. Paul delivered this text of mine; that I told you, was the vindicating his miniſtery from contempt, the gaining ſome authority with the Corinthians; And let that be our method alſo, to come to that end by the non veſtra, ſed vos, not to acquire that thin blaſt of air, [illegible] Chamelions are wont to feed on, but that ſolid ſubſtantial eſtimation, that dwells only in the account of God and the hearts of true Corinthians; That that may diſperſe thoſe fumes of prejudices, that Satan is wont to blaſt the Miniſter with, when any ſaving effect is to be wrought by his miniſtery, that unblemiſht reputation here, that when it is to be had, is a pretious bleſſing, very inſtrumental to the edifying of others, and is a kind of coronet here in this life, preparatory to that crown hereafter; And ſure there is no work of ours, that we can juſtly hope God will think fit to reward with ſuch a crown, but the ſincere labouring in the word and doctrine, filling our ſouls with the earneſt deſire of ſaving others, eſpouſing it as the ſole felicity of our lives, the one promotion that we aſpire to, to people heaven with Saints, to ſend whole colonies of inhabitants thither. 'Twas the excellence and pride of the ancient Jews, yea, and the craft peculiar to them, ſaith Joſephus, τεκνοποιητικὴ, getting of children, propagating miraculouſly, and the barren was the moſt infamous perſon among them, behold I go childleſs, the ſaddeſt lamentation, and, Give me children or elſe I dye, and, Take away our reproach, moſt pathetical Scripture-expreſſions; yea, and among the Romans the jus trium liberorum, the right of three children, you know, what a prerogative it was: This is our trade, my brethren, to beget children to heaven, and according to the Law of the Goſl in Deut. now our elder brother (Chriſt) is dead, we are the men who by right of propinquity are obliged to raiſe up ſeed to our elder brother. O let it not be our reproach to go thus childleſs to our graves, at leaſt our guilt, and juſt accuſation to bereave our Saviour of that ſeed he expects from us; you know what a ſin it was to repine at that duty; let not us be wanting to Chriſt in this ſo charitable a ſervice, charitable to Chriſt, that his blood may not have been ſhed in vain, charitable to others, whom we may by Gods bleſſing convert unto righteouſneſs, and the charity will at laſt devolve on our ſelves, who by this means ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever and ever.

THE

THE POOR MAN'S TITHING.

A SERMON,

Preached in St. Paul's Church before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, on the 12. of April, A.D. 1640.

DEUT. XXVI. 12, 13.

When thou haſt made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine encreaſe the third year—— Then thou ſhalt ſay before the Lord thy God——

THAT the firſt ſound of this text may not poſſeſs you with an expectation of a Vicars plea, a diſcourſe of tithes, and querulous invective againſt ſacriledge; and conſequently, by this prejudice, your ears and hearts be fortified impenetrable and impregnable againſt the ſpeaker, and the Sermon; that I may reconcile the choice of this text with the imploring and hoping for your patience, I ſhall immediately deliver you from your fears, by aſſuring you, that the main of this text is (and the total of my diſcourſe ſhall be) bent quite toward another coaſt, that which in the ſincerity of my heart, I conceive may beſt comply with your deſigns, either as Chriſtians, or as men, moſt tend to your ſerving of Chriſt, and enriching of your ſelves, with the increaſe of your wealth here, and glory hereafter. And when I have told you this, I cannot chuſe but ſay, that I am your friend, and for that may claim not as an act of favour, but juſtice, the payment of this debt, the return of your patience in receiving, and care in practiſing what ſhall be delivered.

There was a double tithing among the Jews, the every years tithing, and the third years tithing; the every years tithing you know whoſe patrimony, it was; but after that was ſet apart (and preſented unto the owners) every third year there was another to be raiſed, over and above, for the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and the widow, as you may ſee it enacted, c. 14. v. 29. this was called by the Rabbines the ſecond tithing, and in another reſpect the third by ſome of them, (the tithe for feaſts, Deut. 14. 23. going for the ſecond, and the tithe of the tithes, which the Levites paid the High-prieſt, going for the fourth, in that account) but moſt ſignificantly מעשר עני the tithe for the poor, πλουσιακὴ, in Joſephus, the poor mans tithing, or in the words of the text, the compleveris decimare anno tertio, the making an end of tithing the third year; Till this were done, there wanted a compleveris, what ever other dues were paid, the work was incomplete, and upon the performance of that, here is a ſtock of confidence toward God, for him that hath done it, a right inveſted on him to all the abundance of Canaan, v. 15. a juſtifiable pretenſion to all temporal bleſſings, which he may depend on, and challenge at Gods hand; 'twere but a cold expreſſion to ſay, he might expect by petition, I will add, he may require by claim, and produce his patent for it here in my text, Cùm compleveris, &c. When thou haſt made an end, &c.

This text I have upon advice reſolved not to divide into parts, but my diſcourſe upon it I ſhall, by ſetting it theſe bounds and limits; 1. That it preſents unto you the duty of alms-giving, by occaſion of theſe words, Cùm compleveris decimare anno tertio, when thou haſt made an end of tithing----- the third year. 2. The benefit ariſing from the performance of this duty, from the reſt, Dicas coram Domino, then thou ſhalt or mayeſt ſay, i.e. haſt right and power to ſay, before the Lord thy God. In our progreſs through the firſt of theſe, we ſhall obſerve theſe geſſes; 1. We ſhall begin with the ὅτι, conſider alms-giving ſimply, deducing the practice of the Jews down to us Chriſtians, and ſo in a manner give you the hiſtory of alms-giving. 2. We ſhall look into the πόσον, what portion ought to iſſue out of every mans revenues, taking our riſe from the practice of the Jews, a tithe of all increaſe every third year. 3. We ſhall proceed to the ὅτι δεῖ, conſider it as a duty; and then we ſhall have done with the firſt general.

In the ſecond general we ſhall ſhew you, 1. In theſi, that confidence or claiming any thing at Gods hands, muſt take its riſe from duty in performance, Then thou mayeſt ſay; then, but not before. 2. In hypotheſi, ſhew you the connexion between this confidence and this performance, claiming of temporal plenty upon giving of alms. Theſe are the ſeveral poſts and ſtages of my future diſcourſe, the Monogram drawn in cole, as it were, wherein you may diſcern the lines and lineaments of the whole body; I muſt now deſcend to the filling them up, and giving you them a little more to the life, taking them in the order propoſed, very looſely, and very plainly, making proviſion for your hearts, not your ears, for your future gain and not your preſent ſenſuality, and begin with the firſt general, and in that the ὅτι, or alms-giving ſimply conſidered, deducing the practice of the Jews down to us Chriſtians, and ſo give you in a manner the hiſtory of alms-giving.

Though we aſſert not an equality of worldly riches from any decree either of God or nature, find not any ſtatute of πάντα κοινὰ, any law of community, in any but Plato's inſtitutions, and thoſe never reduced to practice in any one city in the world (attempted once by Plotinus, through his favour with Gallienus, who promiſed to reſide in his Platonopolis, but ſoon altered his purpoſe again, as Porphyrie tells us) yet I may ſuppoſe it for a granted maxime, that the extreme inequality, that is now ſo illuſtriouſly viſible in the world, is not any act of Natures primary intention, or Gods firſt and general providence; Ariſtotle may tell us of ſome φύσει δοῦλοι, ſome that Nature hath bored through the ear, to be ſlaves for ever, and we may believe him, if we can find any ground for it, but of any νέους πλοχὰς colonies of men, ſent into the world without any claim or right to any part of the worlds goods, he hath not left us any thing upon record. Nor hath the book of Creation in the Scripture, the Bereſith, or natural Philoſophy of the Bible given us any hint for ſuch a reſolution; that ſome ſhould be born to riot, and others to famiſh; ſome to be glutted, and others to ſtarve, that mankind ſhould be thus dichotomized into ſuch extreme diſtant fates, ſome to reign in Paradiſe for ever, others to be thrown over the wall, as out of the Adamites ſtove, to pine and freeze among thorns and briars. This were an abſolute decree of election and reprobation, improved farther than Predeſtinarians have ordinarily extended it. As we are wont to ſay of ſin, that 'tis not to be found in Gods Hexameron, no fruit of his Six days labour, but a production of a later date, ingendred betwixt the ſerpent and the woman; that Incubus and Succuba, the devil and the lower ſoul; ſo may we ſay of extreme want and poverty, that its nativity is of the land of Canaan, its father an Amorite, and its mother an Hittite: Satan and covetouſneſs brought it into the world; and then God finding it there (whoſe glorious attribute it is to extract good out of evil) as he did once a σωτὴρ out of an ἀπολύτρωσιν, redemption of mankind out of the fall of Adam; and ſo made the Devil an inſtrument of bringing the Meſſias into the world; ſo hath he in like manner by his particular providence ordered and continued this effect of ſome mens covetouſneſs, to become matter of others bounty, exerciſe of that one piece of mans divinity, as Pythagoras called liberality, and ſo ex his lapidibus, out of theſe ſtones, out of the extreme want, and neceſſity of our brethren, to raiſe trophies and monuments of virtue to us, of charity, liberality, and magnificence, of mercy, and bowels of compaſſion, that moſt beautiful compoſition of graces, that moſt heroical renowned habit of the ſoul. So that now we may define it an act of Gods infinite goodneſs to permit, though before we could ſcarce allow it reconcileable with his infinite juſtice, to decree the extreme inequality of earthly portions, the poor man gaſping for food, that the rich may have a ſtore-houſe or magazine, where to lay up his treaſures; the careful labourer, full of children, ſuffered to wreſtle with two extremities at once, hunger on the one ſide, and natural compaſſion to the helpleſs creatures he hath begotten, on the other; that thou by thy wealth mayeſt be that Elijah ſent from heaven to the famiſhing forlorn widow, that Godlike man drop'd out of the clouds to his relief, and by the omnipotent reviving power of thy charity, uſurp that attribute of Gods given him by the Pſalmiſt, that feeds the young ravens, expoſed by the old ones, ſuſtain that deſtitute ſort of creatures, that call upon thee. Admirable therefore was that contrivance of Gods mercy and wiſdom, mentioned to the Jews, not as a threatning but a promiſe of grace, one of the privileges and bleſſings of Canaan, the poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land, Deut. 15.11. that thou mayeſt always have ſomewhat to do with thy wealth, ſome ſluce to exhauſt thy plenty, ſome hungry leech, to open a vein, and prevent the acceſs of thy feaver, and withal, that thy wealth may enoble thee, as Xenocrates told his benefactors children, that he had abundantly requited their father, for all men ſpake well of him for his liberality to Xenocrates, or as benefactors among the heathen were adored and deified, that thus thy faithleſs, fading, falſehearted riches (which the Evangeliſt therefore ſtyles Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, only as ἄδικον is oppoſed to ἀληθινὸν, to true durable wealth) may yield thee more profit by the profuſion, than by the poſſeſſion (as ſilver doth by melting, than by continuing in the wedge or bullion, according to that of * Clemens, οὐχ ὁ ἔχων ἀλλ' ὁ μεταδιδοὺς πλούσιος, the rich is he that diſtributes, not he which hath and poſſeſſeth; and * Lactantius, Divites ſunt, non qui divitias habent, ſed qui utuntur illis ad opera juſtitiæ, the rich are they, not which have riches, but uſe them to works of righteouſneſs) purchaſe thee by being thus providently laid out, a revenue of renown here, and glory hereafter. You ſee then the pedigree and genealogy of alms-giving, how it came into the world; Covetouſneſs and oppreſſion and rapine, brought in emptineſs, and beggery, and want; then Gods providence and goodneſs, finding it in the world, reſolves to continue it there, to imploy the treaſures, and exerciſe the charity of others.

* Pædag. l.3. c.6.

* L. de juſt. cap. de offic. viri juſti.

Now for the practice of the world in this great affair, we cannot begin our ſurvey more properly, than from the text, there to behold Gods judgment, in this point, by the rules he hath given to be obſerved in this city of God, his own people of the Jews, whilſt they were managed by God himſelf. The prieſthood was the peculiar lot of God, and therefore may well be allowed the πρωτοκλισία, feeding firſt at Gods feaſt; And the poor next after them, were taken care of by God himſelf, Lazarus, as it were, in Aarons, as once in Abrahams boſom, next to the prieſt in the temple, as to the Patriarch in heaven; a tithing for the prieſt, and when this was done, every third year, a tithing for the poor: The withholding of the former was ſacrilege, and of the latter, furtum interpretativum, ſay the Schools, interpretative theft, and the Caſuiſts to the ſame purpoſe, that though our goods be our own, jure proprietatis, by right of propriety, yet they are other mens, jure charitatis, by right of charity; the rich mans barn is the poor mans granary; nay murther too, as we may conclude from the words of the wiſe man, the poor mans bread is his life (and that is ſometimes thy dole, on which his life depends) and then, as there it follows, he that deprives him of it (ſo doth the unmerciful, as well as the thief) is a murtherer. Nay farther, that murther one of the deepeſt dye, a fratricidium, like Cains of Abel his brother, and therefore as that is a clamans de terra, crying for judment from the ground, ſo hath this a clamet ad Deum contra te, cry to God againſt thee, Deut. 15.9. I will add, at leaſt ſo long as the ſtate of the Jews laſted, it was ſacrilege too. Shall we proceed then, and ask, when the ſtate of the Jews expired, did alms-giving expire with it? was charity abrogated with ſacrifice? turned out of the world for an antiquated, aboliſh'd rite, for a piece of Judaiſm? The practice of ſome Chriſtians would perſwade men ſo, that the ſword that Chriſt brought into the world, had wounded charity to the heart, that he had left no ſuch cuſtom behind him to the Churches of God, that Chriſtianity had clutch'd mens hands, and frozen their hearts into an ἀπολίθωσις, as Arrian calls it, inverted that miracle of Chriſts, returned the children of Abraham into ſtones. Phyſicians tell us of a diſeaſe converting the womb into a firm ſtone, and the ſtory in Crollius of a λιθοπαῖδιον, a child of a perfect ſtony ſubſtance, is aſſerted by many others. Now the unhappineſs of it is, that the Hebrew רחם that ſignifies a womb, by a little varying of the punctation, ſignifies mercy alſo, and bowels of compaſſion, whereupon Hoſ. 1.11. the Sept. inſtead of ἔλεος have put μήτρα, inſtead of mercy, a womb; and alas, the ſame diſeaſe hath fallen upon the רחם in that other ſenſe, the bowels of mercy in many Chriſtians are petrified, tranſubſtantiate into ſtones, pure mine and quarry, and ſo we Miniſters, damnati ad metalla (that old Roman puniſhment) condemned to digg in thoſe mines, and by all the daily pains of preaching and exhortation, able to bring forth nothing but ſuch λιθοπαιδία, ſtones inſtead of bread.

But I hope, my brethren, the practice of thoſe ſome, ſhall not be accepted as authentick evidence againſt Chriſt, to defame and diſhonour our moſt glorious profeſſion, whoſe very ſtyle is [Brethren] whoſe livery [Charity] and Character that they love one another. I know not how unmerciful and hard-hearted the Chriſtian world is now grown in its declination, as covetouſneſs is generally the vice of old age, I am ſure, 'twas open-handed enough, in its youth, witneſs that moſt antient primitive Apoſtolical inſtitution of the Offertory in the Sacrament, that which was ſo conſiderable a part of that holy rite, that it gave denomination to the whole, the Euchariſt ſtyled κοινωνία communion, diſtinctly, from this cuſtom of bringing every man out of his ſtore, and communicating to the neceſſities of the Saints, as it is 2 Cor. 8. 4. κοινωνία τῆς διακονίας εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους, the communion, or fellowſhip as we render it, more fully, the communicativeneſs, or liberality of adminiſtring to the Saints, and is therefore by us rendred liberality, 1 Cor. 16. 3. Many excellent obſervations might be preſented to you on this occaſion, neceſſary for the underſtanding many places in S. Paul, eſpecially of c. 11. of 1 Cor. but you will eaſily forgive me the ſparing this pains, in this place; Let it ſuffice that we find in that chap. that at thoſe holy meetings there was always a table furniſh'd out of the bounty of communicants, for a common feaſt unto all the faithful; the rich might have leave to bring more than his poorer brother, but not to take place by that bounty, not to pretend any propriety to what he had brought, which is the meaning of the ἴδιον δεῖπνον every man his own ſupper, and the προλαμβάνειν ἐν τῷ φαγεῖν, taking precedence of others in eating, the rich to eat all, and the poor none, one to be hungry, and the other drunken, the fault which he there found with the Corinthians; Nor did the cuſtom of liberality, annex'd to the Sacrament in thoſe days, expire or vaniſh with the Apoſtles; The practice rather increaſed, than abated among their ſucceſſors; Witneſs that προσφορὰ, or oblation, firſt of all the fruits of the ſeaſon, as an offering of firſt-fruits; afterwards only ἄρτος καὶ ποτήριον, of bread and wine mingled with water, which the brethren or faithful, i. e. in the antient ſtyle, the Communicants are ſaid to bring, and preſent at the altar or table of the Lord, for the furniſhing of the table with part, and refreſhing the poor with what was left. Theſe are the εἰσφοραὶ oblations in the * Conſtitutions, at leaſt one ſort of them, one being for the Prieſt, the other for the poor, and again, αἱ εἰς τοὺς δεομένους ἐντολαὶ, the doing good to them that want, the very word in S. Paul, ἐντολίας καὶ κοινωνίας, to do good and communicate, Heb. 13. 16. and ‖ τὰ εἰσφερόμενα ὑπὲρ προφάσεως παντὸν ἐκούσια, voluntary oblations for the poor; Theſe are contained under his general head of καρποφορίαι, bringing of fruits, of which he hath a * Chapter and ‖ κυριακαὶ συνεισφορίαι, the Lords Offerings, and * ἐλεημοσύνη, alms and other where ἐκούσια τοῖς πένησι χορηγούμενα, voluntary gifts diſtributed to the poor; And obſervable it is from thoſe, and other ancient conſtitutions, that 'twas a puniſhment for ſome men, uſed in the Church, not to receive them to the Offertory, who yet were not ſo great malefactors, as to be kept from ſome other privileges of Chriſtians; This was call'd, κοινωνία χωρὶς προσφορᾶς, communicating without the Offertory, frequently in the Ancyrane and Nicene Councils; and therefore Epiphanius having mentioned the faults, for which offenders were excommunicated, as πορνεία, μοιχεία, fornication, adultery, &c. he adds προσφορὰς λαμβάνει παρὰ τῶν ἐξ ἀδικούντων καὶ παρανομούντων, ἀλλὰ δικαίως ζώντων, the Church receives not offerings from the injurious, &c. but from juſt livers, noting that all but the δικαίως ζῶντες, thoſe that live juſtly, were interdicted the priviledge of offering or giving to the Corban. Thus in Clemens was not the oblation received from the unjuſt publican, who exacted παρὰ τὸ διαταγμένον, above what was appointed; and ſo for executioners, whoſe oblation being the price of bloud, was not ſuffered to come into the Corban, no more than the thirty pieces of ſilver, that Judas took to betray Chriſt, Mat. 27. 6. An excellent conſideration for us to meditate on, that the being excluded from the Offertory, being denied the priviledge of giving alms or being bountiful to the poor, went for a very great puniſhment; and ſo ſure, the duty, a ſpecial part of piety and publick ſervice of God. And therefore the cuſtom being either neglected, or intermitted at Conſtantinople, S. Chryſoſtome took care for the reſtoring it again, and thereupon made that excellent oration upon that ſubject, where from antiquity he proves the uſe of the Offertory on the Lords day, and mentions the Corban, or treaſury where 'twas wont to be put.

* C. 7.

I have been the more large on this particular, becauſe it hath in all ages been accounted a prime piece of Chriſtianity, (a ſpecial part of divine worſhip ſaith Aquinas) the obſervation of which is yet, thanks be to God, alive among us, eſpecially if that be true, which Pamelius cites out of Honorius, that inſtead of the antient oblation of bread and wine, the offering of money was by conſent received into the Church, in memory of the pence in Judas ſale. Only 'twere well, if we were a little more alacrious, and exact in the performance of the duty, and more care taken in the diſtribution; eſpecially, that that notorious abuſe of this moſt Chriſtian cuſtome, which they ſay (I hope unjuſtly) ſome part of this city is guilty of, in converting this inheritance of the poor, into a feaſt of entertainment for the Officers of the Church, may be branded, and baniſh'd out of kenn. It is yet but a ſin, which like ſome in Ariſtotle, hath never a name, had never yet the honour to be forbidden; if it ſhould chance to live to that age, thrive and prove fit for an ὀνομαθεσία the impoſition of a name, let me have the favour to Chriſten it, A new-found ſacriledge, a moſt inhumane at once, and unchriſtian profanation; And if you want an embleme for it, that antient piece of Nathans deſigning will ſerve the turn, the rich man feaſting on the poor mans ewe lamb, his luxury maintained by the others bloud. 'Twere an admirable work of Eccleſiaſtick diſcipline, ſome way or other to bring the Corban in ſuch favour with us, that it might prove a bank or ſtorehouſe in every pariſh, able to ſupply the wants of all; but much better, if we would fall in love with it our ſelves, as a way of binding up both the tables of the Law into one volume, of miniſtring both to God and man, by this one mixt act of charity and piety, of mercy, and of ſacrifice, and ſo, in the wiſe mans phraſe, to lay up our riches in Gods ſtorehouſe, without a metaphor. But if it pleaſe you not, that any body (though in the reſolution it be Chriſt himſelf) ſhould have the diſpoſal of your alms, as charity now adaies is a pettiſh weariſh thing, ready to ſtartle, and pick a quarrel with any thing that comes to meddle with it, then ſhall I not purſue this deſign any farther. So thou art really, and ſincerely affected to the ſetting out of the third years tithing, thou ſhalt have my leave to be thine own Almoner, have the choice of the particular way of diſpoſing, and ordering it thy ſelf. And yet three things there are, that I cannot chooſe but be ſo pragmatical, as to interpoſe in this buſineſs; 1. For the quando, when, this tithe ſhould be ſet out; Let it not be deferred, till the Will be a making, till death forces it out of our hands, and makes it a non dat ſed projicit, only a caſting over the luding, when the ſhip is ready to ſink; nor yet till our coffers be ready ready to run over, till a full, abundant proviſion be made for all that belong to us, for that is to feed the poor like the dogs, only with the orts of the childrens table; but as other tithes are paid, juſt as the increaſe comes in, preſently after the whole field is reap'd, ſo muſt the poor mans tithing alſo; ſet out, I ſay, then, dedicated to that uſe, that we may have it by us at hand, told out ready, when the owner calls for it. 'Twas a thing that Antoninus recounts as matter of ſpecial joy, & that which he numbers amongſt the felicities, for which he was beholden to the Gods, that he was never ask'd of any, that he thought fit to give to, that he was anſwered by his Almoner, ὅτι οὐκ ἔσοι χρήματα ὅσα γένηται, that there was not ſtore at hand to perform his will. A moſt joyous, comfortable thing, in that heathen Emperors opinion, and yet that, that will hardly be attained to, unleſs we take ſome ſuch courſe as this mentioned in terminis by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 16. 2. Upon the firſt day of the week let every one of you lay by him in ſtore as God hath proſpered him, that there be no gathering when I come; a weekly proviſion laid in, and ready in numerato for this purpoſe, that you be never ſurprized on a ſudden, and ſo diſabled to perform this duty. 2. For the quibus, I would anſwer, To all, whom Chriſt hath made our neighbours and brethren; and I know not any, that are excluded from this title. But you would then think I were ſet to ſollicite againſt the laws of this realm, and plead the cauſe of the idle wandering beggar, that moſt ſavage, barbarous unchriſtian trade among us, ſet, a man would think, in the ſtreets by the devil, on purpoſe to poſe, and tire, and nonplus mens charity, to diſhearten and weary them out of this Chriſtian duty. No, we have a countermand from the Apoſtle againſt theſe ἀτακτήσαντας, diſorderly walkers, 2 Theſ. 3. 7. that if any would not labour, neither ſhould he eat, v. 10. the beſt alms for them, the ſeaſonableſt proviſion and charity to ſuch, is the careful execution of laws upon them, to ſet them every one ſingle in an orb to move in, by that means perhaps to teach them the skill in time to be alms-givers themſelves, at leaſt to become fit to be receivers; For ſuch, of all others, is the fixt, ſtationary, diligent labouring poor man, whoſe motion is like that of the trembling ſphere, not able to advance any conſiderable matter in a whole age, be they never ſo reſtleſs, whoſe hands, with all their diligence, cannot give content to the mouth, or yield any thing but ſtones many times, to the poor child that calls for bread. All that I ſhall interpoſe for the quibus, ſhall be this; that ſeeing a do good to all, is now ſent into the world by Chriſt, and that but little reſtrained in any Chriſtian Kingdom, by an eſpecially to the houſhold of Saints, (all Chriſtians being ſuch) and ſeeing again, no man hath hands, or ſtore to feed every mouth that gapes in a kingdom, or particularly in this populous city, we may do well to take that courſe that we uſe in compoſing other difficulties, referatur ad ſortem, let the lot decide the main of the controverſie, and reſerving ſomewhat for the publick, ſomewhat for the ſtranger, ſomewhat for common calamities, ſomewhat as 'twere for the univerſal motion of the whole body, ſomewhat for excentricks, let the place, whereon our lot hath caſt us, be the principal orb for our charity to move in, the ſpecial dioceſs for our Viſitation. And when that is done, and yet, as 'tis in the parable, there be ſtill room, ſtore left for others alſo, then to inlarge, as far as we can, round about us, as motion beginning at the centre diffuſes it ſelf uniformly, ſends out his influence and ſhakes every part to the circumference; and happy that man, who hath the longeſt arm, whoſe charity can thus reach fartheſt. The third thing is that my text obliges me to, the how much out of every mans revenues may go for the poor mans due, which brings me to the ſecond particular, the πόσον here mentioned in theſe words [tithing all the tithes of thy increaſe the third year.]

That there was a πόσον defin'd by God to the Jews Charity, a proportion for every man, not which they might not exceed (for there were other ways of vent for their charity mentioned, beſide this) but which no man was to go under, is manifeſt by the text, and c. 14. of this book; the proportion you ſee, a tithe, or tenth part of all the increaſe, not yearly, but only every third year, to raiſe a bank, as it were, for the maintenance of the poor, till that year came about again. This if we would diſſolve into a yearly rate, and ſo diſcern the Jewiſh πόσον more perfectly, it is equivalent to a thirtieth part every year; the Jew whoſe yearly revenue amounted to thirty ſhekels, was every third year to pay three of them to the uſe of the poor, that is in effect, one for every year, the triennial tenth being all one with an annual thirtieth: The account is clear, and no man but hath Arithmetick enough to conclude, that a thirtieth part is the third part of a tenth, and ſo a tenth every third year, is all one with a thirtieth every year. I ſhall inſiſt on this no farther, than to tell you that Gods judgment in this affair is worth obſerving, that alms-giving or mercifulneſs being a dictate of nature, but that like other ſuch Laws, given only in general terms, for the ὅτι, but not ſo as to deſcend to particular caſes; it pleaſed God to his people the Jews, to expreſs his judgment at that time, in that ſtate, for the πόσον, how much was by Law to be laid aſide for that uſe out of every ones increaſe.

Now if I ſhould preſs this practice of the Jews as matter of obligation, or preſcription to Chriſtians, that you are not in conſcience to do leſs, than the Jews were bound to do, every man to ſet apart a thirtieth of his yearly revenue, or increaſe, for the uſe of the poor brethren, I know not how you would take it; many would ſtartle at the news of the doctrine, many more when they came to the practice of it, many quarrels you would have againſt it; He that were merciful already, would think his gift would become a debt, his bounty duty, and ſo be wrong'd and robb'd of the renown of his charity, by this doctrine; and the covetous, that were not inclined to giving at all, would complain that this were a new kind of ghoſtly ſtealth, a way of robbing him out of the pulpit, of burthening his conſcience, and lightning his bags, and both joyn in the indictment of it for a Judaical antiquated doctrine, that hath nothing to do with Chriſtians. And therefore to do no more, than I ſhall juſtifie from the principles of the Goſpel; I ſhall confeſs unto you, that this precept, as it was given to the Jews, is not obliging unto Chriſtians, and therefore I have not told you it was, but only gave you to conſider, what Gods judgment was for the πόσον to his own people. Only by way of application to our ſelves, give me leave to add theſe four things which I deliver in as many propoſitions; 1. That mercifulneſs, or charity or giving alms is no part of the Ceremonial Law, which is properly Judaiſm, but of the eternal law of reaſon and nature, part of the oath or Sacrament, that is given us, when the fiat homo is firſt pronounced to us, a ray of Gods mercifulneſs infuſed into us, with our humane nature; in a word, that mercifulneſs is all one with humanity, a precept of the nature, the God, the ſoul we carry about with us. 2. That being ſo, it comes within the compaſs of thoſe Laws, that Chriſt came οὐ καταλῦσαι, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι, not to deſtroy but to fulfil, i.e. as the Fathers before S. Auguſtin, generally interpreted it, to improve it, ſet it higher than it was before, require more of Chriſtians than ever was exacted of the Jews or heathens by the Law of Moſes or of Nature. Thus * Irenæus, mentioning Chriſts improvement of the Law, pro eo quod eſt, Non mœchaberis, nec concupiſcere præcepit, for, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not look to luſt, he adds, pro eo quod eſt decumare, omnia quæ ſunt pauperibus dividere, inſtead of tithing (this third years tithing) thou ſhalt divide all thou haſt to the poor, give them ſome plentiful part of it. And this, ſaith he, an act of Chriſt, non ſolventis, ſed adimplentis, extendentis, dilatantis legem, not looſing, but filling up, extending, dilating the Law. And * S. Hierome, on 2 Cor. 8. 20. avoiding this that no man ſhould blame us--- explains it thus, leſt any ſhould ſay, how did Chriſt fill up or fulfil the Law, cùm videamus Chriſtianos non tantam eleemoſynam facere, quantam fieri in lege præceptum eſt, when we ſee Chriſtians not give ſo much alms, as was by the Law of Moſes preſcribed to be given. 3. That there were among the Jews two ſorts of mercifulneſs, the firſt called literally righteouſneſs, and by the Septuagint, when it belongs to works of mercy, is rendred ſometimes δικαιοσύνη righteouſneſs, ſometimes ἐλεημοσύνη mercy; and this is that mercifulneſs that Moſes's Law required of the Jews, and ſo was part of their righteouſneſs, he was a breaker of the Law, that did neglect it, and ſo opera juſtitiæ in Lactantius, the works of righteouſneſs, meaning works of charity, by that phraſe, The ſecond was mercy, i.e. an higher degree of charity, rather benignity, mercifulneſs, being full of good works, and this was more than their Law exacted, and therefore was ſtyled goodneſs, as that was more than righteouſneſs. 4. That by force of the ſecond propoſition, and by the tenure of Evangelical perfection, that Chriſt commended to his diſciples, this higheſt degree of mercifulneſs among the Jews is now the Chriſtians task, and that, to him that will be perfect, yet in an higher degree, not only that degree, which the Law required of the Jew, a little raiſed, and improved by us, for that will be but the Chriſtians righteouſneſs, but even the benignity of the Jews, abundance of mercy, improved and inlarged by us alſo. And from theſe premiſes if I may in the name of God take boldneſs to infer my concluſion, it can be no other than this; That the proportion to be obſerved by the Chriſtian alms-giver, to ſpeak at the leaſt, muſt be more in any reaſon than the thirtieth part of his revenue or increaſe; The thirtieth is but equivalent to the third years tithing of the Jews, which was the righteouſneſs, that which they were bound to do by the Law, the Phariſee, did as much, and Chriſt tells us, that except our righteouſneſs, δικαιοσύνη ὑμῶν, the very word that ſignifies the legal alms-giving many times in the Bible, and who knows but it may do ſo here? of this there is no doubt, but it belongs to charity, or duty toward men in its latitude, of which alms giving is one moſt ſpecial part, and except our righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, we ſhall in no wiſe enter into the kingdom of heaven, the text, on which that heavenly Goſpel-Sermon was preach'd upon the Mount. If we have any deſign toward Evangelical perfection, toward the Chriſtian pitch, the abundance of goodneſs and mercifulneſs, as that is improved by Chriſtianity, then this third years tithing will prove but a beggarly, thin proportion, that, that a Jew, if he were a religious one, would have been aſhamed of. But be our aims never ſo moderate, if a door-keepers place will ſerve our turn, to be one of the Nethinim, of the meaneſt rank in the kingdom of heaven, yet ſtill we muſt exceed that proportion of the Jews righteouſneſs, their third years tithe, that they were bound to, or elſe we are ſtrangely miſtaken in Chriſtianity. I am unwilling to deſcend to the arraigning or indicting, or ſo much as examining any man here, for the omiſſions of his former life in this kind; my humble lowlieſt requeſt is, that you will do it your ſelves, and if either through ignorance you have not reckoned of it as a duty, or through deſire to thrive in the world, you have omitted to practiſe it heretofore, you will now at laſt at this inſtance, take it into your conſideration, and remember that there is ſuch a thing, as charity, (a pale, wan, deſpiſed creature) commended to Chriſtians by Chriſt, not to ſuffer it any longer to go for one of thoſe Magicians Serpents, which faith, like Moſes's rod, is appointed to devour; if it do, know this, that that rod is the verier ſerpent of the two; and for the quickning that reſolution in you, I ſhall proceed unto the third particular, the ὅτι δεῖ, to conſider it as a duty, and ſo to make an end of my firſt general.

In this ſlothful, but confident age of the world, 'twere admirably worth ones pains to inſtruct men, what duty is, now under the Goſpel; what the very word ſignifies in a Chriſtian Nomenclature. There are ſo many deſcants of fantaſtical brains on that plain ſong of the Apoſtles, We are not under the law, but under grace] that 'tis ſcarce agreed on among Chriſtians, what 'tis to be a Chriſtian, nothing more unreſolved, than what 'tis, that's now required under the ſecond Covenant, as neceſſary to ſalvation. One thinks that the believing all fundamentals, is the ἓν ἀναγκαῖον, the only qualification for a Chriſtian; and what hath duty to do with that? Another makes the Goſpel conſiſt all of promiſes of what ſhall be wrought in us, and on us by Chriſt; and ſo gives an abſolute ſuperſedeas for duty, as a legal out-dated thing, that is utterly antiquated by grace. Another contents himſelf with purpoſes and reſolutions, thin, airy inclinations to duty, and is utterly indifferent for any performance, doubts not but to paſs for a Chriſtian, as regenerate as S. Paul, when he wrote, c. 7. to the Romans, though he never do the good that he reſolves, live and die carnal and captived and ſold under ſin. A fourth diſſolves all to a new-found faith; A full perſwaſion, an abſolute aſſurance, that he is one of Gods elect, is abundantly ſufficient to eſtate himſelf in that number, a piece of magick, or conjuring, that will help any man to heaven, that will but phanſie it, enrol their names in the book of life, in thoſe ſacred eternal diptycks, by dreaming only that they are there already. Others there are, that ſeem kinder unto duty, are content to allow Chriſt ſome return of performances for all his ſufferings, yet you ſee in the Goſpel, 'tis in one but the patience of hearing him preach, A [Lord thou haſt taught in our ſtreets] we have heard ſo many Sermons, paſſes for a ſufficient pretenſion to heaven; in another, the communicating at his table; [We have eat and drank in thy preſence] a ſufficient viaticum for that long journey, a charm, or amulet againſt fear or danger; in a third, the diligence of a bended knee, or ſolemn look of formal-outſide-worſhip, muſt be taken in commutation for all other duty; and all this while religion is brought up in the Gentlemans trade, good clothes and idleneſs, or of the Lillies of the field, veſtiri & non laborare, to be clothed and not labour; Duty is too mechanical a thing, the ſhop or the plough, the work of faith, or labour of love, are things too vile, too ſordid for them to ſtoop to; heaven will be had without ſuch ſollicitors. Shall I inſtance in one particular more? That Satan may be ſure that duty ſhall never reſcue any prey out of his hands, one thing you may obſerve, that moſt men never come to treat with it, to look after, to conſider any ſuch thing, till indeed the time comes that no man worketh, till the tokens be out upon them, till the cry comes, that the bridegroom is ready to enter, that judgment is at the door, and then there is ſuch running about for oil, as it 'twere for extreme Unction, and that a Sacrament to confer all grace ex opere operato on him, that hath ſcarce life enough to diſcern that he received it; the ſoul ſleeps in it's tenement, as long as its leaſe laſteth, and when 'tis expired, then it rouſeth, and makes as if 'twould get to work; the Chriſtian thinks not of action, of duty, of good works, of any thing, whilſt life and health laſteth, but then the ſummons of death wake him, and the prayers which he can repeat, while his cloaths are putting off, ſhall charm him, like opium, for a quiet ſleep. Thus doth a death-bed repentance, a death-bed charity, a parting with ſins and wealth, when we can hold them no longer, look as big in the Calenders of Saints, ſtand as ſolemnly and demurely in our dipeycks, as judgment and mercy and faith, that have born the heat, and burthen of the day; Our hearts are hardned, while it is to day, againſt all the invaſion of Law or Goſpel, judgments or mercies, threats or promiſes, all Chriſts methods and ſtratagems of grace, and juſt at the cloſe of the evening, the ſhutting in of night, we give out that the thunderbolt hath converted us, the feaver came with its fiery chariot, and hurried us up to heaven; Surdus & mutus teſtamentum facit, quite againſt Juſtinians rule; he that hath ſent out moſt of his ſenſes before him, and retains but the laſt glimmering of life, is allowed to make his Will and reverſe all former acts by that one final. Satan hath all the man hath to give, under hand and ſeal, all his life time, the ſpring eſpecially and verdure of his age, the children paſs through the fire to Moloch, and juſt as he is a dropping out of the world, he makes ſigns of cancelling that will, and by a dumb act of revocation, bequeaths his ſoul to God, and his Executor muſt ſee it paid among other Legacies, and all this paſſes for legal in the Court, and none of the Canons againſt the ancient Clinici, can be heard againſt them; The greateſt wound to duty, that ever yet it met with among Chriſtians. Thus do our vain phanſies, and vainer hopes joyn to ſupplant duty and good works, and diſmiſs them out of the Church: and if all or any of this be Orthodox Divinity; then ſure the duty of alms-giving will prove a ſuſpected phraſe, hæretici characteris, of an heretical ſtamp, and then I am fallen on a thankleſs argument, which yet I muſt not retract, or repent of, but in the name of God, and S. Paul, in this way that theſe men call hereſie, beſeech and conjure you to worſhip the God of your Fathers. For this purpoſe ſhall I make my addreſs to you in Daniels words, Dan. 4. 27. Break off your ſins by righteouſneſs and your iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor; righteouſneſs and mercy, the two degrees of alms-giving, that I told you; I hope that will not be ſuſpected, when he ſpeaks it. Shall I tell you what duty is, what is now required of a Chriſtian, and that in the Prophet Micah's phraſe, Mic. 6. 8. And now what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do juſtice, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? juſtice and mercy, the two degrees of alms-giving again, that I told you of, and I hope it will not prove offenſive, when he ſpeaks it. Shall I tell you of a new religion, and yet that a pure one, and the ſame an old religion, and yet that an undefiled (for ſo the beloved diſciple calls this duty of charity a new Commandment, and an old Commandment, 1 Joh. 2.) it ſhall be in S. James his words, Jam. 1. 27. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and widow in their affliction, and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world. Shall I tell you in one word, that though heaven be given us freely, yet alms-giving is the conſideration mentioned in the conveyance, that men are acknowledged the bleſſed of God, and called to heaven, upon the performance of this duty; that although it pretend not to any merit either ex congruo or condigno, yet 'tis a duty moſt acceptable in the ſight of God; that alms-giving is mentioned, when aſſurance is left out, charity crown'd, when confidence is rejected? I love not to be either magiſterial or quarrelſom, but to ſpeak the words of truth and ſobriety, to learn, and if it be poſſible to have peace with all men; only give me leave to read you a few words, that S. Matthew tranſcribed from the mouth of Chriſt, Mat. 25. 35. Then ſhall the King ſay to him on his right hand (who ſhould the King be, but Chriſt himſelf?) Come ye bleſſed of my Father, receive the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungred and ye gave me meat. Tell me in the name of truth and peace, who now were they, for whom the Kingdom was prepared from the foundation of the world, who were there the objects of that great dooms-day election, his Venite benedicti? If Chriſt do not tell you, neither do I, the Text is of age, let it ſpeak for it ſelf; For I was an hungred and ye gave me meat. If all this will juſtifie the doctrine, and make this Text Chriſtian, perſwade your judgments, that charity may be the Queen of heaven (maxima autem harum charitas, the greateſt of theſe is charity) without affront, or injury done to any other grace; I hope it will be ſeaſonable for your practice alſo, as it hath been for your meditation, become your hands as well as it doth now your ears.

And to infuſe ſome life, ſome alacriouſneſs into you, for that purpoſe, I ſhall deſcend to the more ſenſitive, quickning, enlivening part of this Text, the benefit ariſing from the performance of this duty, Dicas coram Domino, then thou ſhalt, or mayeſt ſay before the Lord thy God. And in that I promiſed you two things; 1. To ſhew you in theſi, that confidence or claiming any thing at Gods hands, muſt take its riſe from duty in performance. 2. In hypotheſi, to give you the connexion betwixt this confidence, and this performance, claiming of temporal plenty upon giving of alms.

1. In theſi; That confidence, or claiming any thing at Gods hands muſt take its riſe from duty in performance.

If there be any doubt of the truth of this, I ſhall give you but one ground of proof, which I think will be demonſtrative, and 'tis that, that will eaſily be underſtood, I am ſure; I hope, as eaſily conſented to; that all the promiſes of God, even of Chriſt in the Goſpel, are conditional promiſes, not perſonal, for the Law deſcends not to particular perſons (and in this the Goſpel is a Law too, νόμος πίστεως the Law of faith) nor abſolute, as that ſignifies irreſpective or excluſive of qualifications or demeanure, for that is all one with perſonal, and if either of thoſe were true, then ſhould Chriſt be what he renounces, a προσωπολήπτης an accepter of perſons and individual Entities, and ſo the mercies of heaven, belong to Saul the Perſecutor, as truly as Paul the Apoſtle, Saul the injurious, as Paul the abundant labourer, Saul the blaſphemer, as Paul the Martyr: It remains then, that they be conditional promiſes, and ſo they are explicitly, for the moſt part the condition, named, and ſpecified, 2 Cor. 6. 17. Come out and be you ſeparate, and touch not the unholy thing; a the condition you ſee ſet foremoſt in the Indenture, and then, I will receive you--- and therefore moſt logically infers the Apoſtle, in the next words the beginning of c. 7. Having therefore theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God. Had the Promiſes been of any other ſort, but the ἐπαγγελίαι ταῦται, theſe, i.e. con-

i. e. conditional Promiſes, the Apoſtles illation of ſo much duty cleanſing and perfecting, had been utterly unconcluſive, if not impertinent. So Rom. 8. 28. All things work together for good; to whom? to them that love God, κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσι, to them that are called according to purpoſe, the word [called] a noun in that place, not a participle, noting a real, not only intentional paſſion, thoſe that are wrought upon by Gods call, and are now in the catalogue of the ἀγαπῶντες τὸν θεὸν, the lovers of God, and that is the condition in the ſubject; and then, to them that are thus qualified, belongs that chain of mercies, predeſtination, vocation to a conformity with Chriſt, juſtification, glorification, immediately enſuing. You ſee the proof of my ground by a taſte or two. Now what condition this is, that is thus prefix'd to Goſpel-promiſes, that is not obſcure neither; Not abſolute exact, never ſinning, perfect obedience, that was the condition of the firſt covenant, made in paradiſe, when there was ability to perform it; but a condition proportioned to our ſtate, ſincerity in lieu of perfection, repentance in exchange for innocence, evangelical inſtead of legal righteouſneſs, believing in the heart, i. e. cordial obedience to the whole Law of Chriſt, impartial without hypocriſie or indulgence in any known ſin, perſevering and conſtant without Apoſtaſie, or final defection, and at laſt, humble without boaſting. If you will come yet nearer to a full ſight of it, ſometimes regeneration or new life is ſaid to be the condition, Except you be born again you can in no wiſe enter. Neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature. Sometimes holineſs, without which nemo Deum, no man ſhall ſee the Lord: Sometimes repentance in groſs, nay but except you repent; ſometimes in retail, repentance divided into its parts, he that confeſſeth and forſaketh ſhall have mercy; ſometimes repentance alone, but now commands all men every where to repent, as if all duty were contained in that; ſometimes in conjunction with faith, repent you and believe the Goſpel, ſometimes faith, ſometimes love, ſometimes ſelf-denial, ſometimes mercifulneſs, ſometimes hope, but that an ἐλπὶς αὕτη, a this hope] that ſets us a purifying; every one of theſe, when you meet them ſingle, goes for the only neceſſary, the adequate condition of the Goſpel, to teach you to take them up all, as you find them, leave never an one neglected, or deſpiſed, leſt that be the betraying of all the reſt, but make up one jewel of theſe ſo many leſſer gems, one body of theſe ſo many limbs, one recipe compounded of ſo many ingredients, which you may ſuperſcribe καθολικὸν, Catholicon, or the whole duty of man. From this general propoſition, without the aid of any aſſumption, we may conclude demonſtratively enough, promiſes of the Goſpel are conditional promiſes, therefore all confidence muſt take riſe from duty. Duty is the performance of that condition, and to be confident without that, is to conclude without promiſes, and conſequently to claim juſtification, or pardon of ſins, before ſanctification be begun in the heart, to challenge right to heaven, before repentance be rooted on earth, to make faith the firſt grace, and yet define that, aſſurance of ſalvation, to apply the merits of Chriſt to our ſelves the firſt thing we do, and reckon of charity, good works, duty, as fruits and effects, to be produced at leiſure, when that faith comes to virility and ſtrength of fructifying; what is all or any of this, but to charge God of perjury, to tell him that impenitents have right to heaven, which he ſwears have not, or to forge a new leaſe of heaven, and put it upon Chriſt? the calmeſt ſtyle I can ſpeak in, is, that it is the believing of a lie, and ſo not faith, but folly, an eaſie cheatableneſs of heart, and not confidence but preſumption. Hope a man may, without actual performance of duty, becauſe he may amend hereafter, though he do not now, and ſo that poſſibility and that futurity may be ground of hope; but then this hope muſt ſet us preſently upon performance, He that hath this hope, purifies himſelf, or elſe it is not that grace of hope, but an ἀνδάδεια, a youthful daringneſs of ſoul, a tumour, a diſeaſe, a tympany of hope, and if it ſwell farther than it purge, if it put on confidence before holineſs, this hope may be interpreted deſperation, an hope that maketh aſhamed, an utter deſtitution of that hope which muſt beſtead a Chriſtian. O let us be ſure then, our confidence, our claims to heaven, improve not above their proportion, that we preſerve this ſymmetry of the parts of grace; that our hope be but commenſurate to our ſincerity, our daringneſs to our duty. A double confidence there is, pro ſtatu, and Abſolute; pro ſtatu, when upon ſurvey of my preſent conſtitution of ſoul, I claim right in Chriſts promiſes for the preſent, and doubt not but I ſhall be bleſs'd, if I be found ſo doing: Abſolute, when at the end of life, and ſhutting in of the day, I am able to make up my reckonings with S. Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, a crown of felicity. I have done what I had to do, and now λοιπὸν ἀπόκειταί, there is nothing behind but to receive my pay.

I have been too long upon the general conſideration of the connexion between confidence and duty; if it were an extravagance, I hope 'twas a pardonable one; I deſcend with ſpeed to the hypotheſis, the connexion betwixt this confidence and this performance, claiming of temporal plenty upon giving of alms, my laſt particular. And that I ſhall give you clearly in this one propoſition; That alms-giving or mercifulneſs was never the waſting or leſſening of any mans eſtate to himſelf or his poſterity, but rather the increaſing of it. If I have delivered a new doctrine, that will not preſently be believed, an unuſquiſq; non poteſt capere, ſuch as every auditor will not conſent to, I doubt not but there be plain texts of Scripture, more than one, which will aſſure any Chriſtian of the truth of it. Conſider them at your leiſure, Pſal. 41. 1, 2. Pſ. 112. all to this purpoſe, Pro. 11. 25. & 12. 9. & 19. 17. and 28. 27. Add to theſe the words of Chriſt, Mar. 10. 30. which though more generally delivered of any kind of parting with poſſeſſions for Chriſts ſake, are applied by S. Hier. to the words of Solomon, Pro. 11. 24. There is that ſcattereth and yet increaſeth, quia centuplum accipient in hoc tempore, becauſe, ſaith he, they receive an hundred fold in this world. And that no man may have any ſcruple to interpoſe, 'tis ſet in as large, and comprehenſive a ſtyle, as the art, or covetous, ſcrupulous wit of man could contrive for his own ſecurity. There is no man who ſhall not----

Tom. p. 88.

All which being put together, muſt (to my underſtanding) make it as clear to any that acknowledges theſe for Scripture, as if the בת קול daughter of voice were come back into the world again, and God ſhould call to a man out of heaven by name, bid him relieve that poor man, and he ſhould never be the poorer for it. 'Tis not now to be expected of me in conſcience, having produced this kind of proof, the expreſs texts of Scripture, to add any ſecond to it. I might elſe farther evidence it from examples, not ſuch as Moſcus's λειμωνάριον will furniſh you with, for I know not of what authority they are; nor yet from S. Hieroms obſervation, who is ſaid to have turned over hiſtories on purpoſe, and never found any mer-merciful man, which met not with ſome ſignal bleſſing in this world, as the reward of that vertue; but even by appealing to your ſelves, and challenging any man here preſent, to bring but one inſtance of a prudent alms-giver, that hath yearly or weekly conſecrated ſome conſiderable part of his revenue or increaſe to that uſe, and can ſay that ever he found any real miſs of that, any more than of the blood let out in a pleuriſie; nay, if he have done it conſtantly, and ſincerely from the one true principle, compliance with the command and example of God, let him ſpeak his conſcience, if he do not think, that all the reſt hath thrived the better for that, as Phlebotomy hath ſaved many mens lives, letting out ſome ounces of blood, been the ſecuring of the whole maſs, that it hath had a ſecret, bleſſing influence, a vital, auſpicious infection upon the remainder, by this act of conſecrating our eſtates, intitling God to the fence, and ſafeguard of them, as of his temples, and altars, that thieves, and oppreſſors, and devils, conceive a reverence due to them, and a kind of ſacrilege to approach, or purloin from them, as they that put the crown into their intail, do thereby ſecure it to the right heir, that it can never be cut off. The poor widow of Sarepta, what a ſtrange trial made ſhe of this truth? When the laſt of her ſtore was fetch'd out to make the funeral feaſt for her ſelf and family, that they might eat and dy, that very laſt cake, that all that was left, ſhe gives to Elijah in his diſtreſs, and this is ſo far from ruining her, that it brought a bleſſing on her barrel and her cruſe, that ſhe and all hers were not able to exhauſt; I might add the poor widow in the Goſpel, that, if we ſhall disbelieve Chriſt himſelf, caſt in all that ſhe had into the Corban, even her whole ſubſtance; the Chriſtians, that ſold all and laid it at the Apoſtles feet, and yet we never read of any of theſe, that brought himſelf to diſtreſs by this means. But theſe are ex abundanti, more than is required for the vouching of my preſent propoſition, and of a higher ſtrain, than what I deſign for your imitation.

'Tis time that I begin to retire, and wind up with ſome application, which you cannot imagine ſhould be any other, after all this preparation, but a Go and do thou likewiſe. And if you can but believe this one thing, that I have brought many witneſſes from heaven to teſtifie, that your goodneſs ſhall not impair your plenty, that your ſtore ſhall never be leſſened by ſo giving, I doubt not but you will be as forward to go, as any man to have you. The only holdback is the affection and paſſionate love, that we bear to our wealth, that luſt, or ſenſuality of the eye, as the Apoſtle calls it. 'Tis ordinarily obſerved of young men and diſſolute, that they have many times a great aptneſs and ingenioufneſs, and withal patience to any ſpeculative knowledge, the Mathematicks, or any ſuch the abſtruſeſt ſtudies, but for moral precepts, rules of good life, they will not be digeſted; And, my brethren, give me leave to tell you in the ſpirit of meekneſs, that the like, in another reſpect, is obſerved of this auditory, any thing wherein their wealth is not concerned, is moſt readily entertained, none more attentive, ingenious auditors; but when their profit is intrench'd on, their beloved golden Idol (of which I may ſay with Moſes, O this people have committed a great ſin, made them Gods of gold) when this, I ſay, begins to be in danger, as the ſilver ſhrines at S. Pauls preaching, Acts 19. then, as it follows in that place, the whole city is filled with confuſion: like that young man in the Goſpel, that would do any thing that Chriſt would require, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life! So far as that Jeſus loved him, when he beheld him; yet when Chriſt proceeds to the ἕν σοὶ ὑστερεῖ, one thing is wanting to thee, go ſell, give to the poor, then follows the συγνάσας, and λυπούμενος, he went away ſad and ſorrowful, ſighing and groaning, as if he had been to part with blood and bowels; And this is the ground of Chriſts moſt conſiderable obſervation, πῶς δύσκολον, how hard (and πῶς ἀδύνατον, how impoſſible) is it for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of heaven, for a worldly-minded man to be a Chriſtian? Could you but reduce into order this one mighty exorbitant humour, purge out this χολὴν πικρίας, as S. Peter calls it, this over-flowing of the gall, this choler and bitterneſs, that lies cak'd upon the ſoul, that σύνδεσμος ἀδικίας, as he goes on, in the aggravating of covetouſneſs, we Engliſh it band of iniquity, but it ſignifies a complication of wickedneſs bound up all in one volume, mingled into one hypoſtaſis, this legion of earthly devils, that come out of the tombes to enter into thee, and there continue crying and cutting thee with ſtones; I ſhould then proceed with ſome heart and ſpirit; and tell you that, that every man knows but ſuch demoniacks, that alms-giving is in it ſelf a thing, that any man living, if he have but the reliques of unregenerate nature, and the notion of a Deity about him, would take pleaſure in it, were he but ſatisfied of this one ſcruple, that 'twould not hinder his thriving in this world. 'Tis more bleſſed to give than to receive, is the Apophthegme of S. Paul quoted from Chriſt, though it be not rehearſed in the Goſpel, and Clemens* hath turned it into a maxim, μετάδοσις μακάριον, ὑ κτῆσις δυκλία, 'tis giving, not poſſeſſing that ſignifies a man to be happy; and this happineſs the higheſt, & moſt divine ſort of happineſs, 'tis a bleſſed thing to give. And of the ſame inclination in the worſt of you, I will no more doubt, than I do of your being men, of your having humane ſouls about you, could you be but fortified againſt this one terror, were but this one trembling ſpirit exorciſed, and caſt out, this apprehenſion of impairing your eſtates by that means: Now of this, an ordinary Jew makes ſo little doubt, meerly upon authority of the places of the Old Teſt. which I cited, that he may read thee a lecture of faith in this particular. Paulus Fagius aſſures me of the modern Jews, who have not been obſerved to be over-liberal; that they ſtill obſerve the payment of the poor mans tithe, meerly out of deſign to inrich themſelves by that means, and tells us of a Proverb of Rabbi Akiba*, מעשרות סיג לעושר tithes are the hedges to our riches, and on the contrary, * that there be ſeven kinds of judgments that come upon the world for ſeven prevarications, and the firſt is famine upon not tithing, and the ſecond again, another kind of famine upon another not tithing, and that ſecond plainly belongs to the poor mans tithing, when (as it * follows) ſome are full, and others are famiſh'd, and the third is a plague upon not obeying the Law concerning the fruits of the Sabbatical year, which you know, were to be left to the poor. And again, that there are four ſeaſons, wherein the plague was wont to rage eſpecially, in the fourth year upon the non-payment of the poor mans tithe the third year, on the ſeventh, upon the like default in the ſixth, in the end of the ſeventh, upon default concerning the ſeventh years fruits, that were to be free and common, and the laſt yearly, in the cloſe of the feaſt of tabernacles, upon the robbing of the poor of thoſe gifts that at that time were left unto them, the * gleanings of the harveſt, and vintage, the corners of the field, the fallings, &c. Add to this, one place more of Rabbi * Bechai, Though, ſaith he, it be unlawful to prove or tempt the Lord, for man muſt not ſay, I will perform ſuch a commandment, to the end I may proſper in riches, yet Mal. 3. 10. and Prov. 3. 10. there is an exception for payment of tithes and works of mercy, intimating that on the performance of this duty, we may expect even miracles to make us rich, and ſet to that performance, on contemplation and confi- confidence of that promiſe. And 'tis ſtrange, that we Chriſtians, ſhould find more difficulty in believing this, than the griping reprobated Jews; ſtrange, that all thoſe books of Scripture ſhould be grown Apocryphal, juſt ſince the minute, that I cited thoſe teſtimonies out of them. This I am reſolved on, 'tis want of belief, and nothing elſe, that keeps men from the practice of this duty, whatſoever 'tis in other ſins, we may believe aright, and yet do contrary (our underſtanding hath not ſuch a controuling power over the Will as ſome imagine) yet in this particular, this cannot be pretended; Could this one mountain be removed, the leſſening of our wealth, that alms-giving is accuſed of, could this one ſcandal to fleſh and blood be kick'd out of the way, there is no other devil would take the unmerciful mans part, no other temptation moleſt the alms-giver. And how unjuſt a thing this is, how quite contrary to the practice at all other Sermons, I appeal to your ſelves. At other times, the doctrine raiſed from any Scripture is eaſily digeſted, but all the demurr is about the practical inference; but here, when all is done, the truth of the doctrine ſtill [that we ſhall not be the poorer for alms-giving] is that, that can never go down with us, lyes ſtill crude unconcocted in our ſtomachs; A ſtrange prepoſſeſſion of worldly hearts, a petitio principii, that no artiſt would indure from us. I muſt not be ſo unchriſtian, whatſoever you mean to be, as to think there is need of any farther demonſtration of it, after ſo many plain places of Scripture have been produced; Let me only tell you, that you have no more evidence for the truth of Chriſts coming into the world, for all the fundamentals of your faith, on which you are content your ſalvation ſhould depend, than ſuch as I have given you for your ſecurity in this point. Do not now make a mockery at this doctrine, and either with the Jew in Cedrenus, or the Chriſtian in Palladius, throw away all you have, at one largeſs, to ſee whether God will gather it up for you again; but ſet ſoberly, and ſolemnly about the duty, in the fear of God, and compliance with his will, and in bowels of compaſſion to thy poor brethren, that ſtand in need of thy comfort, thoſe Emeralds and Jacinths, that * Macarius perſwaded the rich virgin to lay out her wealth upon; and this out of no other inſidious or vain-glorious, but the one, pure, Chriſtian forementioned deſign, and put it to the venture, if God, ever ſuffer thee to want, what thou haſt thus beſtowed. * Dorotheus hath excellently ſtated this, διδασκαλ. There are, ſaith he, that give alms, διὰ τὸ εὐλογηθῆναι τὸ χωρίον, that their farms may proſper, ᾧ ὁ θεὸς εὐλογεῖ τὸ χωρίον, and God bleſſeth and proſpers their farms; There be that do it for the good ſucceſs of their voyage, and God proſpers their voyage; ſome for their children, and God preſerves their children; yea, and ſome to get praiſe, and God affords them that; and fruſtrates none in the merchandiſe he deſign'd to traffick for, but gives every one that which he aimed at in this liberality. But then, all theſe traffickers muſt not be ſo unconſtionable, as to look for any arrear of farther reward, when they are thus paid at preſent, they muſt remember ὅτι ἐν ἑαυτοῖς παρὰ τῷ θεῷ, they have no depoſitum behind laid up with God for them, and therefore it is neceſſary for a Chriſtian to propoſe to himſelf more ingenuous deſigns to do what he doth in obedience to, and out of a pure love of God, and then there is more than all theſe, even a kingdom prepared for him, Matt. 25.

I muſt draw to a concluſion, and I cannot do it more ſeaſonably, more to recapitulate, and inforce all that hath been ſaid, than in the words of Malachy, c. 3. 10. Bring you all the tithes into the ſtorehouſe, (no doubt but this comprehends the duty in the text, the compleveris anno tertio, the poor mans tithing) that there may be meat in my houſe, and prove me now herewith, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a bleſſing, that there ſhall not be room enough to receive it. If this will not open the miſers hand, unſhrivel the worldlings heart, I cannot invent an engine cunning, or ſtrong enough to do it. Thou that haſt tired and haraſs'd out thy ſpirits, in an improſperous, ſucceſſleſs purſuit of riches, digged and drudged in the mines, thy ſoul as well as thou, and all the production of thy patience, and induſtry crumbled and mouldered away betwixt thy fingers; thou that wouldeſt fain be rich, and canſt not get Plutus to be ſo kind to thee, art willing to give Satan his own asking, thy proſtraveris, for his totum hoc, to go down to hell for that merchandiſe, and yet art not able to compaſs it; let me direct thee to a more probable courſe of obtaining thy deſigns, to a more thriving trade, a more ſucceſsful voyage; not all the devotions thou daily numbreſt to the Devil, or good fortune, not all the inventions, and engines, and ſtratagems of covetouſneſs managed by the moſt practiſed worldling, can ever tend ſo much to the ſecuring thee of abundance in this life, as this one compleveris of the text, the payment of the poor mans tithing. And then, ſuffer thy ſelf for once to be diſabuſed, give over the worldlings way, with a hâc non ſucceſſit, reform this error of good husbandry, this miſtake of frugality, this hereſie of the worldling and come to this new Enſurers office, erected by God himſelf, prove and try if God do not open thee the windows of heaven--- Shall I add for the concluſion of all, the mention of that poor, unconſidered merchandiſe, the treaſures of heaven, after all this wealth is at an end, the riches of the cœleſtial paradiſe, which like that other of Eden is the poſing of Geographers, pars globi incognita, undiſcovered yet to the worldlings heart. Methinks there ſhould be no hurt in that, if ſuch friends may be made of this Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, this falſehearted, unfaithful wealth of yours, that when you fail, they may receive you into everlaſting habitations, ſure this may be allowed to joyn with other motives to the performance of a well-taſted, wholſom duty. In a word, if earth and heaven combined together, be worth conſidering, the poſſeſſion of the one, and reverſion of the other, abundance and affluence here, the yearly wages of alms-giving, and joys and eternity hereafter, the final reward of alms-giving, a preſent coronet, and a future crown, a Canaan below, and a Jeruſalem above, if the conjunction of theſe two may have ſo much influence on your hearts, as in contemplation of them to ſet you about the motion, that nature it ſelf inclines you to, and neither world nor fleſh have any manner of quarrel to feign againſt it; then may I hope that I have not preach'd in vain, that what I have now only, as a precentor, begun to you, the whole chorus will anſwer in the counterpart, what hath been now proclaimed to your ears, be echoed back again by your hearts, and lives, and the veryeſt ſtone in the temple take up its part, the hardeſt, impenetrableſt, unmercifulleſt heart joyn in the ἀμοιβαῖον.

And this ſhall be the ſumm not only of my exhortation, but my prayer, That that God of mercies will open your eyes firſt, and then your hearts to the acknowledgement, and practice of this duty, direct your hands in the husbanding that treaſure intruſted to them, that mercy being added to your zeal, Charity to your devotion, your goodneſs may ſhine as well as burn, that men may ſee, and taſte your good works, glorifie God for you here, and you receive your crown of glory from God hereafter.

SERMON I.

EZEK. XVI. 30.

The Work of an imperious Whoriſh Woman.

NOT to chill your ears by keeping you long at the doors; not to detain you one minute with a cold unprofitable Preface: This Chapter is the exacteſt Hiſtory of the Spiritual eſtate of the Jews, i. e. The elect of God, and the powerfulleſt exprobration of their ſins, that all the Writings under Heaven can preſent to our eyes. From the firſt time I could think I underſtood any part of it, I have been confident, that never any thing was ſet down more rhetorically, never more πάθος and ὕψος, more affection and ſublimity of ſpeech, ever concurred in any one writing of this quantity, either ſacred or profane. 'Twere a work for the ſolidſt Artiſt to obſerve diſtinctly every part of Logick and Rhetorick that lies concealed in this one Chapter, and yet there is enough in the ſurface and outward dreſs of it, to affect the meaneſt underſtanding that will but read it. For our preſent purpoſe it will ſuffice to have obſerv'd, 1. That the natural ſinful eſtate of the Jews, being premiſed in the five firſt Verſes; 2. The calling of them in this condition, in their pollutions, in their blood, and beſtowing all manner of ſpiritual ornaments upon them, following in the next ten Verſes; the remainder is moſtwhat ſpent in the upbraiding and aggravating their ſins to them, in a moſt elevated ſtrain of reproof; and the ἀκμὴ or higheſt pitch of it, is in the words of my Text, The work of an imperious Whoriſh Woman.

For the handling of which words, I firſt beg two poſtulata to be granted and ſuppoſed, before my diſcourſe, becauſe I would not trouble you to hear them proved.

I. That the elect choſen people of God, the Jews, were degenerate into heathen, deſperate, devilliſh ſinners.

II. That what is literally ſpoken in aggravation of the Jews ſin, is as fully applicable to any other ſinful people, with whom God hath entred Covenant, as he did with the Jews.

And then the ſubject of my preſent diſcourſe, ſhall be this, That Indulgence to ſin, in a Chriſtian, is the Work of an imperious Whoriſh Woman. And that, 1. Of a Woman, noting a great deal of weakneſs; and that not ſimple natural weakneſs, through a privation of all ſtrength, but an acquired, ſluggiſh weakneſs, by effeminate neglecting to make uſe of it. 2. Of a Whore, noting unfaithfulneſs and falſeneſs to the Husband. 3. Of an imperious Whore, noting inſolency and an high pitch of contempt.

And of theſe, briefly and plainly; not to increaſe your knowledge, but to enliven and inflame the practical part of your ſouls; not to inrich your brains with new ſtore, but to ſink that which you have already, down into your hearts.

And firſt of the firſt, That Indulgence to ſin, in a Chriſtian, is the work of a Woman; an effect and argument of an infinite deal of weakneſs, together with the nature and grounds of that weakneſs; The work, &c.

And this very thing, that it may be the more heeded, is emphatically noted three ſeveral times in this one Verſe. 1. The work of a Woman, in my Text, a poor, cowardly, puſillanimous part that any body elſe, any one that had but the leaſt ſpark of valor or manhood in him, would ſcorn to be guilty of, an argument of one that hath ſuffered all his parts and gifts to lie ſluggiſh and unprofitable, and at laſt, even quite periſhed by diſuſing. As the weakneſs of Women, below Men, proceeds not only from their conſtitution and temper, but from their courſe of life; not from want of natural ſtrength, but of civil manlike exerciſe, which might ſtir up and diſcipline, and ripen that ſtrength they have: For if their education were as warlike, and their ſtrength by valiant undertaking, ſo ſet out; Virago's and Amazons, would be well-nigh as ordinary as Soldiers. And ſo will the compariſon hold of thoſe womaniſh, ſluggiſh, abuſers of Gods graces. Then in the firſt words of this Verſe, How weak is thy heart?] noting it to be a degree of weakneſs below ordinary; as we call one a weak man, that hath done any thing raſhly or unadvifedly, which, if he had but thought on, he could never have been ſo ſottiſh, his ordinary reaſon would have prompted him to ſafer counſels. In brief, Any frequent, indiſcreet actions, argue a weak fellow: Not that he wants ſtrength of diſcretion to do better, but that he makes no uſe of it in his actions. Thirdly, How weak is thy heart?] Thy heart, i. e. the principal part of the Man, (as the Brain is the ſpeculative) the fountain of good and evil actions, and performances. Now the word לב in the Original, ſignifying the heart; being naturally of the Maſculine Gender, is here ſet in the feminine, out of order, perhaps emphatically, to note an unmanlike, impotent, effeminate heart; all its actions are mixt with ſo much paſſion and weakneſs, they are ſo raw and womaniſh, that it would grieve one to behold a fair, comely, manlike Chriſtian in ſhew, betraying ſo much impotency in his behaviour, (even like the Emperour a ſpinning) one who had undertaken to be a Champion for Chriſt, led away, and abuſed and baffled by every pelting paultry luſt. 'Tis lamentable to obſerve what a poor, cowardly, degenerous ſpirit is in moſt Chriſtians; with how ſlender aſſaults and petty ſtratagems, they are either taken captive, or put to flight; how eaſily in their moſt reſolute undertakings of piety or vertue, they are either vanquiſht, or caught. The ordinarieſt, courſeſt, hard-favouredſt temptation that they can ſee, affects and ſmites them ſuddenly; they are entangled, before they are wooed; and the leaſt appearance of any difficulty, the vizard or picture of the eaſieſt danger, is enough to fright them for ever from any thought of Religion, or hope of Heaven.

For a meer natural man, that hath nothing but original ſin, or worſe in him, that hath received nothing from God and his parents, but a talent in a broken Veſſel, a ſoul infected by a crazy body, diſeas'd as ſoon as born; for an Heathen, that hath nothing to ſubſiſt on; but a poor pittance of natural reaſon, but one eye to ſee by, and that a dim one; for a meer Barbarian, or Gentile, to be thus triumphed over by every Devil, (as an Owl by the ſmalleſt Bird in the air) might be matter of pity rather than wonder: and yet few of them were ſuch cowards; thoſe very weapons, that Nature had furniſhed them with, being rightly put on, and fitted to them, ſtood many of them in very good ſtead. There were few paſſions, few ſins of an ordinary ſize, but a Philoſopher, and meer Stoick would be able to meet and vanquiſh: and therefore 'tis not ſo much natural, as affected weakneſs; not ſo much want of ſtrength, as ſluggiſhneſs, and want of care; not ſo much impotency, as numbneſs and ſtupidity of our parts, which hath ſo extremely diſ-abled thoſe that take themſelves to be the weakeſt of us.

The truth is, we are willing to conceive that our natural abilities are quite periſht and annihilate, and that God hath no ways repaired them by Chriſt, becauſe we will not be put to the trouble of making uſe of them: we would ſpare our pains, and therefore would fain count our ſelves impotent, as ſluggards that perſonate and act diſeaſes becauſe they would not work; or the old Tragedians which could call a God down upon the Stage at any time, to conſummate the impoſſibleſt Plot, and therefore would not put their brains to the toil of concluding it fairly.

Certainly the decrepiteſt man under Heaven (if he be but a degree above a Carkaſs) is able to defend himſelf from an ordinary Flie; 'tis one of the Devils titles to be Beelzebub the Prince of Flies; and ſuch are many of his temptations: he that hath but life in him, may keep himſelf from any harm of one of them; but the matter is, they come in flocks, and being driven once away, they return again. Muſca eſt animal inſolens, and the Devil is frequent in theſe temptations, and though you could repel them as faſt as they come, yet 'twould be a troubleſom piece of work; it will be more for your eaſe to lie ſtill under them, to let them work their will: ſo in time Fly-blows beget noyſomneſs and vermine in the ſoul; and then the life and death of that man, becomes like that of the Egyptians, or Herod, and no plague more finally deſperate, than thoſe two of Flies and Lice. I am reſolv'd there be many temptations which foil many jolly Chriſtians, which yet a meer natural man that never dream't of Scripture, or Gods Spirit, might, if he did but bethink himſelf, reſiſt, and many times overcome. Many acts of uncleanneſs, of intemperance, of contempt of ſuperiours, of murther, of falſe-dealing, of ſwearing and prophaning, that cheap, unprofitable, that untempting, and therefore unreaſonable ſin. Many acts I ſay, of theſe open, abominable ſins, which either cuſtom or humane Laws make men aſhamed of, and the like; the very Law of Reaſon within us, is able to affront, and check, and conquer. That ἔμφυτος καὶ φυσικὸς νόμος, as Methodius calls it, that Law born with us; Naturale judicatorium, ſaith Auſtin againſt Pelagius; Lux noſtri intellectûs, ſay the Schoolmen out of Damaſcen; nay, ὑπαγορεία ἀνθρώπου, ſaith the Stoick, the promiſe that every one makes to nature, the Obligation that he is bound in when he hath firſt leave to be a man, or as Hierocles on the Pythagorean Verſes, "Ορκος ἐνσωμένος τοῖς λογικοῖς γίνεσιν, That Oath that is coetaneous, and co-eſſential to all reaſonable natures, and engages them μὴ παραβαίνειν, &c. not to tranſgreſs the Laws that are ſet them. This is I ſay, enough to keep us in ſome terms or compaſs, to ſwathe and bind us in, to make us look ſomewhat like men, and defeat the Devil in many a skirmiſh. But how much more for a Chriſtian, who if it were by nothing but his Baptiſm, hath certainly ſome advantages of other men: for one that, if he acknowledge any, worſhips the true God, never went a fooling after Idols, which was the Original of the Heathens being given up to vile affections, Rom. i. for one that lives in a civil Countrey among people that have the faces and hearts of men and Chriſtians, made as it were, to upbraid his ways, and reprove his thoughts; for one that is within the ſound of Gods Law, and Light of his Goſpel, by which he may edifie more than ever Heathen did by thunder and lightning; for one that cannot chuſe but fear and believe, and love, and hope in God, in ſome meaſure or kind, be he never ſo unregenerate; for him, I ſay, that hath all theſe outward reſtraints, and perhaps ſome inward twinges of Conſcience, to curb and moderate him, to be yet ſo ſtupid under all theſe helps, as never to be able to raiſe up one thought toward heaven, to have yet not the leaſt atome of Soul to move in the ways of godlineſs, but to fall proſtrate like a Carkaſs, or a Statue, or that Idol Dagon with his feet ſtricken off, not able to ſtand before the ſlighteſt motion of ſin; or if a luſt, or a phanſie, or a devil, be he the ugliеſt in Hell, any thing but God appear to him, preſently to fall down and worſhip. This is ſuch a ſottiſh condition, ſuch an either Lethargy or Conſumption of the Soul, ſuch an extream degree of weakneſs, that neither original ſin, that Serpent that deſpoiled Adam, nor any one ſingle Devil can be believed to have wrought in us; but that ὁ δῆμος (as the Platonicks call it) A popular Government of ſin, under a multitude of Tyrants, which have for ſo long a while, waſted and haraſſed the Soul; ſo that now it is quite creſt-faln, as that legion of Devils, Mar. v. 3. which dwelt among the Tombs in a liveleſs, cadaverous, noiſome Soul; or more truly that evil ſpirit, Mark. i. 23. that made the man diſclaim and renounce Chriſt and his mercies, when he came to cure, Let us alone, what have

we to do with thee? by which is noted, That contentedness and acquiescence in sin; that even ſtubborn wilfulneſs, and reſolvedneſs to die, that a long ſluggiſh cuſtom in ſin, will bring us to; and that you may reſolve on, as the main diſcernable cauſe of this weakneſs of the heart, a habit, and long ſervice and drudgery in ſin. But then, as a ground of that, you may take notice of another, a phancy that hath crept into moſt mens hearts (and ſuffers them not to think of reſiſting any temptation to ſin) that all their actions, as well evil as good, were long ago determined and ſet down by God; and now nothing left to them, but a neceſſity of performing what was then determined. I would fain believe, that that old hereſie of the Stoicks, revived indeed among the Turks, concerning the inevitable production of all things; that fatal neceſſity, even of ſins, ſhould yet never have gotten any footing or entertainment among Chriſtians; but that by a little experience in the practice of the world, I find it among many, a main piece of their faith, and the only point that can yield them any comfort, that their ſins, be they never ſo many and outragious, are but the effects, or at leaſt, the conſequents of Gods decree; that all their care, and ſollicitude, and moſt wary endeavours, could not have cut off any one ſin from the Catalogue; that unleſs God be pleaſed ἀπὸ μηχανῆς to come down upon the Stage, by the irreſiſtable power of his conſtraining ſpirit, as with a Thunderbolt from Heaven, to ſhake and ſhiver to pieces the carnal man within them, to ſtrike them into a ſwoon as he did Saul, that ſo he may convert them; and in a word, to force and raviſh them to Heaven: unleſs he will even drive and carry them, they are never likely to be able to ſtir, to perform any the leaſt work of reaſon; but fall minutely into the moſt irrational, unnatural ſins in the world, nay, even into the bottom of that pit of Hell, without any ſtop, or delay, or power of deliberating in this their precipice. This is an hereſie that in ſome Philoſopher-Chriſtians hath ſprouted above ground, hath ſhewed it ſelf in their brains and tongues; and that more openly in ſome bolder Wits; but the Seeds of it are ſown thick in moſt of our hearts, I fear in every habitual ſinner amongſt us, if we were but at leiſure to look into our ſelves. The Lord give us a heart to be forewarned in this behalf. συμφορήσωσι;

To return into the rode: Our natural inclinations and propenſions to ſin, are, no doubt, active and prurient enough within us, ſomewhat of Jehu's conſtitution and temper, they drive very furiouſly. But then to perſwade our ſelves, that there is no means on earth, beſides the very hand of God, and that out of our reach, able to tram, or overſlow this furious driver; that all the ordinary clogs that God hath provided us; our reaſon and natural conſcience, as Men; our Knowledge, as Chriſtians; nay, his reſtraining, though not ſanctifying graces, together with the Lungs and Bowels of his Miniſters, and that energetical powerful inſtrument, the Goſpel of Chriſt, Which is the power of God unto ſalvation, even to every Jew, nay, and Heathen, Rom. 1. To reſolve, that all theſe are not able to keep us in any compaſs, to quell any the leaſt ſin we are inclined to; that unleſs God will by force make Saints of us, we muſt needs preſently be Devils, and ſo leave all to Gods omnipotent working, and never make uſe of thoſe powers, with which he hath already furniſhed us. This is a monſtrous piece of unchriſtian divinity; a way, by advancing the Grace of God, to deſtroy it, and by depending on the Holy Ghoſt, to grieve, if not to ſin againſt him; to make the corruption of our nature equal to, nay, ſurpaſſing the puniſhment of the Devils; a neceſſary and irreverſible obduration in all kinds and meaſures of ſin.

This one practical Hereſie will bring us through all the prodigies of the old Philoſophical Sects, from Stoicks to Epicuriſm, and all ſenſual Libertiniſm, and from thence to the μεταψυχωσις of the Pythagoreans. For unleſs the ſoul that is now in one of us, had been tranſplanted from a Swine, or ſome other the moſt ſtupid, ſottiſh, degenerous ſort of Beaſts, it is impoſſible that it ſhould thus naturally, and neceſſarily, and perpetually, and irrecoverably, delight and wallow in every kind of ſenſuality, without any check or contradiction, either of Reaſon, or Chriſtianity. If I ſhould tell you that none of you, that hath underſtood and pondered the Will of God, wants abilities in ſome meaſure to perform it, if he would muſter up all his forces, at time of need; that every Chriſtian hath grace enough to ſmother luſts in the Womb, and keep them, at leaſt, from bringing forth; to quell a temptation before it break out into an actual ſin, you would think perhaps that I flattered you, and deceived my ſelf in too good an opinion of your ſtrength. Only thus much then, It would be ſomewhat for your edification to try what you could do: Certainly there is much more in a Chriſtians power (if he be not engaged in a habit of ſin) than we imagine; though not for the performing of good, yet for the inhibiting of evil. And therefore bethinking our ſelves, ὅτι ἀνθρώπινοι ἐσμεν, ſaith Arrian, That we are the ſons of God, μηδὲν ταπεινὸν ἐννοῶμεν, Let us not have too low and degenerous an opinion of our ſelves. Do but endeavour reſolutely and couragiouſly to repel temptations as often as they ſollicite thee; make uſe of all thy ordinary reſtraints; improve thy natural fear and ſhamefac'dneſs, thy Chriſtian education, tender diſpoſition to the higheſt pitch; do but hold ſincerely as long as thou art able, and though I will not ſay that all thy ſins ſhall be confin'd to thoſe two heads of original (a branch of which are evil motions) and of omiſſion; yet I will undertake, that thou ſhalt have an eaſier burthen of actual commiſſions upon thy ſoul, and that will prove a good eaſe for thee: thoſe are they that weigh it down into the deep, that ſink it deſperateſt into that double Tophet of obduration and deſpair. Final obduration being a juſt judgment of God, on one that hath fill'd up the meaſure of his iniquities, that hath told over all the hairs of his head, and ſands of the Sea in actual ſins; and a neceſſary conſummation of that, deſpair; the firſt part, the Prologue and Harbinger to that worm in Hell.

'Twere eaſie to ſhew how faith might afford a Chriſtian ſufficient guard and defence againſt the keeneſt weapon in the Devils armory, and retort every ſtroke upon himſelf: But becauſe this is the Faith only of a Wife, not as we now conſider as a Woman at large, but in a nearer obligation, as a Spouſe, We ſhall more opportunely handle that in the next Part, where we ſhall conſider Indulgence in ſin, as the work of a whoriſh Woman; where whoredom, noting adultery, preſuppoſes wedlock, and conſiſts in unfaithfulneſs to the Husband, the thing in the next place to be diſcovered: The Work, &c.

That Christ is offered by his Father to all the Church for an Husband; that he waits, and begs, and ſends preſents to us all to accept of the propoſal, the whole Book of Canticles, that Song of ſpiritual love, that affectionate wooing Sonnet will demonſtrate: that every Chriſtian accepts of this Match, and is ſacramentally eſpouſed to Chriſt at his Baptiſm; his being call'd by the Huſbands Name imports: for that is the meaning of the phraſe, Iſai. iv. 1. Let us be called by thy Name, i. e. marry us. That Faith is the only thing that makes up the Match, and entitles us to his Name, and Eſtate, is obſervable, both from many places of Scripture, and by the oppoſition which is ſet betwixt a Chriſtian, and all others, Jews and Infidels, betwixt the Spouſe, and either the deſtitute Widow, or barren Virgin; the ground of which is only Faith. Iſai. iv. 1.

So then, every Chriſtian at his Baptiſm being ſuppoſed a Believer, and thereby eſpouſed Sacramentally to Chriſt, and ſo obliged to all the obſervances, as partaker of all the priviledges of a Wife: doth at every unchaſte thought, or adulterous motion, offend againſt the fidelity promiſed in marriage, by every actual breach of this faith, is for the preſent guilty of Adultery, but by indulgence in it, is downright a whore; i. e. either one that came to Chriſt with an unchaſte, adulterous love to gain ſomewhat, not for any ſincere affection to his perſon, but inſidious to his eſtate; and having got that, is ſoon weary of his perſon: or elſe one that came to him with pure virgin thoughts, reſolving her ſelf a perpetual captive to his love, and never to be tyred with thoſe beloved fetters of his embraces; but in time meets with a more flattering amiable piece of beauty, and is ſoon hurried after that, and ſo forgetteth both her vows and love.

Thus ſhall you ſee an handſome, modeſt, maidenly Chriſtian, eſpouſed to Chriſt at the Font, and fully wedded by his Ring at Confirmation: Nay, come nearer yet to him, and upon many ſolemn expreſſions of fidelity, and obedience, vouchſafed the ſeal of his very heart in the Sacrament of his Blood: another that hath liv'd with him a long while in uniform, conſtant loyalty, noted by all the neighbourhood for an abſolute Wife; a grave ſolemn, matronly Chriſtian: yet either upon the allurements of ſome freſh ſprightful ſin, or the ſollicitations of an old-acquaintance luſt, the inſinuations of ſome wily intruder, or a ſpecious ſhew of a glorious glittering temptation; or when theſe are all wanting, upon the breaking out of an evil heart of unbelief (which ſome outward reſtraints formerly kept in) departing from the living God, profeſs open neglect and deſpight againſt the Husband which before they ſo wooed, and flattered and made love to. 'Twere long to number out to you, and give you by tale a Catalogue of thoſe defections and adulterous practices which Chriſtians are ordinarily obſerved to be guilty of, (which whether they go ſo far as to make a divorce betwixt the ſoul and Chriſt, or whether only to provoke him to jealouſie, whether by an interciſion of Grace and Faith, or by an interruption and ſuſpenſion of the acts, I will not now examine) I will go no farther than the Text, which cenſures it here as a piece of ſpiritual whoredom, of treacherous unfaithful dealing, to be light, unconſtant, and falſe to Chriſt; whoſe Spouſe they are eſteemed, whoſe Name they bear, and Eſtate they pretend title to. And ſo indeed it is, for what greater degree of unfaithfulneſs can be imagined? What fouler breach of Matrimonial Covenants, than to value every ordinary proſtitute ſin, before the precious chaſteſt embraces of an Husband, and a Saviour? to be caught and captivate with the meaneſt vanity upon earth, when it appears in competition with all the treaſures in Heaven? Beſides, that ſpiritual Armor which Faith beſtows on a Chriſtian, Eph. vi. 16. ſufficient to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, or, as the Greek hath it, τῦ πονηρῦ that wicked one, the Devil, methinks there is a kind of moral influence from Faith on any wiſe and prudent heart, enough to enliven, and animate, and give it ſpirit, againſt the force or threatnings of any the ſtrongeſt temptation, and to encourage him in the moſt crabbed, uncouth, diſconſolate undertakings of godly obedience. For what ſin didſt thou ever look upon with the fulleſt delight of all thy ſenſes, in the enjoying of which, thy moſt covetous, troubleſome, importunate luſts would all reſt ſatisfied, but one minute of Heaven, truly repreſented to thy heart, would infinitely out-weigh? A Turk is ſo affected with the expectation of his carnal Paradiſe, thoſe Catholick everlaſting Stews, which he fancies to himſelf for heaven, that he will ſcarce taſte any wine all his life-time, for fear of diſabling and depriving him of his luſt; he will be very ſtanch from ſin, that he may merit and be ſure to have his fill of it. And then certainly one clear ſingle apprehenſion of that infinite bliſs which the eye of Faith repreſents to us, were enough to raviſh a world of ſouls, to preponderate all other delights, which the moſt poetical fancy of man or Devil could poſſeſs us with. Were but the love of Chriſt to us, ever ſuffered to come into our hearts, (as Species to the eye by introreception) had we but come to the leaſt taſte and reliſh of it, what would we not do to recompence, and anſwer, and entertain that love? what difficulty would it not ingratiate to us? what exquiſite pleaſure, or carnal rival, would not be cheap and contemptible in its preſence? If thou haſt but faith to the ſize of a grain of Muſtard-ſeed, ſpeak to this mountain, and it ſhall be removed, the talleſt, cumberſome, unwieldy temptation which all the giants in Hell can mould together, (as once they are feign'd to do the Hills to get up to Heaven, Pelion Oſſa, &c.) if thou doſt but live, or breath by Faith, ſhall vaniſh at the leaſt blaſt of thy noſtrils. The clear repreſentation of more valuable pleaſures, and more horrid dangers than any the fleſh can propoſe, certainly attending the performances, or breach of our Vow of Wedlock, is enough to charm and force us to perpetual chaſtity; to fright or ſcoff all other wooers out of our ſights; to reprobate and damn them as ſoon as they appear: there is in this husband of ours a confluence of all infinite imaginable delights, which whoſoever hath but once taſted, but from a kiſs of his mouth, he is not unconſtant, but ſottiſh, if he ever be brought to any new embraces. But then openly to contemn, to profeſs neglects, to go a wooing again, to tempt and ſollicite even temptations, to give gifts to all thy lovers, to hire them that they may come unto thee on every ſide for thy whoredoms, verſ. 33. of this Chapter; this is a degree of ſtupidity and inſolence, of inſatiable pride and luſt, that neither the iniquity of Sodom, nor ſtubbornneſs of Capernaum, nor the Rhetoricall'ſt Phraſe almoſt in the very Scripture can expreſs, but only this in my Text, which comes in the laſt place with a marvellous Emphaſis, Imperium,] The work, &c. Eph. vi. 16. Verſ. 33.

In

In which one Epithet many of the highest degrees of sin are contain'd. 1. Confidence and shamelesness in sinning, an imperious Whore, mulier impudica libidinis, one that is better acquainted with lust, than to blush when she meets with it; modesty and coyness are but infirmities rather than good qualities of youth; effects of ignorance and tenderness and unexperience in sin, a little more conversation in the world, will season men to a bolder temper, and in time instruct them; that this modesty is the only thing they ought to be asham'd of. 'Tis not ingenuity but cowardise, a poor degenerous, pusillanimous humour, to go fearfully about a vice, to sin tremblingly and with regrets: this Country disposition, or soft temper, when we come abroad into the world, amongst men, 'tis quite out-dated: thus is impudence and a forehead of steel, grown not the armor only, but even the complexion of every man-like spirit. He is not fit for the Devils war, that is so poorly appointed either with courage or munition, as to be discomfited by a look; 'tis part of his honour not to fear disgrace, and his reputation, not to stand upon so poor a thing as reputation.

2. Imperious,] taking all authority into her own hands, scorning to be afraid either of God or Devil, quæ regno posita neminem timeat, having fancied her self in a throne, never thinks either of enemy to endanger, or of superior to quell her; but sins confidently, & in Cathedrâ, Psal. i. 1. in state, in security, and at ease, and never doubts or fears to be removed. Psal. i. 1.

And this is most primarily observable in the Jews, depending on their carnal Prerogatives, as being of Abrahams seed; and yet thus also may we suspect do many among us, some tying Gods decree of Election to their persons, and individual entities, without any reference to their qualifications, or demeanors; others by a premature perswasion that they are in Christ, and so in such an irreversible estate, that all the temptations, all the Devils, nay all the sins in Hell, shall never dispossess them: others resolv'd, that God can see no sin in his children, in imitation of Marcus in Irenæus, whose Heresie, or rather fancie it was ἑαυτὸν δι' ἀπολύτρωσιν ἀόρατον γίνεσθαι τῷ κρείττονι, that by the redemption they were become invisible: upon these I say, and other grounds (how true, I will not now examine) do many rash presumers abuse the grace of God unto wantonness; never fear to sin, because they need not fear to be punished; never cease to provoke God, because they are sure he is their friend; and being resolved of him as a Saviour, contemn him as a Judge. Multi ad sapientiam pervenissent, &c. saith he, Many had come to learning enough, had they not believed too soon they had attain'd it. No such hindrance to proficiency, as too timely a conceit of knowledge: thus might we ordinarily guess some men to have been in good towardly estates, had they not made too much hast to conceive so; and having once possest themselves of heaven on such slight grounds, such * not as a solemn examination of themselves, but some gleams of their fancy had bestowed upon them; 'tis no wonder if all the effects of their assurance be spiritual security and supine confidence in sinning: they have hid their heads in Heaven by their vain speculation, and then think their whole body must needs be safe, be it never so open and naked, and bare to all temptations. Nay, be they up to the shoulders in carnality, nay, earth, nay, hell, yet seeing caput inter nubila] their head is in the clouds, there is no danger or fear of drowning, be it never so deep or myrie. This was Laodiceas estate, Rev. iii. 17. She fancied her self great store of spiritual riches, and brought in an Inventory of a very fair estate, I am rich and am increased in goods, and have need of nothing: any more accession even of the graces of God, would be but superfluous and burthensome, not knowing all this while, That she was wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. There is not a blessing upon earth, that can any way hope or seem to parallel a sober well grounded assurance here, that in time we shall be Saints in Heaven; 'tis such a Paradise upon Earth, that Heaven it self seems but a second part of it, differing from it rather in degrees, and external accomplishments, than in any distinct specifical kind of happiness: (the Lord of Heaven by his mighty working, when it shall please him, begin and consummate it in us.) But then to make use of this Patent of Heaven to engage us further in the deep, to keep us not from the Devils works, but from his attachments; only as a protection to secure our misdemeanors, not to defend our innocence: for a man thus appointed to venture on a Precipice, as the Turks, saith Busbequius, are wont to try the goodness of an horse, by riding him post down the steepest hill; to outdare the Devil in his own territories, (as Christ is said to descend thither to triumph over him) to besiege and set upon Hell, presuming of our interest in Heaven, as of a Magical Charm, and ἀλεξίκακον to keep us safe from death or maims in the midst of enemies, nay of friends; this is a piece of spiritual pride of Lucifer's own inscribing, an imperious majestick garb of impiety, a triumphant or processionary pomp, an affected stately gate in sin; that nothing but a violent rending power of the Spirit, or a boisterous tempestuous judgment can force us out of. Such a prophane Fiduciary as this, which hath even defiled Heaven by possessing it, such an Hellish Saint is like to be torn out of the third Heaven into which his speculation hath wrapt him, and after a long dream of Paradise, find himself awake in Hell. And from this degree of religious prophaneness, this confidence in sinning on presumption that we are under grace; from this premature resolution, that no sin, no Devil can endanger us; from this imperious whoredom, as from the danger of Hell, Good Lord deliver us.

Ep. 37

3. Imperious] signifies more distinctly a tyrannical Lording behaviour, usurping and exercising authority over all. And this the Apostate Jew and Christian Libertine doth: 1. By tyrannizing over himself, i. e. his faculties and estate: 2. Over all that come near him. Over himself, by urging and driving on in a carnal course; not patient of any regrets and resistances that a tender disposition, motions of Gods Spirit, or gripes of Conscience can make against it, goading and spurring on any of his faculties, as being too dull, and unactive, and slothful in the ways of death, even forcing them (if they be any time foreslowed and trashed by either outward or inward restraints) to sin even in ‖ sight of them, and hastening them to a kind of unvoluntary disobedience. Thus will a stone when 'tis kept violently from the ground, being held in a mans hand, or the like, press and weigh towards the Earth incessantly, as if it were naturally resolved to be revenged on any one; to tire him out, that thus detained it from its place; nay, when when it is let down, you may see it yet press lower, make its print in the Earth, as if it would never be satisfied, till it could rest in Hell. The sinner is never at quiet with himself, Instat & imperat; He is urgent and importunate upon himself, to satisfie every craving lust. Not the beggarliest affection, or laziest, unworthiest desire of the flesh, but shall have its alms and dole, rather than starve, though it be an atome of his very soul, to the utter undoing and bankrupting of him that gives it.

And for his tyranny over his estate, whether Temporal or Spiritual, his goods of Fortune, or gifts of Grace, they must all do homage to this carnal Idol. All his treasures on Earth are richly sold, if they can but yield him the fruition of one beloved sin. And for Spiritual Illuminations, or any Seeds of Grace, he will lose them all; and even shut himself for ever into the darkness of Hell, rather than ever be directed by their light, out of those pleasing paths of death.

A restraining grace was but a burthensome, needless incumbrance; and a gleam of the Spirit, but a means to let Conscience a working, to actuate her malice and execution on sin; and it were an happy exchange, to get but one loving delight or companion for them both. Let but a sin be coy and stanch, not to be gain'd at the first wooing, and all these together, like Jacob's Present out of all his goods, shall be all little enough for a sacrifice or bribe, to sollicite, or hire it. And this Vers. 33. & 34. the Prophet notes here distinctly, Vers. 33. and 34. Thou art contrary to all the Whores in the World. In other places Men give gifts to all Whores, but thou giv'st gifts to all thy lovers. None follow or bribe thee to commit whoredoms: Thou giv'st a reward, and no reward is given to thee; therefore thou art contrary.

The sinner in my Text, scorns to set so low a value on sin, as that profit or advantage should ingratiate it to him; it is so amiable in his eyes of it self, he will prize it so high, that any other treasure shall not be considerable in respect of it: It is part of his loyalty and expression of his special service to the Devil, to become a bankrupt in his cause, to sell all that he hath, both God, and fortunes to follow him. It is the art and Cunning of common Whores, to raise mens desires of them, by being coy, Difficultate augere libidinis pretium, to hold off, that they may be followed, Vers. 34. But this sin is not so artificial, her affections are boysterous and impatient of delay; she is not at so much leisure as to windlace, or use craft to satisfie them; she goes downright a wooing, and if there be any difficulty in compassing, all that she hath is ready for a dowry, and prostitute before her Idol, Lust.

Lastly, Imperious over all that come near him, either men or sins: every man must serve him, either as his pander or companion, to further or associate him. I told you he sinned in Cathedrâ, Psal. 1. 1. Psal. 1. 1. that is also doctorally and magisterially; every spectator must learn of him, it is his profession, he sets up school for it, his practices are so commandingly exemplary, that they do even force and ravish the most maidenly tender conscience. And then, for all inferiors, they are required to provide him means and opportunities of sinning, to find him out some game; and no such injury can be done, as to rouze or spring a sin, that would otherwise have lodged in his walk. It was part of the Heathenish Romans quarrel against the Primitive Christians, saith Tertullian, that they drove away their Devils: These Exorcist-Christians had banished all their old familiars out of the Kingdom, which they were impatient to be deprived of. And thus careful and chary are men of their helps of opportunities to sin; it is all the joy they have in the world, sometimes to have a temptation, and to be able to make use of it; to have the Devil continue strong with them, in an old Courtier's phrase, It is their very life; and he that deprives them of it, is a murtherer.

And for the sins themselves, Lord, how they tyrannize over them; how they will rack, and torture, and stretch every limb of a sin, that they may multiply it into infinites, and sin as often at once, as is possible? Adam in the bare eating of an Apple, committed a multitude of sins. Leo
Leo, Epist. 86. in his 86 Epist. August. de Civit. Dei. and other of the Fathers, will number them out to you.
August. lib. 11. And thus far this tyrant over Impiety and Lust, will be a Pelagian, as to order all his deviation by imitation of Adam's. Every breach of one single Law shall contain a brood or nest, into which it may be sub-divided; and every circumstance in the Action shall furnish him with fresh matter for variety of sin.

Again, How imperious is he in triumphing over a sin, which he hath once atchieved? If he have once got the better of good nature and Religion; broke in upon a stubborn, sullen vice, that was formerly too hard for him; how often doth he reiterate and repeat, that he may perfect his conquest, that it may lie prostrate and tame before him, never daring to resist him? And if there be any Virgin modest sins, which are ashamed of the light, either of the Sun, or Nature, not coming abroad but under a veil, (as some sins being too horrid and abominable, are fain to appear in other shapes, and so keep us company under the name of amiable or innocent qualities) then will this violent imperious sinner call them out into the Court or Market place; tear away the veil, that he may commit them openly; and, as if the Devil were too modest for him, bring him upon the stage against his will, and even take Hell by violence and force.

Thus are men come at last to a glorying in the highest impieties, and expect some renown and credit, as a reward for the pains they take about it; and then certainly, honour is grown very cheap, when it is bestowed upon sins, and the man very tyrannical over his spectators thoughts, that requires to be worshipped for them. This was a piece of the Devils old tyranny in the times of Heathenism (which I would fain Christianity hath out-dated) to build Temples, and offer sacrifice to sins under the name of Venus, Priapus, and the like; that men that were naturally Sues-Salvos, superstitious adorers of Devils, or any thing that was called God, might account Incontinence Religion, and all impieties in the world a kind of adoration. Thus to profess whoredoms, and set up trophies in our eyes, to build their eminent place in the head of every way, in the verse next to my Text, was then the imputation of the Jews, (and pray God it prove not the guilt of Christians) from whence the whole Church of them is here styled, An imperious, &c.

Thus hath the Apostate Jew represented to you, in his picture and resemblance, the Libertine Christian; and Ezekiel become an Historian as well as Prophet. Thus hath indulgence in vice among among Professors of Christianity been aggravated against you, 1. By the weak Womanish condition of it; nature it self, and ordinary man-like reason, is ashamed of it; 2. By the Adulterous Unfaithfulness, 1. Want of Faith, 2. Of Fidelity bewray'd in it; 3. By the imperiousness of the behaviour, 1. In shamelesness, 2. In confidence and spiritual security, 3. In tyrannizing over himself and faculties, by force compelling, and then insulting over his goods and graces, prodigally mis-spending them in the prosecution of his lusts, and Lording over all that come near him, men, or sins; first pressing, then leading the one, and both ravishing and tormenting the other, to perform him the better service.

Now that this discourse may not have been sent into the air unprofitably; that all these prophetical censures of sin may not be like Xerxes his stripes on the Sea, on inanimate senseless bodies; 'tis now time that every tender open guilty heart begin to retire into it self; every one consider, whether he be not the man that the parable aims at; that you be not content to have your ears affected, or the suburbs of the Soul filled with the sound, unless also the heart of the City be taken with its efficacy. Think and consider whether, 1. This effeminacy and womanishness of heart, and not weakness, but torpor and stupidity, 2. This unfaithfulness and falseness unto Christ expresst by the spiritual incontinence and whoredoms of our souls and actions, 3. That Confidence and magnanimous stately garb in sin, arising in some from Spiritual Pride, in others from Carnal Security; whether any or all of these may not be inscrib'd on our Pillars, and remain as a συλλογισμὸν against us, to upbraid and aggravate the nature and measure of our sins also. I cannot put on so solemn a person as to act a Cato or Aristarchus, amongst an Assembly that are all Judices critici, to reprehend the learned and the aged, and to chide my Teachers: you shall promise to spare that thankless task, and to do it to your selves. It will be more civility perhaps, and sink down deeper into ingenuous natures, fairly to bespeak and exhort you; and from the first part of my Text only, (because 'twould be too long to bring down all) from the weakness and womanish condition of indulgent sinners, to put you in mind of your strength, and the use you are to make of it, in a word and close of Application.

We have already taken notice of the double inheritance and patrimonie of strength and graces, which we all injoy, first, as Men; secondly, as Christians: and ought not we, Beloved, that have spent the liveliest and sprightfullest of our age and parts, in the pursuit of Learning, to set some value on that estate we have purchased so dear, and account our selves somewhat the more men, for being Scholars? Shall not this deserve to be esteemed some advantage to us, and a rise, that being luckily taken, may further us something in our stage towards Heaven? That famous division of Rational Animals in Jamblichus out of Aristotle, into three different species, that some were Men, others Gods, others such as Pythagoras; will argue some greater priviledges of Scholars above other men: That indeed, the deep Learneder sort, and especially those that had attained some insight περὶ θεῶν, in divine affairs, were in a kind of a more venerable species, than ordinary ignaro's

And for the benefits and helps that these excellencies afford us in our way to Heaven, do but consider what a great part of the world overshaded in Barbarism, brought up in blind Idolatry, do thereby but live in a perpetual Hell, and at last, pass not into another kind, but degree of darkness; Death being but an officer to remove them from one Tophet to another; or at most, but as from a Dungeon to a Grave. Think on this, and then think and count what a blessing divine knowledge is to be esteemed; even such a one as seems, not only the way, but the entrance; not only a preparation, but even a part of that vision which shall be for ever beatifical: and therefore it will nearly concern us to observe, what a talent is committed to our husbanding, and what increase that hard Master will exact at his coming. For as Dicæarchus in his Description of Greece, saith of the Chalcidians, That they were μαθημάτων ἐνδὸς ὑ μόνον φύσει ἀλλὰ καὶ φωνῇ, born, as it were, with one foot in Learning, and both by the genius of the place and Language, which they spake, being Greek, even suckt the arts from their Mothers Breasts, at least were prepared for, and initiated in them by nature; and therefore it would be a great shame for them, not to be Scholars: So most truly of those of us, that are learned, full, illuminate Christians; the very language that we speak, and air we breath in, doth naturally infuse some sacred instincts into us; doth somewhat enter us in this Spiritual, Heavenly Wisdom; will be some munition for us, and not suffer us to be so pitifully baffled, and befooled, and triumphed over by that old Sophister. And if, for all these advantages, we prove dunces at last, it will be an increase, not only of our torments, but our shame; of our indignation at our selves, at the day of doom; and the reproach and infamy superadded to our sufferings, will scarce afford us leisure to weep and wail, for gnashing of our teeth. And therefore, as Josephus of the Jews, that they prayed to God daily, ὐχ' ὅπως δῷ, &c. not that he would bestow good things on them; for he did that already on his own accord, pouring out plenty of all in the midst of them: But ὅπως δύνωνται, καὶ λαβόντες φυλάξωσι, that they might be able to receive and keep what he bestowed. So will it concern us to pray, and labour mainly, for the preserving, that we be the better for this great bounty of God's: that neither our inobservance of his gifts, suffer them to pass by us unprofitably, and neglected, being either not laid hold on, or not imployed; nor the unthrifty mis-husbanding of them, cause the Lord to call in the talent intrusted to us already, because unworthy of any more. Con. Ap. l. 2.

It was a shrewd, though Atheistical speech of Hippocrates, That sure, if the Gods had any good things to bestow, they would dispense them among the rich, who would be able and ready to requite them by Sacrifices: But all evil presents, all Pandora's Box should be divided among the poor, because they are still murmuring and repining, and never think of making any return for favours. περ. ὐδ. ἀφ. καὶ τοπ.

The Eye of Nature, it seems, could discern thus much of God and his gifts, that they are the most plentifully bestowed, where the greatest return may be expected: and for others, from whom all the liberality in the world, can extort no retribution, but grumbling and complaints; it is not charity or alms, but prodigality and riot to bestow on them. These are to be fed not with bread but stripes; they are not πένητες, but πτωχοὶ, rather beggars than poor, like Pharaohs lean Kine, after the devouring of the fat ones, ſtill lank and very ill-favoured. And the judgment of theſe, you ſhall find in the Goſpel, From them ſhall be taken away even that which they have. And therefore, all which from God, at this time, and for ever, I ſhall require and beg of you, is the exerciſe and the improvement of your talent; that your learning may not be for oſtentation, but for traffick; not to poſſeſs, but negotiate withal; not to complain any longer of the poverty of your ſtock, but preſently to ſet to work to husband it. That knowledge of God which he hath allowed you, as your portion to ſet up with, is ample enough to be the Foundation of the greateſt eſtate in the World; and you need not deſpair, through an active, labouring, thriving courſe, at laſt to ſet Heaven as a Roof, on that Foundation: only it will coſt you ſome pains to get the materials together for the building of the Walls; it is as yet but a Foundation, and the Roof will not become it till the walls be raiſed; and therefore every faculty of your Souls and Bodies muſt turn Bezaleels and Aholiabs, Spiritual Artificers for the forwarding and perfecting of this work.

It is not enough to have gotten an abſtracted Mathematical Scheme or Diagram of this Spiritual Building in our Brain; it is the Mechanical labouring part of Religion, that muſt make up the edifice; the work and toil and ſweat of the Soul; the buſineſs not of the Deſigner, but the Carpenter; that which takes the rough, unpoliſhed, though excellent materials, and trims and fits them for uſe; which cuts and poliſhes the rich, but as yet deformed jewels of the Soul; and makes them ſhine indeed, and ſparkle like ſtars in the Firmament. That ground or ſumm of Pythagorean Philoſophy, as it is ſet down by Hierocles in his χρυσᾶ ἔπη, if it were admitted into our ſchools or hearts, would make us Scholars and Divines indeed; that Virtue is the way to Truth: Purity of affections a neceſſary precurſory to depth of knowledge, πρῶτον ἀνθρωπον εἶναι, εἶτ᾽ ἤδη θεὸν, the only means to prepare for the uppermoſt form of Wiſdom, the ſpeculation of God, which doth ennoble the Soul unto the condition of an ἥρως or θεὸς, of an heroical, nay ſacred perſon, is firſt to have been the perſon of a man aright, and by the practice of vertue to have cleared the eye for that glorious Viſion. But the divinity and learning of theſe times, floats and hovers too much in the brain; hath not either weight or ſobriety enough in it, to ſink down, or ſettle it in the heart. We are all for the μαθητικὴ, as Clemens calls it; the art of ſorting out, and laying in order all intellectual ſtore in our brains, tracing the Counſels of God, and obſerving his methods in his ſecrecies; but never for the πρακτικὴ, the refunding and pouring out any of that ſtore, in the alms, as it were, and liberality of our actions. If Gerſon's definition of Theology, that it is ſcientia effectiva non ſpeculativa, were taken into our conſideration at the choice of our profeſſions, we ſhould certainly have fewer pretenders to Divinity, but, 'tis withall hoped, more Divines.

Παιδαγ.

The Lacedæmonians and Cretians, ſaith Joſephus, brought up men to the practice, but not knowledge of good, by their example only, not by precept or law: The Athenians, and generally the reſt of the Grecians uſed inſtructions of laws only, but never brought them up by practice and diſcipline: But of all Lawgivers, ſaith he, only Moſes, ἄμφω ταῦτα συνήρμοσεν, diſpenſed and meaſured both theſe proportionably together. And this, beloved, is that for which that policy of the Primitive Jews deſerved to be called Θεοκρατία, by a ſpecial name, the Government of God himſelf. This is it; the combination of your knowledge with your practice, your learning with your lives, which I ſhall, in fine, commend unto you, to take out both for your ſelves and others. 1. For your ſelves, that in your ſtudy of Divinity, you will not behold Gods Attributes as a ſight or ſpectacle, but as a Copy, not only to be admired, but to be tranſcribed into your hearts and lives; not to gaze upon the Sun to the dazling, nay, deſtroying of your eyes, but, as it were, in a burning-glaſs, contract thoſe bleſſed ſanctifying rayes that flow from it, to the enlivening and inflaming of your hearts. And 2. In the behalf of others; ſo to digeſt and inwardly diſpenſe every part of ſacred knowledge into each ſeveral member and vein of Body and Soul, that it may tranſpire through hands, and feet, and heart, and tongue; and ſo ſecretly inſinuate it ſelf into all about you; that both by Precept and Example, they may ſee, and follow your good works, and ſo glorifie here your Father which is in heaven: that we may all partake of that bleſſed Reſurrection, not of the learned and the great, but the juſt; and ſo hope and attain to be all glorified together with him hereafter.

SERMON II.

PHIL. IV. 13.

I can do all things through Christ that strengthneth me.

THose two contrary Heresies, that cost St. Austin, and the Fathers of his time, so much pains; the one all for natural strength, the other for irrecoverable weakness; have had such unkindly influence on succeeding ages, that almost all the actions of the ordinary Christian have some tincture of one of these: scarce any sin is sent abroad into the World, without either this, or that inscription. And therefore parallel to these, we may observe the like division in the hearts and practical faculties, between pride and sloth, opinion of absolute power, and prejudice of absolute impotence: the one undertaking all upon its own credit, the other suing, as it were, for the preferment, or rather excuse of being bankrupts upon record; that so they may come to an easie composition with God for their debt of obedience: the one so busie in contemplation of their present fortunes, that they are not at leisure to make use of them, their pride helping them to ease; and if you look nearly, to poverty too, Revel. iii. 17. the other so fastened to this Sanctuary, this religious piece of prophaneness, that leaving the whole business to God, as the undertaker and proxy of their obedience, their idleness shall be deemed devotion, and their best piety sitting still. Revel. iii. 17.

These two differences of Men, either sacrilegious or supine, imperious or lethargical, have so dichotomised this lower sphere of the World, almost into two equal parts, that the practice of humble obedience, and obeying humility, the bemoaning our wants to God, with Petition to repair them, and the observing and making use of those succors which God in Christ hath dispensed to us; those two foundations of all Christian duty, providing between them, that our Religion be neither ἄθεος ἀρετὴ, nor ἀνέργητος ἰυχὴ, Neither the vertue of the Atheist, nor the prayer of the Sluggard, are almost quite vanished out of the world: as when the Body is torn asunder, the Soul is without any farther act of violence forced out of its place, that it takes its flight home to Heaven, being thus let out at the Scissure, as at the window; and only the two fragments of carcass remain behind.

For the deposing of these two Tyrants, that have thus usurped the Soul between them, dividing the Live child with that false Mother, into two dead parts; for the abating this pride, and enlivening this deadness of practical faculties; for the scourging this stout Beggar, and restoring this Cripple to his Legs; the two Provisions in my Text, if the order of them only be transposed, and in Gods method the last set first, will, I may hope and pray, prove sufficient. I can do, &c.

1. Through Christ that strengthneth me.] You have there, first, the Assertion of the necessity of grace; and secondly, that enforced from the form of the word ἐνδυναμοῦντι, which imports the minutely continual supply of aids, and then, thirdly, we have not only positively, but exclusively declared the person thus assisting; in Christo confortante, it is by him, not otherwise, we can do thus, or thus. Three particulars all against the natural confidence of the proud Atheist.

2. The ἰσχύω πάντα, I can do all things.] First, the ἰσχύω, and secondly, the πάντα. 1. The power; and 2. the extent of that power: 1. The potency; and 2. the omnipotency; and then 3. this not only originally of Christ that strengthneth, but inherently of me, being strengthned by Christ. Three particulars again, and all against the conceived or pretended impotence, either of the false spie that brought news of the Giants, Anakims, Cannibals, in the way to Canaan, Numb. xiii. 32. Or of the Sluggard, that is alway affrighting and keeping himself at home, with the Lion in the streets, some μορμολύκιον or other difficulty or impossibility, whensoever any work or travel of obedience is required of us, Prov. xxvi. 13. Numb. xiii. 32. Prov. xxvi. 13.

It will not befit the majesty of the subject, to have so many particulars, by being severally handled, joyntly neglected. Our best contrivance will be to shorten the retail, for the encreasing of the gross, to make the fewer parcels, that we may carry them away the better, in these three Propositions.

I. The strength of Christ is the Original and Fountain of all ours; Through Christ that, &c.
II. The strength of a Christian, from Christ derived, is a kind of Omnipotency, sufficient for the whole duty of a Christian; Can do all things, &c.
III. The strength and power being thus bestowed, the work is the work of a Christian, of the suppositum, the Man strengthned by Christ, I can do, &c.

Of these in this order, for the removing only of those prejudices out of the Brain, which may trash and encumber the practice of piety in the heart. And first of the first.

The strength of Christ is the Original and Fountain of all ours. The strength of Christ, and that peculiarly of Christ the second Person of the Trinity, who was appointed by consent, to negotiate for us in the business concerning our Souls. All our tenure or plea, to grace or glory, to depend not on any absolute, respectless, though free donation, but conveyed to us in the hand of a Mediator; that Privy Seal of his annexed to the Patent, or else of no value at that Court of Pleas, or that Grand Assizes of Souls. Our Natural strength is the gift of God, as God is considered in the first Article of our Creed, and by that title of Creation, we have that priviledge of all created substances, to be able to perform the work of nature, or elſe we ſhould be inferior to the meaneſt creature in this; for the leaſt ſtone in the ſtreet is able to move downwards by its own principle of nature: and therefore, all that we have need of, in the performing of theſe, is only Gods concurrence, whether previous or ſimultaneous; and in acts of choice, the government and direction of our will, by his general providence and power. However, even in this Work of Creation, Chriſt muſt not be excluded, בָּרָא אֱלֹהִים Gods in the Plural, all the Perſons of the Deity, in the whole work, and peculiarly in the Faciamus hominem, are adumbrated, if not mentioned by Moſes. And therefore God is ſaid to have made all by his Word, that inward, eternal Word in his boſome, an articulation, and, as it were, incarnation of which, was that fiat & factum eſt, which the Heathen Rhetorician ſo admired in Moſes for a magnificent ſublime expreſſion. Yet [in] this Creation, and conſequently this donation of natural ſtrength, peculiarly imputed to the firſt Perſon of the Trinity; becauſe no perſonal act of Chriſt, either of his ſatisfaction or merit, of his humiliation or exaltation, did conduce to that; though the Son were conſulted about it, yet was it not ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου, delivered to us in the hand of a Mediator. Our natural ſtrength we have of God, without reſpect to Chriſt incarnate, without the help of his Mediation; but that, utterly unſufficient to bring us to Heaven, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Not that we are ſufficient of our ſelves to think any thing, i. e. ſaith Pariſienſis, any thing of moment or valor, according to the Dialect of Scripture, that calls the whole man by the name of his ſoul, (ſo many ſouls, i. e. ſo many men, and ſo ἡ ψυχή σου, the Pythagoreans word, thy ſoul is thou) counts of nothing, but what tends to the ſalvation of that. But then our ſupernatural ſtrength, that which is called Grace and Chriſtian ſtrength, that is of another date, of another tenure, of another allay; founded in the promiſe, actually exhibited in the death and exaltation of the Meſſias, and continually paid out to us, by the continued daily exerciſe of his Offices. 1. The Covenant ſealed in his Blood, after the manner of Eaſtern Nations, as a counterpart of Gods, to that which Abraham had ſealed to before, in his Blood at his Circumciſion. 2. The Benefits made over in that Covenant, were given up in numerato, with a kind of Livery and Seiſin at his Exaltation; which is the importance of that place, Epheſ. iv. 8. out of the lxviii. Pſalm, Thou haſt aſcended on high;] there is the date of it upon Chriſt's inauguration to his Regal Office: Thou haſt led captivity captive;]there is the evidence of conveyance unto him, as a reward of his victory, and part of his triumph: Thou haſt given gifts [or as the Pſalm, received, Gifts for men;] both importing the ſame thing, in divers relations, received from his Father, (all power is given to me) that he might give, diſpenſe, convey, and ſteward it out to men; and ſo literally ſtill, ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου, in the hand of a Mediator. And then, that which is thus made over to us, is not only the gift of Grace, the habit by which we are regenerate; but above that account, daily bublings out of the ſame Spring, minutely rayes of this Sun of Righteouſneſs, which differ from that gift of Grace, as the propagation of life from the firſt act of Conception, conſervation from Creation; that which was there done in a minute, is here done every minute; and ſo the Chriſtian is ſtill in fieri, not in facto eſſe; or as a line which is an aggregate of infinite points, from a point in ſuo indiviſibili; the firſt called by the Schools, Auxilium gratiæ per modum principii, the other Per modum concurſus. And this is noted by the word δόσεις, givings, Jam. i. 17. neither ἕξεις as the Heathen called their vertues, as habits of their own acquiring; nor again ſo properly δῶρα gifts, becauſe that proves a kind of tenure after the receit, Data, eo tempore quo dantur, fiunt accipientis, ſaith the Law: but properly and critically δόσεις, givings, Chriſt always a giving, confirming minutely, not our title, but his own gift; or elſe that as minutely ready again to return to the crown: all our right and title to ſtrength and power, is only from Gods minutely donation. And the ἐνδυναμοῦντι in the Preſent tenſe, implies, all depending on the perpetual preſence and aſſiſtance of his ſtrength. Hence is it, that Chriſt is called the Father of Eternity, Iſai. ix. 6. i. e. of the life to come (μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, ſay the LXX, the age to come) the ſtate of Chriſtians under the Goſpel, and all that belongs to it; the Father] which doth not only beget the Child, but educate, provide for, put in a courſe to live, and thrive, and deſerves far more, for that he doth after the birth, than for the being it ſelf; and therefore it is Proclus his obſervation of Plato, that he calls God, in reſpect of all Creatures, ποιητὴν a Maker; but πατέρα a Father, in reſpect of Man. And this the peculiar title of Chriſt, in reſpect of his Offices; not to be the Maker only, the Architect of that age to come, of grace and glory, but peculiarly the Father, which continues his Paternal Relation for ever; yea, and the exerciſes of Paternal Offices, by the pedagogy of the Spirit, all the time of non-age, minutely adding and improving, and building him up to the meaſure and pitch of his own ſtature and fulneſs. And ſo again that ſoveraign Title of his Jeſus, i. e. ἰατρὸς & σωτὴρ, ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, Matt. i. 21. this title and office of Phyſician, is peculiar to the ſecond perſon, to repair the daily decays and ruines of the Soul, and not only to implant a Principle of health, but to maintain it by a διαιτητικὴν, and confirm it minutely into an exact habit of Soul: and therefore, that Sun of righteouſneſs is ſaid to have his healing in his wings, i. e. in thoſe rayes which it minutely ſends out, by which as on wings, this fountain of all inherent and imputed righteouſneſs, of ſanctifying and juſtifying Grace, takes its flight, and reſts upon the Chriſtian Soul; and this ſtill peculiarly, ἐν χριστῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντι, not in God κοινῶς, but κυρίως, in Chriſt; In Chriſt that ſtrengthneth.

The not obſerving, or not acknowledging of which difference, between the gifts of God, and the gifts of Chriſt, the endowments of that firſt, and this ſecond foundation, the hand of God, and the hand of a Mediator, is I conceive the ground of all thoſe perplexing controverſies about the ſtrength of nature, and patrimony of grace. Pelagius very jealous and unwilling to part with his natural power, leſt any thing in the buſineſs of his Salvation ſhould be accounted due unto God, they are his own words, if Jerom may be credited, Mihi nullus auferre poterit liberi arbitrii poteſtatem, ne ſi in operibus meis Deus adjutor extiterit, non mihi debeatur merces, ſed ei qui in me operatus. Socinus again denying all merit and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, making all that but a Chimæra, and ſo evacuating or antiquating that old tenure by which we hold all our Spiritual Eſtate. The Romaniſts again, at leaſt ſome of them, ‖ beſtowing upon the bleſſed Virgin after Conception, ſuch Juriſdiction in the temporal proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, that no grace is to be had, but by her diſpenſing; that ſhe the Mother, gives him that ſends the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore gives all gifts, quibus vult, quomodo, quando, & per manus: * that ſhe is the neck to Chriſt the head, Cant. vii. 4. and ‖ Sublato Virginis patrocinio, perinde ac halitu intercluſo, peccator vivere vivere diutius non poteſt: and ſtore enough of ſuch emaſculate Theology as this. And yet others that maintain the quite contradictory to all theſe, acknowledging a neceſſity of ſupernatural ſtrength to the attaining of our ſupernatural end, and then aſk and receive this only, as from the hands and merits of Chriſt, without the mediation or juriſdiction of any other, are yet had in jealouſie and ſuſpition as back-friends to the cauſe of God, and enemies to Grace, becauſe they leave man any portion of that natural ſtrength which was beſtowed on him at his Creation. Whereas the limits of both of theſe being diſtinctly ſet, there may ſafely be acknowledged, firſt a natural power; (or if you will call it natural grace, the Fathers will bear you out in the phraſe; Illius eſt gratia quòd creatus eſt, * St. Jerom; Gratia Dei quâ fecit nos, ‖ St. Auſtin; and Crearis gratia, * St. Bernard:) And that properly ſtyled, the ſtrength of God, but not of Chriſt, enabling us for the works of nature.

And then above this, is regularly ſuperſtructed the ſtrength of Chriſt, ſpecial ſupernatural ſtrength made over unto us, not at our firſt, but ſecond birth; without which, though we are men, yet not Chriſtians, Live, ſaith Clemens, ἀθλιὸν καὶ πρῶτον ζῶον, a kind of embryon, imperfect heathen, of a child in the womb, of the Gentile dark uncomfortable being, a kind of firſt draught, or ground colours only, and monogram of life. Though we have Souls, yet in relation to ſpiritual acts or objects, but weak conſumptive cadaverous ſouls, (as נֶפֶשׁ the Old Teſtament word for the Soul, and ψυχὴ in the 72, ſignifies, a carcaſs or dead body, Numb. v. 2. and otherwhere:) and then, by this acceſſion of this ſtrength of Chriſt, this dead Soul revives into a kind of omnipotency; the Pygmie is ſprung up into a Giant, this languiſhing puling ſtate improved into an ἀθανατικὴ ἕξις; he that even now was inſufficient to think any thing, is now able to do all things; which brings me to my ſecond Propoſition,

The ſtrength of a Chriſtian, from Chriſt deriv'd, is a kind of Omnipotence, ſufficient for the whole duty of a Chriſtian; ἰσχὺν πάντα, Can do all things.

The clearing of this truth from all difficulties or prejudices, will depend mainly on the right underſtanding of the predicate, τὰ πάντα, in my Text, or the whole duty of a Chriſtian in the propoſition: which two being of the ſame importance, the ſame hand will unravel them both. Now what is the whole duty of a Chriſtian, but the adequate condition of the ſecond Covenant? upon performance of which, ſalvation ſhall certainly be had, and without which, ſalvare nequeat ipſa ſi cupias ſalus, the very ſufferings and ſaving mercies of Chriſt will avail us nothing. As for any Exerciſe of Gods abſolute Will, or Power, in this buſineſs of Souls under Chriſts Kingdom, I think we may fairly omit to take it into conſideration; for ſure the New Teſtament will acknowledge no ſuch phraſe, nor I think, any of the Antients that wrote in that language. Whereupon perhaps it will be worth obſerving, in the confeſſion of the Religion of the Greek Church, ſubſcribed by Cyrill the preſent Patriarch of Conſtantinople, where having ſomewhat to do with this phraſe, Of Gods abſolute Dominion ſo much talked on here in the Weſt, he is much put to it to expreſs it in Greek, and at laſt fain to do it by a word coyned on purpoſe, a meer Latiniſm for the turn, ἀπολελυμένην κυριότητα; an expreſſion I think capable of no excuſe but this, that a piece of new Divinity, was to be content with a barbarous phraſe. Concerning this condition of the ſecond Covenant, three things will require to be premiſed to our preſent inquiry;

1. That there is a Condition, and that an adequate one, of the ſame extent as the promiſes of the Covenant; ſomething exacted at our hands to be performed, if we mean to be the better for the demiſe of that Indenture; As many as received him, to them he gave power, &c. Joh. i. 12. to theſe, and to none elſe, poſitively and excluſively: To him that overcometh will I give, Rev. ii. 7. I have fought a good fight, &c. 2 Tim. iv. 7. henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown; then begins the title to the Crown, and not before: when the fight is fought, the courſe finiſhed, the faith kept, then cœlum rapiunt, God challenged on his righteouſneſs as a Judge; not on ground of it his abſolute pleaſure as a Lord, which will; but upon ſuppoſition of a Pact or Covenant, which limits and directs the award and proceſs, for according unto it God the righteous Judge ſhall give. And Mark xvi. 16. in Chriſts farewell ſpeech to his Diſciples, where he ſeals their Commiſſion of Embaſſage and Preaching to every creature, He that believeth not, ſhall be damned; this believing, whatever it ſignifies, is that condition here we ſpeak of, and what it imports, you will beſt ſee by comparing it with the ſame paſſage ſet down by another Amanuenſis, in the laſt verſe of St. Matth. To obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you: a belief, not of brain or phanſie, but that of heart and practice, i. e. Diſtinctly Evangelical or Chriſtian obedience, the πάντα in my Text, and the whole duty of a Chriſtian in the propoſition; which if a Chriſtian by the help of Chriſt, be not able to perform, then conſequently, he is ſtill uncapable of Salvation by the ſecond Covenant; no creature being now reſcuable from Hell, ſtante pacto, but thoſe that perform the condition of it, that irreverſible Oath of God, which is always fulfilled in kind without relaxation, or commutation, or compenſation of puniſhment, being already gone out againſt them; I have ſworn in my wrath that they ſhall not enter into my reſt. And therefore when the end of Chriſts miſſion is deſcribed, Joh. iii. 17. That the world through him might be ſaved; there is a ſhrewd [But] in the next verſe, But he that believeth not, is condemned already: this was upon agreement between God and Chriſt, that the impenitent Infidel ſhould be never the better for it, ſhould die unreſcued in his old Condemnation. So that there is not only a logical poſſibility, but a moral neceſſity of the performing of this τὰ πάντα, or elſe no poſſibility of Salvation. And then, that reaſon of diſanulling the old, and eſtabliſhing the new Covenant, becauſe there was no juſtification to be had by the old, rendred Gal. iii. 21. would eaſily be retorted upon the Apoſtle thus, why, neither is any life or juſtification to be had by this ſecond; the abſurdity of which ſequel being conſidered, may ſerve for one proof of the Propoſition.

Joh. i. 12. Rev. ii. 7. 2 Tim. iv. 7. Mar. xvi. 16. Heb. iv. 3. Joh. iii. 17. Gal. iii. 21.

The ſecond thing to be premiſed of this Condition is, that it is an immutable, unalterable, undiſpenſable Condition. The 2*d*. Covenant ſtanding, this muſt alſo ſtand; that hath been proved already, becauſe a condition adequate, and of the ſame latitude with the Covenant. But now ſecondly, this ſecond, both Covenant and Condition, muſt needs ſtand an Everlaſting Covenant, Ezek. xvi. 60. No poſſibility of a change, unleſs upon an impoſſible ſuppoſition, there ſhould remain ſome other fourth Perſon of the Deity to come into the world. The Tragick Poets, ſaith Tully, when they had over ſhot themſelves in a desperate Plot, that would never come about, ad Deum confugiunt, they were fain to flie to a God, to lay that unruly spirit that their phansie had raised. Upon Adam's sin and breach of the Condition of the First Covenant, there was no possibility in the wit of man, in the sphere of the most Poetical phansie, Fabulæ exitum explicare, to come off with a fair conclusion, had not the Second Person of the Trinity, that Θεὸς ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, come down in his tire, and personation of flesh, not in the stage Cloaths or Livery, but substantial form of a servant upon the stage. And he again having brought things into some possibility of an happy conclusion (though it cost him his life in the negotiation) leaves it at his departure in the trust of his vicegerent, the Spirit of his power, to go thorow with his beginnings; to see that performed (which only he left unperfected, as being our task, not his) the Condition of the Second Covenant. The Spirit then enters upon the work, dispatches Officers, Mar. xvi. 15. Ambassadors to all Nations in the World, πάσῃ κτίσει, to every creature, Mark xvi. 15. And himself to the end of the World, goes along to back them in their Ministry: And then the next thing the Scripture tells us of, is the coming to Harvest, after this Seeds time, and he that believeth not, shall be damned; and so that Sacred Canon is shut up.

The Issue of this second Præcognitum, is this; That if there still remain any difficulties, any impossibilities to be overcome; so they are like to remain for ever, unless there be some other Person in the Godhead to be sent, to make up Pythagoras his τετράκτυς, there is no new way imaginable to be found out; and that perhaps is the reason of those peremptory denuntiations of Christ against them that sin against the Holy Ghost, against that administration of grace entrusted to him, that there shall be never any remission for them, in this world, or in another; i. e. Either by way of Justification here, or Glorification at that grand Manumission hereafter. And that may serve for a second proof of the Proposition, that if for all, the duty of a Christian is not feasible, it must remain so for ever; an adumbration
Heb x. 16, 26. thereof you may see set down Heb. x. comparing the 16. with the 26. verse. In the 16. you have the Second Covenant described, and the condition of it in the Verses following; and then Vers. 26. if after this we sin wilfully, then our estate becomes desperate, There remains no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation; and he that takes not then quarter, accounted an adversary for ever: the Apostate, whether he renounce his faith in fact or profession, must be a Castaway.

The third thing to be premised is, Wherein this condition of the second Covenant consists; and that is not in any rigor of legal performance, (that was the bloody purport of that old obligation, that soon concluded us all under death irreversibly;) not in any Egyptian Pharaoh's task, a full tale of Bricks, without Straw, without any materials to make them; no Pharisaical burthen laid on
Mat. xi. 30. heavy, and no finger to help to bear it; but an easie yoke, a light burthen, Mat. xi. 30. and not only light, but alleviating: he that was laden before, is the lighter for this yoke, Vers. 29. Take my yoke, and you shall find rest. And therefore Christ thinks reasonable, not to lay the yoke upon them as an injunction (as the worldly fashion is) but to commend it to them, as a thing that any prudent man would be glad to take up, in the beginning of the Verse, Take my yoke upon you.

In a word, it consists in the embracing of Christ in all his Offices, the whole Person of Christ;
Zac. vi. 11, 13. but especially as he is typically described in Zachary, a crowned Jesus, a Priest upon a Throne; his Scepter joyned to his Ephod, to rule and receive tribute, as well as sacrifice, and satisfie, and reconcile: Consilium pacis inter ambo ea, those two Offices of his reconciled in the same, our Priest become our King, That being delivered, we may serve him (in the other Zacharie's phrase, Delivered
Luk. i. 74. without fear, serve him) in holiness and righteousness: the performance of that duty that Christ enables to perform; the sincerity of the honest heart; the doing what our Christian strength will reach to, and humbly setting the rest on Christs score. And then, when that which can be done, is sure to be accepted, there is no room left for pretended impossibilities. Nay, because those things which there is a Logical possibility for us to do, and strength sufficient suppeditated, it is not yet
De tent. morally possible to do all our lives long, without any default; because, as Parisiensis saith, even the habit of Grace, in the regenerate heart, is, as long as a man carries flesh about him, as an armed man positus in lubrico, set to fight in a slippery place, all his armor and valor will not secure him from a fall; or again, as the General of a Factious or false-hearted Army, a party of insidious flesh at home, which will betray to the weaker enemy that comes unanimous; or as a Warriour on a tender mouthed horse, impatient of Discipline, or check, is fetcht over sometimes for all his strength and armor: because, I say, there is none but offend sometimes, even against his power; there is therefore bound up in this new Volume of Ordinances, an ἐπίνομις, a New Testament, a Codicil of Repentance, added to the Testament; that Plank for Shipwrackt souls, that City of Refuge, that Sanctuary for the Man-slayer, after sin committed. And then, if sincere obedience be all that is required; and that exclude no Christian living, be he never so weak, but the false, faithless Hypocrite; if repentance will repair the faults of that; and that exclude none but him, that lives and dies indulgent in sin, the common prostitute, final impenitent infidel: If whatsoever be wanting, be made over in the demise of the Covenants; and whatsoever we are enabled to do, accepted in the condition of it; then certainly no man that advises with these premisses, and so, understands what is the meaning of the duty, can ever doubt any longer of the πάντα ἰσχύω, the Omnipotence of the Christian, his sufficiency from Christ to perform his whole duty: Which is the summ of the Vid. Voss Hist. Pel. p. 315. conclusion of the second Arausican Council held against Pelagius, c. ult. Secundum fidem Catholicam credimus, quòd acceptâ per Baptismum gratiâ omnes Baptizati, Christo auxiliante & cooperante, quæ ad salutem pertinent, possint & debeant (si fideliter laborare voluerint) adimplere. The not observing of which, is, I conceive, the fomenter of all that unkindly heat of those involved disputes, whether a regenerate man in viâ, can fulfil the Law of God; of that collision concerning merits, concerning venial and mortal sin, justification by works, or Faith, or both; all which upon the grounds premised, will to any intelligent sober Christian, a friend of truth, and a friend of peace, be most evidently composed. To bring down this thesis to these several Hypotheses, this time or place will not permit; I shall be partial to this part of my Text, if I pass not, with full speed, to that which remains; the third Proposition.

That

That the ſtrength and power being thus beſtowed, the work is the work of a Chriſtian, of the Suppoſitum, the Man ſtrengthned and aſſiſted by Chriſt; I can, &c.

I, not I alone, abſtracted from Chriſt, nor I principally, and Chriſt onely in Subſidiis, to facilitate that to me which I was not quite able throughly to perform without help, (which deceitful conſideration drew on Pelagius himſelf, that was firſt only for nature, at laſt to take in one after another, five Subſidiaries more; but only as ſo many horſes to draw together in the Chariot with nature, being ſo purſued by the Councils and Fathers, from one hold to another, till he was at laſt almoſt deprived of all; acknowledging, ſaith St. Auſtin, Divina gratia adjutorium ad poſſe; and then, had not the Devil ſtuck cloſe to him at the exigence, and held out at the velle & operari, he might have been in great danger to have loſt an Heretick:) But I abſolutely impotent in my ſelf to any ſupernatural duty, being then rapt above my ſelf, ſtrengthned by Chriſts perpetual influence, having all my ſtrength and ability from him, am then by that ſtrength able to do all things my ſelf. As in the old Oracle, the God inſpired and ſpake in the ear of the Prophet, and then the Vates ſpoke under from thence, called ὑποφήτης, echoed out that voice aloud, which he had received by whiſper, a kind of Scribe, or Cryer, or Herauld, to deliver out as he was inſpired: The principal, Θεὸς, a God, or Oracle; the Prophet, ἔνθεος ἐνθουσιασμένος, an inſpired Enthuſiaſt, diſpenſing out to his credulous clients, all that the Oracle did dictate; or as the Earth, which is cold and dry in its elementary conſtitution, and therefore bound up to a neceſſity of perpetual barrenneſs, having neither of thoſe two procreative faculties, heat or moiſture in its compoſition; but then by the beams of the Sun, and neighbourhood of Water, or to ſupply the want of that, rain from Heaven to ſatisfie its thirſt, this cold dry Element begins to teem, carries many Mines of treaſure in the Womb, many granaries of fruit in its ſurface, and in event, ἰσχύει πάντα, contributes all that we can crave, either to our need, or luxury. Now though all this be done by thoſe foreign aids, as principal, nay ſole efficients of this fertility in the earth to conceive, and of its ſtrength to bring forth; yet the work of bringing forth is attributed to the Earth, Heb. vi. 7. as to the immediate parent of all. Thus it is God's work καταφυτεῦσαι καὶ πότισαι, ſaith Cyril, to plant and water, and that he doth mediately by Apollos and Paul: yea, and to give the encreaſe, that belongs to him immediately; neither to Man, nor Angel, but only ad Agricolam Trinitatem, ſaith St. Auſtin; but after all this, σὺν δὲ καρποφορῆσαι, though God give the encreaſe, thou muſt bring forth the fruit. The Holy Ghoſt overſhadowed Mary, and ſhe was found with child, Mat. i. 18. εὑρέθη, ſhe was found; no more attributed to her; the Holy Ghoſt the principal, nay ſole agent in the work, and ſhe a pure Virgin ſtill: and yet Luk. i. 31. 'tis the Angels Divinity, That Mary ſhall conceive and bring forth a Son. All the efficiency from the Holy Ghoſt, and partus ventrem, the work attributed, and that truly to Mary, the ſubject in whom it was wrought; and therefore is ſhe call'd by the Ancients not only officina miraculorum, and ἐργαστήριον ἁγίου πνεύματος, The ſhop of Miracles, and The Work-houſe of the Holy Ghoſt, (as the Rhetorick of ſome have ſet it) but by the Councils, (that were more careful in their phraſes) χριστότοκος & θεότοκος, not only the Conduit through which he paſt, but the Parent of whoſe ſubſtance he was made. And thus in the production of all Spiritual Actions, the principal ſole-efficient of all, is Chriſt, and His Spirit; all that is conceived in us, is of the Holy Ghoſt: The holy Principle, holy Deſire, holy Action, the poſſe, & velle, & operari, all of him, Phil. ii. 12. But then, being ſo overſhadowed, the Soul it ſelf conceives; being ſtill aſſiſted, carries in the Womb; and by the ſame ſtrength, at fulneſs of time, as opportunities do midwife them out, brings forth Chriſtian Spiritual Actions; and then as Mary was the Mother of God, ſo the Chriſtian Soul is the Parent of all its Divine Chriſtian Performances; Chriſt the Father, that enables with his Spirit; and the Soul the Mother, that actually brings forth.

Heb. vi. 7. Ca. 1. p. 26. In. Jo. tr. 80. Mat. i. 18. Fulgen. de Incarn. & gra. c. 10. Phil. ii. 12.

And now that we may begin to draw up towards a concluſion, Two things we may raiſe from hence by way of inference to our Practice.

1. Where all the Chriſtians non-proficiency is to be charged, either 1. Upon the Habitual Hardneſs, or 2. The Sluggiſhneſs, or 3. The Rankneſs of his own wretchleſs heart.

1. Hardneſs, That for all the ſeed that is ſown, the ſoftning dew that diſtils, and rain that is poured down, the enlivening influences that are diſpenſed among us, yet the σκληρότης ὑσήρας, the hardneſs and toughneſs of the Womb, ξηρὰ γῆ ὁ πάνυ ἀκτρέφουσα, that dry unnutrifying Earth in the Philoſopher's, or in Chriſts dialect, ſtony ground, reſiſts all manner of Conception, will not be hoſpitable, yield any entertainment, even to theſe Angelical gueſts, though they come as to Lot's houſe in Sodom, only to ſecure the owner from moſt certain deſtruction. This is the reaſon that ſo much of Gods Husbandry among us, returns him ſo thin, ſo unprofitable an Harveſt, ceciderunt in petroſa; and 'tis hard finding any better tillage now adays; the very Holy Land, the milk and honey of Canaan, is degenerate, they ſay, into this Compoſition; and herein is a marvellous thing, that where God hath done all that any man, if it were put to his own partial judgment, would think reaſonable for him to do for his Vineyard, gathered out ſtones, thoſe ſeeds of natural hardneſs; and which deſerves to be marked, built a Wine-preſs, Iſa. v. 2. a ſure token that he expected a Vintage in earneſt, not only manur'd for faſhion, or to leave them without excuſe; yet for all theſe, Labruſcas, wild, juiceleſs Grapes, heartleſs Faith, unſeaſoned Devotion, intemperate Zeal, blind and perverſe Obedience, that under that name ſhall diſguiſe and excuſe Diſobedience; tot genera labruſcarum, ſo many wild unſavoury fruits, is the beſt return he can hear of.

Iſa. v. 2.

One thing more let me tell you; 'Tis not the original hardneſs of Nature, to which all this can be imputed; for, for the mollifying of that, all this gardening was beſtowed; digging and gathering out, and indeed nothing more ordinary, than, out of ſuch ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham: But 'tis the long habit and cuſtom of ſin, which hath harraſt out the Soul, congealed that natural gravel, and improved it into a perfect quarry or mine; and 'tis not the Preachers Charm, the Annunciation of the Goſpel, that Power of God unto Salvation, unto a Jew or Heathen; 'tis not David's Harp, (that could exorciſe the evil Spirit upon Saul,) not the every day eloquence, even of the Spirit of God, that can in holy Eſdras his phraſe, perſwade them to ſalvation.

2. Sluggiſhneſs,

2. Sluggiſhneſs, and inobſervances of God's ſeaſons and opportunities, and ſeed-times of Grace. God may appear a thouſand times, and not once find us in caſe to be parlyed with: Chriſt comes but
Mat. xxvi. thrice to his Diſciples from his Prayers in the Garden, and that thrice he finds them aſleep, Mat. xxvi. Chriſt can be awake to come, and that in a more pathetical language, Sic non potuiſtis horâ unâ, as the vulgar moſt fully out of the Greek; Were you ſo unable to watch one hour? The Phariſee can be awake to Plot, Judas to betray, their joint Vigils and Proparaſceve to that grand Paſſeover, the ſlaying of the Lamb of God, and only the Diſciples they are aſleep, for their eyes were heavy, ſaith the Text; and this heavineſs of eyes, and heavineſs of heart (whereupon βαρυκάρδιοι, in the LXXII. is ordinarily ſet for ſinners) is the depriving us many times, not only of Chriſt, but of his Spirit too. So many apologies, and excuſes to him when he calls; A little more ſleep and ſlumber, and folding of the hands: Such drowſie-hearted ſlovenly uſage when he comes, that no wonder if we grieve him out of our houſes: ſuch contentedneſs in our preſent ſervile eſtate, that if a Jubilee ſhould be proclaimed from Heaven, a general Manumiſſion of all ſervants from theſe Gallies of ſin, we would be ready with thoſe ſervants for whom Moſes makes a proviſion, to come and tell him plainly, We will not go out free, be bored through the ear
Ex. xxi. 6. to be ſlaves for ever, Ex. xxi. 6.

3. Rankneſs, and a kind of ſpiritual ſin of Sodom; Pride and fulneſs of bread, abuſing the Grace of God into wantonneſs; either to the oſtentatious ſetting themſelves out before men, or elſe the feeding themſelves up to that high flood of ſpiritual pride and confidence, that it will be ſure to impoſtumate in the ſoul. Some men have been fain to be permitted to ſin, for the abating this humour in them, by way of phlebotomy; St. Peter, I think, is an example of that. Nebuchadnezzar was turned a grazing, to cure his ſecular Pride; and St. Paul, I am ſure, had a Meſſenger ſent to him to that purpoſe, by way of prevention, that he might not be exalted above meaſure; and when he thought well of it, he receives it as a Preſent ſent him from Heaven, ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ, reckons of it as a gift of Grace, or if you will, a medicinal doſe, or recipe, but rather a playſter, or outward application, which per antiperiſtaſin would drive in his ſpiritual heat, and ſo help his weak digeſtion of grace, make him the more thriving Chriſtian for ever after.

The Iſſue of this firſt Inference is this, That 'tis not God's partial or niggardly diſpencing of Grace; but either our unpreparedneſs to receive, or prepoſterous giddineſs in making uſe of it, which is the cauſe either of Conſumptions, or Apoſthume in the Soul, either ſtarving or ſurfeiting the Chriſtian.

The ſecond Inference, how all the Chriſtians diligence is to be placed; what he hath to do in this wayfare to his home: And that is the ſame that all Travellers have, firſt, to be alway upon his feet, advancing minutely ſomething toward his next ſtage. See that we be employed, or elſe how can God aſſiſt; we muſt ἐργάζεσθαι, or elſe he cannot συνεργῆσαι; and ſee that we be employed aright, or elſe God muſt not, cannot aſſiſt. The Sluggards devotions can never get into Gods preſence; they want heat and ſpirit to lift them up, and activity to preſs and enforce them, when they are there. It was an impreſſion in the very Heathen, Porcius Cato in the Hiſtory, That watching, and acting, and adviſing aright, and not emaſculate womaniſh ſupplications alone, were the means, whereby Gods help is obtained, ‖ Vide Hierocles. Hier. in Aug. car. Pyth. Ubi ſocordiæ atque ignaviæ tradideris, fruſtra Deos implores. And ‖ Jerome to the ſame purpoſe, That their ſacrifices are but πυρὸς τροφὴ, food for the fire to devour; and their richeſt offerings to the Temple, but a ſpoil to the ſacrilegious to prey on: And the ſinners devotions muſt not be entertained there;
Joh. ix. 31. they would even prophane that holy place. He that was born blind, ſaw thus much, Joh. ix. 31. Now we know that God heareth not ſinners; but if any be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him doth God hear.

And then ſecondly, to get furniſhed, whatever it coſt him, of all proviſion and directions for his way; and ſo this will conclude in a double Exhortation, both combined in that of David to Solomon,
1 Chron. xxii. 16. 1 Chron. xxii. 16. when all materials were laid in, and Artificers provided for the building of the Temple, and wanted nothing but a chearful Leader to actuate and enliven them, Ariſe therefore and be doing, and the Lord be with thee.

1. To ſet about the buſineſs as thine own work, as the task that will not be required of the Spirit of God, of the Scripture, of the Preacher, but of thee. When it is performed, thou wouldſt be loth that God ſhould impute all to himſelf, crown his own Graces, Ordinances, Inſtruments, and leave thee as a cypher unrewarded: And therefore, whilſt it is a performing, be content to believe, that ſomewhat belongs to thee, that thou haſt ſome hardſhip to undergo, ſome diligence to maintain, ſome evidences of thy good husbandry, thy wiſe managing of the Talent; and in a word, of faithful ſervice to ſhew ἐπιστ. v. here, or elſe when the Euge bone ſerve is pronounced, thou wilt not be able, confidently to anſwer to thy name. Οὐ τὰ ὅπλα ἰσχύει ἀνδρῶν, ἀλλὰ τῶν ὅπλων οἱ ἄνδρες, ſaid the Mileſians to Brutus. All the Weapons in the world will not defend the man, unleſs the man actuate, and fortifie, and defend his weapons. Thy ſtrength conſiſts all in the ſtrength of Chriſt, but you will never walk, or be invulnerable in the ſtrength of that, till you be reſolved, That the good uſe (and ſo the ſtrength of that ſtrength to thee) is a work that remains for thee. If it were not, that Exhortation of the Apoſtles, would never have been given in form of Exhortation to the Chriſtian, but of Prayer only to Chriſt, Stand faſt, quit your ſelves like 1 Cor. xvi. 13. men, be ſtrong, 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

Laſtly, Or indeed that which muſt be both firſt and laſt, commenſurate to all our diligence, the Viaticum that you muſt carry with you, is the Prayers of humble gaſping Souls: Humble, in reſpect of what grace is received; Be ſure not to be exalted with that conſideration: Gaſping for what ſupply may be obtained from that eternal unexhauſted Fountain; and theſe Prayers not only, that God will give, but, as Joſephus makes mention of the Jews Liturgy, ὡς δέχεσθαι δύνασθαι, That they may receive; And as Porphyry, of one kind of Sacrifice, διὰ χρείαν ἀγαθῶν, That they may uſe; and every of us fructifie in ſome proportion anſwerable to our irrigation.

Now the God of all Grace, who hath called us into his eternal glory in Chriſt Jeſus; after that you have obeyed a while, make you perfect, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, ſettle you.
To him, be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

SERMON

SERMON III.

PROV. I. 22.

How long, ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity?

THat Chriſt is the beſt, and Satan the worſt choſen Maſter, is one of the weightieſt, and yet leaſt conſidered Aphoriſms of the Goſpel. Were we but ſo juſt and kind to our ſelves, as actually to purſue what upon judgment ſhould appear to be moſt for our intereſts, even in relation to this preſent life; And (without making Heaven the principle of our motion) but only think never the worſe of a worldly temporary bliſs, not quarrel againſt it, for being attended with an eternal: Were we but patient of ſo much ſobriety and conſideration, as calmly to weigh and ponder what courſe, in all probability, were moſt likely to befriend and oblige us here, to make good its promiſe of helping us to the richeſt acquiſitions, the vaſteſt poſſeſſions and treaſures of this life; I am confident, our Chriſt might carry it from all the World beſides, our Saviour from all the tempters and deſtroyers; and (beſides ſo many other conſiderable advantages) this ſuperlative tranſcendent one, of giving us the only right to the reputation and title of Wiſdom here in theſe Books, be acknowledged the Chriſtians, i.e. the Diſciples monopoly and incloſure; And Folly, the due brand and reproach and portion of the ungodly.

The wiſeſt Man, beſide Chriſt, that was ever in the World, you may ſee by the Text, had this notion of it, brings in Wiſdom by a proſopopeia (i.e. either Chriſt himſelf, or the ſaving Doctrin of Heaven, in order to the regulating of our lives; or again, Wiſdom in the ordinary notion of it) libelling and reproaching the folly of all the ſorts of ſinners in the World, poſting from the [without in the ſtreets] Verſ. 10. to the Aſſemblies of the greateſt renown, [the chief place of concourſe,] i.e. clearly their Sanhedrim, or great Council, in the 21. from thence to the places of judicature; for that is [the openings of the gates;] nay, to [the City] κατ' ἐξοχὴν the Metropolis and glory of the Nation; and crying out moſt paſſionately, moſt bitterly againſt all in the loudeſt language of contumely and ſatyre, that ever Paſquin or Marforius were taught to ſpeak: And the ſhort of it is, That the pious Chriſtian is the only tolerably wiſe; and the World of unchriſtian ſinners, are a company of the moſt wretched, ſimple, Atheiſtical fools, which cannot be thought on, without a Paſſion, and Inculcation, How long, ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? And ye ſcorners, &c.

The firſt part of this Verſe, though it be the cleaneſt of three expreſſions, hath yet in it abundantly enough of rudeneſs, for an addreſs to any civil Auditory: I ſhall therefore contain my diſcourſe within thoſe ſtancheſt limits, How long, ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? And in them obſerve only theſe three particulars;

1. The character of the ungodly mans condition, contained in theſe two expreſſions, Simple ones, and ſimplicity; How long, ye ſimple, &c.

2. The aggravation of the ſimplicity, and ſo heightning of the character, and that by two farther conſiderations, Firſt, From their loving of that which was ſo unlovely, That they ſhould be ſo ſimple as to love ſimplicity.

Secondly, From their continuance in it, that they ſhould not at length diſcern their error, That they ſhould love ſimplicity ſo long.

3. The paſſion that it produceth in the ſpeaker (be it Wiſdom, or be it Chriſt, or be it Solomon) to conſider it; and that paſſion, whether of pity, That men ſhould be ſuch fools; or of indignation, That they ſhould love and delight in it ſo long, How long, &c.

I begin firſt with the firſt, The character of ſin and ſinners, i.e. of the ungodly mans condition, contained in theſe two expreſſions, Simple ones, and ſimplicity; How, &c.

Four notions we may have of theſe words, which will all be appliable to this purpoſe: You ſhall ſee them as they riſe.

Firſt, As the calling one ſimple, is a word of reproach, or contumely; the very ſame with the calling one ῥακὰ, Matth. v. i.e. Empty, brainleſs perſon, the next degree to the μωρὲ, or thou fool, in the end of that and this Verſe. And then the thing that we are to obſerve from thence, is, What a reproachful thing an unchriſtian life is; what a contumelious, ſcandalous quality.

A reproach to Nature firſt, to our humane kind, which was an honourable reverend thing in Paradiſe, before ſin came in to humble and defame it; a ſolemn, ſevere Law-giver, οὐ σπιὰ λόγιον τοῦτο τῶν, in Clemens, the Syſteme or Pandect of all Rational notions, σύμφησις τῷ Θεῷ, that either likes or commends all that now Chriſt requires of us, bears witneſs to the Word of God that all his Commandments are righteous; and ſo is by our unnatural ſins, thoſe ἄτιμα πάθη, ignoble diſhonourable affections of ours (which have coupled together Sins and Kennels, Adulterers and Dogs, Rev. xxii. 15.) put to ſhame and rebuke, diſhonoured and degraded, as it were. Not all the uglineſs and poyſon of the toad, hath ſo deformed that kind of creatures, brought it ſo low in genere entium, as the deformed malignant condition of ſin hath brought down the very nature and kind of men, making them τέκνα ὀργῆς, the children, i.e. the objects of all the wrath, and hatred in the World.

Two,

2. A reproach to our Souls, thoſe immortal vital Creatures inſpir'd into us by Heaven, and now raiſed higher, ſuperinſpir'd by the Grace of Chriſt; which are then, as Mezentius's invention of puniſhment, bound up cloſe with a Carkaſe of Sin, tormented and poiſoned with its ſtench, buried in that noyſomeſt Vault, or Carnel-houſe. 'Twas an admirable golden ſaying of the Pythagoreans, the αἰσχύνου σαυτόν; what a reſtraint of ſin it would be, if a man would remember the reverence he ought unto himſelf; and ὁ ψυχὴ σύ, was their own explication of it; the Soul within thee is that ſelf, to whom all that dread, and awe, and reverence is due. And O what an impudent affront, what an irreverential prophaning of that ſacred Celeſtial Beam within thee (that ἀπαύγασμα θεῖον, as the Philoſophers call it) is every paultry Oath, or Rage, or Luſt, that the ſecure ſinner is ſo minutely guilty of! Every ſin, ſay the Schools, being in this reſpect a kind of Idolatry, an incurvation and proſtitution of that Heavenly Creature (ordain'd to have nothing but Divinity in its proſpect) to the meaneſt, vileſt Heathen Worſhip, the Crocodile, the Cat, the Scarabee, the Dii Stercorei, the moſt noyſom abominations under Heaven.

3. A reproach to God, who hath owned ſuch ſcandalous Creatures, hath placed us in a degree of Divinity next unto Angels; nay to Chriſt, that by aſſuming that nature, and dying for it, hath made it emulate the Angelical Eminence, and been in a manner liable to the cenſure of partiality in ſo doing, in advancing us ſo unworthily, dignifying us ſo beyond the merit of our behaviours, honouring us ſo unproportionably above what our actions can own, Whilſt thoſe that are in ſcarlet, embrace the
Lam. iv. 5. dunghill, as it is in the Lamentations, thoſe that are honoured by God, act ſo diſhonourably. 'Twas Plato's affirmation of God in reſpect of men, that he was a Father, when of all other Creatures he
Lib. 1. c. 3. was but a Maker; and 'tis Arrian's ſuperſtruction on that, that remembring that we are the Sons of God, we ſhould never admit any baſe degenerous thought, any thing reproachful to that ſtock, unworthy of the grandeur of the Family from whence we are extracted: If we do, it will be more poſſible for us to prophane, and embaſe Heaven, than for the reputation of that Parentage of ours, to ennoble us; the ſcandal that ſuch a degenerous, diſingenuous Progeny, will bring on the houſe from whence we came, is a kind of Sacrilege to Heaven, a violation to thoſe ſacred manſions, a proclaiming to the World, what colonies of polluted Creatures came down from thence, though there be a nulla retrorſum, no liberty for any ſuch to return thither.

Laſtly, 'Tis a reproach to the very Beaſts, and the reſt of the Creation, which are deſigned by God, the ſervants and ſlaves of ſinful Man; which may juſtly take up the language of the ſlave to his vitious Maſter in the Satyriſt, Tune mihi Dominus? Art thou my Lord, who art ſo far a viler Bond-ſlave, than thoſe over whom thou tyrannizeſt? a ſlave to thy Paſſion, thy Luſt, thy Fiends; who haſt ſo far dethroned thy ſelf, that the beaſt becomes more beaſt, when it remembers thee to have any degree of ſoveraignty over it.

Put theſe four Notions together, and 'twill give you a view of the firſt intimation of this Text, the baſeneß and reproachfulneß of the ſinners courſe; and unleſs he be the moſt abject, wretchleſs, forlorn ſot in the whole Creation, unleſs he be turned all into earth, or phlegm; if he hath in his whole Compoſition, one ſpark of Ambition, of Emulation, of ordinary ſence of Honour; the leaſt warmth of Spirit; impatience of being, the only degenerous wretch of the Earth now, and of Hell to all Eter-
L. 1. c. 5. nity; if he be not abſolutely arriv'd to Arrian's ἀπολίθωσις τῆς πρακτικῆς, (his practical as well as judicative faculty, quite quarr'd and petrifi'd within him) to that πώρωσις in the Goſpel, that direct ferity and
Mar. iii. 5. brutality, in compariſon of which, the moſt creſt-faln numneſs, palſie or lethargy of Soul, were Dignity and Preferment; if he be not, all that is deplorable already, and owned to be ſo for ever; he will certainly give one vital ſpring, one laſt plunge, to recover ſome part of the Honour and Dignity of his Creation; break off that courſe that hath ſo debaſed him, precipitated him into ſuch an abyſs of filth and ſhame, if it be but in pity to the Nature, the Soul, the God, the whole Creation about him; that like Iſai. iv. 1. the ſeven importunate Women, Iſai. iv. 1. lay hold on this one inſenſate perſon, in the eager clamorous ſtyle of the אֲסֹף חֶרְפָּתֵנוּ take away our reproach. And let that ſerve for a firſt part of the Sinners Character, the conſideration of his reproachful, ſcandalous, offenſive ſtate, which might in all reaſon work ſome degree of good on him, in the firſt place.

A ſecond Notion of this Phraſe, and degree of this Character, is the giddineß and unadviſedneß of the Sinners Courſe; as ſimplicity ordinarily ſignifies ſenceleſneſs, precipitouſneſs, as Triſmegiſtus defines it, μανίας εἶδος, a ſpecies of madneß in one place, and τὶς μέθη, a kind of drunkenneß in another, a wild irrational acting; and this doth expreſs it ſelf in our furious miſchieving our ſelves, in doing all quite contrary unto our own ends, our own aims, our own principles of action: and this you will ſee moſt viſible in the particulars, in every motion, every turn of the ſinners life. As

1. In his malices, wherein he breaths forth ſuch Ætna's of flames againſt others, you may generally mark it, he hurts neither God nor man, but only himſelf. In every ſuch helliſh breathing, all that malignity of his cannot reach God; he is ἀπάθεια κακῶν, untemptable by evil in this other ſence, I mean impenetrable by his malice; All that was ſhot up towards God, comes down immediately on the ſinners own head: And for the Man againſt whom he is enraged, whoſe blood he thirſts after, whoſe ruine he deſires, he does him the greateſt courteſie in the World, he is but bleſt by thoſe curſes; that honourable bliſsful eſtate that belongs to all poor perſecuted Saints, (and conſequently, the χαίρετε καὶ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, matter of joy and exultation) is hereby become his portion; and that is the reaſon he is adviſed to do good to him by way of gratitude, to make returns of all civility and acknowledgments, not as to an Enemy, but a benefactor, to bleſs and pray for him by whom he hath been thus obliged:

Only

Only this raving mad-man's own Soul is that againſt which all theſe blows and malices rebound; the only true ſufferer all this while; firſt, in the very meditating and deſigning the malice, all which ſpace he lives not the life, but the Hell of a Fiend or Devil (that ἐχθρὸς ἄνθρ, that enemy-man, as he is called) his names-ſake, and parallel: and again ſecondly, in the executing of it; that being one of the baſeſt, and moſt diſhonourable imployments; that of an ἄγγελος Σατᾶν, an Angel or Officer of Satan's, (to buffet ſome precious Image of God) which is to that purpoſe fill'd out of Satan's fulneſs, ſwoln with all the venomous humour that that fountain can afford to furniſh and accommodate him for this enterpriſe: and then laſtly, after the ſatiating of his wrath, a bloated, guilty, unhappy Creature, one that hath fed at the Devils table, ſwill'd and glutted himſelf in blood, and now betrayes it all in his looks and complexion.

And as in our malices, ſo, Secondly, in our loves, in our ſofter as well as our rougher paſſions, we generally drive quite contrary to our own ends and intereſts; and if we obtain, we find it experimentally, the injoyment of what we purſue moſt vehemently, proves not only unſatisfactory, but grating, hath to the vanity, the addition of vexation alſo; not only the τίνα τότε καρπὸν, no manner of fruit, then at the point of enjoying an empty paultry nothing, but over and above, the τὸν αἰσχύνησθε, ſhame, and perturbation of mind (the gripings and tormina of a confounded Conſcience) immediately conſequent; and 'twould even grieve an enemy to hear the Apoſtle go on to the dear payment at the cloſe, for this ſad nothing, the τὸ τέλος θάνατος, ex abundanti, and over and above, the end of thoſe things, is death. And oh what a ſimplicity is this! thus to ſeek out emptineſs and death, when we think we are on one of our advantagious purſuits, in this errour of our ways, as the Wiſe man calls it, is ſure, a moſt prodigious miſtake, a moſt unfortunate errour; and to have been guilty of it more than once, the moſt unpardonable ſimplicity.

From our loves, ‖ proceeding to our hopes; which if it be any but the Chriſtian hope, than this hope on him, 1 John iii. 3. i. e. hope on God, and that joyned with purifying, it is in plain terms the greateſt contrariety to it ſelf, the perfecteſt deſperateneſs; and for ſecular hopes, the expectation of good, of advantages from this or that ſtaff of Egypt, the depending on this, whether prophane, or but ordinary innocent auxiliary, 'tis the forfeiting all our pretenſions to that great aid of Heaven (as they ſay, the Loadſtone draweth not, when the Adamant is near) 'tis the taking us off from our grand truſt and dependance, ſetting us up independent from God; and that muſt needs be the blaſting of all our enterpriſes; that even lawful aid of the Creature, if it be looked on with any confidence as our helper, παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα, Rom. i. beſide, or in ſeparation from the Creator, is (and God is ingaged in honour, that it ſhould be) ſtruck preſently from Heaven, eaten up with worms like Herod, when once its good qualities are deified; broken to pieces with the brazen Serpent, burnt and ſtampt to powder with the golden Calf: and the ſtrong ſhall be as tow, Iſa. i. 31. the falſe Idol ſtrength is but a prize for a flaſh of lightning to prey on. And as St. Paul and Barnabas are fain to run in a paſſion upon the multitude, that meant to do them worſhip, with a Men and Brethren, &c. and the very Angel to St. John, in Rev. xxii. when he fell down before him, vide ne feceris, ſee thou do it not; for fear if he had been ſo miſtaken by him, he might have forfeited his Angelical eſtate by that unluckineſs; ſo certainly the moſt honourable promiſing earthly help, if it be once looked on with a confidence, or an adoration; if it ſteal off our eyes and hearts one minute from that ſole waiting and looking on God; 'tis preſently to expect a being thunder-ſtruck from Heaven, as hath been moſt conſtantly viſible among us; and that is all we get by this piece of ſimplicity alſo.

‖ proceed we 1 John iii. 3.

Iſa. i. 31.

Rev. xxii. 9.

And it were well, when our worldly hopes have proved thus little to our advantage; our worldly fears, in the next place, might bring us in more profit. But alas! that paſſionate perturbation of our faculties, ſtands us in no ſtead, but to haſten and bring our fears upon us, by precipitating them ſometimes, caſting our ſelves into that abyſs which we look on with ſuch horrour, running out to meet that danger which we would avoid ſo vehemently; ſometimes diſpiriting and depriving us of all thoſe ſuccors which were preſent to our reſcue; the paſſion moſt treacherouſly betraying the aids which reaſon, if it had been allowed admiſſion, was ready to have offered; but perpetually anticipating that miſery, which is the thing we fear, the terrour it ſelf being greater diſeaſe ſometimes, conſtantly a greater reproach and contumely to a Maſculine Spirit, than any of the evils we are ſo induſtrious to avoid. 'Tis not a matter of any kind of evil report, really to have ſuffered, to have been ſqueez'd to atomes by an unremediable evil, eſpecially if it be for well-doing; but to have been ſick of the fright, to have laviſh'd our conſtancy, courage, conſcience, and all, an Indian ſacrifice to a Sprite or Mormo, ne noceat, to eſcape not a real evil, but only an apprehenſion, or terror; this is a piece of the moſt deſtructive warineſs, the ἀσόφων ἀκρίβεια, the greateſt ſimplicity that can be.

Wiſd. xvii. 12.

I ſhall not inlarge the proſpect any further, as eaſily I might, to our Unchriſtian Joys, that do ſo diſſolve, our Unchriſtian Sorrows, that do ſo contract and ſhrivel up the Soul; (and then as Themiſon, and his old ſect of Methodiſts reſolv'd, that the laxum and ſtrictum, the immoderate diſſolution or conſtipation, were the principles and originals of all diſeaſes in the World, ſo it will be likely to prove in our ſpiritual eſtate alſo:) nor again, to our heatheniſh ἐπιχαιρεκακίαι, rejoycing at the Miſchiefs of other men; (which directly transform us into fiends and furies, and reak no malice on any but our ſelves, leave us a waſted, wounded, proſtitute, harraſt Conſcience, to tire and gnaw upon its own bowels, and nothing elſe.) I have exerciſed you too long with ſo trivial a ſubject, ſuch an eaſie every days demonſtration, the wicked mans contradictions to all his aims, his acting quite contrary to his very deſigns, a ſecond branch of his Character, a ſecond degree and advancement of his ſimplicity.

The Third notion of Simplicity, is that of the Idiot, the Natural, as we call him, he that hath ſome eminent failing in his intellectuals, the laſum principium, the pitcher or wheel, in that 12. of Eccleſiaſtes, I mean the faculty of underſtanding, or reaſon, broken or wounded at the fountain or ciſtern; and ſo nothing but animal, ſenſitive actions to be had from him. And of this kind of imperfect Creatures, it will be perhaps worth your marking, that the principal faculty which is irrecoverably wanting in ſuch, and by all teaching irreparable and unimproveable, is the power of numbring; I mean not that of ſaying numbers by rote, (for that is but an act of ſenſitive memory) but that of applying them to matter, and from thence that of intellectual numbring, i. e. of comparing and meaſuring, judging of proportions, pondering, weighing, discerning the differences of things by the power of the judicative faculty; which two, seem much more probably the propriety and difference of a man from a beast, than (that which the Philosophers have phansied) the power of laughing or discoursing. To reckon and compute, is that which in men of an active clear reason, is perpetually in exercising per modum actus eliciti, that naturally of its own accord, without any command or appointment of the Will, pours it self out upon every object: we shall oft deprehend our selves numbring the panes in the Window, the sheep in the Field; measuring every thing we come near with the eye, with the hand; singing Tunes, forming every thing into some kind of metre (which are branches still of that faculty of numbring) when we have no kind of end or design in doing it. And this is of all things in the world, the most impossible for a meer Natural or Idiot. And so you have here the third, and that is the prime, most remarkable degree of simplicity, that the unchristian fool, the ἀνὴρ ψυχικὸς, whether you render it the animal or natural man, is guilty of; that piteous læsum principium, that want of the faculty of weighing, pondering, or numbering; that weakness, or no kind of exercise of the judicative faculty, from whence all his simplicity and impiety proceeds. The Hebrews have a word to signifie a wise man, which hath a near affinity with that of weighing and pondering מַשְׂכִּיל from שָׂכַל which hath no difference in sound from that which signifies ponderavit, whence the Schecle, the known Hebrew word is deduced, to note as the Psalmist saith, that he that is wise, will ponder things. All the folly and Unchristian Sin, comes from want of pondering; and all the Christian Wisdom, Piety, Discipleship, consists in the exercise of this faculty. Whatsoever is said most honourably of Faith in Scripture, that sets it out in such a grandeur, as the greatest designer and

Heb. xi. author of all the high acts of Piety, Heb. xi. and as the Conqueror over the World, 1 John v. 4. is 1 John v. clearly upon this score, as Faith is the Spiritual Wisdom, or Prudence; (for so it is best defined) and as by comparing, and proportioning, and weighing together the Promises, or the Commands, or the Terrours of the Gospel on one side, with the Promises, the Prescriptions, and Terrours of the World on the other, it pronounces that Hand-writing on the Wall against the latter of them, the Mene tekel upharsin. They are weighed in the balance, and found most pitifully light, in comparison of those which Christ hath to weigh against them; and so the Kingdom, the usurpt Supremacy (that they have so long pretended to in the inconsiderate simple precipitous world) is by a just judgment, torn and departed from them.

Will you begin with the Promises, and have but the patience a while to view the Scales, and when you have set the Beam even, removed the carnal or secular prejudices (which have so possessed most of us, that we can never come to a right balancing of any thing; the beam naturally enclines still as our customary wonts and prepossessions will have it:) when, I say, you have set the beam impartially, throw but into one scale the Promises of Christ, those of his present, of his future bliss; of 1 Cor. ii. 9. present, Such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor entred into the heart of man to conceive, 1 Cor. ii. 9. prepared for them that love God, and that at the very minute of loving him (the word ἡτοιμασμένα, referring to the manna of old; the Hebrew deduced from סָנַר præparavit, and therefore describ-Wisd. xvi. 20. ed by the Author of the Book of Wisdom, according to that literal denotation of the Hebrew, ἄρτος ἕτοιμος ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ, bread baked, as it were, and sent down ready from heaven, to the true Israelite) the gust of every Christian duty, being so pleasurable and satisfactory to the palate, as it were, of our humane nature, so consonant to every rational soul, that it cannot practise, or taste, without being truly joyed and ravished with it: and so that which was the Israelites feast, the Quails and Manna, being become the Christians every day ordinary diet, you will allow that to be of some weight or consideration, if there were nothing else but that present festival of a good conscience in the scale before you: but when to that, you have farther cast in the glory, honour, immortality, which is on arrear for that Christian in another life; that infinite, inestimable weight of that glory laid before us, as the reward of the Christian, for his having been content, that Christ should shew him the way to be happy here, and blessed eternally: and when that both present and future felicity is set off, and heightned by the contrary, by the indignation, and anger, and wrath, that is the portion of the Atheistical fool, and which nothing could have helped us to escape, but this only Christian Sanctuary; when the bliss of this Lazarus in Abrahams bosome, is thus improved by the news of the scorching of the Dives in that place of torments; and by all these together, the scale thus laded on one side; I shall then give the Devil leave to help you to what weight he can in the other scale, be it his totum hoc, all the riches and glory of the whole world (and not only that thousandth part of the least point of the Map, which is all thou canst aspire to in his service) and what is it all,
Epist. 115. but the bracteata felicitas, in Seneca; μυθικὴ μακαρία, in Naz. a little fictitious felicity, a little paultry trash, that nothing but the opinion of men, hath made to differ from the most refuse stone, or dirt in the Kennel; the richest gems totally beholding to the simplicity and folly of men, for their reputation and value in the World. Besides these, I presume the phansies expect to have liberty to throw in all the pleasures and joys, the raviſhments and transportations of all the Senses; and truly, that is soon done; all the true joy that a whole age of carnality affords any man, if you but take along with it (as you cannot chuse but do in all conscience) the satieties, and loathings, and pangs, that inseparably accompany it (the Leaven, as well as the Honey, under which, the pleasures of sin are thought to be prohibited, Levit. ii. 11.) it will make but a pitiful addition in the scales, so many pounds less than nothing, is the utmost that can be affirmed of it; and when you have fetcht out your last reserve, all the painted air, the only commodity behind, that you have to throw into that scale, the reputation and honour of a gallant vain-glorious sinner, that some one fool or madman, may seem to look on with some reverence; you have then the utmost of the weight that that scale is capable of; and the difference so vast betwixt them, such an inconsiderable proportion of straw, stubble, to such whole Mines and Rocks of Gold and Silver, and precious Stones, that no man that is but able to deal in plain numbers (no need of Logarithms or Algebra) can mistake in the judgment, or think that there is any profit, any advantage in gaining the whole world, if accompanied with the least hazard or possibility of losing his own soul: and therefore the running that adventure, is the greatest idiotism, the most deplorable, woful simplicity in the World.

The

The ſame proportion would certainly be acknowledged in the ſecond place, betwixt the command of Chriſt on one ſide, high, rational, venerable commands, that he that thinks not himſelf ſo ſtrictly obliged to obſerve, cannot yet but revere him that brought them into the World, and deem them νόμον βασιλικὸν, a Royal and a gallant Law; whilſt all the whole Volume or Code of the Law of the Members, hath not one ingenuous dictate, one tolerable, rational propoſal in it, only a deal of ſavage drudgery to be performed to an impure tyrant (ſin and pain being of the ſame date in the world, and the Hebrew אֵין ſignifying both) and the more ſuch burthens undergone, the more mean ſubmiſſions ſtill behind; no end of the tale of Brick, to one that is once ingaged under ſuch Egyptian Kiln and Task-maſters.

And for the terrors in the laſt place, there are none but thoſe of the Lord, that are fit to move, or to perſwade any: the utmoſt ſecular fear is ſo much more impendent over Satan's, than God's Clients (the killing of the body, the far more frequent effect of that, which had firſt the honour to bring death into the world; the Devil owning the title of deſtroyer, Abaddon, and ἀπολλύων, and inflicting diſeaſes generally on thoſe whom he poſſeſt; and Chriſt, that other, of the ἰατρὸς and σωτὴρ, the Phyſician and the Saviour, that hath promiſes of long life annexed to ſome ſpecials of his ſervice:) that if it were reaſonable to fear thoſe that can kill the body, and afterwards have no more that they can do, (i. e. are able by the utmoſt of their malice, and Gods permiſſion, but to land thee ſafe at thy fair Haven, to give thee Heaven and bliß before thy time, inſtead of the many lingring deaths that this life of ours is ſubject to) yet there were little reaſon to fear or ſuſpect the fate in Gods ſervice, far leſs than in thoſe ſteep precipitous paths which the Devil leads us thorow. And therefore to be thus low-bell'd with panick frights, to be thus tremblingly diſmayed where there is no place of fear, and to ride on intrepid on the trueſt dangers, as the Barbarians in America do on Guns, is a mighty diſproportion of mens faculties; a ſtrange ſuperiority of phanſie over judgment: that may well be deſcribed by a defect in the power of numbering, that diſcerns no difference between Ciphers and Millions, but only that the noughts are a little the blacker, and the more formidable. And ſo much for the third branch of this character.

There is yet a fourth notion of ſimplicity, as it is contrary to comnion ordinary prudence, that by which, the politician and thriving man of this world, expects to be valued, the great dexterity and managery of affairs, and the buſineſs of this world; wherein let me not be thought to ſpeak Paradoxes, if I tell you with ſome confidence, that the wicked man is this only impolitick fool, and the Chriſtian generally the moſt dextrous, prudent, practical perſon in the world; and the ſafeſt Motto, that of the Virtutem violenter retine, the keeping vertue with the ſame violence that Heaven is to be taken with: not that the Spirit of Chriſt infuſes into him the ſubtleties and crafts of the wicked, gives him any principles, or any excuſe for that greater portion of the Serpentine wiſdom; but becauſe honeſty is the moſt gainful policy, the moſt thriving thorow prudence, that will carry a man farther than any thing elſe. That old principle in the Mathematicks, That the right line comes ſpeedilieſt to the journeys end, being in ſpight of Machiavel, a Maxim in Politicks alſo; and ſo will prove, till Chriſt ſhall reſign and give up to Satan the œconomy of the World. Some examples it is poſſible there may be, of the Proſperum Scelus, the thriving of villainy for a time, and ſo of the preſent advantages that may come in to us by our ſecular contrivances; but ſure, this is not the laſting courſe, but only an anomaly or irregularity, that cannot be thought fit to be reckoned of, in compariſon of the more conſtant promiſes, the long life in a Canaan of Milk and Honey, that the Old and New Teſtament both have enſured upon the meek diſciple.

And I think a man might venture the experiment, to the teſtimony and trial of theſe times, that have been deemed moſt unkind and unfavourable to ſuch innocent Chriſtian qualities; that thoſe that have been moſt conſtant to the ſtrict, ſtable, honeſt principles, have thrived far better by the equable figure, than thoſe that have been moſt dextrous in changing ſhapes; and ſo are not the moſt unwiſe ἐν γενεᾷ ταύτῃ, if there were never another ſtate of retributions, but this. Whereas it is moſt ſcandalouſly frequent and obſervable, that the great Politicians of this world, are baffled and outwitted by the Providence of Heaven; ſell their moſt pretious ſouls for nought, and have not the luck to get any money for them; the moſt unthrifty improvident Merchandiſe, that כְּסִל folly, Pſal. xlix. 13. which the lxxii. render σκάνδαλον, ſcandal; the moſt piteous offenſive folly, the wretcheſt ſimplicity in the World.

You would eaſily believe, it ſhould not ſtand in need of a farther aggravation; and yet now, you are to be preſented with one in my Text, by way of heightning of the Character, and that was my ſecond particular, that at firſt I promiſed you, made up of two farther conſiderations; firſt, the loving of that which is ſo unlovely; ſecondly, the continuing in the paſſion ſo long. How long you ſimple ones, will you love, &c.

Firſt, The degree and improvement of the Atheiſts folly, conſiſts in the loving of it, that he can take a delight and complacency in his way; to be patient of ſuch a courſe, gainleſs ſervice, ſuch ſcandalous mean ſubmiſſions, had been reproach enough to any, that had not diveſted himſelf of ingenuity and innocence together, and become one of Ariſtotles φύσει δοῦλοι, Natural ſlaves, (which if it ſignifie any thing, denotes the fools and ſimple ones in this Text, whom nature hath marked in the head for no very honourable imployments.) But from this paſſivity in the Mines and Gallies, to attain to a joy and voluptuouſneſs in the imployment, to dread nothing but Sabbatick years and Jubiles, and with the meſt-faln ſlave, to diſclaim nothing but liberty and manumiſſion, i. e. in effect, Innocence, and Paradiſe, and Bliß; to court and woo Satan for the Manſions in Hell, and the ſeveral types and præludiums of them, the ἀρχαὶ ὠδίνων, the initial pangs in this life, which he hath in his diſpoſing, to be ſuch a Platonick lover of ſtripes and chains, without intuition of any kind of reward, any preſent or future wages for all his patience; and as it follows, to hate knowledge and piety; hate it as the moſt treacherous enemy that means to undermine their Hell, to force them out of their beloved Satan's embraces: this is certainly, a very competent aggravation of the ſimplicity. And yet to ſee, how perfect a character this is of the moſt of us, that have nothing to commend, or even excuſe in the moſt of thoſe ways, on which we make no ſcruple to exhauſt our ſouls, but only our kindneſs; irrational paſſionate kindneſs and love toward them; and then, that love ſhall cover a multitude of ſins, ſuperſede all the exceptions and quarrels that otherwiſe we ſhould not chuſe but have to them. Could a man ſee any thing valuable or attractive in Oaths and Curſes, in Drunkenneſs and Beſtiality (the ſin, that when a Turk reſolves to be guilty of, he makes a fearful noiſe unto his Soul to retire all into his feet, or as far off as it is poſſible, that it may not be within ken of that beſtial proſpect, as Busbequius tells us.) Could any man endure the covetous man's ſad galling Mules, burthens of Gold, his Achans Wedge, that cleaves and rends in ſunder Nations, (ſo that in the Hebrew, that ſin ſignifies wounding

Joel ii 8. ing and inciſion, Joel ii. 8. and is alluded to, by his piercing himſelf thorow with divers ſorrows,

1 Tim. vi. 10. 1 Tim. vi. 10.) his very Purgatories, and Limbo's, nay, Hell, as devouring and perpetual as it; and the no kind of ſatisfaction ſo much as to his eye, from the vaſteſt heaps or treaſures, were he not in love with folly and ruine; had he not been drenched with philtres and charms; had not the Necromancer plaid ſome of his prizes on him, and as St. Paul ſaith of his Galatians, even bewitched him to be a fool. Would we but make a rational choice of our ſins, diſcern ſomewhat that were amiable, before we let looſe our paſſion on them, and not deal ſo blindly in abſolute elections of the drieſt unſavory ſin, that may but be called a ſin (that hath but the honour of affronting God, and damning one of Chriſt's redeemed;) moſt of our waſting, ſweeping ſins, would have no manner of pretenſions to us; and that you will allow to be one ſpecial accumulation of the folly and madneſs of theſe ſimple ones, that they thus love ſimplicity.

The ſecond aggravation, is the continuance and duration of this fury, a laſting chronical paſſion, quite contrary to the nature of paſſions, a flaſh of lightning, lengthned out a whole day together, that they ſhould love ſimplicity ſo long.

It is the nature of acute diſeaſes, either to have intervals and intermiſſions, or elſe to come to ſpeedy criſes; and though theſe prove mortal ſometimes, yet the ſtate is not generally ſo deſperate; and ſo it is with ſins: many the ſharpeſt and vehementeſt indiſpoſitions of the Soul (pure Feavers of rage and luſt) prove happily but flaſhing ſhort furies, are attended with an inſtant ſmiting of the heart, a hating and deteſting our follies, a ſtriking on the thigh in Jeremy, and in David's penitential ſtile, a [So fooliſh was I, and ignorant, even as a beaſt before thee.] And it were happy if our Feavers had ſuch cool ſeaſons, ſuch favorable ingenuous intermiſſions as theſe. But for the hectick continual Feavers (that like ſome weapons (the ἀγγᾶϊς) barbed ſhafts in uſe among the Franks in Agathias, being not mortal at the entrance, do all their ſlaughter by the hardneſs of getting out) the Vultures that ſo tyre and gnaw upon the Soul, the συνοχοὶ that never ſuffer the ſinner fool, to make any approach toward his wits, toward ſobriety again; this paſſionate love of folly, improved into an habitual, ſteddy courſe of Atheiſticallneſs, a deliberate, peremptory, final reprobating of Heaven (the purity at once, and the bliſs of it) the ſtanch demure covenanting with death, and reſolvedneſs to have their part, to run their fortune with Satan, through all adventures; this is that monſtrous brat, that (as for the birth of the Champion in the Poet) three nights of darkneſs more than Egyptian, were to be crowded into one (all the ſimplicity and folly in a Kingdom) to help to a being in the World: and at the birth of it, you will pardon Wiſdom, if ſhe break out into a paſſion and exclamation of pity firſt, and then of indignation, How long, ye ſimple ones, &c. My laſt particular.

The firſt debt, that Wiſdom, that Chriſt, that every Chriſtian Brother ows and pays to every unchriſtian liver, is that of pity and compaſſion; which is to him of all others, the propereſt dole. Look upon all the ſad moneful objects in the world, betwixt whom all our compaſſion is wont to be divided; firſt, the Bankrupt rotting in a Gaol; ſecondly, the direful bloody ſpectacle of the Soldier wounded by the Sword of War; thirdly, the Malefactor howling under the Stone, or gaſping upon the Rack or Wheel; and fourthly, the gallant perſon on the Scaffold or Gallows ready for execution; and the ſecure, ſenſeleſs ſinner, is the brachygraphy of all theſe.

You have in him, 1. A rich patrimony and treaſure of grace (purchaſed dear, and ſetled on him by Chriſt) moſt prodigally and contumeliouſly miſſpent and exhauſted. 2. A Soul ſtreaming out whole Rivers of blood and ſpirits, through every wound, even every ſin it hath been guilty of; and not enduring the Water to cleanſe, much leſs the Wine or Oyl to be poured into any one of them; the whole Soul transfigured into one wound, one τρόμος & αἷμαλος, congelation and clod of blood. Then thirdly beyond this, all the racks and pangs of a tormenting conſcience, his only preſent exerciſe: and laſtly, all the torments in Hell (the Officer ready hurrying him to the Judge, and the Judge delivering him to the Executioner) his minutely dread and expectation, the dream that ſo haunts and hounds him. And what would a man give in bowels of compaſſion (to Chriſtianity? or but) to humane kind, to be able to reprieve or reſcue ſuch an unhappy creature; to be but the Lazarus with one drop of water to cool the tip of the ſcalding Tongue, that is engaged in ſuch a pile of flames. If there be any Charity left in this frozen World, any Beam under this cold uninhabitable Zone, it will certainly work ſome meltings on the moſt obdurate heart; it will diſſolve and pour out our bowels into a ſeaſonable advice, or admonition (that excellent Recipe, ſaith Themiſt. ἀντὶ καύσεων καὶ τόμων, That ſupplies the place, and does the work of the burnings and ſcarifyings) a cry to ſtop him in his precipitous courſe; a tear, at leaſt, to ſolemnize, if not to prevent ſo ſad a fate. And it were well, if all our bowels were thus imployed, all our kindneſs and moſt paſſionate love, thus converted and laid out on our poor lapſed ſinner-brethrens ſouls, to ſeize upon thoſe fugitives, as Chriſt is ſaid to do, ἐπιλαμβάνεσθαι, Heb. xi. 16. to catch hold and bring them back, ere it be yet too late; reſcue them out of the hands of their deareſt eſpouſed ſins, and not ſuffer the moſt flat-Solen. tering kind of death (κακοήθειαν ὑποδύουσα ἀνθρώπῳ σεμνῷ in Gal. de Athl. the Devil in the Angelical diſguiſe) the ſin that undertakes to be the prime Saint (the zeal for the Lord of Hoſts) any the moſt venerable impiety, to lay hold on them. Could I but ſee ſuch a new faſhioned Charity received and entertained in the World; every man to become his brothers keeper, and every man ſo tame, as to love and interpret aright, entertain and embrace this keeper, this ἐπίλεκτος δαίμων, this Guardian Angel, as an Angel indeed, as the only valuable friend he hath under Heaven; I ſhould think this a lucky omen of the worlds returning to its wits, to ſome degree of piety again. And till then, there is a very fit place and ſeaſon for the exerciſe of the other part of the paſſion here, that of Indignation, the laſt minute of my laſt particular, as the how long is an expreſſion of Indignation.

Indignation,

Indignation, not at the men (for however Ariſtotles δεῖ νεμεσᾶν [A man ought to have indignation at ſome perſons] may ſeem to juſtifie it; Our Saviour calls not for any ſuch ſtern paſſion, or indeed any but love, and bowels of pity, and charity toward the perſon of any, the moſt enormous ſinner; and St. Paul, only for the καταρτίσαι, the reſtoring, ſetting him in joynt again, that is thus overtaken in any fault) but Indignation, I ſay, at the ſin, at the ſimplicity and the folly, that refuſe reproachful Creature, that hath the fate to be beloved ſo paſſionately, and ſo long. And to this, will Ariſtotles ſeaſon of indignation belong, the ſeeing favors and kindneſs ſo unworthily diſpenced (the upſtarts, ſaith he, and new men advanced and gotten into the greateſt dignities) knowledge to be profeſſly hated, and under that title, all the prime, i. e. Practical Wiſdom, and Piety, and ſimplicity, i. e. folly and madneſs, and ſin, to have our whole ſouls laid out upon it.

O let this ſhrill Sarcaſm of Wiſdoms, the [How long, ye ſimple ones] be for ever a ſounding in our ears. Let this indignation at our ſtupid ways of ſin, tranſplant it ſelf to that ſoyl where it is likely to thrive and fructifie beſt, I mean, to that of our own, inſtead of other mens breaſts, where it will appear glorioufly in St. Pauls inventory, a prime part of that ἀμεταμέλητος μετάνοια, the durable, unretracted repentance, an effect of that godly ſorrow that worketh to Salvation. And if it be ſincere, O what indignation it produceth in us? What diſpleaſure and rage at our folly? to think how ſenſeleſly we have moulted and crumbled away our ſouls; what unthrifty bargains we have made? what ſots and fools we ſhall appear to Hell, when it ſhall be known to the wretched, tormented Creatures, what ambitions we had, to be but as miſerable as they? upon what Gotham errands? what Wild-gooſe chaſes, we are come poſting and wearied thither? O that a little of this conſideration, and this paſſion, betimes, might eaſe us of that endleſs wo and indignation; thoſe tears and gnaſhing of teeth, quit us of that ſad arrear of horrors, that otherwiſe waits behind for us. Lord, do thou give us that view of our ways; the errors, the follies, the furies of our extravagant Atheiſtical lives; that may by the very reproach and ſhame, recover and return us to thee. Make our faces aſhamed, O Lord, that we may ſeek thy Law; Give us that pity, and that indignation, to our poor periſhing ſouls; that may at length, awake and fright us out of our Lethargies, and bring us ſo many confounded, humbled, contrite penitentiaries, to that beautiful gate of thy temple of mercies, where we may retract our follies, implore thy pardon, deprecate thy wrath; and for thy deliverance from ſo deep an Hell, from ſo infamous a vile condition, from ſo numerous a tale of deaths; never leave praiſing thee, and ſaying, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of Hoſts; Heaven and Earth are full of thy glory; Glory be to thee, O God, moſt high.

SER-

SERMON IV.

MATT. I. 23.

Emmanuel, which is by interpretation, God with us.

THE different measure and means of diſpenſing Divine Knowledg to ſeveral ages of the World, may ſufficiently appear by the Goſpels of the New, and Prophecies of the Old Teſtament; the ſunſhine and the clearneſs of the one, and the twilight and dimneſs of the other: but in no point this more importantly concerns us, than the Incarnation of Chriſt. This hath been the Study and Theme, the Speculation and Sermon of all holy Men and Writers ſince Adam's Fall; yet never plainly diſcloſed, till John Baptiſt, in the third of Matth. and the third Verſe, and the Angel in the next Verſes before my Text, undertook the Task, and Matt. iii. 3. then indeed was it fully performed; then were the Writings, or rather the Riddles, of the obſcure, ſtammering, whiſpering Prophets, turned into the voice of One crying in the Wilderneſs, Prepare ye
Iſa. xl. 3. the ways of the Lord, &c Iſa. xl. 3. Then did the cry, yea, ſhouting of the Baptiſt, at once, both interpret and perform what it propheſied; At the ſound of it, Every valley was exalted, and every Verſ. 4. hill was brought low: the crooked was made ſtraight, and the rough places plain, v. 4. That is, the Hill and Groves of the Prophets were levell'd into the open champain of the Goſpel; thoſe impediments which hindred God's approach unto mens rebel hearts, were carefully removed; the abject mind was lifted up, the exalted was depreſt, the intractable and rough was render'd plain, and even; in the Verſ 5. ſame manner as a way was made unto the Roman Army marching againſt Jeruſalem.

This I thought profitable to be premiſed to you, both that you might underſtand the affinity of Prophecies, and Goſpel, as differing not in ſubſtance, but only in clearneſs of revelation, as the glorious face of the Sun, from it ſelf, being overcaſt and mask'd with a cloud; and alſo for the clearing of my Text: For this entire paſſage of Scripture, of which theſe words are a cloſe, is the Angels meſſage, or Goſpel unto Joſeph, and ſet down by St. Matthew, as both the interpretation, and accompliſhment of a Prophecy delivered long ago by Iſaiah; but perhaps not at all underſtood by the Jews: to wit, That a Virgin ſhould conceive and bear a Son, and they ſhould call his name Emmanuel.

Where firſt we muſt examine the ſeeming difference in the point of Chriſts Name, betwixt the place
Verſ. 21. here cited from Iſaiah, and the words here vouched of the Angel, V. 21. and proved by the effect Verſ. 25. V. 25. For the Prophet ſays, he ſhall be called Emmanuel, but the Angel commands he ſhould be, and Iſa. vii. 14. the Goſpel records he was named Jeſus.

And here we muſt reſume and enlarge the ground premiſed in our Preface, that Prophecies being not Hiſtories, but rude imperfect draughts of things to come, do not exactly expreſs and delineate, but only ſhadow, and covertly vail thoſe things, which only the Spirit of God, and the event muſt interpret. So that in the Goſpel, we conſtrue the words, but in Prophecies, the ſenſe; i. e. we expect not the performance of every Circumſtance expreſt in the words of a Prophecy, but we acknowledg another ſenſe beyond the literal; and in the comparing of Iſaiah with St. Matthew, we exact not the ſame expreſſions, provided we find the ſame ſubſtance, and the ſame ſignificancy. So then, the Prophets [and call his name Emmanuel] is not, as humane Covenants are, to be fulfill'd in the rigour of the Letter, that he ſhould be ſo named at his Circumciſion, but in the agreement of ſenſe, that this name ſhould expreſs his nature; that he was indeed, God with us, and that at the Circumciſion he ſhould receive a name of the ſame power and ſignificancy. Whence the obſervation by the way is, that Emmanuel, in effect, ſignifies Jeſus, God with us, a Saviour; and from thence the point of Doctrine, that Gods coming to us, i.e. Chriſts Incarnation, brought Salvation into the World. For if there be a ſubſtantial agreement betwixt the Prophet, and the Angel; if Emmanuel ſignifie directly Jeſus; if God with us, and a Saviour be really the ſame title of Chriſt; then was there no Saviour, and conſequently no Salvation, before this preſence of God with us. Which poſition we will briefly explain, and then omitting unneceſſary proofs, apply it.

In explaining of it, we muſt calculate the time of Chriſts Incarnation, and ſet down how with it, and not before, came Salvation.

We may collect in Scripture a three-fold Incarnation of Chriſt; 1. In the Counſel of God, 2. In the Promiſes of God, 3. In a Perſonal open exhibiting of him unto the World; the effect and complement of both Counſel, and Promiſes.

1. In the Counſel of God; ſo He was as ſlain, ſo incarnate, before the foundation of the World, Rev.
Rev. xiii. 8. xiii. 8. For the word ſlain, being not competible to the Eternal God, but only to the aſſumption of the humane nature, preſuppoſes him incarnate, becauſe ſlain. God then in his Preſcience, ſurveying before he created, and viewing the lapsed, miserable, sick estate of the future Creation; in his Eternal Decree, foresaw, and pre-ordained Jesus, the Saviour, the Author and Finisher of the Worlds Salvation. So that in the Counsel of God, to whom all things to come, are made present, Emmanuel and Jesus went together; and no Salvation bestowed on us, but in respect to this, God with us.

2. In the Promises of God; and then, Christ was incarnate when he was promised first in Paradise, The seed of the Woman, &c. and so he is as old in the flesh, as the World in sin, and was then in God's Promise first born, when Adam and man-kind began to die. Afterwards he was, not again, but still incarnate in Gods Promise more evidently in Abraham's time, In thy seed, &c. and in Moses his time, when at the addition of the Passover, a most significant representation of the incarnate and crucified Christ, he was more than promised, almost exhibited. Under which times, it is by some asserted, that Christ, in the form of Man, and habit of Angel, appeared sundry times to the Fathers, to give them not an hope, but a possession of the Incarnate God, and to be præludium incarnationis, a pawn unto them, that they trusted not in vain: And here it is plain thorowout, that this Incarnation of Christ, in the Promise of God, did perpetually accompany, or go before Salvation: not one blessing on the nations, without mention of thy seed;] not one encouragement against fear, or unto confidence, but confirm'd and back'd with an I am thy shield, &c. i.e. according to the Targum, my Word is thy shield; i.e. my Christ, who is ὁ λόγος, the Word, in the first of Joh. i. Not any mention of Righteousness and Salvation, but on ground and condition of belief of that Jesus which was then in promise, Emmanuel, God with us.

Gen. iii. 15.

Gen. xii. 3. xviii. 18. xxii. 18. Exod. xiii.

3. In the Personal exhibiting of Christ in form of flesh unto the World, dated at the fulness of time, and call'd in our ordinary phrase his Incarnation; then no doubt was Emmanuel, Jesus; then was he openly shewed to all people in the form of God a Saviour, which Simeon, Luk. ii. 30. most divinely styles God's Salvation; thereby, no doubt, meaning the Incarnate Christ, which by being God with us, was Salvation.

Luke ii. 30.

Thus do you see a three-fold Incarnation, a three-fold Emmanuel, and proportionably a three-fold Jesus:

1. A Saviour first decreed for the World, answerable to God, incarnate in God's Counsel; and so, no man was ever capable of Salvation, but through God with us.

2. A Saviour promised to the World, answerable to the second God with us, to wit, incarnate in the Promise; and so, there is no Covenant of Salvation, but in this God with us.

3. A Saviour truly exhibited and born of a Woman, answerable to the third Emmanuel; and so also is there no manifestation, no proclaiming, no preaching of Salvation, but by the birth and merits of God with us.

To these three, if we add a fourth Incarnation of Christ, the assuming of our Immortal Flesh, which was at his Resurrection, then surely the Doctrine will be complete, and this Emmanuel incarnate in the Womb of the grave, and brought forth cloath'd upon with an incorruptible seed, is now more fully than ever prov'd an Eternal Jesus; For when he had overcome the sharpness of death, he opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers, as it is in our Te Deum; as if all that till then ever entred into Heaven, had been admitted by some privy key; but now the very gates were wide opened to all believers: This last Incarnation of Christ, being accompanied with a Catholick Salvation, that Jesus might be as Eternal as Emmanuel, that he might be as Immortal a Saviour, as a God with us. 'Twere but a superfluous work, further to demonstrate, that through all ages of the World, there was no Salvation ever tendred, but in respect to this Incarnation of Christ; that the hopes, the belief, the expectation of Salvation, which the Fathers lived and breathed by, under the types of the Law, was only grounded upon, and referred unto these Promises of the future Incarnation; that they which were not in some measure enlightned in this mystery, were not also partakers of this Covenant of Salvation: that all the means besides, that Heaven and Earth, and which goes beyond them both, the brain of Man, or Angel could afford or invent, could not excuse, much less save any child of Adam: That every Soul which was to spring from these loins, had been without those transcendent mercies which were exhibited by this Incarnation of Christs, plung'd in necessary desperate damnation: Your patience shall be more profitably imployed in a brief Application of the point;

First, That you perswade, and drive your selves to a sense and feeling of your Sins, those sins which thus pluckt God out of Heaven, and for a while depriv'd him of his Majesty; which laid an engagement upon God, either to leave his infinite Justice unsatisfied, or else to subject his infinite Deity to the servile mortality of Flesh, or else to leave an infinite World in a common damnation.

Secondly, To strain all the expressions of our hearts, tongues, and lives, to the highest note of gratitude which is possible, in answer to this Mystery and Treasure of this God with us; to reckon all the Miracles of either common or private preservations, as foils to this incomparable Mercy, infinitely below the least circumstance of it; without which, thine Estate, thy Understanding, thy Body, thy Soul, thy Being, thy very Creation, were each of them as exquisite Curses, as Hell or Malice could invent for thee.

Thirdly, To observe with an ecstasie of joy and thanks, the precious priviledges of us Christians, beyond all that ever God profest love to, in that we have obtained a full revelation of this God with us; which all the Fathers did but see in a cloud, the Angels peep'd at, the Heathen world gap'd after, but we behold as in a plain at mid-day: For since the veil of the Temple was rent, every man that hath eyes may see Sanctum Sanctorum, the Holy of Holies, God with us.

Matt. xxvii. 51.

Fourthly, To make a real use of this Doctrine to the profit of our Souls; that if God have designed to be Emmanuel, and Jesus an Incarnate God, and Saviour to us; that then, we will fit, and prepare, and make our selves capable of this Mercy; and by the help of our religious, devout, humble endeavours, not frustrate, but further and promote in our selves, this end of Christs Incarnation, the saving of our Souls; and this use is effectually made to our hands in the twelfth to the Hebrews, at the last, Wherefore we receiving a Kingdom that cannot be moved; i.e. being partakers of the Presence, the Reign, the Salvation of the Incarnate God, Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. And do thou, O powerful God, improve the truth of this Doctrine, to the best

beſt advantage of our Souls, that thy Son may not be born to us unprofitably; but that he may be God, not only with us, but in us; in us, to ſanctifie and adorn us here, with his effectual grace; and with us, to ſuſtain us here, as our Emmanuel; and as our Jeſus, to crown and perfect us hereafter with glory.

And ſo much for this point, That Jeſus and Emmanuel import the ſame thing, and there was no Salvation, till this preſence of God with us: We now come to the ſubſtance it ſelf, i.e. Chriſts Incarnation, noted by Emmanuel, which is by interpretation, &c. Where firſt we muſt explain the word, then drive forward to the matter. The Word in Iſaiah, in the Hebrew, is not ſo much a name, as a ſentence, deſcribing unto us the myſtery of the Conception of the Virgin עִמָּנוּ אֵל with us God; where אֵל or אֱלֹהַּ God is taken in Scripture, either abſolutely for the nature of God, as for the moſt part in the Old Teſtament; or perſonally; and ſo, either for the Perſon of the Father in many places, or elſe Hoſ. i. 7. diſtinctly for the Perſon of the Son, ſo Hoſ. i. 7. And will ſave them by the Lord their God; אֱלֹהֵי הֶם their God, i.e. Chriſt: and ſo alſo moſt evidently in this place, out of Iſaiah, where אֵל ſignifies the Son Incarnate, God-man, θεάνθρωπος, and many the like; eſpecially thoſe where the Targum paraphraſes, Jehovah, or Jehovah Elohim, by מֵימְרָא דַיְיָ אֱלֹהִים the Word of the Lord, i.e. Chriſt Jeſus, Joh.
Joh. i. 1. i. 1. As for inſtance, Gen. iii. 22. that Word of the Lord ſaid; and Gen. ii. 6. the Word created. Se-
Gen. iii. 22. condly, עִם which ſignifies in its extent, near, at, with, or amongſt. Thirdly, the Particle, ſignifying
Gen. ii. 6. us; though it expreſſes not, yet it muſt note, our humane nature, our abode, our being in this our great World, wherein we travel, and this our little World, wherein we dwell; not as a manſion place, to remain in, but either as an Inn to lodg, or a Tabernacle to be covered, or a Priſon to ſuffer in: So that the words in their latitude run thus; Emmanuel: i.e. The ſecond Perſon in Trinity is come down into this lower world amongſt us, for a while to travel, to lodg, to ſojourn, to be fetter'd, in this Inn, this Tabernacle, this Priſon of mans fleſh; or briefly, at this time, is conceived and born God-man, θεάνθρωπος, the ſame both God and Man, the Man Chriſt Jeſus. And this is the cauſe and buſineſs, the ground and theme of our preſent rejoycing: in this were limited and fulfilled, the expectation of the Fathers; and in this begins and is accompliſhed, the hope and joy of us Chriſtians. That which was Luk. ii. 28. old Simeons warning to death, the ſight and embraces of the Lord Chriſt, Luk. ii. 28. as the greateſt happineſs which an eſpecial favour could beſtow on him; and therefore made him in a contempt of any further life, ſing his own funeral, Nunc Dimittis: Lord, now letteſt thou, &c. This is to us the Prologue, and firſt part of a Chriſtians life; either the life of the World, that that may be worthy to be call'd life; or that of Grace, that we be not dead whilſt we live. For were it not for this aſſumption of fleſh, you may juſtly curſe that ever you carried fleſh about you; that ever your Soul was committed to ſuch a Priſon as your Body is; nay, ſuch a Dungeon, ſuch a Grave: But through this Incarnation of Chriſt, our fleſh is, or ſhall be cleanſed into a Temple, for the Soul to worſhip in, and in Heaven for a robe, for it to triumph in. For our body ſhall be purified by his Body.

If ye will be ſufficiently inſtructed into a juſt valuation of the weight of this Myſtery, you muſt reſolve your ſelves to a pretty large task (and it were a notable Chriſtmas employment, I ſhould bleſs God, for any one that would be ſo piouſly valiant, as to undertake it) you muſt read over the whole Book of Scripture and Nature to this purpoſe. For when you find in the Pſalmiſt, the news of Chriſts Pſal. xl. 7. coming, Then ſaid I, loe I come; you find your directions how to tract him, In the volume of thy book it is written of me, &c. i.e. either in the whole book, or in every folding, every leaf of this Book: Thou ſhalt not find a Story, a Riddle, a Prophecy, a Ceremony, a down-right legal Conſtitution, but hath ſome manner of aſpect on this glaſs, ſome way drives at this myſtery, God manifeſt in fleſh. For example, (perhaps you have not noted) whereever you read Seth's Genealogies more inſiſted on than Cain's, Sem's than his elder brother Ham's, Abraham's than the whole World beſides, Jacob's than Eſau's, Judah's than the whole twelve Patriarchs; and the like paſſages which directly drive down the line of Chriſt, and make that the whole buſineſs of the Scripture; Whenſoever, I ſay, you read any of theſe, then are you to note; that Shiloh was to come; that he which was ſent, was on his journey; that from the Creation, till the fulneſs of time, the Scripture was in travel with him; and by his leaping ever now and then, and as it were, ſpringing in the Womb, gave manifeſt tokens that it had conceived, and would at laſt bring forth the Meſſias. So that the whole Old Teſtament is a Myſtical Virgin Mary, a
Gen. iii. 15. kind of Mother of Chriſt; which by the Holy Ghoſt, conceived him in Geneſis, Chap. iii. 15. And throughout Moſes and the Prophets, carried him in the Womb, and was very big of him: And at laſt in Malachi, Mal. iii. 4. Chap. iii. 4. was in a manner delivered of him; For there you ſhall find mention of John Baptiſt, who was, as it were, the Midwife of the Old Teſtament, to open its Womb, and bring the Meſſias into the World. Howſoever, at the leaſt it is plain, that the Old Teſtament brought him to his birth, though it had not ſtrength to bring forth; and the Prophets, as Moſes from Mount Nebo, came to a view of this Land of Canaan.

For the very firſt words of the New Teſtament, being, as it were, to fill up what only was wanting in Matth. i. the Old, are the Book and Hiſtory of his generations and birth, Matth. i. You would yet be better able to prize the excellency of this Work, and reach the pitch of this days rejoycing, if you would learn how the very Heathen fluttered about this light; what ſhift they made to get ſome inkling of this Incarnation before-hand; how the Sibyls, Heathen Women, and Virgil, and other Heathen Poets in their writings, before Chriſt's time, let fall many paſſages, which plainly referred and belonged to this Incarnation of God. It is fine ſport to ſee in our Authors, how the Devil with his famous Oracles and Prophets, foreſeeing by his skill in the Scripture, that Chriſt was near his birth, did droop upon it, and hang the wing; did ſenſibly decay in his courage; began to breath thick, and ſpeak imperfectly; and ſometimes as men in the extremity of a Fever, diſtractedly, wildly, without any coherence, and ſcarce ſenſe; and how at laſt about the birth of Chriſt, he plainly gave up the ghoſt, and left his Oracular Prophets, as ſpeechleſs as the Caves they dwelt in, their laſt voice being, that their great god Pan, Plut. i.e. the Devil, was dead, and ſo both his Kingdom and their Prophecies at an end; as if Chriſt's coming, had chaſed Lucifer out of the World, and the powers of Hell were buried that minute, when a Saviour was born.

And

And now by way of Uſe, can ye ſee the Devil put out of heart, and ye not put forward to get the Field? can you delay to make uſe of ſuch an advantage as this? can ye be ſo cruel to your ſelves, as to ſhew any mercy on that now diſarmed enemy? will ye ſee God ſend his Son down into the Field, to enter the Liſts, and lead up a Forlorn Troop againſt the Prince of this World, and ye not follow at his Allarm? will ye not accept of a conqueſt, which Chriſt ſo lovingly offers you? It is a moſt terrible exprobration in Hoſea, Chap. xi. 3. look on it, where God objects to Ephraim, her not taking notice of his mercies; her not ſeconding and making uſe of his loving deliverances, which plainly adumbrates this deliverance by Chriſt's death; as may appear by the firſt Verſe of the Chapter, compared with the ſecond of Matth. 15. Well, ſaith God, I taught Ephraim to go, taking them by their arms; but they knew not that I healed them. I drew them with the cords of a man; an admirable phraſe, (with all thoſe means that uſe to oblige one man to another) with bands of love, &c. i. e. I uſed all means for the ſuſtaining and ſtrengthning of my people; I put them in a courſe to be able to go, and fight, and overcome all the powers of darkneſs, and put off the Devils yoke: I ſent my Son amongſt them for this purpoſe, Verſe 1. And all this I did by way of love, as one friend is wont to do for another; and yet they would not take notice of either the benefit or the donor, nor think themſelves beholding to me for this mercy. Hoſ. xi. 3. Matth. ii. 15.

And this is our caſe, beloved, If we do not ſecond theſe and the like mercies of God beſtowed on us; if we do not improve them to our Souls health; if we do not faſten on this Chriſt incarnate; if we do not follow him with an expreſſion of gratitude and reverence, and ſtick cloſe to him, as both our Friend and Captain: finally, if we do not endeavour and pray, that this his Incarnation may be ſeconded with annother; that as once he was born in our fleſh to juſtifie us, ſo he may be alſo born ſpiritually in our Souls to ſanctifie us: for there is a ſpiritual ἐνσάρκωσις, or Myſtical Incarnation of Chriſt in every regenerate man, where the Soul of Man is the Womb wherein Chriſt is conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. The proof of which Doctrine ſhall entertain the remainder of this hour: for this is the Emmanuel that moſt nearly concerns us, God with us, i. e. with our Spirits, or Chriſt begotten and brought forth in our hearts. Of which briefly.

And that Chriſt is thus born in a regenerate mans ſoul, if it were denied, might directly appear by theſe two places of Scripture, Gal. ii. 20. I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me. Again, Epheſ. iii. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. Gal. ii. 20. Epheſ. iii. 17.

Now that you may underſtand this Spiritual Incarnatien of Chriſt the better, we will compare it with his Real Incarnation in the Womb of the Virgin; that ſo we may keep cloſe to the buſineſs of the day, and at once obſerve both his birth to the World, and ours to Grace; and ſo even poſſeſs Chriſt whilſt we ſpeak of him.

And firſt, if we look on his Mother Mary, we ſhall find her an entire pure Virgin, only eſpouſed to Joſeph; but before they came together, ſhe was found with Child of the Holy Ghoſt, Matth. i. 18. And then the Soul of Man muſt be this Virgin. Matth. i. 18.

Now there is a threefold Purity or Virginity of the Soul; Firſt, An abſolute one, ſuch as was found in Adam before his fall. Secondly, A reſpective, of a Soul, which like Mary, hath not yet joyned or committed with the World, to whom it is eſpouſed; which though it have its part of natural corruptions, yet either for want of ability, of age, or occaſion, hath not yet broke forth into the common outrages of ſin. Thirdly, A reſtored purity, of a Soul formerly polluted, but now cleanſed by repentance.

The former kind, of natural and abſolute purity, as it were to be wiſhed for, ſo is it not to be hoped; and therefore is not to be imagined in the Virgin Mother, or expected in the Virgin Soul. The ſecond purity, we find in all regenerate infants, who are at the ſame time outwardly initiated to the Church, and inwardly to Chriſt; or in thoſe whom God hath called, before they have ingaged themſelves in the courſes of actual, hainous ſins; ſuch are well diſpoſed, well brought up; and to uſe our Saviours words, Have ſo lived, as not to be far from the Kingdom of God. Such happily, as Cornelius, Acts x. 1. And ſuch a Soul as this, is the fitteſt Womb, in which our Saviour delights to be incarnate; where he may enter and dwell, without either reſiſtance or annoyance; where he ſhall be received at the firſt knock, and never be diſordered or repulſed by any ſtench of the carkaſs, or violence of the Body of ſin. The reſtored purity, is a right Spirit renewed in the Soul, Pſal. li. 10. a wound cured up by repentance, and differs only from the former purity, as a ſcar from a skin never cut, wanting ſomewhat of the beauty and outward clearneſs, but nothing of either the ſtrength or health of it. Optandum eſſet ut in ſimplici Virginitate ſervaretur navis, &c. It were to be wiſhed, that the Ship, our Souls, could be kept in its ſimple Virginity, and never be in danger of either leak or ſhipwrack: but this perpetual integrity, being a deſperate, impoſſible wiſh, there is one only remedy, which though it cannot prevent a leak, can ſtop it. And this is repentance after ſin committed, Poſt naufragium tabula, a means to ſecure one after a ſhipwrack, and to deliver him even in the deep Waters. And this we call a reſtored Virginity of the Soul, which Chriſt alſo vouchſafes to be conceived and born in. The firſt degree of Innocence, being not to have ſinned, the ſecond to have repented. Acts x. 1. Pſal. li. 10. Tertul.

In the ſecond place, the Mother of Chriſt in the fleſh, was a Virgin, not only till the time of Chriſt's conception, but alſo till the time of his birth, Matth. i. 25. He knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth, &c. And farther, as we may probably believe, remained a Virgin all the days of her life after: for to her is applied by the Learned, that which is typically ſpoken of the Eaſt-gate of the Sanctuary, Ezek. xliv. 2. This gate ſhall be ſhut, it ſhall not be opened, and no man ſhall enter in by it, becauſe the Lord the God of Iſrael hath entred in by it; therefore it ſhall be ſhut. A place if appliable, very appoſite for the expreſſion. Hence is ſhe called by the Fathers and Counſels ἀειπαρθένος, a Perpetual Virgin, againſt the Hereſie of Helvidius. The probability of this might be farther proved, if it were needful. And ought not upon all principles of nature and of juſtice, the Virgin Soul, after Chriſt once conceived in it, remain pure and ſtanch till Chriſt be born in it, nay, be ἀειπαρθένος, a Perpetual Virgin, never indulge to ſenſual pleaſures, or caſt away that purity which Chriſt either found or wrought in it? If it were a reſpective purity, then ought it not perpetually retain and increaſe it, and never fall off Matth. i. 25. Ezek. xliv. 2.

to thoſe diſorders that other men ſupinely live in? If it were a recovered purity, hold it faſt, and never turn again; As a Dog to his vomit, or a Sow to her wallowing in the mire? For this conception and birth of Chriſt in the Soul, would not only waſh away the filth that the Swine was formerly mired in, but alſo take away the Swiniſh nature, that ſhe ſhall never have any ſtrong propenſion to return again to her former inordinate delights. Now this continuance of the Soul, in this its recovered Virginity, is not from the firm, conſtant, ſtable nature of the Soul, but as Euſebius ſaith in another caſe, and Euſeb. Præp. lib. 13. p. 412. μείζονος ἢ κραλεᾶ δέσμυ, From a more ſtrong, able Band, the Union of Chriſt to the Soul, his Spiritual Incarnation in it: Becauſe the Lord, the God of Iſrael, hath entred in by it; therefore it ſhall be ſhut, Ezek. xliv. 2. Ezek. xliv. 2. i. e. it ſhall not be opened, either in conſent or practice, to the luſts and pollutions of the World or Fleſh; becauſe Chriſt by being born in it, hath cleanſed it; becauſe he the Word of God, ſaid the Word, therefore the leproſie is cured; in whom he enters, he dwells; and on whom he makes his real impreſſion, he ſeals them up to the day of redemption; unleſs we unbuild our ſelves, and change our ſhape, we muſt be his.

In the third place, if we look on the agent in this conception, we ſhall find it, both in Mary and in the Soul of Man, to be the Holy Ghoſt, that which is conceived in either of them, is of the Holy Ghoſt, * within Matth. i. 20. Nothing in this buſineſs of Chriſts birth * with us, to be imputed to natural power or cauſes, the whole contrivance and final production of it; the preparations to, and labouring of it, is all the workmanſhip of the Spirit. So that as Mary was called by an ancient, ſo may the Soul without an Hyperbole by us, be ſtyled, The Shop of Miracles, and The Work-houſe of the Holy Ghoſt; in which, every operation is a miracle to nature, and no tools are uſed, but what the Spirit forged and moves. Mary conceived Chriſt, but it was above her own reach to apprehend the manner how;

Luke i. 34. for ſo ſhe queſtions the Angel, Luke i. 34. How ſhall this be, &c? So doth the Soul of Man conceive and grow big, and bring forth Chriſt, and yet not it ſelf fully perceives how this work is wrought; Chriſt being, for the moſt part, inſenſibly begotten in us, and to be diſcerned only ſpiritually, not at his entrance, but in his fruits.

In the fourth place, that Mary was choſen and appointed among all the Families of the Earth, to be the Mother of the Chriſt, was no manner of deſert of hers, but Gods ſpecial favour and dignation;

Luke i. 28. κεχαριτωμένη. V. 30. εὗρες χάριν. whence the words run truly interpreted, Luke i. 28. Hail thou that art highly favoured; not as the Vulgar read, Gratiâ plena, full of Grace. And again, verſe 30. Thou haſt found favour with God. So is it in the caſe of Mans Soul, there is no power of nature, no preparation of Morality, no art that all the Philoſophy or Learning in the World can teach a man, which can deſerve this grace at Chriſts hands, that can any way wooe or allure God to be born ſpiritually in us; which can perſwade or intice the Holy Ghoſt, to conceive and beget Chriſt in us, but only the meer favour and good pleaſure of God; which may be obtained by our prayers, but can never be challenged by our merits, may be comfortably expected and hoped for, as a largeſs given to our neceſſities and wants, but can never be required as a reward of our deſerts: for it was no high pitch of perfection, which Mary obſerved in her ſelf, as the motive to this favour; but only the meer mercy of God, which regarded Luke i. 48. the lowlineſs of his hand-maid, Luke i. 48.

Whence in the fifth place, this Soul in which Chriſt will vouchſafe to be born, muſt be a lowly, humble ſoul; or elſe it will not perfectly anſwer Maries temper, nor fully bear a part in her Magnificat; where in the midſt of her glory, ſhe humbly ſpecifies the lowlineſs of his handmaid. But this by the way.

In the ſixth place, if we conſider here-with, John the Baptiſt his forerunner, coming to prepare his way, and his Preaching repentance, as a neceſſary requiſite to Chriſts being born, and received in the World, ; then we ſhall drive the matter to a further iſſue, and find repentance, a neceſſary

Iſa. xl. 3. preparation for the birth of Chriſt in our hearts. For ſo the Baptiſt's Meſſage ſet down, Iſai. xl. 3.

Matth. iii. 2. Prepare the ways, &c. is here interpreted by the event, Matth. iii. 2. Repent, for the Kingdom of God is at hand: as if this Harbinger had no other furniture and proviſion to beſpeak in the heart that was to receive Chriſt, but only repentance for ſins. I will not examine here the precedence of Repentance before Faith in Chriſt; though I might ſeaſonably here ſtate the queſtion, and direct you to begin with John, and proceed to Chriſt; firſt repent, then faſten on Chriſt: only this for all, the promiſes of Salvation in Chriſt, are promiſed on condition of repentance, and amendment, they muſt be weary and heavy laden, who ever come to Chriſt, and expect reſt, Matth. xi. 28. And therefore whoſoever applies theſe benefits to himſelf, and thereby conceives Chriſt in his heart, muſt firſt reſolve to undertake the condition required, to wit, Newneſs of life; which yet he will not be able to perform, till Chriſt be fully born, and dwell in him, by his enabling graces: for you may mark, that Chriſt and John being both about the ſame age, as appears by the ſtory, Chriſt muſt needs be born before Johns Preaching; ſo in the Soul there is ſuppoſed ſome kind of Incarnation of Chriſt, before repentance or newneſs of life; yet before Chriſt is born, or at leaſt, come to his full ſtature and perfect growth in us; this Baptiſt's Sermon, that is, this repentance and reſolution to amendment, muſt be preſumed in our Souls. And ſo repentance is both a preparation to Chriſts birth, and an effect of it: for ſo John preached, Repent for, &c. Matth iii. 2. And ſo alſo in the ſame words Chriſt preaches, Repent, &c. Matth. iv. 17. And ſo theſe two together, John and Chriſt, repentance and Faith, though one began before the other was perfected; yet, I ſay, theſe two together in the fully regenerate man, Fulfil all righteouſneſs, Matth. iii. 15.

In the ſeventh place, you may obſerve, that when Chriſt was born in Bethlehem, the whole Land was in an uproar. Herod the King was troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him, Matth. ii. 3. which whether we apply to the leſſer city, the Soul of man, in which; or the adjoyning people, amongſt whom, Chriſt is ſpiritually born in any man; you ſhall for the moſt acknowledge the agreement: for the man himſelf, if he have been any inordinate ſinner, then at the birth of Chriſt in him, all his natural, ſinful faculties are much diſpleaſed, his reigning Herod ſins, and all the Jeruſalem of habituate luſts and Paſſions, are in great diſorder, as knowing, that this new birth abodes their inſtant deſtruction; and then they cry oft in the voice of the Devil, Mark i. 24. What have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God? Art thou come to torment and diſpoſſeſs us before our time? If it be applied to the Neighbour Worldlings, which hear of this new convert; then are they alſo in an uproar, and and conſult how they ſhall deal with this turbulent ſpirit, which is made to upbraid our ways and reprove our thoughts, Wiſd. ii. which is like to bring down all their trading and couſenage to a low ebb, like Diana's Silver-ſmith in the Acts, Chap. xix. 24. which made a ſolemn ſpeech (and the Text ſays, there was a great ſtir) againſt Paul, becauſe the attempt of his upſtart doctrine, was like to undo the Shrinemakers: Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. And no marvel, that in both theſe reſpects, there is a great uproar, ſeeing the ſpiritual birth of Chriſt, is moſt infinitely oppoſite to both, the common people of the World, and common affections of the Soul, two the moſt turbulent, tumultuous, wayward, violent Nations upon Earth. Wiſd. ii. Acts xix. 24.

In the eighth and laſt place (becauſe I will not tyre you above the time which is allotted for the trial of your patience) you may obſerve the increaſe and growth of Chriſt, and that either in himſelf, in Wiſdom and Stature, &c. Luke ii. 52. or elſe in his troop and attendants, and that either of Angels to miniſter unto him, Matth. iv. 11. or of Diſciples to follow and obey him; and then the harmony will ſtill go currant. Chriſt in the regenerate man, is firſt conceived, then born, then by degrees of childhood and youth, grows at laſt to the meaſure of the ſtature of this fulneſs; and the Soul conſequently, from ſtrength to ſtrength, from vertue to vertue, is increaſed to a perfect manhood in Chriſt Jeſus. Then alſo, where Chriſt is thus born, he chuſes and calls a Jury at leaſt of Diſciple-graces, to judge and ſit upon thee, to give in evidence unto thy Spirit, That thou art the Son of God. Then is he alſo miniſtred unto, and furniſhed by the Angels with a perpetual ſupply, either to increaſe the lively, or to recover decayed graces. So that now Chriſt doth beſtow a new life upon the man, and the regenerate ſoul becomes the daughter, as well as the Mother of Chriſt; ſhe conceives Chriſt, and Chriſt her; ſhe lives, and grows, and moves in Chriſt, and Chriſt in her. So that at laſt, ſhe comes to that pitch, and height, and ἀκμὴ, that St. Paul ſpeaks of, Gal. ii. 20. I live, yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me; and the life which I live in the fleſh, I live by the Faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.

"And do thou, O Holy Jeſus, which haſt loved us, and given thy ſelf for us; love us ſtill, and "give thy ſelf to us. Thou which haſt been born in the World to ſave ſinners, vouchſafe again, "to be again Incarnate in our Souls, to regenerate and ſanctifie ſinners. Thou which art the "Theme of our preſent rejoycing, become our Author of perpetual, ſpiritual rejoycing; that our "Souls may conceive and bring forth, and thou maiſt conceive and regenerate our Souls; that we "may dwell in Chriſt, and Chriſt in us: And from the Meditation of thy Mortal fleſh here, we "may be partakers with thee of thine Immortal glory hereafter.

Thus have we briefly paſſed through theſe words, and in them firſt ſhewed you the real agreement betwixt Matthew and Iſaiah, in the point of Chriſt's Name, and from thence noted, that Jeſus and Emmanuel, is in effect, all one; and that Chriſt's Incarnation brought Salvation into the World. Which being proved through Chriſt's ſeveral Incarnations, were applied to our direction; 1. To humble our ſelves. 2. To expreſs our thankfulneſs. 3. To obſerve our priviledges. 4. To make our ſelves capable and worthy receivers of this mercy. Then we came to the Incarnation it ſelf, where we ſhewed you the excellency of this Myſtery, by the effects, which the expectation and foreſight of it, wrought in the Fathers, the Prophets, the Heathens, the Devils; and then by way of Uſe, what an horrible ſin it was, not to apply and imploy this mercy to our Souls. Laſtly, We came to another birth of Chriſt, beſides that in the fleſh, his Spiritual Incarnation in Man's Soul; which we compared with the former exactly in eight chief Circumſtances; and ſo left all to God's Spirit, and your Meditations to work on.

Now the God, &c.

SERMON V.

LUKE IX. 55.

You know not what ſpirit you are of.

OF all Errors or Ignorances, there are none ſo worthy our pains to cure, or caution to prevent, as thoſe that have influence on practice. The prime ingredient in the making up a wiſe man, ſaith Ariſtotle in his Metaphyſicks, is to be well adviſed περὶ ὧν ἀπορήσαι δεῖ πρῶτον, what doubts muſt firſt be made, what ignorances earlieſt provided for: and there is not a more remarkable ſpring and principle of all the Scripture folly (that is wickedneſs) among men, than the beginning our Chriſtian courſe unluckily, with ſome one, or more falſe infuſions, which not only are very hardly ever corrected afterward, like the errors of the firſt concoction, that are never rectified in the ſecond; but moreover have an inauſpicious, poyſonous propriety in them, turn all into nouriſhment of the prevailing humour: and then, as the injury of filching ſome of that corn that was delivered out for ſeed, hath a peculiar mark of aggravation upon it; is not to be meaſured in the garner, but in the field; not by the quantity of what was ſtoln, but of what it would probably have proved in the Harveſt; ſo the damage that is conſequent to this infelicity is never fully aggravated, but by putting into the Bill againſt it, all the Sins of the whole life, yea, and all the damnation that attends it.

* the Of this kind, I muſt profeſs to believe the ignorance of * Goſpel Spirit to be chief, an ignorance, that cannot chooſe, but have an influence on every publick action of the life. So that as Padre Paolo was deſigned an handſome office in the Senate of Venice, to ſit by, and obſerve, and take care nequid contra pietatem; ſo it were to be wiſhed, that every man on whom the Name of Chriſt is called, had ſome aſſiſtant Angel, ſome ἐπίτροπος δαίμων, be it conſcience, be it the remembrance of what I now ſay unto him, to interpoſe in all, eſpecially the viſible undertakings of the life, nequid contra ſpiritum Evangelii, that nothing be ventured on, but what is agreeable to the ſpirit of the Goſpel. Even Diſciples themſelves may, it ſeems, run into great inconveniences for want of it; James and John did ſo in the Text; ignem de cœlo, fire from Heaven on all that did not treat them ſo well as they expected; but Chriſt turned and reproved them, ſaying, You know not what ſpirit, οἵου πνεύματος, what kind of ſpirit you are of; and that with an ἔμφασις on ὑμεῖς not ὑμεῖς ἐστε, but ἔστε ὑμεῖς, you Diſciples, you Chriſtians, You know not what ſpirit you are of.

In the words it will be very natural to obſerve theſe three Particulars; 1. That there is a peculiar Spirit that Chriſtians are of, οἵου πνεύματος ὑμεῖς; 2. That ſome prime Chriſtians do not know the kind of ſpirit, οὐκ οἴδατε; even ſo James and John, You know not, &c. 3. That this ignorance is apt to betray Chriſtians to unſafe, unjuſtifiable deſigns and actions: You that would have fire from Heaven, do it upon this one ignorance, You know not, &c.

I begin firſt with the firſt of theſe, That there is a Peculiar Spirit that Chriſtians are of: a ſpirit

‖ only of the Goſpel; and that muſt be conſidered here, not in an unlimited latitude, but ‖ one as it is oppoſite to the Spirit of Elias, Θέλεις ὡς καὶ Ηλίας; Wilt thou do as he did? It will then be neceſſary to ſhew you the peculiarity of the Goſpel Spirit by its oppoſition to that of Elias, which is manifold; for inſtance, firſt, Elias was the great aſſertor of Law, upon which ground Moſes and he appear with our Saviour at his transfiguration: So that two things will be obſervable, which make a difference betwixt the Legal, and the Goſpel Spirit: 1. That ſome Precepts of Chriſt now clearly (and with weight upon them) delivered by Chriſt, were, if in ſubſtance delivered at all; yet ſure not ſo clearly, and at length, and intelligibly propoſed under the Law. You have examples in the fifth of Matthew, in the oppoſition betwixt the ἐῤῥήθη ἀρχαίοις, what was ſaid by Moſes to the Ancients, and the ἐγὼ δὲ ὑμῖν, Chriſts ſayings to his Diſciples; which if they be interpreted of Moſes Law, (as many of the particulars are evidently taken out of the Decalogue, Thou ſhalt not kill, commit adultery, perjury,) Chriſts are then clearly ſuperadditions unto Moſes; or if they refer to the Phariſees gloſſes, (as ſome others of them poſſibly may do) then do thoſe gloſſes of thoſe Phariſees (who were none of the looſeſt, nor ignoranteſt perſons among them; but ἀκριβεστάτη αἵρεσις, for their lives, the ſtricteſt; and they ſit in Moſes Chair, and whatever they teach, that do; for their learning moſt conſiderable) argue the Moſaick Precepts not to be ſo clear, and incapable of being miſinterpreted; and ſo ſtill Chriſt's were additions, if not of the ſubſtance, yet of light and luſtre, and conſequently, improvements of the obligation to obedience, in us Chriſtians, who injoy that light, and are precluded thoſe excuſes of ignorance that a Jew might be capable of: From whence I may ſure conclude, that the Ego autem, of not retaliating, or revenging of injuries, (for that is ſure the meaning of the μὴ ἀνθιςῆναι, which we render reſiſt not evil) the ſtrict precept of loving, and bleſſing, and praying for Enemies, and the like, is more clearly preceptive, and ſo more indiſpenſably obligatory to us Chriſtians, than ever it was to the Jews before. And there you have one part of the Spirit of the Goſpel, in oppoſition to a firſt notion of the legal Spirit: And by it you may conclude, that what Chriſtian ſoever can indulge himſelf the enjoyment of that helliſh ſenſuality, that of revenge, or retributing of injuries; nay, that doth not practiſe that high piece of (but neceſſary, be it never ſo rare) perfection of overcoming evil with good; and ſo, heap thoſe precious melting coals of love, of bleſſings, of prayers, thoſe three ſpecies of ſacred veſtal fire, upon all Enemies heads; Neſcit qualis ſpiritus, He knows not what kind of ſpirit he is of.

But there is another thing obſervable of the Law, and ſo of the Judaical Legal Spirit; to wit, as it concerned the planting the Iſraelites in Canaan, and that is the command of rooting out the nations; which was a particular caſe, upon God's ſight of the filling up of the meaſure of the Amorites ſins, and a judicial ſentence of his proceeding upon them; not only reveal'd to thoſe Iſraelites, but that with a peremptory command annext to it, to haſt, and kill, and eradicate ſome of thoſe Nations. Which caſe, becauſe it ſeldom or never falls out to agree in all circumſtances, with the caſe of any other ſinful people, cannot lawfully preſcribe to the eradicating of any other (though in our opinion never ſo great) enemies of God, until it appear as demonſtrably to us, as it did to thoſe Iſraelites, that it was the will of God they ſhould be ſo dealt with: and he that thinks it neceſſary to ſhed the blood of every enemy of God, whom his cenſorious faculty hath found guilty of that charge, that is all for the fire from Heaven, though it be upon the Samaritans, the not receivers of Chriſt; is but as the Rabbies call him ſometimes, one of the בני רגשים and בני אש ſons of bloods, in the plural number, and ſons of fire; yea, and like the Diſciples in my Text, Boanerges, ſons of thunder, far enough from the ſoft temper that Chriſt left them; Ye know not what kind of ſpirit ye are of.

In the next place, Elias Spirit was a Prophetick Spirit; whoſe dictates were not the iſſue of diſcourſe and reaſon, but impulſions from Heaven. The Prophetick writings, were not, ſaith St. Peter, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, (I conceive in an agoniſtick ſenſe) of their own ſtarting, or incitation, as they were moved or prompted by themſelves, but, as it follows, ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἁγίου φερόμενοι, as they were carried by the Holy Ghoſt; not, as they were led, but carried (when the Lord ſpeaks, who can but propheſie?) And ſo likewiſe are the actions Prophetick; many things that are recorded to be done by Prophets in Scripture, they proceed from ſome peculiar incitations of God; I mean not from the ordinary, or extraordinary, general, or ſpecial direction, or influence of his grace, cooperating with the Word, as in the breſt of every regenerate man, (for the Spirit of Sanctification, and the Spirit of Prophecy, are very diſtant things) but from the extraordinary revelation of God's Will, many times againſt the ſetled rule of duty, acted and animated not as a living creature, by a Soul, but mov'd as an outward impellent, a ſphear by an intelligence, and that frequently into eccentrical and planetary motions; ſo that they were no further juſtifiable, than that prophetick calling to that particular enterprize will avow: Conſequent to which is, that becauſe the prophetick office was not beyond the Apoſtles time to continue conſtantly in the Church, any further, than to interpret, and ſuperſtruct upon what the Canon of the Scripture hath ſetled among Chriſtians; (Chriſt and his Word in the New Teſtament, being that Bath-Col, which the Jews tell us, was alone to ſurvive all the other ways of Prophecy:) he that ſhall now pretend to that Prophetick Spirit, to ſome Viſion, to teach what the Word of God will not own; to ſome incitation, to do what the New Teſtament Law will not allow of; he that with the late Fryar in France, pretends to ecſtatical revelations, with the Enthuſiaſts of the laſt age, and Phanaticks now with us, to ecſtatical motions; that with Mahomet, pretends a dialogue with God, when he is in an Epileptick fit, ſets off the moſt ghaſtly diſeaſes, I ſhall add, moſt horrid ſins, by undertaking more particular acquaintance and commerce with the Spirit of God, a call from God's Providence, and extraordinary Commiſſion from Heaven, for thoſe things, which if the New Teſtament be Canonical, are evaporate from Hell; and ſo firſt leads captive ſilly women, (as Mahomet did his Wife) and then a whole Army of Janizaries into a War, to juſtifie and propagate ſuch deluſions, and put all to death that will not be their Proſelytes, is far enough from the Goſpel Spirit that lies viſible in the New Teſtament, (verbum vehiculum ſpiritûs, and the preaching of the Word διακονία πνεύματος) and is not infuſed by dream or whiſper, nor authorized by a melancholy, or phanatick phanſie; and ſo οὐκ οἶδε οἵου, knows not what kind, &c.

Pere Barnard. Copinger or Arthington.

In the third place, Elias was the great *precedent and example of ſharp unjudiciary procedure with Malefactors, which from the common ordinary awards on Criminals in that execution, || proceeded Trial, and the Malefactor ſuffered ἐπ' ἀυτοφώρῳ, without attending the formalities of Law.

* preſident

Of this kind, two Examples are by Mattathias cited, 1 Macab. ii. one of Phinees, ὃν τῷ ζηλῶσαι ζῆλον, that zeal'd a zeal, and in that, run thorough Zimri and Cozbi, and ſo (as the Captain once anſwered for the killing the drowſie Sentinel) reliquit quos invenit, found them in unclean embraces, and ſo left them: (And the variety of our interpretations in rendring of that paſſage in the Pſalm, Then ſtood up Phinehas and prayed, in the Old, and then ſtood up Phinehas and executed judgment, in the New Tranſlations, may perhaps give ſome account of that action of his, that upon Phinehas Prayer for God's direction what ſhould be done in that matter, God raiſed up him in an extraordinary manner to execute judgment on thoſe offenders.) And the other of Elias in the Text, and he with ſome addition, ὃν τῷ ζηλῶσαι ζῆλον νόμου, In zealing the zeal of the Law, called fire from Heaven upon thoſe that were ſent out from Ahazia, to bring him to him. And this fact of his (by God's anſwering his call, and the coming down of the fire upon them) was demonſtrated to come from God alſo, as much as the prediction of the Kings death, which was confirm'd by this means.

It may very probably be gueſt by Mattathias his words in that place, that there were no || precedents of the zelotick ſpirit in the Old Teſtament, but thoſe two; for among all the Catalogue of examples mentioned to his ſons, to enflame their zeal to the Law, he produceth no other; and 'tis obſervable, that though there be practices of this nature mentioned in the ſtory of the New Teſtament, the ſtoning of St. Stephen, of St. Paul at Iconium, &c. yet all of them practiſed by the Jews, and not one that can ſeem to be blameleſs, but that of Chriſt (who ſure had extraordinary power) upon the buyers and ſellers in the Temple; upon which the Apoſtles remembred the Pſamiſts Prophecy, ζῆλος κατέφαγε, the zeal of Gods houſe carried him to that act of νέμεσις, of indignation and puniſhment upon the tranſgreſſors. And what miſchief was done among the Jews by thoſe of that ſect, in Joſephus, that call'd themſelves by that name of Zelots, and withal, took upon them to be the ſaviours and preſervers of the City, but as it prov'd, the haſtners and precipitators of the deſtruction of that Kingdom, by caſting out, and killing the High-Prieſts firſt, and then the Nobles and chief men of the Nation, and ſo embaſing, and intimidating, and dejecting the hearts of all the people, that all was at length given up to their fury, Joſephus, and any of the learned that have converſed with the Jewiſh Writers will inſtruct the enquirer: And ever ſince, no very honourable notion had of ζῆλος in the New Teſtament; one of the fruits of the fleſh, Gal. v. of the Wiſdom that comes not from Heaven, Jam. iii. and in the ſame, πικρὸς ζῆλος, a bitter zeal, a gall that will imbitter all that come near it. The ſhort of it is, the putting any man to death, or inflicting other puniſhment upon any terms, but that of legal, perfectly legal proceſs; is the importance of a zelotick Spirit; as I remember in Maimonides, him that curſes God in the name of an Idol, the קנאים that meet him, kill him, i. e. the zelots permitted, it ſeems, if not authorized to do ſo. And this is the Spirit of Elias, that is of all others, moſt evidently reprehended and renounced by Chriſt. The Samaritans, no very ſacred perſons, added to their habitual conſtant guilts, at that time to deny common civility of entertainment to Chriſt himſelf; and the Diſciples asked whether they might not do what Elias had done, call for fire from Heaven upon them in that caſe; and Chriſt tells them, that the Goſpel-Spirit was of another complexion from that of Elias, ᾧ γραφεὶς ἐπλήμνησε, turn'd to them as he did to Peter, when he ſaid, Get thee behind me Satan; as to ſo many fiery Satanical-ſpirited men, and checkt them for that their furious zeal, with an οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου, &c. The leaſt I can conclude from hence is this, that they that put any to death, by any but perfectly legal proceſs; that draw the ſword upon any, but by the ſupream Magiſtrates command, are far enough from the Goſpel-Spirit, whatever * precedent they can produce to countenance them: And ſo if they be really, what they pretend, Chriſtians, οὐκ οἴδασι, they are in a prodigious miſtake, or ignorance; They know not what Spirit they are of.

* preſident

Yet farther it is obſervable of Elias, that he did execrate and curſe, call for judgments from Heaven upon mens perſons; and that temper of mind in the parallel, you may diſtribute into two ſorts; Firſt, in paſſing judgments upon mens future eſtates, the cenſorious reprobating Spirit, which though we find it not in Elias at this time, yet is a conſequent of the Prophetick Office, and part of the burthen received from the Lord, and layed upon thoſe guilty perſons, concerning whom it hath pleaſed Almighty God to reveal that ſecret of his Cabinet; but then this rigor cannot, without ſin, be pretended to by any elſe; for in the blackeſt inſtances, charity believes all things, and hopes all things, and even in this ſenſe, covers the multitudes of ſins. Now this ſo culpable ‖ an inſolent humour, raſhly to paſs a condemning ſentence, was diſcernible in the Phariſees, (this Publican, whoſe profeſſion and trade is forbidden by that Law, and this people that know not that Law, is curſed) ſo likewiſe in the Montaniſts, (nos ſpirituales, and all others animales and Pſychici) ſo in the Romaniſts (who condemn all but themſelves) and in all thoſe generally whoſe pride and malice conjoined, (moſt directly contrary to the Goſpel-Spirit of humility and charity) doth (prepare them one, and the other) inflame them to triumph, and glut themſelves in this ſpiritual aſſaſſinacy, this deepeſt dye of blood, the murthering of Souls; which becauſe they cannot do it really, they endeavour in effigie, anathematize, and ſlaughter them here in this other Calvary, the place for the crucifying of reputations, turning them out of the Communion of their charity, though not of bliſs; and I am confident, reject many whom the Angels entertain more hoſpitably. Another part of this curſing Spirit there is, more peculiarly Elias's, that of praying (and ſo calling) for curſes on mens perſons; and that being upon the enemies of God, and thoſe appearing to Elias a Prophet to be ſuch, might be then lawful to him, and others like him, David perhaps, &c. in the Old Teſtament, but is wholly diſliked and renounced by Chriſt under this ſtate of higher Diſcipline, to which Chriſtians are deſigned by him in the New. I ſay, not only for that which concerns our own enemies, for that is clear, When thine enemy hungreth, feed him; and ſomewhat like that in the Old Teſtament, When thine enemies Ox, &c. But I extend it even to the enemies of God himſelf, and that I need not do upon other evidence than is afforded from the Text; the Samaritans were enemies of Chriſt himſelf, and were barbarous and inhumane to his perſon, and they muſt not be curſt by Diſciples. And he that can now curſe even wicked men, who are more diſtantly the enemies of God, can call for (I ſay not, diſcomfiture upon their devices, for that is charity to them, to keep them from being ſuch unhappy Creatures as they would be, contrivers of ſo much miſchief to the world; but) Plagues and Ruine upon their perſons, (which is abſolutely the voice of Revenge, that ſulphur-vapor of Hell) he that delighteth in the miſery of any part of Gods Image (and ſo uſurps upon that wretched quality, of which we had thought, the Devil had gotten the Monopoly (that of ἐπιχαιρεκακία, joying in the Brother's miſery) but now ſee with horror, is got looſe out of that Pit to rave among us;) he that would miſchief, if it were in his power, and, now it is not, by unprofitable wiſhes of execration, ſhews his good will toward it, is quite contrary to the Goſpel-ſpirit, and ſo οὐκ οἶδε οἵου, he knows not, &c.

‖ and Laſtly, Elias was not only rapt to Heaven, but moved on Earth in a Fiery Chariot, ζηλώσας ζῆλον, ſaith the Author of the Book of Maccabees; his zeal had fire and fire again (ζηλόω comes from ζέω an exceſſive fervency) and agreeable to his temper is his appetite; he deſires nothing but fire upon his adverſaries, calls for fire, and fire, and fire, as you may ſee it in the ſtory: And the Goſpel-Spirit is directly contrary to this, an allaying, quenching ſpirit, a gentle lambent flame, that ſits on the Apoſtles heads to enlighten and adorn; by its vital warmth, expelling partial hectick heats, and burning Feveriſh diſtempers, that ſpiritual πύρωσις mentioned in the Goſpel; and putting in the place, a cool, ſedate, and equable temper, to have peace with all men, and chiefly with our ſelves, φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, (an admirable phraſe in St. Paul) to uſe as much diligence to reſtore the Earth to peace again, as all the wind, or air, or perhaps fire in its bowels (I mean, ambitious, contentious men) do, to ſet it a ſhaking; and he that will not contribute his utmoſt to quench thoſe flames; that will not joyfully fully do any thing, that may not directly, or by consequence include sin, toward the extinguishing a fire thus miserably gotten into the veins and bowels of a calamitous Kingdom, is far enough from the Gospel-Spirit, and so οὐκ οἶδεν οἷου, he knows not, &c.

I shall not clearly give you the Gospel-Spirit, unless I proceed from its opposition to Elias his act, to that other, the opposition to the motion of those Disciples, considered in the particular circumstances. The case stood thus, Christ was going up to Jerusalem, thereupon the Samaritans receive him not; the Disciples will have fire from Heaven upon those Samaritans. Jerusalem was at that time, the only proper place of God's worship, and may note to us as an embleme, the true established Protestant Religion of this Kingdom: The Samaritans were great enemies to this, enemies to Jerusalem; being, first, Hereticks in Religion, took in the Assyrian Idols into the worship of the true God; they feared the Lord, and served their own gods, as it is in the story, and continued their wont when they turned Christians, make up the first sort of Hereticks in Epiphanius his Catalogue. Secondly, They were Schismaticks in an eminent manner, set up a new separation by themselves, on Mount Gerizim: And farther yet, in the third place, pretended to the only purity and antiquity, they lived where Jacob once lived; and therefore, though Assyrians by extraction, they boast they are Jacob's seed; and pretend more antiquity for that Schism of theirs, because Jacob once worshipped in that Mountain, than they think can be shewed for the Temple at Jerusalem, which was but in Solomon's time, of a later structure: Just as they which pretended, though never so falsly, that they were of Christ, have still despised and separated from all others as Novellists, which walked in the Apostles steps and practices; and so, Samaritans under guilts enough: First, Haters of Jerusalem; Secondly, Hereticks; Thirdly, Separatists; Fourthly, Pretenders (though without all reason) to the first antiquity, and so arrogant Hypocrites too: And fifthly, beyond all, prodigious, but still confident Disputers; and yet, sixthly, one higher step than all these, Contemners and haters of all, even of Christ himself, on this only quarrel, because he was a friend to Jerusalem, and looked as if he were a going thither, as if he had some favor to the established Religion of the Land. I wish this passage did not hitherto parallel it self; but seeing it doth too illustriously to be denied, or disguised, I shall imagine that that which follows, may do so too.

All this together, was temptation to two honest Disciples, to think fire from Heaven a but reasonable reward for such Samaritans; and having flesh and bloud about them, compounded with Piety, You will not much wonder at them, that they were wrought on by the temptation; and yet this very thought of theirs, the κύριε θέλεις, is presently checked by Christ, as being against the Gospel-Spirit; you know not what spirit you are of. Haters of the Church, Hereticks, Schismaticks, Hypocrites, Irrational Pretenders, Enemies, Contumelious, even to Christ himself, must not presently be assigned the Devils portion, the ὑποφάγεσαι ταμεῖα, may be yet capable of some mercy, some humanity, not instantly devoted to be sacrifices to our fury. The Gospel-spirit will have thoughts of peace, of reconcilableness toward them. And let me beseech God first, and then you, Right Honorable; God that he indue and inspire your hearts with this piece of the Gospel-spirit, so seasonable to your present consultations: And you, that you would not reject my Prayers to God, but open your hearts to receive the return of them, and not imitate, even the Disciples of Christ, in that they are Boanerges; but stay till the cool of the day, till you have them in a calmer temper, when Christ's Word and Doctrine hath stilled those billows, as once he did the other tempestuous Element. It was ‖ Antonius his way to be revenged on his enemies, μὴ ἐξομοιῶσθαι not to imitate them; whatever he did. And this was but an Essay or obscure shadow of the Christian Magnanimity, that goes for poverty of spirit in the World, but proceeding from the right principle of unshaken patience, of constant, unmovable meekness, of design to be like our Royal Master-sufferer. (Father forgive them that crucifie me, and go and preach the doctrine of the Kingdom to them, after they have crucified me. And you know all, we Ministers ever since are but Ambassadors of Christ, to ingrate, crucifying enemies, Praying them in Christs name and stead, that they would be reconciled, that they that have done the wrong, will vouchsafe to be friends.) What is it, but that eminent piece of Gospel-spirit, which they that can be perswaded to part with, for all the sweetness that thirst of Revenge can promise or pretend to bring in unto them, are unhappily ignorant of the richest Jewel, that ever came within their reach; They know not, &c.

I have as yet given you the Gospel-spirit, in one colour or notion; that of its opposition to Elias first, and then to the Boanerges. It will be necessary to add somewhat of the Positive consideration of it, though that must be fetched from other Scriptures. And this will be but necessary to this Text, because, that which is here mentioned, is the πνεῦμα spirit in the extent, not only that one part of it that respected the present action; where (though any one eminent defect, that particularly wherein those Disciples offended, were destructive to the Gospel-spirit, Malum ex quolibet defectu, yet) all the several branches of it, are required to integrate or make up the Gospel-spirit, Bonum ex essentiâ integra. And what these branches are, I cannot better direct you, than by putting you in mind of these few severals. First, Christ's badg or cognizance, By this shall all men know, that you are my Disciples, if you love one another: Not if one opinion *, but of love. Add, Nunquam leti situs, &c. as Jews rend Garments at Blasphemy; so we at Uncharitableness. Secondly, Christ's legacy, Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Thirdly, Christ's copy, Learn of me; what's beyond all his other perfections, I am meek. Fourthly, The Nature of that Wisdom which cometh from above, Jam. iii. First pure, then peaceable. Fifthly, The quality of the fruits of the Spirit, in St. Paul, Gal. v. Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, &c. Sixthly, The gallantry of meekness in St. Peter, Ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Seventhly, Titus's charge, that all Christians are to be put in mind of, Tit. iii. 1. To be subject to Principalities, to obey Magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, ἄμαχοι no fighters, but gentle, shewing all meekness to all men. Things, that it seems, nothing but Christianity could infuse; For we our selves were sometimes fools, disobedient, &c. But after the kindness and love of God our Saviour appeared, then, room for this Spirit.

* Nazar. Sosp.

I cannot give you a readier Landskip to present them all to your view together, than that excellent Sermon of Christ upon the Mount, that ἄκρον καὶ κορυφὴ φιλοσοφίας, as Chrysostom calls it, That top-pitch of Divine Philosophy, worthy to be imprinted in every mans heart; and of which, he that hath not been a pondering ſtudent, and reſolved to regulate his practice by it, as much as his Faith by the Apoſtles Creed; yea, and to lay down his life a Martyr of that Doctrine, though he hath all Faith, I cannot promiſe my ſelf much of his Chriſtianity. If you will have the Brachygraphy of that, the Manual picture that may be ſure, either in words or ſenſe, never to depart from your boſom, but remain your conſtant Phylactery or Preſervative, from the danger of all ungoſpel ſpirits, then take the Beatitudes in the front of it: And among them (that I may, if it be poſſible, bring the whole Iliads into a Nutſhel) thoſe that import immediately our duty towards men; for in that the Goſpel-ſpirit eſpecially conſiſts, encreaſing our love to Brethren; whoſe fleſh Chriſt now aſſumed, and in whoſe intereſts he hath a moſt immediate concern. And if you mark, in the Chapter following, all the improvements mentioned, except only that of ſwearing, belong to the commands of the Second Table. And then, the integral parts of this Goſpel-ſpirit, will be theſe four conſtantly, Humility, meekneſs, mercifulneſs, peaceableneſs, and if need be, ſuffering too: Every of theſe four brought in to us, with a checker or lay of duty towards God, of mourning betwixt humility and meekneſs, hungring and thirſting after Righteouſneſs, betwixt meekneſs, and mercifulneſs; purity of heart betwixt mercifulneſs, and peaceableneſs, and perſecution, and reproaches, and πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, every Rabſhakeh Topick of railing Rhetorick vomited out upon us (Bleſſed perſecution, bleſſed reproaches, when our holding to Chriſt, is that which brings them all upon us) the conſummation and crown of all.

Having but named you theſe ſeverals, Humility, meekneſs, mercifulneſs, peaceableneſs, and if need be, patience of all ſtripes, both of hand and tongue; the ſparkling gems in this Jewel, bleſſed ingredients in this Goſpel-ſpirit, you will certainly reſolve it full time for me to deſcend to my ſecond particular, at firſt propoſed, That ſome Diſciples there were, ſome prime Profeſſors do not know the kind of that ſpirit, οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου, You know not what kind of ſpirit you are of.

James and John, it appears, were ſuch Diſciples, and that, after they had been for ſome competent time followers and auditors of his Sermons; ſo far an eaſier thing it is, to leave their worldly condition, and follow Chriſt, than to leave their carnal prejudices and ignorances, and obey him; eſpecially thoſe that had ſuch hold in their paſſions; (as revenge, they ſay, is the pleaſingeſt piece of carnality in the heap;) cheaper to hear his Goſpel-Sermons, than to practiſe them. And you will leſs wonder at theſe two, when you ſee that St. Peter himſelf, after a longer ſpace of proficiency, in that ſchool, even at the time of Chriſts attachment, had not yet put off that ignorance, ὁ θερμὸς Πέτρος, ſay the Fathers, Peter was of an hot Conſtitution, and Chriſts Doctrine had not yet got down deep enough into his heart, to allay or cool him: Nondum concipiens in ſe Evangelicam patientiam illam traditam ſibi à Chriſto, &c. ſaith Origen; that Goſpel-patience and peaceableneſs that Chriſt had commended to him, he had not, it ſeems, yet received into an honeſt heart, & ſo he makes no ſcruple to cut off Malchus's ear, when he was provoked to it. I have heard of a Fryar, that could confeſs that Malchus ſignified a King, and yet after made no ſcruple to acknowledg him in that notion, to be the High-Prieſts Servant; And ſecondly, to juſtifie St. Peters act, and avoid Chriſts reprehenſion, by ſaying that he was chid, not for doing ſo much, but for doing no more; not for cutting off his Ear, but for not directing the blow better, to the cutting off his Head: And how far this Fryar's barbarous Divinity hath been juſtified of late by the Writings of ſome, (who will yet perſwade us, that Chriſt did not reprehend St. Peter for that act) and by the actions of others, I have little joy to repreſent unto you; God knows, I love not to widen breaches; only I am ſure, the Fathers are clear; that though formerly St. Peter were ignorant, and from that ignorance and zeal together, ran into that fury, yet Chriſt μεταρυθμίζων αὐτὸν εἰς εὐαγγελικὴν πολιτείαν, deſirous to tune him to that ſweet harmoniacal Goſpel temper, tells him he muſt not uſe the ſword, (he having no Commiſſion, eſpecially againſt thoſe that have it, though they uſe it never ſo ill) κἂν τὸν θεὸν δοκῇ τις ἐκδικεῖν, though it were to avenge even God himſelf. And having given you theſe proofs of this ignorance in three Diſciples, I think 'tis poſſible I might extend it to the reſt of them, that they were in this particular ignorant too, (as it ſeems they were in many other things) till the Holy Ghoſt came according to promiſe, to teach them all things, and to bring to their remembrance, (to thaw their memories, that the words of Chriſts, like the voice in Plutarch that had been frozen, might at length become audible; or as Plato's Precepts were learned by his Scholars, when they were young, but never underſtood till they were Men of full age, and tamer paſſions:) I ſay, to bring to their remembrance whatſoever Chriſt had in Perſon ſaid unto them. And I wiſh to God, it were uncharitable to charge this ignorance ſtill upon Diſciples, after ſo many ſolemn Embaſſies of the Holy Ghoſt unto us, to teach us, and remember us of this Duty. Nay, I wiſh, that now after he hath varied the way of appearing, after he hath ſat upon us in ſomewhat a more direful ſhape, not of a Dove, but Vultur (tearing even the fleſh from us, on purpoſe, that when we have leſs of that carnal Principle left, there might be ſome heed taken to this Goſpel-Spirit) there were yet ſome proficiency obſervable among us, ſome heavings of the εὐαγγελικὴ πολιτεία, that hath ſo long been a working in the World; I am confident, there were no ſuch way of deſigning a proſperous, flouriſhing, durable Kingdom, as to found its policy upon Goſpel-Principles, and maintain it by the Goſpel-Spirit. I have authority to think, that was the meaning of that Prophecy of Chriſts turning ſwords into plough-ſhares, not that he ſhould actually bring peace, he tells you, that it would prove quite contrary; but becauſe the fabrick of the Goſpel is ſuch, that would all men live by it, all wars and diſquiets would be baniſhed out of the World. It was a madneſs in Machiavel to think otherwiſe, and yet the unhappineſs of the World, that Sir Thomas Moor's Book that deſigned it thus, ſhould be then called Utopia, and that title to this hour remain perfect Prophecy, no place to be found where this Dove may reſt her foot, where this Goſpel-Spirit can find reception. No not among Diſciples themſelves, thoſe that profeſs to adventure their lives to ſet up Chriſts Kingdom in its purity; none ſo void of this knowledg, as they. Whether we mean a ſpeculative or practical knowledg of it, few arrived to that height or vacancy of conſidering whether there be ſuch a Spirit, or no. Some ſo in love with nature, that old Pelagian Idol, reſolve that ſufficient to bring them to Heaven, if they but allow their brethren what they can claim by that grand Character, love of Friends, thoſe of the ſame perſwaſion, thoſe that have obliged them; they have Natures leave, and ſo are reſolved to have Chriſts, to hate, purſue to death whom they can phanſie their Enemies. And I wish, some were but thus of Agrippa's Religion, ἐν ὀλίγῳ χρίστιανοι, so near being Christians, as nature it self would advance them; that gratitude, honour to Parents, natural affection, were not become malignant qualities, disclaim'd as conscientiously, as obedience and justice, and honouring of betters. Others again so devouted to Moses's Law, the Old Testament Spirit, that whatever they find practised there, they have sufficient authority to transcribe. And 'tis observable, that they which think themselves little concerned in Old Testament Duties, (which have a long time past for unregenerate morality, that faith hath perfectly out-dated) are yet zealous Asserters of the Old Testament Spirit, all their pleas for the present resistance fetch'd from them, yea, and confest by some, that this liberty was hidden by God in the first ages of the Christian Church, but now revealed we cannot hear where, yet, but in the Old Testament, and from thence a whole CIX. Psalm full of Curses against God's Enemies and theirs, (and generally those pass for synonymous terms) the special devotion they are exercised in; and if ever they come within their reach, no more mercy for them, than for so many of the seven nations, in rooting out of which, a great part of their Religion consists. I wish there were not another Prodigy also abroad under the name of the Old Testament Spirit, the opinion of the necessity of Sacrifice, real bloody Sacrifice, (even such as was but seldom heard of among Indians, and Scythians themselves) such Sacrifices, of which the Canibal Cyclops Feasts may seem to have been but attendants, (furnished with the τομαὶ and σφαγαὶ, that come from such savage Altars) sacrificing of Men, of Christians, of Protestants, as good as any in the World, to expiate for the blood shed by Papists in Queen Mary's days; and some Prophets ready to avow, that without such Sacrifice, there is no remission, no averting of judgments from the Land. What is this, but like the Pharisees, To build and garnish the Sepulchres of the Prophets, and say, That if they had lived in their Fathers days, they would never have partaken of the blood of the Prophets, and yet go on to fill up the measure of their Fathers? the very men to whom Christ directs thee, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest, in the present tense; a happy turn, if but the Progeny of those Murtherers, and what can then remain, but the, Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, irreversible destruction upon the Land. A third sort there is again, that have so confined the Gospel to Promises, and a fourth so perswaded that the Unum necessarium is to be of right perswasions in Religion; i. e. of those that every such man is of, (for he that did not think his own the truest, would sure be of them no longer) that betwixt those two popular deceits, that of the Fiduciary, and this of the Solifidian, the Gospel-spirit, is not conceived to consist in doing any thing; and so still, those practical Graces, Humility, Meekness, Mercifulness, Peaceableness, and Christian Patience, are very handsomly superseded; that one Moses's Rod, called Faith, is turned Serpent, and hath devoured all these for rods of the Magicians; and so still you see men sufficiently armed and fortified against the Gospel-spirit. All that is now left us, is not to exhort, but weep in secret, not to dispute, but pray for it, that God will at last give us eyes to discern this treasure put into our hands by Christ, which would yet like a whole Navy and Fleet of Plate, be able to recover the fortune and reputation of this bankrupt Island, fix this floating Delos, to restore this broken shipwrakt Vessel to harbour and safety, this whole Kingdom to peace again. Peace! seasonable, instant peace, the only remedy on earth to keep this whole Land from being perfect Vastation, perfect Africk, of nothing but wild and Monster; and the Gospel-spirit, that Christ came to preach, and exemplifie, and plant among men, the only way imaginable to restore that peace. Lord, that it might at length break forth among us! the want of it, is certainly the Authour of all the miseries we suffer under; and that brings me to the third and last particular, That this ignorance of the Gospel-spirit, is apt to betray Christians to unsafe, unjustifiable enterprizes: You that would have fire from Heaven, do it upon this one ignorance, You know not, &c.

It were too sad, and too long a task, to trace every of our evils home to the original; every of the fiends amongst us, to the mansion in the place of darkness, peculiar to it: If I should, it would be found too true, what Du Plesse is affirmed to have said to Languet, as the reason why he would not write the story of the Civil Wars of France, That if he were careful to observe the causes, and honest to report them, he must Hound the Fox to a Kennel, which it was not willing to acknowledge; drive such an action to the Brothel-house, that came speciously and pretendedly out of a Church: find that to be in truth, the animosity of a Rival, that took upon it to be the quarrel for Religion; or as in Polybius oft, the πρόφασις to be a thing very distant from the αἰτία, the colour from the cause.

In the mean, it will not be a peculiar mark of odium on the imbroilers of this present State and Church, to lay it at their doors, which I am confident never failed to own the like effects in all other Christian States, the Ignorance (i. e. in the Scripture phrase, Not Practising) of those Christian Rules which the Gospel-spirit presents us with.

I might tire you but with the names of those effects that flow constantly from this Ignorance; such are, usurping the Power that belongs not to us, which Humility would certainly disclaim; such, resisting the Powers under which we are placed by God, to which Meekness would never be provoked; such, the judging and censuring mens thoughts and intentions any further than their actions inforce, most unreconcileable with the forgiving part of mercifulness; such, the doing any kind of evil, that the greatest or publickest good may come, designing of Rapine or Blood to the sanctifiedst end, which St. Paul and Peaceableness would never endure; such Impatience of the Cross, shaking a Kingdom to get it off from our own shoulders, and put it on other men, diametrally opposite to the suffering and patience of a Christian.

To retire from this Common, to the Inclosure, and to go no farther than the Texts suggests to me, To call fire from Heaven upon Samaritans, is here acknowledged the effect of the ἀγνοία, the want of knowledge, or consideration of the quality of their spirit.

And what may that signifie to us? Why, fire you know is the embleme of a Civil War, which is called a πύρωσις, a combustion, or, being farther broken out into flames, a conflagration; and I conceive should be so rendred in that place of St. Peter, where we read the Fiery Trial.

Now fire, you know, belongs moſt naturally to Hell; and therefore when the fire and brimſtone came down upon Sodom, the phanſie of the Fathers calls it Gehennam de Cœlo: and ſo generally the Civil Fire, the Combuſtion in a State, its original is from thence too; part of that wiſdom that is not from above. Theſe Tares ſo apt for burning, are ſowed by Satan, the Enemy-man. From whence come Wars and ſtrivings among you, πολεμοὶ ἐν μαχαὶ, Wars of all ſizes, are they not from your luſts, that war in your fleſh? ſaith St. James. The luſts from the Fleſh, but the War from Hell, the Devil, the Spiritus ſufflans that ſets them a warring. Believe it, they would not be able to do it in this manner, prove ſuch fiery boutefeus, if they were not inflamed from beneath, if they were not ſet on fire by Hell. And therefore to call fire from Heaven, to intitle God or Heaven to that fire, is to do both of them great injury; nay, though it be on Samaritans, that are not ſo friendly to Chriſt as might be expected: and ſo, to call fire from Heaven upon Samaritans, is (by accommodation at leaſt) to pretend God, or Heaven, or Religion, for the cauſe of War, which of all things hath leaſt to do it, if the Goſpel-ſpirit may have leave to be conſidered. Indeed, very few kinds of War there are, that will be juſtified by Goſpel-principles. It was truly ſaid, (though by a rough Soldier) That if the Lord of Hoſts were permited to ſit in the Council of War, there would ſoon be a ceſſation of Arms, and diſbanding of Armies: Though that all War is not unlawful, will appear by John Baptiſts addreſs to the Soldiers, who gave rules to regulate their Militia, but did not diſband them; and the example of the Convert Centurion, a Centurion ſtill after his Converſion: Where yet this ſtill remains as an infallible reſolution, that Wars are to be uſed like the Regia Medicamenta, never but when the Phyſician ſees there is no other means available; never upon the wantonneſs of the Patient, but command of the Phyſician, and never but when peace appears to be impoſſible; for if it be poſſible, the precept is of force, Follow peace with all men. And then to ſhed the blood of Chriſtians, when blood may be ſpared, what an hideous thing it is, you may gueſs by that Emperor, that having beheaded a Chriſtian, was by the ſight of a fiſhes head that came to his Table ſo aſtoniſhed, phanſying, that it was the head of that ſlaughtered Chriſtian gaping on him, that he ſcarce recovered to his wits; or of that poor penitent David in his pathetick expreſſion, Deliver me from blood guiltineſs, O Lord: a wonderful deliverance, it ſeems, to get clear from that. And what an Ocean of fiſhes heads, may appear one day gaping on ſome Men, I have no joy to tell: Deliver us from blood-guiltineſs, O God.

I have done with my third particular alſo, and have now no more to importune you with, but my requeſts to you, and to Heaven for you, that the time paſt of all our lives, be ſufficient to have ſpent in the will of the Gentiles, after the dictates of that Heathen ſpirit, the natural or Jewiſh principles: that you be content at length to go up to the Mount with Chriſt, and be auditors of his Sermon; to that other Mount with the ſame Chriſt, and be transfigured after him to that ſpirit of humility, ſpirit of meekneſs, ſpirit of all kind of mercifulneſs; that peaceable, patient ſpirit, which will give you a comfortable paſſage through this valley of Achor here; yea, though it prove a Red Sea of Blood; and will fit you for a Crown, that true Olympick Olive Crown; the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, an eternal weight of glory hereafter. Which God of his infinite mercy grant, thorough the merit and promiſe of his Son.

To whom with the Father, &c.

SERMON VI.

EZEK. XVIII. 31.

For why will you die?

SINCE the Devil was turned out of Heaven, all his care and counsels have been imployed to keep us from coming thither; and finding Gods love very forward and increasing toward us, he hath set us upon all ways of enmity and opposition against him. The first warlike exploit he put us upon, was the building of Babel, when man having fortified himself, and the arm of flesh grown stout, began to reproach and challenge, and even assault the God of Heaven. But the success of that boldness cost so dear, that we have ever since been discouraged from such open proud attempts. Our malice and despight hath kept in somewhat more close and secretly, hath retired and setled in the Soul; the inward man hath ever since erected its Babel; proud and high imaginations out-bidding Heaven and God. These were a long while forged in the Brain, when instead of the acknowledgment of one true God, all Monsters of Atheism filled the understanding, sometimes with a multitude and shole of gods; sometimes deprived it quite, and left it utterly void of any: But now at last, the Devil and all the Atheism in the World, being at last exorcised and banished out of the Brain, by the evidence and power of truth, hath like the Legion, Luke viii. which being cast out of the man, had leave to enter the Swine, fixt violently, and taken possession, and intrenched it self in the brutish bestial part, the Affections. All the swellings, and tumors, and ulcers, that ever shewed themselves in any portion of the circumference, are now retired into the center: All the Atheism or Heresie that ever soared or floated in the Brain, or surface of the Soul, is now sunk into the heart; and there the Devil is seated at ease, there to set up and fortifie, and contemn God for ever. So that in brief, the issue of all, is this, there is an infinite opposition and thwarting, a profest combate and bandying of forces betwixt the will of Man, and the Will of God; God doing, in a kind, his best on one side, and Man on the other: God wonderfully willing and desirous that we should live; man most perversely wilful to his own destruction.

This is a truth of a most dismal importance, that concerns you to be instructed in, and will not be more powerfully inforced on you from any place of Scripture, than the Text which I have read to you, Why will ye die? It is God speaks it, and with an infinite emphasis and ☞, to note his passion and affectionateness in desiring our good, and willing that we should live. And then secondly, Why will you die? Mans resoluteness and stubborn wretchlesness towards his own ruine, rushing or tumbling as in a præcipice violently to Hell, like the swine; which formerly our Wills were resembled to, Luke viii. 33. Luke viii. 33. running full speed down a steep place into the Lake. And these are like to prove the parts of my insuing discourse; First, Gods willingness that we should be saved; Secondly, Mans wilfulness toward his own damnation. And of these plainly to your hearts, not your ears; not so much to advance your knowledge, which though it could be raised to the tallest pitch, might yet possibly bear ‖ thee company to Hell: but rather to increase your zeal, to work some one good inclination in you, to perswade you to be content to suffer your selves to be saved; to be but so tame, as to be taken by Heaven, that now even besieges you. And with my affectionate Prayers for success to this design, I will presume of your ears and patience, and begin first with the first, God's willingness that we should live, Why will ye die? ‖ you Amongst all other prejudices and mis-conceits that our phansie can entertain of God, I conceive not any so frequent or injurious to his Attributes, as to imagin him to deal double with Man-kind in his Word; seriously to will one thing, and to make shew of another; to deliver himself in one phrase, and reserve himself in another. It were an unnecessary, officious undertaking, to go about to be God's Advocate, to apologize for him, to vindicate his actions, or in Job's phrase, to accept the person of God. Our proceedings will be more Christian, if we take for a ground or principle, that scorns to be beholding to an Artist for a proof, that every word of God is an argument of his Will; every action an interpreter of his Word. So that howsoever he reveals himself, either in his Scripture, or his Works, so certainly he wisheth and intends to us in his secret Counsels. Every protestation of his love, every indignation at our stubbornness, every mercy confer'd on us, and that not insidiously, but with an intent to do us good, are but ways and methods to express his Will: are but rayes, and emissions, and gleams of that eternal Love, which he exhibits to the World. Now there is no way to demonstrate this willingness of God that we should live, à priori, or by any thing either in God or us, preexistent as the cause of it, unless it be his love, which yet is rather its genus than its cause, somewhat of larger extent, though otherwise co-incident with it. The more vulgar powerful convincing way, is to inforce it to your hearts by its effects, and those divers and familiar: some few of which we will insist on.

And first, and principally, the sending of his Son; 1 John iv. 9. In this was manifest the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the World, that we might live through him. 1 John. iv 9. Mark God's love to us in sending his Son, that we might live through him; his love, the cause of this Mission; this Mission the manifestation and argument of that love; and that we live, the end of both. Had God been any way inclined to rigour or severity, there had needed no great skill, no artificial contrivance for a fair plausible execution of it; It had been but passing us by, the taking no notice of us, the leaving of us in our blood, Ezek. xvi. and then, Hell had presently opened its mouth upon us. We were all cast out in the open field, to the loathing of our persons, in the day that we Ezek. xvi.

Verſe 5. were born, Ezek. xvi. 5. ready for all the Vultures infernal to fix on; that hideous Old Teſtament, Eccleſ. xiv. 12. διαθήκη ᾅδου, Eccleſ. xiv. 12. The Teſtament of Hell, or in the mercifulleſt conſtruction, the Covenant of Grace had paſſed on us, naturally then (what infidelity now makes us) condemned already; our damnation ſealed to us with our life, born to no other inheritance, but Hell: as if the Devil had out
Luke x. 18. of policy faln before Adam, or rather deſcended, and that in poſt, like lightning, Luke x. 18. leſt if his journey from Heaven, had been to have been performed after, ſome other Creature ſhould have intercepted him of his prey. But God's Bowels were inlarged above the ſize, wider than either the covetous gates of Hell, or that horrid yawning head that is all mouth. 'Twas not within the Devil's skill to fear, or ſuſpect what a way of mercy and deliverance God had found out for us. Somewhat he underſtood by the event, the decay of his Prophetick Arts, becoming now his Oracle; and even his ſilence growing vocal to him: But all this could not declare the Myſtery at large; when Chriſt was born, he would have been rid of him betimes, muſters all his forces, Phariſees and People, Herods and Pilates, Rome and Jeruſalem, and all the friends he had in the World, to make away with him; and yet when he was juſt come to the puſh, to the conſummation of his Plot, he was afraid to act
Ep. ad Phil. it; as in the Epiſtle aſcribed to Ignatius the Martyr, and directed to the Philippians, 'tis obſerved, that whilſt he was at a pretty diſtance, ἐσπευσε γενέσθαι ταχὺν, the Devil haſtned the ſtructure of Chriſts Croſs, as much as he could; ſet Judas and all the Artificers of Hell about the work; μέλλοντα δὲ γίνεσθαι, but when all was even ready, Chriſt for the Croſs, and the Croſs for Chriſt, then he began to put in demurs; ſhews Judas an Halter, frights Pilat's Wife in a dream, ſhe could not ſleep in quiet for him; and in ſumm, uſes all means poſſible to prevent Chriſts Crucifixion. Yet this, ſaith Ignatius, not out of any repentance, or regret of Conſcience, but only being ſtarted with the foreſight of his own ruine by this means: Chriſt's ſuffering being in effect the deſtruction of his Kingdom, his death our Triumph over Hell, and his Croſs our Trophy. By this you may diſcern what a miracle of God's love was this giving of his Son; the conceiving of which, was above the Devil's reach, and wherein he was providentially ingaged, and (if we may ſo ſpeak) θεοφορέμενος, carried blindfold by God, to be an Inſtrument of his own ruine, and in a kind, be a Co-worker of our Salvation. Not to inlarge or expatiate upon Circumſtances; Man being thus involved in a neceſſity of damnation, and no remedy within the ſphere, either of his power or conceit, left to reſcue him; (nay, as ſome have been ſo bold to ſay, that God himſelf had no other means, beſides this, in his Store-houſe of miracles, to ſave us, without intrenching on ſome one of his Attributes) for God then to find out a courſe that we could never prompt him to, being ſolicited to it by nothing in us, but our ſins and miſery, and without any interpoſition, any further conſultation or demur, to part with a piece of himſelf, to redeem us; Bra-
Iſa. liii. chium Domini, The Arm of the Lord, as Iſaiah calls our Saviour, Iſa. liii. Nay, to ſend down his very Bowels amongſt us, to witneſs his compaſſion; to ſatisfie for us by his own death, and attach himſelf for our liberty; to undergo ſuch hard conditions, rather than be forced to a cheap ſeverity; and, that he might appear to love his Enemies, to hate his Son: In brief, to fulfil the work without any aid required from us, and make Salvation ready to our hands, as Manna is called in the ſixth of Wiſdom, ἕτοιμος ἄρτος ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ, Bread baked, and ſent down ready from Heaven, Wiſd. xvi. 20. to drop it in our mouths, and exact nothing of us, but to accept of it: this is an act of love and ſingleneſs, that all the malice we carry about us, knows not how to ſuſpect: ſo far from poſſibility of a treacherous intent, or double dealing, that if I were an Heathen, nay a Devil, I would beſtow no other appellation on the Chriſtians God, than what the Author of the Book of Wiſdom doth ſo often, φιλόψυχος, the friend, or the lover of Souls. But this is a vulgar, though precious ſubject, and therefore I ſhall no longer inſiſt on it. Only before I leave it, would I could ſee the effect of it expreſt in our Souls, as well as acknowledged in our looks; your hearts raviſhed as thorowly as your brains convinc'd; your breaſts as open to value and receive this ſuperlative mercy, as your tongues to confeſs it; then could I triumph over Hell and death, and ſcoff them out of countenance; then ſhould the Devil be reduced to his old pittance, confined to an empty corner of the World; and ſuffer as much by the ſolitarineſs, as darkneſs of his abode; all his engines and arts of torment ſhould be buſied upon himſelf, and his whole exerciſe to curſe Chriſt for ever, that hath thus deprived him of Aſſociates. But alas! we are too ſollicitous in the Devil's behalf, careful to furniſh him with Companions, to keep him warm in the midſt of fire; 'tis to be feared, we ſhall at laſt thruſt him out of his Inheritance. 'Tis a probable argument that God deſires our Salvation, becauſe that Hell, whereſoever it is, (whether at the Center of the Earth, or Concave of the Moon) muſt needs be far leſs than Heaven; and that makes us ſo beſiege the gate, as if we feared we ſhould find no room there. We begin our journey betimes, leſt we ſhould be foreſtall'd, and had rather venture a throng or crowd in Hell, than to expect that glorious liberty of the Sons of God. 'Tis to be feared, that at the day of Judgment, when each Body comes to accompany its Soul in torment, Hell muſt be let out, and inlarge its territories, to receive its Gueſts. Beloved, there is not a Creature here that hath reaſon to doubt, but Chriſt was ſent to die for him, and by that death hath purchaſed his right to life. Only do but come in, do but ſuffer your ſelves to live, and Chriſt to have died; do not uncrucifie Chriſt, by crucifying him again by your unbelief; do not diſclaim the Salvation, that even claims right and title to you; and then, the Angels ſhall be as full of joy to ſee you in Heaven, as God is willing, nay, deſirous to bring you thither; and Chriſt as ready to beſtow that Inheritance upon you at his ſecond coming, as at his firſt to purchaſe it. Nothing but Infidelity reſtrains Chriſts ſufferings, and confines them to a few. Were but this one Devil caſt out of the World, I ſhould be ſtraight of Origens Religion, and preach unto you Univerſal Catholick Salvation.

A ſecond Argument of God's good meaning towards us, of his willingneſs that we ſhould live, is the calling of the Gentiles, the diſpatching of Poſts and Heralds over the whole ignorant Heathen World, and giving them notice of this treaſure of Chriſt's blood. Do but obſerve what a degree of prophaneneſs, and unnatural abominations the Gentile World was then arrived to, as you may read in all their ſtories; and in the firſt to the Romans, how well grown, and ripe for the Devil, Chriſt found them; all of them damnably Superſtitious and Idolatrous in their Worſhip; damnably unclean in their lives;
Dio. nay, ingaged for ever in this rode of damnation, by a Law they had made, μὴ ἀλλοίρια νομίζειν, never to entertain any new Laws, or Religion; not to innovate, though it were to get Salvation, as beſides

their

their own Hiſtories, may be gathered out of Act. xvii. 18. And laſtly, conſider how they were hook'd in by the Devil, to joyn in crucifying of Chriſt, that they might be guilty of that bloud which might otherwiſe have ſaved them, and then you will find no argument to perſwade you, 'twas poſſible, that God ſhould have any deſign of mercy on them. Peter was ſo reſolv'd of the point, that the whole ſucceſſion of the Gentiles ſhould be damned, that God could ſcarce perſwade him to go and Preach to one of them, Act. x. He was fain to be caſt into a Trance, and ſee a Viſion about it; and for all that, he is much troubled about the τὸ κοινὸν καὶ ἀκάθαρτον, their prophanneſs and uncleanneſs, that they were not fit for an Apoſtle to defile himſelf about their Converſion. Act. x.

And this was the general opinion of all the Jews; they of the Circumciſion were aſtoniſhed at the news, Act. x. 45. Nay, this is it that the Angels wondred at ſo, when they ſaw it wrought at the Church by Pauls Miniſtery; never dreaming it poſſible, till it was effected, as may appear, Eph. iii. 10. This was the Myſtery, which from the beginning of the World had been hid in God, V. 9. One of God's Cabinet Counſels, a Mercy decreed in ſecret, that no Creature ever wiſt of, till it was performed. Act. x. 45. Eph. iii. 10. Verſ. 9.

And in this behalf are we all (being lineally deſcended from the Gentiles) bound over to an infinite meaſure both of humiliation and gratitude, for our deliverance from the guilt and reign of that ſecond Original ſin, that Heatheniſm of our Anceſtors, and Catholick damnation, that Sixteen hundred years ago we were all involv'd in. Beloved, we were long ago ſet right again, and the obligation lies heavy upon us, to ſhew this change to have been wrought in us to ſome purpoſe; to prove our ſelves Chriſtians in grain, ſo fixed and eſtabliſhed, that all the Devils in Hell ſhall not be able to reduce us again to that abhorred condition. If we that are thus called out, ſhall fall back, after ſo much Goſpel, to Heathen practices, and ſet up Shrines and Altars in our hearts, to every poor delight that our ſottiſhneſs can call a God; if we are not called out of their ſins, as well as out of their ignorance; then have we advanced but the further toward Hell; we are ſtill but Heathen Goſpellers; our Chriſtian Infidelity and practical Atheiſm, will but help to charge their guilt upon us, and damn us the deeper for being Chriſtians. Do but examine your ſelves on this one Interrogatory, whether this calling the Gentiles, hath found any effect in your hearts, any influence on your lives; whether your Converſations are not ſtill as Heatheniſh as ever? If you have no other grounds or motives to embrace the Goſpel, but only becauſe you are born within the pale of the Church, no other evidences of your Diſcipleſhip, but your livery; then God is little beholding to you for your ſervice. The ſame motives would have ſerved to have made you Turks, if it had been your chance to have been born amongſt them: and now, all that fair Chriſtian outſide is not thank-worthy. 'Tis but your good fortune, that you are not now at the ſame work with the old Gentiles, or preſent Indians, a worſhipping either Jupiter, or the Sun! 'Twas a ſhrewd ſpeech of Clemens, that the life of every unregenerate Man, is an Heathen-life; and the ſins of unſanctified Men, are Heathen-ſins; and the eſtate of a Libertine Chriſtian, an Heathen-eſtate: and unleſs our reſolutions and practices are conſonant to our profeſſion of Chriſt, we are all ſtill Heathens; and the Lord make us ſenſible of this our Condition.

The third, and in ſumm, the powerfulleſt Argument to prove God's willingneſs that we ſhould live, is, that he hath beſtowed his Spirit upon us; that as ſoon as he called up the Son, he ſent the Comforter. This may ſeem to be the main buſineſs that Chriſt aſcended to Heaven about; ſo that a Man would gueſs from the xvi. Chapter of St. John, and Verſ. 7. that if it had not been for that, Chriſt had tarried amongſt us till this time; but that it was more expedient to ſend the Spirit to ſpeak thoſe things powerfully to our hearts, which often and in vain had been ſounded in our ears. 'Tis a phancy of the Paracelſians, that if we could ſuck out the lives and ſpirits of other Creatures, as we feed on their fleſh, we ſhould never die: their lives would nouriſh and tranſubſtantiate into our lives, their ſpirit increaſe our ſpirits, and ſo our lives grow with our years, and the older we were, by conſequence, the fuller of life; and ſo no difficulty to become Immortal. Thus hath God dealt with us; firſt ſent his Son, his Incarnate Son, his own Fleſh, to feed, and nouriſh us; and for all this, we die daily: he hath now given us his own very Life, and incorporeous Eſſence, a piece of pure God, his very Spirit to feed upon, and digeſt, that if it be poſſible we might live. There is not a vein in our Souls, unleſs it be quite pin'd and ſhrivel'd up, but hath ſome bloud produced in it by that holy nouriſhment; every breath that ever we have breathed toward Heaven, hath been thus inſpired: Beſides thoſe louder Voices of God, either ſounding in his Word, or thundring in his Judgments; there is his calm, ſoft voice of Inſpiration, like the Night Viſion of old, which ſtole in upon the mind, mingled with ſleep, and gentle ſlumber. He draws not out into the Field, or meets us as an Enemy; but entraps us by ſurprize, and diſarms us in our quarters, by a Spiritual Stratagem conquers at unawares, and even betrays, and circumvents, and cheats us into Heaven. That precept of Pythagoras, πρὸς τὸν ἀνέμων πνεύσαντων ἦχω προσκυνεῖν, To worſhip at the noiſe and whiſtling of the wind, had ſenſe, and divinity in it, that Jamblichus that cites it, never dreamt of; that every ſound and whiſpering of this Spirit, which ruſtles either about our ears, or in our hearts, (as the Philoſopher ſaith, Tecum eſt, intus eſt) when it breaths, and blows within us, the ſtouteſt faculty of our Souls, the proudeſt piece of fleſh about us, ſhould bow down, and worſhip. Concerning the manner of the Spirits working, I am not, I need not to diſpute. Thus far it will be ſeaſonable and profitable for you to know, that many other Illuminations and holy Graces are to be imputed to Gods Spirit, beſides that by which we are effectually converted. God ſpeaks to us many times, when we anſwer him not, and ſhines about our eyes, when we either wink, or ſleep. Our many ſudden, ſhortwinded Ejaculations toward Heaven, our frequent, but weak inclinations to good, our ephemerous wiſhes, that no man can diſtinguiſh from true piety, but by their ſudden death; our every day reſolutions of obedience, whileſt we continue in ſin, are arguments that God's Spirit hath ſhined on us, though the warmth that it produced be ſoon chill'd with the damp it meets within us. For example, there is no doubt, beloved, but the Spirit of God accompanies his Word, as at this time, to your ears; if you will but open at its knock, and receive, and entertain it in your hearts, it ſhall prove unto you according to its moſt glorious attribute, Rom. i. The power of God unto ſalvation: But if you will refuſe it, your ſtubbornneſs may repel and fruſtrate God's Work, but not annihilate it; though you will not be ſaved by it, it is God's ſtill, and ſo ſhall continue to witneſs againſt you at the day of doom. Every word that was ever darted from that Spirit, as a beam or javelin of that piercing Sun, every atome of that flaming Sword, as the word is phraſed, ſhall not, though it be rebated, vaniſh: the day of Vengeance ſhall inſtruct your Souls, that it was ſent from God, and ſince it was once refuſed, hath been kept in ſtore, not to upbraid, but damn you.

Many other petty occaſions the Spirit ordinarily takes to put off the Cloud, and open his Face toward us: nay, it were not a groundleſs doubt, whether he do not always ſhine, and the cloud be only in our hearts, which makes us think the Sun is gone down, or quite extinct, if at any time we feel not his rays within us. Beloved, there be many things amongſt us, that ſingle fire can do nothing upon; they are of ſuch a ſtubborn, frozen nature, there muſt be ſome material thing for the fire to conſiſt in, a ſharp iron, red hot, that may bore, as well as burn, or elſe there is ſmall hopes of conquering them. Many men are ſo hardned and congealed in ſin, that the ordinary beam of the Spirit cannot hope to melt them; the fire muſt come conſubſtantiate with ſome ſolid inſtrument, ſome ſound, corpulent, piercing judgment, or elſe it will be very unlikely to thrive. True it is, the Spirit is an omnipotent Agent, which can ſo inviſibly infuſe and inſinuate its virtue through the inward man, that the whole moſt enraged adverſary ſhall preſently fall to the earth, Act. ix. the whole carnal man lie proſtrate, and the ſinner be without delay converted; and this is a Miracle which I deſire from my heart, might be preſently ſhewed upon every Soul here preſent.

But that which is to my preſent purpoſe, is only this, That God hath alſo other manners and ways of working, which are truly to be ſaid to have deſcended from Heaven, though they are not ſo ſucceſsful as to bring us thither; other more calm, and leſs boyſterous influences, which if they were received into an honeſt heart, might prove ſemen immortalitatis, and in time encreaſe, and grow up to immortality.

There is no ſuch encumbrance to traſh us in our Chriſtian Progreſs, as a phanſie that ſome men get poſſeſſed with; that if they are elected, they ſhall be called and ſaved in ſpight of their teeth; every man expecting an extraordinary call, becauſe Saul met with one; and perhaps running the more fiercely, becauſe Saul was then called, when he was moſt violent in his full ſpeed of malice againſt Chriſtians.

In this behalf, all that I deſire of you is, Firſt, to conſider, that though our regeneration be a miracle, yet there are degrees of miracles, and thou haſt no reaſon to expect, that the greateſt and ſtrongeſt miracle in the world, ſhall in the higheſt degree be ſhewed in thy Salvation. Who art thou, that God ſhould take ſuch extraordinary pains with thee?

Secondly, To reſolve, that many precious rays and beams of the Spirit, though when they enter, they come with power; yet through our neglect, may prove tranſitory, paſs by that heart which is not open for them.

And then thirdly, You will eaſily be convinced, that no duty concerns us all ſo ſtrictly, as to obſerve, as near as we can, when thus the Spirit appears to us; to collect and muſter up the moſt lively, quick-ſighted, ſprightfulleſt of our faculties; and with all the perſpectives that ſpiritual Opticks can furniſh us with, to lay wait for every glance and glimpſe of its fire or light. We have ways in nature, to apprehend the beams of the Sun, be they never ſo weak and languiſhing, and by uniting them into a Burning-Glaſs, to turn them into a fire. Oh that we were as witty and ſagacious in our ſpiritual eſtate! then it were eaſie for thoſe ſparks which we ſo often either contemn or ſtifle, to thrive within us, and at leaſt, break forth into a flame.

In brief, Incogitancy and inobſervance of Gods ſeaſons, ſupine numbneſs, and negligence in ſpiritual affairs, may on good grounds be reſolved on, as the main or ſole cauſe of our final impenitence and condemnation; it being juſt with God, to take thoſe away in a ſleep, who thus walked in a dream, and at laſt to refuſe them, whom he hath ſo long ſollicited. He that hath ſcorned or waſted his inheritance, cannot complain, if he dies a bankrupt; nor he that hath ſpent his candle at play, count it hard uſage, that he is fain to go to bed darkling. It were eaſie to multiply arguments on this theme, and from every minute of our lives, to diſcern ſome pawn and evidence of Gods fatherly will and deſire that we ſhould live. Let it ſuffice, that we have been large, if not abundant in theſe three chief ones: Firſt, The giving of his Son to the World. Secondly, Diſpatching the Goſpel to the Gentiles. And laſtly, The ſending of his Spirit. We come now to a view of the oppoſite trenches, which lie pitched at the Gates of Hell, obſtinate and peremptory to beſiege, and take it: Mans reſolvedneſs and wilfulneſs to die, my ſecond part, Why will you die?

There is no one conceit that engages us ſo deep, to continue in ſin, that keeps us from repentance, and hinders any ſeaſonable Reformation of our wicked lives, as a perſwaſion, that God's will is a cauſe of all events. Though we are not ſo blaſphemous as to venture to define God the Author of ſin; yet we are generally inclined for a phanſie, that becauſe all things depend on God's decree, whatſoever we have done, could not be otherwiſe; all our care could not have cut off one ſin from the Catalogue. And ſo being reſolved, that when we thus ſinned, we could not chuſe, we can ſcarce tell how to repent for ſuch neceſſary fatal miſdemeanors; the ſame excuſes which we have for having ſinned formerly, we have for continuing ſtill, and ſo are generally better prepared for Apologies, than Reformation. Beloved, it will certainly much conduce to our edification, inſtead of this ſpeculation (whoſe grounds or truth, I will not now examine) to fix this practical theorem in our hearts, that the will of man is the principal cauſe of all our evil, that death either as it is the puniſhment of ſin, eternal death, or as it is the ſin it ſelf, a privation of the life of grace, ſpiritual death, is wholly to be imputed to our wilful will. It is a Probleme in Ariſtotle, why ſome Creatures are longer in conceiving & bringing forth than others; and the ſenſibleſt reaſon he gives for it, is σκληρότης ὑστέρας, the hardneſs of the Womb, which is like dry earth, that will not preſently give any nouriſhment to either ſeed or plant; and ſo is it in the ſpiritual conception, and production of Chriſt, that is, of life in us: The hardneſs and toughneſs of the heart, the womb where he is to be born, that ξηρὰ γῆ, that dry Earth, in the Philoſophers; or that way-ſide, or at beſt ſtony ground, in Chriſt's phraſe, is the only ſtop and delay in begetting of life within us, the only cauſe of either barrenneſs or hard travail in the Spirit. Be the brain never ſo ſoft and pliable, never ſo waxy and capable of impreſſions; yet if the heart be but carnal, if it have any thing much of that luſt of the fleſh, 1 John ii. 15. in its compoſition, it will be hard for the ſpiritual life to be conceived in that man.

1 Joh. ii. 15.

For

For Faith, the only means by which Chriſt lives and dwells in us, Epheſ. iii. 17. is to be ſeated in the heart, i. e. the will and affections, according to the expreſs words, That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith. So that, be your brains never ſo ſwelled and puft up with perſwaſions of Chriſt our Saviour, be they ſo big that they are ready to ly-in, and travail of Chriſt, as Jove's did of Minerva in the Poem; yet if the heart have not joyned in the conception, if the ſeed ſown have not taken root and drawn nouriſhment from the will, it is but an aerial or phantaſtical birth, or indeed rather a diſeaſe or tympany; nay, though it come to ſome proof, and afterward extend and encreaſe in limbs and proportions never ſo ſpecioufly, yet if it be only in the brain, neither is this to be accounted ſolid nouriſhment and augmentation, but ſuch as a Camalion may be thought to have, that feeds on air, and it ſelf is little better, and in ſum, not growth, but ſwellings. Ephes. iii. 17.

So then, if the will, either by nature, or cuſtom of ſinning, by familiarity and acquaintance, making them dote on ſenſual objects, otherwiſe unamiable; by buſineſs and worldly ambitious thoughts, great enemies to faith; or by pride and contentment, both very incident to noble Perſonages and great Wits, to Courtiers and Scholars: In brief, if this Will, the ſtronger and more active part of the Soul remain carnal, either in indulgence to many, or, which is the ſnare of judicious men in chief, of ſome one prime ſin, then cannot all the faith in the world, bring that man to Heaven; It may work ſo much miracle, as Simon Magus is ſaid to have done, who undertook to raiſe the dead, give motion to the head, make the eyes look up, or the tongue ſpeak; but the lower part of the man, and that the heavieſt, will by no charm or ſpell be brought to ſtir, but weigh and ſink even into Hell, will ſtill be carcaſs and corruption; Damnation is his birth-right, Eccluſ. xx. 25. And it is impoſſible, though not abſolutely; yet ex hypotheſi, the ſecond Covenant being now ſealed, even for God himſelf, to ſave him or give him life. Eccluſ xx. 25. It is not David's Muſick, that exorciſed and quieted Saul's evil ſpirit, nor Pythagoras's Spondees that tamed a man, ἐς ἰπαιώδωσιν, ſet him right in his wits for ever, that can work any effect on a fleſhy heart: So that Chryſoſtom would not wonder at the voice that cryed, O Altar, Altar, hear the voice of the Lord, becauſe Jeroboam's heart was harder than that; nor will I find fault with Bonaventure, that made a ſolemn prayer for a ſtony heart, as if it were more likely to receive impreſſion, than that which he had already of fleſh.

It were long to inſiſt on the wilfulneſs of our fleſhy hearts, how they make a faction within themſelves, and bandy faculties for the Devil; how when grace and life appear, and make profer of themſelves, all the carnal affections, like them in the Goſpel, Joyn all with one conſent to make excuſes; nothing in our whole lives we are ſo ſollicitous for, as to get off fairly, to have made a cleanly Apology to the invitations of God's Spirit, and yet for a need, rather than go, we will venture to be unmannerly: We have all married a Wife, eſpouſed our ſelves to ſome amiable delight or other; we cannot, we will not come. The Devil is wiſer in his generation than we; he knows the price and value of a Soul, and will pay any rate for it, rather than loſe his market; he will give all the riches in the world, rather than miſs. And we, at how low a rate do we prize it? it is the cheapeſt commodity we carry about us. The beggarlieſt content under Heaven, is fair, is rich enough to be given in exchange for the Soul. Spiritus non ponderat, ſaith the Philoſopher; the Soul being a ſpirit, when we put it into the balance, weighs nothing; nay, more than ſo, it is lighter than vanity, lighter than nothing, i.e. it doth not only weigh nothing, but even lifts up the ſcale it is put into, when nothing is weighed againſt it. How many ſins, how many vanities, how many idols, i. e. in the Scripture phraſe, how many nothings be there in the world, each of which will out-weigh and preponderate the Soul? Luk. xiv. 18.

It were tedious to obſerve and deſcribe the ſeveral ways that our devilliſh ſagacity hath found out, to ſpeed our ſelves to damnation, to make quicker diſpatch in that unhappy rode, than ever Elias his fiery Chariot could do toward Heaven. Our daily practice is too full of arguments, almoſt every minute of our lives, as it is an example, ſo is it a proof of it: Our pains will be employed to better purpoſe, if we leave that as a worn, beaten, common place, and betake our ſelves to a more neceſſary Theme, a cloſe of Exhortation.

And that ſhall be by way of Treaty, as an Ambaſſador ſent from God, that you will lay down your arms, that you will be content to be friends with God, and accept of fair terms of compoſition; which are, That as you have thus long been enemies to God, proclaiming hoſtility, and perpetually oppoſing every merciful will of his by that wilfulneſs; ſo now being likely to fall into his hands, you will prevent that ruine, you will come in, and whilſt it is not too late, ſubmit your ſelves, that you may not be forced as Rebels and Outlaws, but ſubmit as Servants. This perhaps may be your laſt parley for peace; and if you ſtand out, the battery will begin ſuddenly, and with it the horrendum eſt, Heb. x. 31. It is a fearful, hideous thing to fall into the hands of the living God: All that remains upon our wilful holding out, may be (the doom of Apoſtates from Chriſtianity) a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation that ſhall devour the adverſaries, Verſ. 27. And methinks the very emphaſis in my Text, notes as much; Why will you die? As if we were juſt now falling into the Pit, and there were but one minute betwixt this time of our jollity, and our everlaſting hell. Do but lay this one circumſtance to your hearts, do but ſuppoſe your ſelves on a Bed of ſickneſs, laid at with a violent burning Fever, ſuch a one as ſhall finally conſume the whole world, as it were battered with thundering and lightning, and beſieged with fire, where the next throw or plunge of thy diſeaſe, may poſſibly ſeparate thy ſoul from thy body, and the mouth of Hell juſt then open and yawning at thee; and then ſuppoſe there were one only minute, wherein a ſerious reſigning up thy ſelf to God, might recover you to Heaven. O then what power and energy? what force and ſtrong efficacy, would there be in this voice from God? Why will you die? I am reſolved, that heart that were truly ſenſible of it, that were prepared ſeaſonably by all theſe circumſtances to receive it, would find ſuch inward vigor and ſpirit from it, that it would ſtrike death dead in that one minute; this ultimus conatus, this laſt ſpring and plunge, would do more than a thouſand heartleſs heaves in a lingring ſickneſs, and perhaps overcome, and quit the danger.

And therefore let me beſeech you to repreſent this condition to your ſelves, and not any longer be flattered or couzened in a ſlow ſecurity: To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. If you let it alone till this day come in earneſt, you may then perhaps heave in vain, labour and ſtruggle, and not have breath enough to ſend up one ſigh toward Heaven. The hour of our death we are wont wont to call, Tempus improbabilitatis, a very improbable inch of time to build our Heaven in; as after death is impossibilitatis, a time wherein it is impossible to recover us from Hell. If nothing were required to make us Saints, but outward performances; if true repentance were but to groan, and Faith but to cry, Lord, Lord; we could not promise our selves, that at our last hour we should be sufficient for that; perhaps a Lethargy may be our fate, and then, what life or spirits even for that? perhaps a Fever may send us away raving, in no case to name God, but only in oaths and curses; and then it were hideous to tell you, what a Bethlehem we should be carried to: But when that which must save us, must be a work of the Soul, and a gift of God, how can we promise our selves, that God will be so merciful, whom we have till then contemned, or our souls then capable of any holy impression, having been so long frozen in sin, and petrified even into Adamant? Beloved, as a man may come to such an estate of grace here, that he may be most sure he shall not fall, as St. Paul in likelihood was, when he resolved that nothing could separate him: So may a man be engaged so far in sin, that there is no rescuing from the Devil. There is an irreversible estate in evil, as well as good, and perhaps I may have arrived to that before my hour of death; for I believe Pharaoh was come to it, Exod. ix. 34. after the seventh Plague hardning his heart; and then I say, it is possible, that thou that hitherto hast gone on in habituate, stupid, customary rebellions, mayst be now at this minute, arrived to this pitch, That if thou run on one pace farther, thou art engaged for ever past recovery. And therefore at this minute, in the strength of your age and lusts, this speech may be as seasonable, as if death were seizing on you, Why will you die? At what time soever thou repentest, God will have mercy; but this may be the last instant wherein thou canst repent, the next sin may benumb or sear thy heart, that even the pangs of death shall come on thee insensibly; that the rest of thy life shall be a sleep, or lethargy, and thou lie stupid in it, till thou findest thy self awake in flames. Oh, if thou shouldst pass away in such a sleep! Again, I cannot tell you whether a death-bed repentance shall save you, or no. The Spouse sought Christ on her bed; but found him not, Cant. iii. 1. The last of Ecclesiastes would make a man suspect, that remembring God when our feeble impotent age comes on us, would stand us in little stead. Read it, for it is a most learned powerful Chapter. This I am sure of, God hath chosen to himself, a people zealous of good works, Tit. ii. 14. And they that find not some of this holy fire alive within them, till their Souls are going out, have little cause to think themselves of God's election: So that perhaps there is something in it, that Matth. iii. 8. the Exhortation, Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, is expresst by a ‖ sense that ordinarily signifies time past, ποιήσατε, have brought forth fruits. It will not be enough upon an exigence, when there is no way but one with me, to be inclinable to any good works, to resolve to live well, when I expect to die. I must have done this, and more too in my life, if I expect any true comfort at my death. There is not any point we err more familiarly in, and easily, than our spiritual condition; what is likely to become of us after death? Any slight phansie that Christ died for us in particular, we take for a Faith that will be sure to save us.

Cant. iii. 1.

Tit. ii. 14.

Matth. iii. 8.

‖ f. tense

Now there is no way to preserve our selves from this Error, but to measure our Faith and Hopes by our Obedience; that if we sincerely obey God, then are we true believers: And this cannot well be done by any that begins not till he is on his Death-bed; be his inclinations to good then never so strong, his faith in Christ never so lusty; yet how knows he, whether it is only fear of death, and a conviction, that in spight of his teeth, he must now sin no longer, that hath wrought these inclinations, produced this faith in him.

Many a sick man resolves strongly to take the Physicians dose, in hope that it will cure him; yet when he comes to taste its bitterness, will rather die than take it. If he that on his Death-bed hath made his solemnest, severest Vows, should but recover to a possibility of enjoying those delights which now have given him over, I much fear his fiercest resolutions would be soon out-dated. Such inclinations that either hover in the Brain only, or float on the Surface of the Heart, are but like those wavering, temporary thoughts, Jam. i. 6. Like a wave of the Sea, driven by the wind and tost; they have no firmness or stable consistence in the Soul; it will be hard to build Heaven on so slight a foundation.

All this I have said, not to discourage any tender, languishing Soul, but by representing the horrors of death to you now in health, to instruct you in the doctrine of Mortality betimes, so to speed and hasten your Repentance, Now, as if to morrow would be too late, as if there were but a small Isthmus or inch of ground between your present mirth and jollity, and your everlasting earnest.

To gather up all on the Clue: Christ is now offered to you as a Jesus: The times and sins of your Heathenism and unbelief, God winked at, Acts xvii. 30. The Spirit proclaims all this by the Word to your hearts; and now (God knows if ever again) commands all men every where to repent.

Acts xvii. 30.

Oh that there were such a Spirit in our hearts, such a zeal to our eternal bliss, and indignation at Hell; that we would give one heave and spring before we die; that we would but answer those invitations of mercy; those desires of God, that we should live with an inclination, with a breath, with a sigh toward Heaven.

Briefly, If there be any strong, violent, boisterous Devil within us, that keeps possession of our hearts against God; if the lower sensual part of our Soul; if an habit of sin, i. e. a combination or legion of Devils, will not be over-topped by reason or grace in our hearts; if a major part of our carnal faculties be still canvasing for Hell; if for all our endeavors and pains it may appear to us, that this kind of evil spirit will not be cast out, save only by Fasting and Prayer: Then have we yet that remedy left, First, To fast and pine, and keep him weak within, by denying him all foreign, fresh Provision, all new occasions of sin, and the like, and so to block, and in time, starve him up: And then secondly, To pray that God will second and fortifie our endeavors; that he will force, and rend, and ravish this carnal Devil out of us; that he will subdue our wills to his will; that he will prepare and make ready life for us, and us for life; that he will prevent us by his grace here, and accomplish us with his glory hereafter.

Now to him, &c.

SERMON

SERMON VII.

JER. V. 2.

Though they ſay, the Lord liveth, ſurely they ſwear falſely.

NOT to waſte any time or breath, or (which men in this delicate and effeminate Age, are wont to be moſt ſparing and thrifty of) any part of your precious patience unprofitably, but briefly to give you a gueſs whither our diſcourſe is like to lead you; we will ſeverally lay down, and ſort to your view, every word of the Text ſingle; and ſo we may gather them up again, and apply them to their natural proper purpoſes.

First, then the particle, Though] in the front, and, ſurely] in the body of the Text, are but bands and junctures to keep all together into one propoſition.

Secondly, the Pronoun, They] in each place, is in the letter, the Jews; in application, preſent Chriſtians; and being indefinite, might ſeem to be of the ſame extent in both places, did not the matter alter it, and make it univerſal in the former, and particular in the latter: for Artiſts ſay, that an indefinite ſign, where the matter is neceſſary, is equivalent to an univerſal; where but contingent, to a particular. Now, to ſay the Lord liveth, was, and is neceſſary; though not by any Logical, yet by a Political neceſſity; the Government and humane Laws, under which then the Jews, and now we Chriſtians live, require this profeſſion neceſſarily at our hands: but to ſwear falſly, not to perform what before they profeſt, is materia contingens, a matter of no neceſſity, but free will and choice, that no humane Law can ſee into; and therefore we muſt not interpret by the rules of Art, or Charity, that all were perjur'd, but ſome only; though 'tis probable a major part; and as we may gueſs by the firſt verſe of this Chapter, well nigh all of them. Verſe 1.

Thirdly, to ſay] is openly to make profeſſion, and that very reſolutely and boldly, that none may dare to diſtruſt it; nay, with an Oath to confirm it to jealous opinions, as appears by the latter words, They ſwear falſly, while they do but ſay: and Jer. iv. 2. Thou ſhalt ſwear, the Lord liveth, &c. Jer. iv. 2.

Fourthly, the Lord] i. e. both in Chriſtianity, and Orthodox Judaiſm, the whole Trinity.

Fifthly, Liveth] i. e. by way of Excellency, hath a life of his own, independent and eternal, and in reſpect of us, is the Fountain of all Life and Being that we have; and not only of Life, but Motion, and Perfection, and Happineſs, and Salvation, and all that belongs to it. In brief, to ſay, the Lord liveth is to acknowledge him in his Eſſence, and all his Attributes, contained together under that one Principle; on that of life, to believe whatever Moſes and the Prophets then, or now our Chriſtian Faith, hath made known to us of him.

Sixthly, to falſifie and ſwerve from Truth, becomes a farther aggravation, eſpecially in the preſent inſtance; though they make mention of that God, who is Yea, and Amen, and loves a plain veracious ſpeech, yet they ſwear; though by loud and dreadful imprecations, they beſpeak him a Witneſs and a Judge unto the Criminal; pray as devoutly for deſtruction for their Sin, as the moſt ſober Penitent can do for its Pardon, yet are they perjur'd, they ſwear falſly.

More than all this, they openly renounce the Deity, when they call upon him; their hearts go not along with their words and profeſſions; though it be the ſureſt truth in the World that they ſwear, when they aſſert that the Lord liveth, yet they are perjur'd in ſpeaking of it; though they make a fair ſhew of believing in the brain, and from the teeth outward, they never lay the truth that they are ſo violent for, at all to their hearts; or as the Original hath it, לשקר in vanum, to no purpoſe 'tis, that they ſwear, no man that ſees how they live, will give any heed to their words, will imagin that they believe any ſuch matter.

So now having paced over, and as it were ſpell'd every word ſingle, there will be no difficulty for the raweſt underſtanding to put it together, and read it currently enough in this propoſition; Amongſt the multitude of Profeſſors of Chriſtianity, there is very little real piety, very little true belief.

In the verſe next before my Text, there is an O Yes made, a Proclamation, nay, a Hue and Cry, and a hurrying about the ſtreets, if it were poſſible, to find out but a man that were a ſincere Believer; and here in my Text is brought in a Non eſt inventus, Though they ſay the Lord liveth] a multitude of Profeſſors indeed every where, yet ſurely they ſwear falſly, there is no credit to be given to their words; infidelity and hypocriſie is in their hearts; for all their fair believing profeſſions, they had an unfaithful rebellious heart, V. 23. and the event manifeſted it, they are departed and gone, arrant Apoſtates in their lives, by which they were to be tryed; Neither ſay they in their hearts, let us fear the Lord, V. 24. whatſoever they flouriſhed with their tongues. Verſe 23. Verſe 24.

Now for a more diſtinct ſurvey of this horrible wretched truth, this Heatheniſm of Chriſtians, and Infidelity of Believers, (the true ground of all falſe ſwearing, and indeed of every other ſin) we will firſt examine wherein it conſiſts, ſecondly, whence it ſprings; the firſt will give you a view of its nature, the ſecond its root and growth, that you may prevent it. The firſt will ſerve for an ocular or Mathematical demonſtration, called by Artiſts διότι, that it is ſo; the ſecond a rational or Phyſical διότι, how it comes about: the firſt to convince of the truth of it, the ſecond to inſtruct you in its cauſes.

And first of the first, wherein this Infidelity, and to ſpeak more plainly, Perjury of formal Believers conſiſts, Though they ſay, &c.

Since that rather phancy than Divinity of the Romaniſts, Schoolmen, and Caſuiſts, generally defining Faith to be a bare aſſent to the truth of Gods word ſeated only in the underſtanding, was by the Proteſtant Divines baniſhed out of the Schools, as a faith for a Chameleon to be nouriſhed with, which can feed on air; as a direct piece of Sorcery and Conjuring, which will help you to remove Mountains, only by thinking you are able; briefly, as a Chimera or phantaſtical nothing, fit to be ſent to Limbo for a Preſent: ſince, I ſay, this Magical Divinity which ſtill poſſeſſes the Romaniſt, and alſo a ſort of men, who would be thought moſt diſtant from them, hath been exorciſed, and ſilenced, and caſt out of our Schools (would I could ſay, out of our hearts) by the Reformation; the nature of Faith hath been moſt admirably explained; yet the ſeat or ſubject of it, never clearly ſet down, (ſome confining it to the underſtanding, others to the Will) till at laſt it pitched upon the whole Soul, the intellective nature. For the Soul of man, ſhould it be partitioned into faculties, (as the grounds of our ordinary Philoſophy would perſwade us) it would not be ſtately enough for ſo Royal a gueſt: either room would be too pent, and narrow to entertain at once ſo many graces as attend it. Faith therefore, that it may be received in ſtate, that it may have more freedom to exerciſe its Soveraignty, hath required all partitions to be taken down; that ſitting in the whole Soul, it may command and order the whole man; is not in the brain ſometimes, as its gallery, to recreate and contemplate; at another in the heart, as its parlour to feed, or a cloſet to diſpatch buſineſs; but if it be truly that Royal Perſonage which we take it for, it is repletive in the whole houſe at once, as in one room, and that a ſtately Palace, which would be much diſgraced, and loſe of its ſplendor, by being cut into offices: and accordingly, this Royal Grace is an intire abſolute Prince of a whole Nation, (not as a Tetrarch of Galilee, a ſharer of a Saxon Heptarchy) and deſcribed to us as one ſingle act, though of great command; and defined to be an aſſent and adherence to the goodneſs of the object; (which object is the whole Word of God, and ſpecially the promiſes of the Goſpel.) So then, to believe, is not to acknowledge the truth of the Scripture, and Articles of the Creed, (as vulgarly we uſe knowledge) but to be affected with the goodneſs and Excellency of them, as the moſt precious objects which the whole world could preſent to our choice; to embrace them as the only deſirable thing upon the earth; and to be reſolutely and uniformly inclined to expreſs this affection of ours, in our practice, whenſoever there ſhall be any competition betwixt them and our deareſt delights. For the object of our Faith is not meerly ſpeculative, ſomewhat to be underſtood only, and aſſented to as true, but chiefly moral, a truth to be proſecuted with my deſires through my whole Converſation, to be valued above my life, and ſet up in my heart, as the only Shrines I worſhip.

So that he that is never ſo reſolutely ſworn to the Scriptures, believes all the Commands, Prohibitions, and Promiſes never ſo firmly, if he doth not adhere to them in his practice, and by particular application of them as a rule to guide him in all his actions, expreſs that he ſets a true value on them; if he do not this, he is yet an Infidel; all his Religion is but like the Beads-mans, who whines over his Creed and Commandments over a threſhold ſo many times a Week, only as his task, to deſerve his Quarterage, or to keep correſpondence with his Patron. Unleſs I ſee his belief expreſt by uniform obedience, I ſhall never imagin that he minded what he ſaid. The ſincerity of his faith, is always proportionable to the integrity of his life; and ſo far is he to be accounted a Chriſtian, as he performs the obligation of it, the promiſe of his Baptiſm. Will any man ſay that Eve believed God's inhibition, when ſhe eat the forbidden fruit? If ſhe did, ſhe was of a ſtrange intrepid reſolution, to run into the jaws of Hell, and never boggle. 'Tis plain by the ſtory, that ſhe heard God, but believed the Serpent; as may appear by her obedience, the only evidence and meaſure of her Faith. Yet can it not be thought, that ſhe that was ſo lately a Work of God's Omnipotence, ſhould now ſo ſoon diſtruſt it, and believe that he could not make good his threatnings. The truth is this; ſhe ſaw clearly enough in her brain, but had not ſunk it down into her heart; or perhaps, ſhe aſſented to it in the general, but not as appliable to her preſent caſe. This aſſent was like a Bird fluttering in the Chamber, not yet confined to a Cage, ready to eſcape at the firſt opening of the door or window; as ſoon as ſhe opens either ears or eyes to hearken to the Serpent, or behold the Apple, her former aſſent to God is vaniſh'd, and all her faith beſtowed upon the Devil. It will not be Pelagianiſm, to proceed and obſerve how the condition of every ſin, ſince this time, hath been an imitation of that. The ſame method in ſin, hath ever ſince been taken, firſt to revolt from God, and then to diſobey; firſt to become Infidels, and then Sinners. Every murmuring of the Iſraelites, was a defection from the Faith of Iſrael, and turning back to Egypt, in their hearts.

Infidelity, as it is the fountain from whence all Rebellion ſprings, (Faith being an adherence, and every departure from the living God, ariſing from an evil heart of unbelief, Heb. iii. 12) ſo it is alſo the channel where it runs; not any beginning or progreſs in ſin, without a concomitant degree of either weakneſs, or want of faith. So that Heathens or *Heretick*s are not the main enemies of Chriſt (as the queſtion de oppoſitis fidei is ſtated by the Romaniſts) but the Hypocrite and Libertine, he is the Heathen in grain, an Heretick of Lucifer's own ſect; one that the Devil is better pleaſed with, than all the Catalogue in Epiphanius, or the Romiſh Calendar. For this is it that Satan drives at; an engine by which he hath framed us moſt like himſelf; not when we doubt of the Doctrine of Chriſt, (for himſelf believes it fully, no man can be more firmly reſolved of it;) but when we heed it not in our lives, when we cleave not to it in our hearts; when inſtead of living by Faith, Heb. x. 38. ὑποστέλλωμεν, we draw back, and cowardly ſubduce our ſelves, and forſake our Colours, refuſing to be martialled in his ranks, or fight under his Banner. Arian the Stoick Philoſopher hath an excellent diſcourſe, concerning the double Infidelity, of the brain, and heart, very appliable; Δίτται ἀπολήδοσις, &c. There are two ſorts of this ſenſeleſſneſs and ſtupidity, whereby men are hardned into ſtones; the firſt of the Underſtanding part, the ſecond of the Practical. He that will not aſſent to things manifeſt, his brain is frozen into a ſtone or mineral; there is no more reaſoning with him, than with a pillar. The Academicks ἀκαταληψία, never to believe or comprehend any thing, was a ſtupid Philoſophy, like like to have no Disciples but Posts or Statues; and therefore long ago taught out of the Schools, as an art of being Brutes, or Metamorphosis, not to instruct, but transform them: he could not remain a man, that was thus incredulous. But the second Stupidity, that of the Practical, Not to abstain from things that art hurtful, to imbrace that which would be their death; (the vice; though not doctrine of the Epicures) though this were an argument, both in his, and Scripture-phrase, of a stony heart; yet was it such an one, as the lustiest, sprightfullest men in the World carried about with them. Nay, 'twas an evidence (saith he) of their strength and valour, of a heart of metal and proof, to have all modesty and fear of ill cold as a stone, frozen and dead within it. And thus holds it in Christianity, as it did then in reason: not to believe the truth of Scripture, to deny that the Lord liveth, would argue a brain as impenetrable as Marble, and eyes as Crystal: we sooner suspect that he is not a man, that he is out of his senses, than such an Infidel. Some affected Atheists I have heard of, that hope to be admired for eminent wits by it: but, I doubt, whether any ever thought of it in earnest, and (if I may so say) conscientiously denied a Deity. But to deny him in our lives, to have a heart of Marble or Adamant, ψυχὴν ἀπονεκρωμένην, saith Arrian, a dead stupefied Soul, ὀλίγου μίλου, it is so frequent amongst us, that it is not worth observing. He is but a puny in the Devils camp, that hath not a privy coat within him, to secure his heart from any stroke, that God or Scripture can threaten him with.

Ἀν δὲ τὴν τὸ ἀναισθητον καὶ ἀδύνατον παθεῖν. ἢ τὴν ψυχὴν ἀπονεκρωμένην. ἢ τὸ ἀνθρακῶδες. ἢ τὸ ἀνώμαλον καὶ λεπρῶδες.

Thus you see wherein this Christian infidelity consists, in the not rooting faith in the heart; in indulgence to those practices which directly contradict his doctrine. So that though every commission of sin be not incompatible with the habit of faith, so far as to denominate him an infidel; yet is it from the not exercising of faith actually, that I ever sin; and every man in the same degree, that he is a sinner, so far is he an unbeliever. So that this convertible retrogradous Sorites may shut up all. He that truly believes, assents in his heart to the goodness, as well as the truth of Scripture: he that assents so in his heart, approves it according to its real excellency above all rivals in the World: he that thus approves, when occasion comes, makes an actual choice of God's Word before all other most precious delights: he that actually makes the choice, performs uniform obedience, without any respect of sins or persons: he that performs this obedience, never indulges himself in sin; and then è converso, backward, thus: he that indulges himself in sin, doth not uniformly obey the Word: he that doth not so obey, doth not actually make choice of it before all competitors: he that makes not this choice, approves it not according to its real excellency above all things in the world: he that doth not so approve, assents not to the absolute goodness of it in his heart: he that so assents not, doth not truly believe; therefore every indulgent sinner is an infidel. And then, look about you, and within you: whosoever say, the Lord liveth, and yet remain in your ways of sin, be you never so stout or proud-hearted, my Prophet gives you the lie: if you are incensed, and swear that you are in the truth, and stand upon your reputation; his answer is mannerly, but tart, Surely, you swear falsly; every indulgent sinner is an infidel. 1 John iii. 6. Whosoever sins, hath not seen Christ, neither known him: but amongst Professors of the Gospel, there be a multitude of habitual sinners, ergò of infidels; ὅπερ ἦν πρῶτον δεῖξαι, The thing, which in the first place, we undertook to demonstrate. 1 John iii. 6.

We now come to the next thing proposed, The root or fountain of this hypocritical faith; where we are to inquire how it comes about, That they which are so forward to profess, are so far from true belief. And higher in our search we cannot go, than Adam's fall; for the spring head of all this infidelity (as for God's absolute decree, in rejecting mens persons, and then suffering and leading them to an acknowledgment of the truth of the Gospel, only that they may be unexcusable, I will not be so vain or unseasonable to examine.) Adam had once the Tree of life to have eaten, and have been immortal; to have confirmed him and his posterity into an irreversible estate of happiness: but since his disobedient heart preferred the Tree of Knowledge before that of Life, the Tree of Life hath never thrived currantly with his progeny. All our care, and traffick, and merchandise, hath been for Knowledge, never prizing or cheapning so poor a commodity, as life. πᾶλιν γνῶσις ἐστὶν ἐξ ἧς παραγομεθα, &c. All sin is from the Tree of Knowledge; and that hath rooted it so deep, and given it so fair a growth within us. Clem. Strom. 3.

As for the Tree of Life, seeing then we would not feed on it, we were never since suffered to come within reach: the Cherubins and a flaming Sword, have fenced it round about, Gen. iii. 34. and that makes men grow so unproportionably into such monstrous shapes, vast strong, swoln heads; and weak, thin, crazy bodies; like Pharaoh's lean kine, lank, and very ill favoured: men for the most part, having Brains to understand, and Eyes to see, and Tongues to profess; but neither Hearts to apply, nor Hands to practise, nor Feet to walk the ways of God's Commandments: as one far spent in a Consumption, who hath his senses perfectly enough, when he is not able to go. It is only the effectual Grace of God (of which, that other Tree was but an embleme) which must give us life and strength to practise what we know. And this amongst us, is so little cared for, finds such disesteem and slight observance when it appears; meets with such resolute hardned, stubborn hearts, that it is a miracle, if it ever be brought to submit it self to such course entertainment. Gen. iii. 34.

And this is the first and main ground of this Hypocritical faith, our corrupt, immoderate desires of knowledge, and neglect of Grace. The second ground more evidently discernable in us, is, The secret consent and agreement betwixt our carnal desires, and divine knowledge; and the antipathy and incompatibleness of the same with true Faith.

The first pair dwell many times very friendly and peaceably together; do not quarrel in an Age, or pass an affront or cross word. Knowledge doth seldom justle or offer violences to the desires of the flesh; a man may be very knowing, and very lewd; of a towring Brain, and a groveling Soul; rich in speculation, and poor in practice.

But for the other pair, they are like opposite signs in the Heaven, have but a vicissitude of presence or light in our Hemisphere; never appear or shine together. Faith lusteth and struggleth against the flesh, and the flesh against Faith. The carnal part is as afraid of Faith, as the Devil was of Christ:

for Faith being ſeated in the concurrence of the dictate of judgment, and (on the other ſide) the ſway of the affections: the one muſt either couch, or be baniſhed, at the others entrance; and then it
Mark. i. 24. cries out in the voice of the Devil, Mark i. 24. What have I to do with thee; or, as the words will bear, τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί; What communion can there be betwixt me and thee? thou precious Grace of God, Art thou come to torment and diſpoſſeſs me before my time? O what a ſtir there is in the fleſh, when faith comes to take its throne in the heart; as at the news of Chriſt's Incarnation corporal, ſo at his ſpiri-
Matth. ii. 3. tual, Herod the King is troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him, Matth. ii. 3. All the reigning Herod ſins, and all the Jeruſalem of habitual ruling luſts and affections are in great diſorder, as knowing, that this new King abodes their inſtant deſtruction.

Eph. 6. 8. It was Ariſtotles obſervation, that the Mathematicks being an abſtract knowledge, had nothing in them contrary to Paſſions; and therefore young men and diſſolute, might ſtudy and prove great proficients in them, if they had but a good apprehenſion; there was no more required: and that perhaps is the reaſon that ſuch ſtudies as theſe, Hiſtory and Geometry, and the like, go down pleaſantlieſt with thoſe which have no deſign upon Books, but only to rid them of ſome hours, which would otherwiſe lie on their hands. The moſt ſtudious of our Gentry, ordinarily deal in them, as inoffenſive, tame, peaceable ſtudies, which will never check them for any the moſt inordinate affections. But of Morality (ſaith he) and practical knowledge, a young man, or intemperate, is uncapable: you may make him con the precepts without Book, or ſay them by roat, ἀλλ' οὐ πιστεύει, He cannot be ſaid to believe a word of them; his heart is ſo poſſeſt with green, freſh, boiſterous luſts, that he cannot admit any ſober precepts any further than his memory. If you are in earneſt with him, to apply and practiſe what he reads, you exact of him beyond his years; he is not ſolemn enough for ſo ſad ſevere imployment; and therefore it is concluded, that he is fit for any intellectual vertue, rather than prudence: this conſiſts in a peaceable temper of the mind: an Artiſt he may prove, and never live the better; ſuppoſe him one of youthful luxuriant deſires, and never think he will be taught to live by rule; all the learning and ſtudy in Books, will never give him Ariſtotles Moral prudence, much leſs our ſpiritual, which is by interpretation, Faith.

And this is the ſecond ground of Infidelity amongſt Chriſtians, the competibility of knowledge, and incompetibility of true Faith, with carnal deſires. The third is, The eaſineſs of giving aſſent to generalities, and difficulty of particular Application.

A common truth delivered in general terms, is received without any oppoſition: ſhould it be propoſed, whether nothing be to be done, but that which is juſt? whether drunkenneſs, were not a vice? whether only an out-ſide of Religion, would ever ſave a man? No man would ever quarrel about it. When thus Nathan and David diſcourſed, they were both of one mind; the one could Πρόληψις πραγμάτων ἢ μαθήσεως. talk no more againſt unconſcionable dealing, than the other would aſſent to. If you propoſe no other Problemes than theſe, the debauched'ſt man under Heaven, would not diſpute againſt you. But Arr. Epict. l. 1. c. 22. all quarrelling, ſaith the Stoick, is περὶ τὴν ἐφαρμογὴν προλήψεως τοῖς ἐπὶ μέρους οἰκείοις, About the Application of general granted Rules, to perſonal, private Caſes.

The Jews, and Aſſyrians, and Ægyptians, and Romans, are all agreed, that holineſs is to be preferred above all things; but whether it be not impious to eat ſwines fleſh, and the like, which of them obſerves the rules of holineſs moſt exactly, there the ſtrife begins.

Common general declamations againſt ſin, are ſeldom ever offenſive; and therefore the Maſter of Rhetoricks finds fault with them, as dull, liveleſs, unprofitable Eloquence, that no man is affected with. The cowardlieſt Bird in the Air, is not afraid of the Faulcon, as long as ſhe ſees him ſoaring, and never ſtoop: but when the Axe that was carried about the Wood, threatning all indifferently, ſhall be laid to the Root of the Tree; when Nathan ſhall rejoynder with a Thou art the man, and St. Paul come home to his Corinthians after his declamation againſt Fornicators and Idolaters with,
1 Cor. vi. 11. And ſuch were ſome of you, 1 Cor. vi. 11. then their hearts come to the touchſtone; this is a trial of their belief: if they will forſake their ſins, which before, their judgment condemned at a diſtance; if they will practiſe the holineſs and integrity, which they were content to hear commended.

That famous War of the Trojans, and Iliads of Miſery, following it in Homer, were all from this ground. The two great Captains at the Treaty, agree very friendly, that juſt dealing was very ſtrictly to be obſerved by all men; and yet, neither would one of them reſtore the Pawn committed to his truſt, nor the other divide the ſpoils: Each as reſolute not to practiſe, as both before unanimous to approve.

There is not a thing more difficult in the World, than to perſwade a carnal man, that that which concerns all men, ſhould have any thing to do with him; that thoſe promiſes of Chriſt, which are confeſt to be the moſt pretious under Heaven, ſhould be fitter for his turn, then this amiable, lovely ſin, that now ſollicites him. That Scripture is inſpired by God; and therefore in all its dictates to be believed and obeyed, is a thing fully conſented on amongſt Chriſtians: we are ſo reſolved on it, that it is counted but a dull, barren queſtion in the Schools, a man can invent nothing to ſay againſt by way of argument; and if a Preacher in a Sermon ſhould make it his buſineſs to prove it to you, you would think he either ſuſpected you for Turks, or had little elſe to ſay: but when a particular truth of Scripture comes in ballance with a pleaſing ſin; when the general prohibition ſtrikes at my private luſt; all my former aſſent to Scripture is vaniſhed: I am hurried into the imbraces of my beloved delight.
Act xxiv. 25. Thus when Paul reaſoned of temperance, righteouſneſs, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, Acts xxiv.
Jam. ii. 29. 25. His trembling ſhews, that he aſſented to Paul's diſcourſe; and as in the Devils, Jam. ii. 29. it was an effect of a general belief: but this ſubject of temperance and judgment to come, agreed not with Felix his courſe of life. His wife Druſilla was held by uſurpation; he had toled her away from her Antiq. Jud. l. 20. c. 9. husband, the King of the Emiſeni, ſaith Joſephus, and therefore he could hear no more of it: he ſhifts and complements it off till another time, and never means to come in ſuch danger again to be converted, for fear of a divorce from his two treaſures; his Heatheniſm, and his Whore.

Thus was Agrippa converted from the ſhoulders upward, which he calls Almoſt a Chriſtian; or Acts xxvi. 28. as the phraſe may be rendred, ἐν ὀλίγῳ, a little way, Acts xxvi. 28. convinced ‖ to the general truths
‖ as in his brain; but the lower half, his heart and affections, remained as Heatheniſh as ever.

And

And this is the third ground of practical unbelief, that generalities can be cheaply believed, without parting from any thing we prize: The Doctrine of the Trinity can be received, and thwart never a carnal affection, as being an inoffensive truth. Christ's sufferings and satisfaction for sin, by the natural man may be heard with joy; but particular application is very difficult: That our obedience to every command of that Trinity, must be sincere; that we must forego all, and hate our own flesh, to adhere to so merciful a Saviour, and express our love to the most contemptible Soul under Heaven, as he hath loved us; that we must, at last, expect him in majesty as a Judge, whom we are content to hug and embrace in his humility as a Saviour; This is a bloody word, as Moses his wife counted the Circumcision, too harsh and rough to be received into such pampered, tender, fleshy hearts.

The fourth ground is, a general humor that is gotten in the World, To take care of nothing, but our reputations: Nor God, nor life, nor soul, nor any thing can weigh with it in the ballance. Now it is a scandalous thing, a foul blot to ones name, to be counted an Atheist, an arrant Infidel, where all are Christians; and therefore for fashions sake we will believe; and yet sometime the Devil hath turned this humor quite the contrary way, and made some men as ambitious of being counted Atheists, as others of being Christians. It will shortly grow into a gentile garb, and part of courtship, to disclaim all Religion in shew, as well as deeds. Thus are a world of men in the World, either professt Atheists, or Atheistical Professors, upon the same grounds of vain-glory; the one to get, the other to save their reputation in the World. Thus do many men stand up at the Creed, upon the same terms as Gallants go into the field; that have but small maw to be killed, only to keep their honor, that they might not be branded and mocked for cowards. And yet certainly in the truth, these are the veriest dastards under Heaven; no worldly man so fearful of death, or pious man of hell, as these are of disgrace.

The last ground I shall mention, and indeed the main of all, is, The subtlety and wilines of the Devil. He hath tried all his stratagems in the World, and hath found none like this, for the undermining and ruining of Souls, to suffer them to advance a pretty way in Religion, to get their heads full of knowledge, that so they may think they have faith enough, and walk to hell securely. The Devil's first policies were by Heresies, to corrupt the Brain, to invade and surprize Christianity by force: but he soon saw, this would not hold out long; he was fain to come from batteries, to mines, and supplant those Forts that he could not vanquish. The Fathers (and amongst them chiefly Leo, in all his writings) within the first Five hundred years after Christ, observe him at this ward, Ut quos vincere ferro flammisque non poterat, cupiditatibus irretiret, & sub falsâ Christiani nominis professione corrumperet. He hoped to get more by lusts, than heresies, and to plunge men deepest in an high conceit of their holy Faith. He had learned by experience from himself, that all the bare knowledg in the World would never sanctifie: it would perhaps give men content, and make them confident and bold of their estate; and by presuming on such grounds, and prescribing merit to Heaven by their Lord, Lord, even seal them up to the day of damnation; and therefore it is ordinary with Satan, to give men the tether a great way, lest they should grumble at his tyranny, and prove Apostates from him upon hard usage. Knowledg is pleasant, and books are very good Company; and therefore if the Devil should bind men to ignorance, our Speculators and Brain-Epicures would never be his Disciples; they would go away sadly, as the young man from Christ, who was well affected with his service, but could not part with his riches, Mat. xix. 22. So then you shall have his leave, to know, and believe in God, as much as you please, so you will not obey him; and be as great Scholars as Satan himself, so you will be as prophane. The heart of Man is the Devils Palace, where he keeps his state; and as long as he can strengthen himself there by a guard and band of lusts, he can be content to afford the out-works to God, divine speculation, and never be disturbed or affrighted by any enemy at such a distance. Mat. xix. 22.

Thus have you the grounds also whereupon true Faith (which is best defined a spiritual prudence, an application of spiritual knowledg to holy practice) should be so often wanting in men which are very knowing, and the faireſt Professors of Christianity.

Now lest this discourse also should reach no further than your ears, lest that which hath been said, should be only assented to in the general as true, not applied home to your particular practices, and so do you no more good, than these general professions did here to the Jews, only to prove you perjur'd Hypocrites, swearing falsly, whilst you say the Lord liveth; we will endeavour to leave some impression upon your hearts, by closing all with Application.

And that shall be in brief, meekly to desire you; and if that will not serve the turn, by all the mercies of Heaven, and horrors of Hell, to adjure you to examine your selves on these two interrogatories, which my Text will suggest to you, First, Whether you are as good as the Jews here? Secondly, Whether you are not, the best of you, altogether as bad.

For the first, the Jews here said, the Lord liveth, were very forward to profess; and 'twere some, though but a low measure of commendation for us to be no worse than Jews. Let there go a severe inquisition out from the Royal Majesty, over the whole Court, or at least from every particular man upon himself; and bring in an impartial Verdict, whether there be not some amongst you, that are not come thus far as to say, The Lord liveth. Some are so ingaged in a trade of mis-shapen, horrid, monstrous Vices; have so framed and fashioned the whole fabrick of their lives, without any blush, or lineament of God in them, that they are afraid ever to mention him in earnest, for fear of putting them out of their course; they dare not believe too much of God, lest it should be their undoing; a little sense of him, would take off many of their tricks of sinning, and consequently spoil their thriving in the world; like Diana's Silversmith, Act. xix. 24. for by this craft they have their wealth. The least glimpse of God in these mens hearts; nay, one solemn mention of him in their mouths, were enough to bring them into some compass, to upbraid their ways, and reprove their thoughts. Were these men taken to task according to the Canon Laws of our Kingdom, and not suffered to live any longer amongst Christians, till they understood clearly the promise of their Baptism; till they durst come, and make the same Vow in their own persons, before all the Congregation, which in their infancy their Sureties made for them; were our Canon of Confirmation duly put in execution, and every one, as soon as he were capable, either perswaded, or forced to fit himself for the receiving of it, (as it is severely required by our Rubrick, though much neglected in the practice;) I doubt not, but there would Act. xix. 24.

be fewer ſins amongſt us, much more knowledg of God, and mentioning of his Name, without the help of Oaths, and Blaſphemies, to which God now is in a kind beholding that ever he comes into our mouths. But now men having a great way to go in ſin, and nothing in the world to ſtop them, begin their journey as ſoon as they are able to go, and make ſuch haſte (like the Sun, or Gyant, in the Pſalmiſt) to run their courſe, are ſo intent upon the task the Devil hath ſet them; that they can never ſtay to ſee or hear of God in their lives, which yet is legible and palpable in every ſyllable of the World. If they are ſo well brought up, as to have learned their Creed and Catechiſm, they have no other uſe for it, but to break jeſts, and ſwear by; and would ſoon forget God's very Name or Attributes, did they not daily repeat them over, (as School-boys their Parts) and often comment on them by Oaths and Prophanations: and theſe are ἄθεοι in the Apoſtles phraſe, Epheſ. ii. 12. without God in the world.

Epheſ. ii. 12.

Others there are of a prouder, loftier ſtrain, ἀσεβεῖς, and στομάχοι, that pitch Camp, and arm and fortifie themſelves againſt God, that would fain be a forging ſome other Religion, they are ſo weary and cloy'd with this. Thus have I heard of ſome that have ſought earneſtly for an Alcoran, and profeſs an opinion, that all true Divinity lies there, and expect to be eſteemed great Wits, of a deep reach, for this ſuppoſal. Others that have not skill enough to underſtand Turciſm, yet have luſts enough to admire it, and the brave carnal Paradiſe it promiſes; and if they cannot perſwade themſelves to believe in it, yet they phanſie it notably; and becauſe they cannot expect to have it in another life, they will be ſure of it in this.

Hence do they advance to ſuch a pitch of ſenſuality, as Heatheniſm was never guilty of; their whole life is a perpetual ſtudy of the arts of death, and their whole Souls an Holocauſt, or burnt Sacrifice to their fleſhly luſts. It were an horrid repreſentation but to give you in a diagram, the ſeveral Arts that the god of this World hath now taught men to vilifie and reproach the God of Heaven. Profeſt Atheiſm begins to ſet up; it comes in faſhion, and then ſome Courtiers muſt needs be in it. Prophaning of Scripture, and making too cheap of it, was never ſo ordinary; that holy Volume was never ſo violently and courſly handled, even raviſhed and defloured by unhallowed lips. 'Tis grown the only ſtuff in requeſt, and ordinarieſt garment to cloth a piece of ſcurrilous Wit in, and the beſt of us can ſcarce chooſe but give it ſome applauſe. Beloved, there is not a ſin in the World that ſticks cloſer to him that once entertained it; the leaſt indulgence in it, is a deſperate ſign. 'Tis called the chair of ſcorners, Pſal. 1. a ſin of eaſe and pleaſure: a man that uſes it, that is once a merry Atheiſt, ſeldom, if ever, proves a ſad, ſober Chriſtian. Julian, and many others, have gone ſcoffing to Hell, (like men ‖ whoſe cuſtom of mocking hath made wry mouthed) ſcarcely compoſing themſelves to a ſolemn Countenance, till horrour either of Hell, or Conſcience, hath put ſmiling out of date. And if any of theſe ſins are but crept in amongſt you, it will be worthy our enquiry and examination; (and God grant your own impartial Conſciences may return you Not guilty:) However this will but prove you no worſe than Jews, for they here acknowledg God in their brain and tongues; they ſaid, The Lord liveth.]

Your ſecond Interrogatory muſt be, Whether whilſt you thus profeſs, you do not alſo ſwear falſly? And then 'tis to be feared, that every action of your lives will bring in an Evidence againſt you. 'Twere an accuſation perhaps that you ſeldom hear of, to be challenged for Hypocrites, to be turned Puritans and pretenders to Holineſs: yet this is it my Text muſt charge you with; profeſſing of Religion, and never practiſing it; aſſenting to the truth of Scripture in your brain, but not adhering to it in your hearts; believing in Chriſt, and yet valuing him beneath the meaneſt ſin you meet with. Look over your Creed, and obſerve whether your lives do not contradict every word in it; and is it not Hypocriſie, and Perjury, or, if you will have it, high Complementing with God, to be thus profuſe and prodigal in our profeſſions, which we never mean to perform? Then is it to be called belief, when it is ſunk down into our hearts, when it hath taken root in a well-tempered ſoil, and begins to ſpring above ground, and haſten into an ear. That which grows like Moſs on the tiles of an houſe, which is ſet no deeper than the phancy, will never prove either permanent, or ſolid nouriſhment to the ſoul. 'Twere a new hours work, to ſhew every defect in our Faith, by our defections and deſertions of God in our manners; yet if you will be in earneſt with your ſelves, and apply the grounds premiſed to your ſerious Examination, your meditations may throughly make up what here is likely to be omitted.

One thing take home with you for a Rule to eternity, That every indulgence in any ſin, is a ſure argument of an Infidel: be you never ſo proud and confident of your Faith, and Juſtification by it; be you never ſo reſolute that the Lord liveth; yet if your obedience be not uniform, if you imbrace not what you aſſent to, ſurely you ſwear falſly. Your particular failings I am not knowing enough to repreſent to you; your own Conſciences, if they be but called to, cannot chooſe but reflect them to your ſight. Your outward profeſſion and frequency in it, for the general is acknowledged; your Cuſtom of the place requires it of you; and the example of Piety that rules in your Eyes, cannot but extort it. Only let your lives witneſs the ſincerity of your profeſſions; let not a dead Carcaſs walk under a living head, and a nimble active Chriſtian brain be ſupported with bed-rid, ‖ mentionleſs Heathen limbs. Let me ſee you move and walk, as well as breath, that I may hope to ſee you Saints, as well as Chriſtians.

And this ſhall be the ſumm, not only of my advice to you, but for you, of my Prayers: That the Spirit would ſanctifie all our hearts, as well as brains; that he will ſubdue, not only the pride and natural Atheiſm of our underſtandings, but the rebellions, and infidelity, and heatheniſm of our luſts; that being purged from any reliques, or tincture, or ſuſpicion of irreligion in either power of our Souls, we may live by Faith, and move by Love, and die in Hope; and both in Life and Death, glorifie God here, and be glorified with him hereafter.

SERMON

SERMON VIII.

LUKE XVIII. 11.

God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men, extortioners, &c. or even as this Publican.

THAT we may ſet out at our beſt advantage, and yet not go too far back to take our riſe, 'tis but retiring to the end of the 8. Verſe of this Chapter, and there we ſhall meet with an abrupt ſpeech, hanging like one of Solomon's Proverbs, without any ſeeming dependance on any thing before or after it: which yet upon enquiry, will appear διοπετὲς, faln down from Heaven, in the poſture it ſtands in. In the beginning of the Eight verſe he concludes the former Parable, I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily; and then abruptly, Nevertheleſs, when the Son of man comes, ſhall he find faith upon the earth? And then immediately, Verſe 9. he ſpake another parable to certain that truſted in themſelves, where this ſpeech in the midſt, when the Son of man comes, &c. ſtands there by it ſelf, like the Phariſee in my Text, ſeorſim, apart, as an ἐμβόλιμον or intercalary day between two months, which neither of them will own, or more truly, like one of Democritus his atomes, the caſual concurrence of which, he accounted the principle and cauſe of all things.

That we may not think ſo vulgarly of Scripture, as to dream that any title of it came by reſultance or caſually into the world, that any ſpeech dropt from his mouth unobſerved, that ſpake as man never ſpake, both in reſpect of the matter of his ſpeeches, and the weight and ſecret energie of all accidents attending them, it will appear on conſideration, that this ſpeech of his which ſeems an ὑπερϐάλλον or ὑπερϐαῖνον, a ſupernumerary ſuperfluous one, is indeed the head of the corner, and ground of the whole Parable, or at leaſt a fair hint or occaſion of delivering it at that time. Not to trouble you with its influence on the Parable going before, concerning perſeverance in prayer (to which it is as an Iſthmus or fibula, to joyn it to what follows) but to bring our eyes home to my preſent ſubject: After the conſideration of the prodigious defect of faith in this decrepit laſt age of the world, in perſons who made the greateſt pretences to it, and had arriv'd unto aſſurance and ſecurity in themſelves; he preſently arraigns the Phariſee, the higheſt inſtance of this confidence, and brings his righteouſneſs to the bar, ſub hac formâ.

There is like to be, toward the ſecond coming of Chriſt, his particular viſitation of the Jews, and (then its parallel) his final coming to judgment, ſuch a ſpecious pompous ſhew, and yet ſuch a ſmall pittance of true faith in the world, that as it is grown much leſs than a grain of muſtard-ſeed, it ſhall not be found when it is ſought; there will be ſuch giantly ſhadows, and pigmy ſubſtances, ſo much and yet ſo little faith, that no Hieroglyphick can ſufficiently expreſs it, but an Egyptian temple gorgeouſly over-laid, inhabited within by Crocodiles, and Cats, and carcaſſes inſtead of gods; or an apple of Sodom, that ſhews well till it be handled; a painted Sepulchre, or a ſpecious nothing; or which is the contraction and Tachygraphy of all theſe, a Phariſee at his prayers. And thereupon Chriſt ſpake the parable, verſe 9. there were two men went up into the temple to pray, the one a Phariſee, &c. verſe 10. Ver. 9. Ver. 10.

Concerning the true nature of faith, miſtaken extreamly now adays by thoſe which pretend moſt to it, expuls'd almoſt out of mens brains, as well as hearts, ſo that now it is ſcarce to be found upon earth, either in our lives, or almoſt in our books; there might be framed a ſeaſonable complaint in this place, were I not already otherwiſe imbarked. By ſome prepoſſeſſions and prejudices infus'd into us, as ſoon as we can conn a Catechiſm of that making, it comes to paſs that many men live and die reſolv'd that faith is nothing but the aſſurance of the merits of Chriſt applied to every man particularly; and conſequently of his ſalvation: that I muſt firſt be ſure of Heaven, or elſe I am not capable of it; confident of my ſalvation, or elſe neceſſarily damned. Cornelius Agrippa being initiated in natural magick, Paracelſus in mineral extractions, Plato full of his Idea's, will let nothing be done without * the Pythagoreans, brought up with numbers perpetually in their ears, and the Phyſicians poring daily upon the temperaments of the body; the one will define the ſoul an harmony, the other a κρᾶσις, ſaith Philoponus. And ſo are many amongſt us, that take up fancies upon truſt for truths, never laying any contrary propoſals to heart, come at laſt to account this aſſurance as a principle without which they can do nothing; the very ſoul that muſt animate all their obedience, which is otherwiſe but a carcaſs or heathen vertue; in a word, the only thing by which we are juſtified or ſaved. The confutation of this popular error, I leave to ſome grave learned tongue, that may enforce it on you with ſome authority; for I conceive not any greater hindrance of Chriſtian obedience, and godly practice amongſt us, than this: for as long as we are content with this aſſurance as ſufficient ſtock to ſet up for Heaven, there is like to be but little faith upon the earth. Faith if it be truly ſo, is like Chriſt himſelf, when he was Emmanuel, God upon the earth, ἐνσαρκωθεῖσα, an incarnate faith, cut out and ſquared into limbs and lineaments; not only a ſpiritual inviſible faith, but even fleſh and bloud, to be ſeen and felt, organiz'd for action; 'tis to ſpeak, and breath, and walk and run the ways of God's Commandments: An aſſent not only to the promiſes of the Goſpel, but uniformly to the whole Word of God, commands and threats as well as promiſes. And this, not in the brain or ſurface of the ſoul, as the Romaniſt ſeats it, but in the heart, as regent of the hand and tongue in the concurrence of all the affections. Where it is not only a working faith, an

* f. them; In lib. 1. de anima.

Rom. 1. 5. obeying faith, but even a work, even obedience it ſelf; not only a victorious faith, but even victory it
1 Jo. V. 4. ſelf, 1 Jo. v. 4. This is our victory, even our faith: to part with this as a πάρεργον, which is our only buſineſs, is ſure an unreaſonable Theſis. Any faith but this, is a faith in the clouds, or in the air, the upper region of the ſoul, the brain; or at moſt, but a piece of the heart; a magical faith, a piece of ſorcery and conjuring; that will teach men to remove Mountains, only by thinking they are able; but will never be taken by Chriſt for this faith upon the earth: if it do walk here, it is but as a Ghoſt; 'tis even pity but it were laid. Let me beſeech you meekly, but if this would not prevail, I would conjure you all in this behalf; the ſilly weak Chriſtian to fly from this μορμολύκειον, and call for ſome light of their lawful Paſtors, to find out the deceit; and the more knowing illuminate Chriſtian, to examine ſincerely and impartially by feeling and handling it throughly, whether there be any true ſubſtance in it or no. The Phariſee looking upon himſelf ſuperficially, thought he had gone on, on very good grounds, very unqueſtionable terms, that he was poſſeſt of a very Verſe 12. fair eſtate; he brought in an inventory of a many precious works; I faſt, I tithe, &c. verſe 12. hath no other Liturgies but thankſgivings, no other ſacrifice to bring into the temple, but Euchariſtical; and yet how foully the man was miſtaken?

God I thank, &c.

The firſt thing I ſhall obſerve in the words, is the τὸ λογικὸν, the rational importance of them, as they are part of a rhetorical Syllogiſm, an example or parallel to ſhew that in the laſt days, though men think that there is a great deal, yet there is indeed like to be but little Faith upon the Earth. And the iſſue from thence is, the Phariſees flattering favourable miſconceit of his own eſtate, and the parallel line to that, our premature deceivable perſwaſions of our ſelves, that is ordinary among Chriſtians.

The ſecond thing is the τὸ ῥητὸν, the natural literal importance of the words, and therein the concomitants or effects of thoſe his miſconceits,

1. Pride. 2. Cenſoriouſneſs. Pride noted by his ſpeech, I thank thee that I am not; then his poſture, pluming up himſelf, ſtanding by himſelf he prayed; as the Syriack ſet the words, and many Greek copies, ſome by making a comma after πρὸς ἑαυτὸν, others by reading σταθεὶς καθ' ἑαυτὸν, ſtanding by himſelf; as Beza renders it, ſeorſim, apart; not as our Engliſh, he ſtood and prayed thus with himſelf, but as the words will likewiſe bear it, he ſtood by himſelf thus; this poſture ſignifying a proud contemptuous behaviour, whileſt the Publican ſtood crouching humbly, and tremblingly behind.

2. Cenſoriouſneſs and inſinuating accuſations of other mens perſons, even as this Publican. To which we may add the occaſion of all this, ſeeing the Publican behind him, (i.e.) comparing himſelf with notorious ſinners, he was thus proud and cenſorious.

And of theſe in their order, as powerfully and effectually to your hearts, as God ſhall enable me. And firſt of the firſt, the Phariſees favourable miſconceits of himſelf, and parallel to theſe, our deceivable perſwaſions of our ſelves, God I thank, &c.

The black ſin that hath dyed the Phariſees ſoul ſo deep, as to become his characteriſtick inſeparable property, a kind of agnomen, a perpetual acceſſion to his name, is hypocriſie. The proper natural importance of which word, ſignifies the perſonating or acting of a part, putting on another habit than doth properly belong to him. But by the liberty we ordinarily allow to words, to enlarge themſelves ſometimes beyond their own territories, to thrive and gain ſomewhat from their Neighbours, it is come vulgarly to ſignify all that ambitious out-ſide, or formality, the colour and varniſh of religion, by which any man deceives either others or himſelf; and accordingly there is a two-fold hypocriſie, the firſt, deceiving others; the ſecond, himſelf. That by which he impoſeth upon others, is the ſin we commonly declame againſt, under that name, moſt fiercely, ſometime by juſt reaſon, as having been circumvented by ſuch glozes, ſometime in a natural zeal to truth, preferring plain downright impiety, before the ſame transfigured by a varniſh. Reatus impii pium nomen, his being counted innocent, is an acceſſion to his guilt. But then ſometimes too, under this odious name we may wound ſincere and pure devotion; as the primitive Chriſtians were by the tyrants put in wild beaſts skins, that they may be torn in pieces; men may be deterr'd from all the leaſt appearance of purity, for fear they ſhould be counted hypocrites. However this firſt ſort of hypocriſie may deſerve its ſeaſonable reprehenſion, this Parable in my Text doth not take it in; but inſiſts mainly upon the other, that colour of piety by which a man deceives himſelf, and cheats and glozes with his own ſoul. That firſt ſort, were it not for ſome hurtful conſequences, might for ought I can gain-ſay, paſs for an innocent quality in a ſinner. For what great injury doth that man do to any other, or himſelf? what grand ſin againſt God or the World, by deſiring to ſeem better than he is; by labouring to conceal thoſe ſins in himſelf, which could not be known without diſhonour to God, and ſcandal to his neighbour? 'Twas a Lawyer's anſwer, being queſtioned whether it were lawful for a Woman to take money for proſtituting her ſelf, that indeed 'twas a ſin to proſtitute her ſelf; but that being ſuppoſed, as in ſome kingdoms it is permitted, he thought 'twas no great fault to get her living by it.

Not to juſtifie his opinion, but apply it by accommodation: In like manner arraign an hypocrite, and muſter up all the ſins he hath committed in ſecret, and all theſe I will acknowledge worthy of condemnation, becauſe ſins: Nay, if his end of concealing them, be to circumvent a well-believing Neighbour, that ſhall be ſet upon his ſcore alſo; but for the deſire it ſelf of keeping his ſin from the eyes of men, ſo that he do not from the eyes of God, and his Miniſters upon occaſion;

for

for a cautiousness in any one, not to sin scandalously, or on the house top, take this by it self, abstracted from the sin it belongs to, and I cannot see why that should be either a part, or aggravation of a sin. There is nothing that deserves the tears, yea and holy indignation of a godly soul, more than the sight of an immodest boasting sinner, that makes his crimes his reputation, and his abominations his pride, and glory. 'Tis that which we lay to the Devils charge in the times of Heathenism; that he strove to bring sin in credit by building Temples, and requiring Sacrifices to lust, under the name of Venus, Priapus, and the like; that incontinence might seem an act of Religion; and all the prophaneness in the world, a piece of adoration. And it begins now to be revived in the world again, when bashfulness is the quality of all others most creditably parted with; and the only motive to the commission of some sins is, to be in the fashion, to be seen of men; when men put on affected errors, affected vanities, affected oaths; just as they do gay clothes, that they may be the better counted of: this indeed is a damnable hypocrisie, when men are fain to act parts in sin, that they are not naturally inclined to; and to force their constitutions, and even to offer violence to their own tender dispositions, that so they may not be scoffed at for punies, or precise persons, as Augustus his daughter, which being admonished of a sin that beasts would never have committed, answer'd that that was the reason they omitted the injoyment of so precious a delight, because they were beasts; as if innocence were more bestial than lust, and ignorance of some sins, the only guilt. The horror and detestation that this sin strikes into me, makes me, I confess, willing almost to become an advocate of the first kind of hypocrisie, whereby men retain so much modesty in their sins (I hope of weakness) as to be willing to injoy the charitable mens goood opinion though undeserv'd.
